40 Diſtinct. 40. In contrition, Propoſitum non peccandi duplex, There is a double purpoſe not to ſinne any more, Virtuale ſive implicitum, & formale ſeu explicitum, an inward and vertuall purpoſe, and a formall and explicate purpoſe: the firſt is not ſufficient; but it is neceſſary, that he which is juſtified from his ſin, ſhould make a formall and expreſſe purpoſe not to ſin any more, beſide the deteſtation which he hath of ſin, Bellarm.lib.2.de pœnit.cap.6.Contr. Firſt, the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, If the wicked will returne from all his ſins, and keepe my ſtatutes, he ſhall ſurely live: Ezech. 18.21. Here is nothing required but a forſaking of ſin, and doing of righteouſneſſe, which may be done, without any ſuch formall or expreſſe purpoſe, yet a purpoſe of heart is neceſſary, Act. 11.23. which muſt needs accompany the deteſtation of ſin, and amendment of life. Secondly, I pray you where was this formall and expreſſe vow or purpoſe in the theiſe upon the Croſſe, unto whom Chriſt notwithſtanding promiſed paradice? *Luk.*23.42,43. Alſo it is affirmed in your owne decrees, Quod ſola cordis contritione ſine confeſſione oris peccatum remittitur, That ſin is forgiven by the contrition of the heart onely without confeſsion of the mouth, Decr.p.2.cauſ.33.diſt.1.c.36.gloſſ. What is become now of your formall and explicate profeſsion? &c.

Ezech. 18.21.
A formal purpoſe of amendmēt not alwaies neceſſary in repentance.
Acts 11.23.

41 *Diſtinct.*41. They diſtinguiſh thus of merits: There is Meritum de congruo, merit of congruity, as the works which goe before juſtification, though they be not ſimply meritorious, Ex debito juſtitie, by the due debt of juſtice, yet they deſerve of congruity: Meritum de condigno, merit of condignity followeth juſtification, whereby a man by his meritorious works, is worthy by juſtice of the kingdome of heaven, Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.2 ſect.3.Bellar.lib.2.de pœnit.cap.12.Contr. Firſt, that there is no merit at all of condignity, Saint Paul ſheweth, ſaying, The afflictions of this life are not worthy, or (as they reade) *Condigne of the glory to come, Rom.*8.18. The Rhemiſts diſtinction upon that place of condigne to, and condigne of, is but a Ieſuiticall toy, and not worth the anſwer. Secondly, that there is no merit of congruity before juſtification, it is thus proved: Without faith there is no merit, for without faith it is impoſsible to pleaſe God, *Heb.*11.6. and faith is not before juſtification, *Rom.*5.1. Ergo. And your own law ſaith, Vbi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum boni operis eſt ſuperædificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation, no good worke can be builded up, *dec.p.2.cauſ.1,qu.1.cap.*26. But before faith and juſtification there can be no foundation laid in Chriſt.

No merit at al either of condignity or congruity.
Rom.5.1.

42 *Diſtinct.*42. Workes of the law or of nature done without or before faith merit not, but workes done by Gods grace, are truly meritorious: Thus they anſwer us, when we object that place, *Rom.*3.28. We hold that a man is juſtified by faith without the workes of the law, Rhemiſt.in hunc loc. Contr. The Apoſtle himſelfe taketh away this diſtinction, *Eph.*2. By grace ye are ſaved through faith, not of works: then it followeth, *verſ.*10. For wee are his workmanſhip created in Chriſt Ieſus unto good works, which God hath ordained, that we ſhould walke in. Here the Apoſtle excludeth even works of grace prepared, and ordained of God, from being any cauſe of our juſtification. Heare alſo what a learned writer of your owne alleageth to this purpoſe out of *Auguſtine, ſer.*2. de verbis Apoſtoli: Te quidem coronat Deus, ſed in miſericordia, non enim dignus fuiſti quem vocaret, vocatum juſtificaret, juſtificatum glorificaret, & ſi merita tua præceſſerunt, dicit tibi Deus, Diſcute merita tua, & videbis, quia dona mea: God crowneth thee, but in mercy, for thou waſt not worthy whom God ſhould cal, or being called to be juſtified, and being juſtified to be glorified: If thou plead thy merits, the Lord thus ſaith unto thee, Examine thy merits, and ſee if they be not my gifts, Eſpenſ.in 2. Epiſt.Timoth. digreſſ. 22. *pag.*157. There is then no merit neither before our calling to juſtification, nor after our juſtification to our glorifyng.

Workes of grace merit not.

43 *Diſtinct.*43. Some things doe juſtifie, Ex opere operantis: by the worke of the doer, Id eſt, fide & devotione ſuſcipientis, That is, by the faith and devotion of the receiver, ſo the Sacraments of the old law did juſtifie: Some things doe juſtifie, Ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought, as the Sacraments of the new Teſtament, *Bellar.de effectu.ſacr.lib.2.cap.*13. Contr. Firſt, there is one & the ſame efficacy, ſubſtance, and operation in generall of the Sacraments, both of the old and new Teſtament: For they did eat the ſame ſpiritual meate, and drink the ſame ſpirituall drink, 1 *Cor.*10.2,3. Secondly, neither of them doe conferre grace, or are cauſes of our juſtification before God, but are onely ſeales of the juſtice or righteouſneſſe that commeth by faith, *Rom.*4.11. Yet we grant, that in the Sacraments of the Goſpell, there is a more lively reſemblance and more full repreſentation of ſpirituall things, than there was in the other, in which reſpect they are preferred before them. Thirdly, we are not juſtified before God in part or in whole by any worke, either operantis or ex operato, of the doer, or of the thing done: But we are juſtified only by faith: all works, even ſuch as are wrought in us by grace, are excluded from being any cauſe of our juſtification before God, *Eph.*2.10,11. Fourthly, And ſo farre is it off, that any juſtification can be had ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, without reſpect to the faith of the doer, that no ſuch work is at al acceptable to God, much leſſe able to juſtifie: for without faith it is impoſsible to pleaſe God, *Heb.*11.6. And thus this Ieſuitical diſtinction is nipped in the head. And herein your owne decrees are againſt you, that Sacraments helpe not by the worke wrought, but according to the faith of the receiver, *part.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.c.*98. Tale cuique fit, quali corde ad accipiendum acceſſerit: The Sacrament is unto every man, as he commeth in heart prepared to receive it.

Sacraments do not juſtifie by the worke wrought.
Heb.11.6.

44 *Diſtinct.*44. To extenuate and enervate the force and efficacy of the death and paſsion of our Saviour Chriſt, as though it were not alone by it ſelfe a ſufficient ſatisfaction for the ſins of the world, unleſſe other ſatisfactions as helpes were joined thereunto: they have forged and deviſed impious and blaſphemous diſtinctions of their owne.

Firſt, there is a kind of ſatisfaction, Pro amicitia reſtauranda, for reſtoring us to the friendſhip of God: there is another, Pro juſtitia reſtauranda, for reſtoring of juſtice loſt and decayed in us: the firſt ſatisfaction is only wrought by the death of Chriſt; the other muſt be wrought by us, Bellar. de pœnit.l.4 c.1. Cont. Chriſt hath ſatisfied for us, in paying the ranſome for our ſins, and hath reconciled us to God, in imparting to us of his righteouſneſſe: He hath made him to bee ſinne for us, which knew no ſinne, that we ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. therefore Chriſt hath by his death not onely redeemed us, and reconciled us to the favour of God, but hath alſo clothed us with his righteouſneſſe: Who is made of God unto us, our wiſdome, righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Not onely our redemption, but our righteouſneſſe: he hath therefore ſatisfied the wrath of God, in reſtoring his friendſhip, and hath repaired juſtice decaied in us, by his juſtice and righteouſneſſe. And that faith in Chriſt ſerveth not only to obtaine remiſsion of ſins, but to reſtore juſtice, it may be proved out of your owne decrees, part. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. ca. 29. Vbi fides non eſt, non eſt juſtitia, quia juſtus ex fide vivit: Where there is no faith, there is no righteouſneſſe, for the juſt ſhall live by faith; if faith be the life of a righteous man, and hee liveth by faith, then he hath his juſtice, which is his life, by faith.

Chriſt doth both reconcile and juſtifie us.

45 Diſtinct. 45. There is a ſatisfaction pro culpa, for the fault: another kind pro pœna, for the puniſhment. The firſt was only wrought by Chriſt, the other is our ſatisfaction to be performed by us, Bellarmine, ibid. So there is duplex remiſſio peccatorum, prima, ſecunda: A double or twofold remiſsion of ſins, the firſt in baptiſme, both à culpa & pœna, from fault and puniſhment: the ſecond from the fault, but we our ſelves muſt ſatisfie for the puniſhment, Bellar. de pœnit. lib. 4. cap. 14. Contr. If our ſins be forgiven us, the puniſhment likewiſe together with the ſin is removed: for ſin cauſeth death, and al other puniſhments: It ſhould not therefore ſtand with the juſtice of God, to lay puniſhment upon men, having forgiven them their ſins, for this were to ſay, that their ſinnes were not truly forgiven. Chriſt hath ſet us at peace with God, by the bloud of his Croſſe, Coloſſ. 1. 20. Ergo, he hath ſatisfied both for the offence and puniſhment: For if God puniſh ſtil, then were we not at perfect peace with him, his anger yet abiding. And as for temporall puniſhment which remaineth after the forgivenes of ſin, it is not inflicted as a puniſhment for the ſin paſt, but as a meanes to exerciſe us, leſt we fall into the ſame ſin againe: and thus much is confeſſed in your owne decrees, part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. c. 82. Ab electis ſuis iniquitatum maculas ſtudet Deus temporali afflictione tergere, quas in perpetuum non vult in eis videre: God by temporall affliction doth wipe away from the elect the blemiſh of their ſinne, that it may be no more found in them, &c. And whereas they make the firſt remiſsion of ſins to be availeable both for the ſin and puniſhment: the ſecond but for the ſin; the Apoſtle reaſoneth cleane contrary: If while we were yet ſinners and enemies, Chriſt died for us, much more being juſtified by his bloud, and reconciled by his death, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath through him, Rom. 5. 10, 11. Much more ſaith the Apoſtle: if then in the firſt reconciliation to God, we had remiſsion of both, being now reconciled we ſhall much more. Hence alſo it is manifeſt, that Chriſt worketh all, both before our reconciliation, and after.

Chriſt hath ſatisfied both for the fault and puniſhment.

46 Diſtinct. 46. Men alſo may ſatisfie for the fault, but ex congruo, non ex condigno, It is a ſatisfaction of congruity, not of condignity, Bellar. lib. 4. de pœnitent. c. 1. Contr. There is no ſatisfaction wrought by man for his ſins, no not of congruity: Firſt, it is repugnant to the nature and property of ſatisfaction: for that which is of congruity, is accepted of favour, but ſatisfaction is an exact compenſation in reſpect of juſtice: by this God is juſtly ſatisfied; by the other, he is but inclined to favour, as they teach. Secondly, there is no ſatisfaction for ſin ex congruo: for when we were enemies (ſaith S. Paul) we were reconciled to God, Rom. 5. 10. But nothing that enemies can doe, is acceptable unto God, therfore God cannot any waies, no not ex congruo, by our ſatisfaction be appeaſed, before our reconciliation, nor yet afterward: for our ſin in the purchaſing of our reconciliation, was already ſatisfied for by Chriſt. When Peter had ſinned in denying of Chriſt, and upon his repentance was received to mercy, there was no ſatisfaction at all, unleſſe you will ſay, that the dropping of teares was a ſatisfaction, for the letting fall of curſing and lying words, wherwith Chriſt was denied: & it thus ſtandeth in your owne decrees, Lachrymas lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I reade of Peters teares and lamentation, but of no ſatisfaction: decr. p. 2 cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. cap. 1.

No ſatisfaction at all for ſinne.

47 Diſtinct. 47. Man cannot ſatisfie God for the eternall puniſhment due unto ſin, but for the temporall he may, Bellar. lib. 4. de pœnit. cap. 1. Contr. Seeing our Saviour Chriſt hath fully redeemed us by his moſt precious bloud, he hath not only ſatisfied for our ſin, but for our puniſhment both eternall and temporal due unto ſin, Heb. 10. 14. with one ſuffering he hath made perfect, or (as the Rhemiſts reade) conſummated for ever them that are ſanctified. If then he have conſummated us by our redemption, he hath ſatisfied for all: for if any thing were left to be done by us, we ſhould not be conſummated by him. And as for the puniſhments and chaſtenings of this life, S. Paul ſheweth the end of them, not to make ſatisfaction, but we are chaſtened of the Lord, that wee ſhould not be condemned with the world. 1 Cor. 11 42. And to this purpoſe ſee your owne decrees: part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 3. de pœnit. c. 7. Vel ad demonſtrationem debitæ miſeriæ, vel ad emendationem labilis vitæ, vel ad exercitationem neceſſariæ patientiæ, temporaliter hominem detinet pœna. A man is temporally puniſhed, either for the demonſtration of deſerved miſerie, or the emendation of humane frailty, or the increaſing of patience ſo neceſſary.

We doe not ſatisfie either for temporall or eternall puniſhment.

48 Diſtinct. 48. There is actualis ſatisfactio, an actuall ſatisfaction: and that is our ſatisfaction: Alia eſt ſatisfactio virtualis, a virtuall ſatisfaction: (This name Bellarmine hath not, but the ſenſe:)

Such is the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, Per quam habemus gratiam, ut ſatisfaciamus, By the which we have grace and power to ſatisfie, Bellarm. de purgat. lib. 1. cap. 10.

*Diſtinct.*49. Chriſt hath immediatè, immediately ſatisfied and paid the ranſome for our ſinne, but 49
mediatè, mediately, onely for the temporall puniſhment. Bellar. de pœnitent. lib. 4. cap. 15. Contr. Both theſe diſtinctions tend to one end, therefore one anſwer ſhall ſuffice them both. Firſt, if Chriſt hath both actually and immediately ſatisfied for the greater, that is, our ſinne, and everlaſting puniſhment due to the ſame; much more hath he for the leſſe, that is temporall puniſhment. Secondly, al puniſhment and recompence of ſin, is cauſed by the curſe of the law: Curſed is he that continueth not in all things written in the law, &c. Galat. 3. 10. But Chriſt hath actually and immediately redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us ibid. 13. which curſe we are not able to beare; neither in whole, nor in part: Ergo, actually and immediately he hath redeemed us from all puniſhment both ſpirituall and temporall due unto ſin. I will here ſet againſt you your owne doctor Thomas Aquinas, who thus writeth, part. 3. qu. 48. artic. 5. Paſſiones ſanctorum Eccleſiæ proficiunt per modum exempli & exhortationis, non redemptionis: The ſufferings of the Saints doe profit the Church by way of example and exhortation, not for redemption, &c: the Saints ſufferings then are not ſatisfactory or redemptory, that is, availeable to ſatisfie or redeeme themſelves, or others, either from ſin or the puniſhment thereof: wherefore this power muſt reſt onely in the Croſſe of Chriſt: and while that you aſcribe unto Chriſts death, not the act of ſatisfaction, but the grace & power; wherby we ſatisfie, take heed you fall not into the hereſie of one Abelardus, Qui negavit Chriſti mortem pro peccatis noſtris ſatisfactoriam, Who denied Chriſts death to be ſatisfactory for our ſins, Et nihil niſi virtutis exemplum in ea commendavit; And commended nothing in it, but the example of his vertue, &c. How far are the Papiſts from this hereſie, who aſcribed unto Chriſts death, a vertue only and power to ſatisfie for temporall puniſhment.

Galat. 3. 10.

Chriſt by his paſſion hath actually ſatisfied both for temporal and eternall puniſhment.

Eſpen. in 2. Tim. p. 3.

*Diſtinct.*50. Chriſt is a Saviour in a double reſpect, either for ſaving men already fallen into ſinne 50 and condemnation, or elſe for preſerving and ſuſtaining them from falling: in this ſenſe he was a Saviour only to the Virgin Mary, who was preſerved only from ſinne by Chriſt, not ſaved from her ſinnes, which ſhe had not, Franciſcani, Fox pag. 801. col. 1. Contr. Chriſt is called Ieſus, a Saviour in this ſenſe only, Becauſe he ſhould ſave his people from their ſins, Mat. 1. 21. He was then either in this ſenſe a Saviour unto Mary, or not all. But her Saviour he was, as ſhe herſelfe confeſſeth, Luke 1. 47: Ergo, he ſaved her from her ſin. In the other ſenſe, if Chriſt be a Saviour at all, for preſerving from ſin, he is ſo unto Angels, not unto men, as Bernard ſaith: Qui hominibus ſubvenit in tali neceſſitate, Angelos ſervavit à tali neceſſitate: He that helped men out of their neceſsity, preſerved Angels from ſuch neceſsity, lib. de diligend. Deo. And this diſtinction is further thus avoided: one cannot be ſaid to be a Saviour, if he ſave none: but Chriſt in their ſenſe, never yet ſaved or preſerved any that they ſhould not ſin at all: I will be judged herein by your owne decrees, part. 1. diſt. 25. c. 3. gloſſ. Contra naturam pene eſt, ut aliquis ſine peccato ſit: It is a thing againſt nature, for a man to be without ſin. And againe, part. 1. diſt. 81. c. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith not, Siquis ſine peccato, hoc enim ſi diceret, omnis homo reprobaretur: If any man be without ſin, for if he ſhould ſo ſay, every man muſt be refuſed, &c. No man or woman then was ever yet preſerved ſo from ſin, wherfore in that ſenſe Chriſt is not a Saviour, but that he ſaveth, that is, delivereth us from ſin.

Math. 1. 21. Chriſt preſerveth not any from all ſins in this life, but delivereth from ſinnes.

Luke 1. 47.

*Diſtinct.*51. When we object that place of S. Paul againſt the popiſh doctrine of merits: We are 51 juſtified freely by grace, Rom. 3. 24. They anſwer by a diſtinction: there are two juſtifications: the firſt, which is onely of grace, and the ſecond, wherein we proceed daily by good workes, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 2. ſect. 3. Contr. The Scripture ſpeaketh but of one juſtification, which glorification followeth, Rom. 8. 30. Whom he juſtified, them alſo he glorified: If then this one juſtification doe bring us to glorification, what need a ſecond? Againe, their ſecond juſtification is nothing elſe, but that which the Scripture calleth ſanctiſication, which iſſueth out from juſtificatiō, as the fruts therof: but Chriſt is both our righteouſneſſe, and ſanctification, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Ergo, he is both our firſt and ſecond juſtification, and ſo both are of grace. Heare what one of your Popes hath confeſſed of this matter: Innocent. 3. as he is cited, decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 3. Qui Chriſtum per fidem habet, habet utique fundamentum præter quod aliud poni non poteſt, &c: & ſuperædificare poſſe videtur ſalutifera opera, &c. Hee that hath Chriſt by faith, hath the foundation, beſide which none other can be laid, and upon this foundation he may build wholeſome works, &c: there is then but one juſtification becauſe there is but one foundation by faith; that which followeth is not another juſtification, but a building upon by good workes.

Rom. 3. 24.

There is but one juſtification.

1 Cor. 1. 30.

*Diſtinct.*52. There is Iuſtitia imputativa, juſtitia inhærens, Iuſtice imputative, when the righteouſ- 52 nes of Chriſt is imputed unto us, and made ours by faith: Iuſtice inherent, is that juſtice that actually abideth in us by this we are juſtified & truly made juſt, not by the other, Rhemiſt annot. Rom. 2. ſect. 4. Contr. A juſtice inherent we grant to be in faithful men, but imperfect; it is not able to juſtifie them before God: but the righteouſnes only of Chriſt imputed to us by faith, is our juſtice before God. The Apoſtle ſaith, Chriſt was made ſin for us, that we ſhould be made the righteouſnes of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. Looke how Chriſt was made ſin for us, ſo are we made righteouſnes in him: but our ſins were imputed to him, himſelfe knew no ſin: Ergo, our righteouſneſſe before God, is none other but his righteouſnes imputed to us by faith. Heare again what pope Nicolas cōfeſſeth: dec. p. 2. cauſ. 15. q. 8. c.

2 Cor. 5. 21.

5·Omnia fide Chriſti purgantur, fides eſt enim, qua hunc mundũ vincit: Al things are purified by faith: for it is faith that overcommeth the world, &c. It is faith then in Chriſt that purifieth our hearts, and whereby we overcome the world, the fleſh, and the divell, and not any inherent righteouſnes in us.

The law not perfectly fulfilled in this life.

Gal.3.9,10

53 Diſtinct.53. Whereas they hold, that the law may be perfectly fulfilled in this life, leſt it ſhould ſeeme a very abſurd opinion, and not farre from blaſphemy, as indeed it is not; they would qualifie the matter by a diſtinction: there is a perfection among men, a perfection among Angels: one kind in earth, another in heaven: the perfection in this life may be attained unto, though the other cannot, *Harding.defenſ.Apolog.*368.pag. Contr. Firſt, this is an abſurd diſtinction, and nothing to the purpoſe: The queſtion is of the perfection of obedience to the law: and he telleth us of the perfection of Angels: as though the law were given to Angels: as if God had ſaid to them: Thou ſhalt not ſteale, thou ſhalt not commit adultery, &c. Secondly, ſuch a perfection as God hath appointed in this life, we deny not but that it is poſsible by Gods grace to attaine unto: but full and perfect obedience to the law in this life cannot be had, no otherwiſe than Chriſt hath fulfilled it for us. Saint Paul ſaith, *They that are of the workes of the Law, are under the curſe: but they which are faith, are bleſſed, Gal.*3.9, 10. The law therefore unto us is no otherwiſe perfectly fulfilled in this life, ſo that we by ſuch fulfilling may eſcape the curſe thereof, than by faith, and beleefe in Chriſt, who hath done it for us: and where our adverſaries doubt not to affirme, that the law may be perfectly fulfilled in this life, as we have ſeene, how farre are they from the hereſie of the Beguardi, condemned by Clemens 5.*Clem.lib.*5.tit. 3.*cap.*3. who did hold, Quòd homo in hac vita talem perfectionis gradum poteſt acquirere, quòd reddetur omninò impeccabilis: That a man may attaine in this life to ſuch a degree of perfection, as that he ſhould become without ſin, &c. For to ſay a man may perfectly keepe the law, what is it elſe but to affirme he may be without ſin: for he that breaketh not the law, ſinneth not: and if this diſtinction of angelicall and humane perfecton might helpe, it would alſo as well have ſerved theſe heretickes turne.

No habituall faith but active. Galat.5.6.

54 Diſtinct.54. There is an habituall, and an actuall faith: the faith in habite, which alſo we may call a potentiall faith: The actuall faith to be found in ſuch as are of yeeres of diſcretion, *Bellar. de baptiſm.l.*1.*c.*11. Contr. There is no habituall or potentiall faith that pleaſeth God: the lively juſtifying faith is alwaies actuall, working by love, *Gal.*5.6. And thus your owne law teacheth: *decr.p.*2.*c.*33.*queſt.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*14.gloſſ. Si charitas à fide Chriſtianorum ſejungi nequit, quomodo qui charitatem non habuit, fidem Chriſtianorum habuit? If love cannot be ſeparated from faith, how can he have faith that hath not love? &c: If true faith then be alwaies joined with love, it is alwaies working and effectual.

No ſins pardonable of themſelves by courſe. Galath.3.10. 1 Ioh.3.10.

55 Diſtinct.55. Sinnes, ſome are veniall, that is, pardonable of their owne nature: Some mortall, becauſe all that doe them are worthy of damnation, Rhemiſt. Rom. 1. *ſect.*11. Contr. That all ſinnes by grace are pardonable through Chriſt to all beleevers, (blaſphemy onely againſt the holy Ghoſt excepted, which is irremiſsible, and which the faithfull are ſure to be preſerved from) we grant: But no ſinne of it owne nature is pardonable: for all tranſgreſsion of the law is ſubject to the curſe, *Gal.*3.10. But all ſinne is the tranſgreſsion of the law, 1 *Ioh.*3.10. And that ſins are not otherwiſe veniall, than by pardon and forgiveneſſe, your owne Canons doe juſtifie, *dec.part.*2.*cauſ.*33.*diſt.*1.*cap.*47. Venialis culpa, quam ſequitur profeſſio delictorum: That ſin or fault is veniall, which the confeſsion of ſinnes followeth.

No ſin which is not culpable.

Peter erred greatly in denying Chriſt.

56 Diſtinct.56. A man may ſinne two waies, materialiter, & formaliter, materially, and formally: He that ſinneth materially only, that is, of a ſimple mind doth it, ſine culpa, without his fault: as Peter did, failing ſomewhat in his example, Galath. 2. Erratum fuit abſque ulla Petri culpa: It was a ſmall error without any fault of Peters, *Bellarm.de pontif.lib.*1.*cap.*28. Contr. All ſin indeed is not alike hainous: for treſpaſſes committed willingly, are greater than faults done of ſimplicity or ignorance, yet are they al ſins, and make the offender guilty much or little: Otherwiſe, there ſhould not have needed any ſacrifices to be provided in the law for ſins done of ignorance, *Levit.*4. Whatſoever is not of faith is ſin, *Rom.*14.23. He ſaith not, whatſoever is done of malice or wilfulneſſe: but whatſoever is not of faith, that is, of a ſure ground, done with certain knowledge & perſwaſion, and according to a good conſcience: as Bernard expoundeth the place, De fide vera non falſa puto dixiſſe Apoſtolum, omne quod non ex fide peccatum, quia fides falſa, fides non eſt. Non autem ex fide vera bonum creditur quod malum eſt. I thinke the Apoſtle ſpake of a true, not a falſe faith in that place: Whatſoever is not of faith is ſin: becauſe a falſe faith is no faith: and by a true faith, a man cannot beleeve that to be good, which is evill, lib. de Diſpenſat. Therefore all ſinnes done ignorantly, and ſimply, though the intent be never ſo good, doe make the party that ſinneth guilty and faulty. And as touching Peters deniall, that it was not ſo ſmall a fault as you make it, conſider what your owne Canons confeſſe: *dec.part.*2 *cauſ.*11.*qu.*3.*cap.*85. Negando Chriſtum, quid aliud, quàm ſe negavit eſſe Chriſtianum: & quanta eſt vita confiteri Chriſtum, tanta eſt mors negare Chriſtum: In denying Chriſt, what did he elſe but deny himſelfe to be a Chriſtian: and as it is life to confeſſe Chriſt, ſo it is death to deny him, &c. Iudge then if it be ſo ſmall a fault for a man to deny himſelfe a Chriſtian? or to commit that which deſerveth death: but as it there followeth, Quidam perverſo favore Petrum excuſare nituntur: Some labour of a perverſe favour to excuſe Peter: even ſo doe our adverſaries, who of a blind zeale ſeeke to hide Peters ſin, which he himſelfe confeſſed.

57 Diſtinct.57. There is a double certainty of ſalvation: Certitudo infallibilis, an infallible certitude:

which a man cannot have in this life: certitudo humana & moralis, a morall and humane certitude: and this is ſufficient for a man to reſt himſelfe upon, Bellarm. de Sacram. lib. 1. cap. 28. Contr. Firſt, they ſpeake contraries: for how can there be a certitude not unfallible? for that that is certaine is unfallible, and what is fallible is uncertain. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith otherwiſe, Give diligence to make your calling and election ſure (βεβαίαν, ſure without ſtaggering or wavering) For, if ye do theſe things, ye ſhall never fall, 2 Pet. 1.10. Is not this an unfallible certitude, whereby a man ſhall be aſſured never to fall? If this might not be attained unto in this life, S. Peter would not exhort unto it. I have alſo here the teſtimony of your owne law: decr. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 7. c. 1. Dubius in fide, infidelis: He is an infidell, that doubteth of his faith, and ſo conſequently of his juſtification.

No certainty of juſtification conjecturall, but infallible only. 2 Pet. 1.10.

58 Diſtinct. 58. I let paſſe here their idle fanſies and fond ſchoole-diſtinctions, not fit to bee uſed by boy Sophiſters, much leſſe by men, that would be counted grave Divines: As how, there are cauſæ morales juſtificationis, aliæ cauſæ Phyſicæ: Morall cauſes of our juſtification, and Phyſicall or naturall cauſes, Bellarm. de effect. ſacram. lib. 2. cap. 11. Contr. This diſtinction is repugnant to the Ieſuites owne doctrine: for faith is no Morall, but a Theologicall vertue, as he diſtinguiſheth them, but it is faith that juſtifieth, Rom. 5.1. Ergo, no morall vertue. Themſelves alſo exclude the works of nature from being any cauſe of juſtification: how then can there be any phyſicall cauſes? For indeed our juſtification is no phyſicall or naturall, but a metaphyſicall and ſupernaturall worke. And to ſpeake properly, no morall vertue is the cauſe of juſtification: for that is a morall vertue, that is gotten by uſe, and confirmed by cuſtome; ſo is not faith, whereby onely we are juſtified: for Spiritus gratiæ dat fidem, The Spirit of grace giveth faith: dec. part. 3. diſt. 4. cap. 145. It commeth not by cuſtome, neither is gotten by mans induſtry.

There is no naturall or phyſicall cauſe of juſtification.

59 Diſtinct. 59. Not much unlike to this, is that diſtinction of Dolor ſummus intenſivè, & appretiativè: Our ſorrow is greateſt intenſively, when it is in the higheſt degree: It is the greateſt appretiatively, or in eſtimation, when as we ſorrow not for a thing as much as we can: yet we had rather loſe other things than loſe that: As a godly man may mourn intenſively for the death of his children, more than for his ſins: yet he had rather loſe his children than the favour of God. True contrition then requireth ſorrow in the higheſt degree, appretiativè, but not intenſivè, Bellar. l. 1. de pœnit. c. 11. Contr. It is not impoſſible that a man ſhould weepe more for that he leſſe eſteemeth: and if a man mourne more for a temporall loſſe, than for his ſins, he mourneth not aright: therefore ſorrow for our ſins ought to be the greateſt in the higheſt degree, intenſivè. And thus true ſorrow is deſcribed in the Scriptures: We roare like Beares, and mourne like doves, Eſay 59.10. Behold, O Lord, how I am troubled: my bowels ſwell, my liver is powred out upon the earth, Ierem. Lament. 1.20. O that my head were as the waters, and mine eyes as fountaines of teares, Ierem. 9.1. Cut off thine haire, O Ieruſalem, and caſt it away, and take up a complaint, Ierem. 7.29. They ſhall mourne like Doves, ſmiting upon their breaſts, Nahum. 2.7. In that day ſhall there be great mourning in Ieruſalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon, in the valley of Megiddo, Zachar. 12.11. Thus the Prophets did uſe to deſcribe true ſorrow for ſinne, than the which none could be greater: as Moſes ſaith, Seeke the Lord with all thine heart, and all thy ſoule, Deut. 4.29. Wherefore, ſorrow for ſinne ought to be the greateſt and chiefeſt of all other; even intenſivè, as we have ſaid. This is in your owne decrees confeſſed: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 3 cap. 42. Sciat culpabiliter ſe durum, qui deflet damna temporis, vel mortem amici, & dolorem peccati lachrymis non oſtendit: Let him thinke himſelfe ſinfully hard, who can weepe for temporall loſſes, as for the death of a friend, and can bring out no teares for his ſins; wherfore he ſinneth, that mourneth more for any temporall loſſe, than for Gods diſpleaſure: and herein I approve rather the judgement of Eſpenſæus, Major ſollicitudo abundantioris amoris indicium: The greater care or deſire, is a ſigne of great love.

Eſa. 59.10. Lament. 1.10 The greateſt ſorrow in the world ought to be for ſin: if any grieve more for temporall loſſes than for their ſins; it is their infirmity. Zach. 12.11. Deut. 4.29. In 2. epiſt. ad Tim. p. 78. f.

60 Diſtinct. 60. Many ſuch goodly diſtinctions they have: as to ſhew that two bodies may be in one place, they have invented this diſtinction: there is duplex diviſio, extrinſeca reſpectu loci; intrinſeca ratione ſubjecti: There are two kinds of diviſion of one thing from another: the external diviſion in reſpect of place: the internal in reſpect of the ſubject: And ſo when two bodies are in one place, they are internally diſtinct from themſelves, though they be not diſtinct and divided in place: the firſt diviſion is taken away, not the ſecond, Bellar. lib. 3. de Euchariſt. cap. 3.

See what jugling here is, and all to breed an impoſſible concluſion: for ſeeing every body hath his proper place: yea, ſpirits have their proper definite places, much more bodies: two bodies then muſt have two places, unleſſe they be mingled and incorporate together, and ſo make but one body. Thus they diſtinguiſh of the being and ſubſiſtence of the accidents of bread and wine in the Euchariſt without their ſubjects: Sunt in ſe negativè, non poſitivè, They have a being in themſelves negatively, not poſitively; Bellar. lib. 3. de Euchar. cap. 24. Is not this good ſtuffe? I pray you, what is eſſe negativè, to be with a negative? that is, put the negative (non) to (eſſe) and ſo (non eſſe) by this ſkilfull Philoſophy ſhall be (eſſe) not to be, is all one with (to be.) Such toyes theſe vaine men do traine up their ſchollers in, and thinke by them to deceive the world, of whom we may truly ſay, as Saint Hierome of the Arrians, Venena erroris melle verborum circumlinebant: They doe with hony words dawbe their poyſoned opinions: Hierom. ad Iohann. Hieroſol. Or as Thomas Aquinas ſaith, Fidem ſophiſticis rationibus corrumpi: By their ſophiſticall diſtinctions they corrupt the faith.

Two bodies cannot be in one place.

It will trouble the Reader at this time with no more of their ſtuffe: by theſe examples already ſet forth, we may give our judgement of the reſt, that their diſtinctions are lewd, ſophiſticall, and vaine inventions, to obſcure the truth withall, and not worth a ruſh: all diſtinctions we condemne not, we know they have their profitable uſe, for the finding out of truth, and diſcovering of falſehood: but ſuch diſtinctions, as ſerve to countenance error and ſuperſtition, againſt the manifeſt truth of Gods Word, ſuch as are theſe popiſh diſtinctions, we utterly abhorre and condemne. Of ſuch diſtinctions we may ſay, as one of their owne fellowes ſaid of that diſtinction of Simony: There were Simoniaca de ſui natura: there were Simoniacall things by nature, forbidden by the Word of God, as to buy or ſell Sacraments. Simoniaca jure poſitivo: Simoniacall things by the poſitive law and conſtitutions of the Church, as to ſell Biſhopricks and Eccleſiaſticall livings, theſe the Pope might diſpenſe withall.

The danger of ſubtile and ſophiſticall diſtinctions.

O Petre (ſaith he) quantam animarum multitudinem catervatim tranſmiſit, & tranſmittit ad infernum hæc ſuperſtitialis & damnanda diſtinctio: O Peter, Peter, how many ſoules hath this ſuperſtitious and damnable diſtinction ſent by heapes, and yet doth daily ſend to hell: Aureum ſpeculum, ex citation. Iuel. pag. 614. So the Papiſts by their blaſphemous diſtinctions of merits, ſatisfactions, juſtifications, adoration, and ſuch like, doe ſubvert the truth, pervert the ſoules of many, evert and overthrow the courſe of Religion, and tread them a high way, and a beaten path to hell and damnation.

THE

THE FOVRTH PILLAR OF PAPISTRIE, CONSISTING OF PAPISTS CONTRADICTIONS amongſt themſelves.

IT is an uſuall accuſation of the popiſh ſort againſt the profeſſors of the Goſpell, that we are at variance and diſſention amongſt our ſelves, and cannot agree of the points of our Religion. Harding ſaith with a ſtinking and uncleane mouth: that the puddle of Lutherans runneth down by many ſinks: that we agree not within our ſelves: and that each one oftentimes diſagreeth with himſelfe: Defenſ. Apolog. pag. 289. The Rhemiſts falſly object, that we would every yeere have a new faith, 2 Cor. 2 verſ. 18. Bellarmine ſaith, that we have 200. ſeverall expoſitions of theſe words of our Saviour (This is my body) with lie and all, de Sacram. lib. 2 cap. 1. Now then to cleare and purge our ſelves of this falſe accuſation wee will conſider who they are that caſt us in the teeth with our diſſentions: who, for one diſſention that is among us, have ten among themſelves: yea, if I ſaid for one an hundred, I think the ſaying might be juſtified. The Pillar of Papiſtry hath foure parts: Firſt, we will ſhew the diſſentions of the latter and new Papiſts with the old. Secondly, of the contradictions of the new among themſelves. Thirdly, becauſe they ſay, that among us, one diſagreeth many times with himſelfe, we will lay open the nakedneſſe of their ſtouteſt champion Bellarmine, how ſhamefully he forgetteth himſelfe, ſaying, and unſaying, now of one opinion, by and by of another. Fourthly, wee will ſhew the repugnances, inconveniences, and inconſequent opinions, which popiſh religion hath in it ſelfe.

The Contradictions and divers opinions of old Popiſts and new.

BEcauſe our adverſaries will beare us in hand, that their diſſentions are not in material points, but light matters, which concerne not the faith: We wil make choice of ſuch opinions of theirs (leaving the reſt) wherein they diſſent, as ſhall eaſily appeare to be no triviall or common matters, but of great weight and moment.

Lyranus, Hugo Cardinalis, Cajetanus, doe hold the bookes of Tobie, Iudith, Macchabees, Eccleſiaſticus, the Wiſedome of Salomon, to be Apocryphall bookes, and no part of Canonicall Scripture: Arius Montanus alſo holdeth all the books of the old Teſtament, not found in the Hebrew Canon, to be Apocryphall, ex Whitacher. controv. quaeſt. 1. cap. 6. The contrary is now maintained by Papiſts, that all the aforeſaid bookes are Canonicall, and part of the Scriptures. 1

Canus affirmeth, that the Scriptures in the Hebrew text are wholly corrupt and defaced by the malice of the Iewes: Bellarmine confeſſeth ſome corruptions in them, yet not concerning the doctrine of faith and manners. And that thoſe corruptions and defaults came rather by reaſon of ſome faulty Libraries, and imperfect copies, than by the malicious depravation of the Iewes, Bellarm. de Verb. Dei. lib. 2. cap. 2. 2

They differ much in many points concerning Antichriſt. Some of them thinke, that the number 666. Apocal. 13. doth deſcribe the time of Antichriſts comming, as Lyranus. Some, that it ſheweth the name Ἀντιμος, which they thinke ſhall be the name of Antichriſt, Anſelmus, Richardus. Bellarmine thinketh his name ſhall not be knowne, till he be come, de Rom. pont. lib. 3. cap. 11. 3

Some, that he ſhall be borne of a woman of fornication. Some, of the tribe of Dan, as Anſelmus, Richardus. Bellarmine holdeth neither, Ibid. cap. 12. 4

Dominicus a Soto is of opinion, that the Chriſtian faith ſhall utterly bee extinguiſhed in the great perſecution under Antichriſt. Bellarmine thinketh no, Ibid. cap. 17. 5

Their Canon law ſaith, that no mortall man muſt here preſume to reprove the faults of the Pope, because he himſelfe being to judge all men, is to be judged of none, Part. 1. diſt. 40. cap. Si Papa. Yet the Rhemiſts affirme the contrary, that Popes may be reprehended, and are juſtly admoniſhed of their faults, and ought to take it in good part, if it proceed of zeale and love, Annot. 2. Gal. ſect. 8. 6

7 Some of them doe thinke that the Pope, even as he is Pope, may fall into hereſie, and ſo become an heretike, if hee take upon him to define or determine without a generall Councell, Gerſon, Alphonſ. de Caſtro, Adrianus 6. Papa. Some affirme the cleane contrary, that the Pope cannot poſsibly fall into hereſie, nor define any hereticall point; no not by himſelfe alone, Albert. Pighius. Others do teach, that whether the Pope may be an heretike or not, he cannot determine any thing that is hereticall, ſic Driedo, Cajetanus, Hoſius, Eckius: and to this ſubſcribeth Bellarmine lib. 4. de Rom. pontif. cap. 2.

8 That place of the Goſpell, where Chriſt ſaith, I have prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith ſhould not faile: the Divines of Paris underſtand generally of the whole Church, that Chriſt prayed that the Catholike faith ſhould not faile. But Bellarmine and the reſt, take theſe words as meant of Peter only and his ſucceſſors, that they ſhould not erre at any time in faith, Bellar. ibid. cap. 3.

9 Durandus a popiſh author confeſſeth, that Gregory 1. was found in an error, for permitting prieſts to confirme: but Bellarmine chargeth him rather with error in ſo writing, ibid. cap. 10.

10 Melchior Canus affirmeth, that Honorius 1. was an heretike: Bellarmine holdeth the contrary, de pontif. lib. 4. cap. 11.

11 Celeſtinus 3. an heretike: ſo ſaith Alphonſ. de Caſtro: Bellarmine is of the contrary opinion, ibid. cap. 14.

12 Iohn 22. was in a great error, who held, that the ſoules of the righteous ſhould not ſee God before the day of the reſurrection, Guilielmus Ockam, Adrianus: Bellarmine notwithſtanding taketh upon him to excuſe him of hereſie, Bellar. cap. 14.

13 Benedictus 13. condemned for an heretike in the Councell of Conſtance, and Eugenius 4. in the Councell of Baſil. Bellarmine denieth notwithſtanding that they were heretikes, but the Councels to have erred rather in condemning them, ibid.

14 Some of the Papiſts thinke, that Biſhops, as the Apoſtles before them, doe receive their juriſdiction immediatly at Gods hands: So Franciſcus Victoria, Alphonſ. de Caſtro. Others, that the Apoſtles received their juriſdiction not from Chriſt, but from Peter; and biſhops from Peters ſucceſſors: ſo Iohan. de Turre cremat. Dominicus Iacobatius. A third ſort hold, that the Apoſtles immediatly received power from Chriſt, but Biſhops muſt looke for it at the Popes hands: ſic Cajetanus, Dominicus a Soto, Bonaventure, Durand. ſo alſo Bellar. cap. 22.

15 They are much troubled about this queſtion, whether the Pope may be depoſed for hereſie: Albert. Pighius holdeth, that the Pope cannot be an heretike, and therefore not for any cauſe to be depoſed: Iohannes de Turre cremat. is of opinion, that the Pope for ſecret hereſie, is actually depoſed of God, and may be by the Church declared to be ſo depoſed. Others held, that the Pope neither for manifeſt, nor ſecret hereſie either is actually or may be depoſed. Cajetanus, that the Pope for manifeſt hereſie is not actually depoſed, but may be depoſed by the Church. There is a fifth opinion, that the Pope being a manifeſt heretike, doth ceaſe of himſelfe to be Pope, and that he may be judged by the Church, and yet they judge not the Pope, for he is now no Pope, Iohan. Driedo, Melchior Canus, and Bellarmine conſenteth. lib. 2. de Pontif. cap. 30.

16 Concerning the Popes temporall juriſdiction, ſome of them teach, that the Pope by the word of God, hath full and plenary power in all matters both Eccleſiaſticall and civill, Auguſt. Triumphus, Hoſtienſis: Others, that he hath not directly and immediatly any temporall authority, but only ſpirituall: yet indirectly and immediatly by reaſon of his ſpirituall power, he hath chiefe authority alſo in temporall matters: ſic Iohan. Driedo, Iohan. de Turre cremat. Pighius, Cajetanus, and Bellarm. lib. 5: de pontif. cap. 1.

17 They are much buſied about the Councell of Iewes that condemned Chriſt, whether it erred or not. Some hold that the queſtion was de facto, non de jure: not by what right Chriſt ſhould be put to death, but they conſulted only of the fact, to put him to death, and therfore in a matter of fact might erre. Others thinke, that they erred in their owne mind and affection toward Chriſt, not in the ſentence: for Chriſt was worthy of death bearing our ſinnes. But Bellarmine is of an opinion by himſelfe; that the Councell did erre: for they were priviledged onely from error before Chriſts comming, not afterward, lib. 2. de Concil. cap. 8. Thus they weary themſelves in their owne fooliſh conceits.

18 Some thinke that generall Councels cannot erre, though they have not the Popes confirmation: ſo the Divines of Paris. Others hold the cleane contrary, that they may, as Cajetanus, Turre cremat. Bellar. lib. 2. de Concil. cap. 11.

19 Some hold opinion, that a generall Councell is above the Pope, Nichol. Cuſanus, Panormitanus, Abulenſis. So alſo it was concluded in the Councels of Conſtance and Baſil. The Canoniſts teach, that the Pope by right is above the Church and Councels, but he may, if he pleaſe, ſubmit himſelfe to their judgement, and give them authority over him. But others thinke, that he hath ſuch an abſolute authority, that he cannot ſubmit himſelfe to the ſentence or cenſure of Councels though he would. So Antoninus, Ioh. de Turre cremat. Cajetanus, Pighius, with others: unto this Bellarmine ſubſcribeth, the Popes waged champion to fight for his triple crowne.

20 Alphonſ. de Caſtro is of opinion, that heretikes are mēbers of the Church: Bellar. beſtoweth ſome labour to confute his opinion. Thus one papiſt maketh work for another, Bellar. de Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 4.

21 Iohvn.de Turrecremat. requireth faith as neceſſary to make a true member of the Church, which is a true and ſound opinion: but hee is confuted by Bellarmine, who holdeth faith in this caſe to be needleſſe: Lib.3.de Eccleſ.cap. 10.

22 Iohan.de Turre cremat. ſaith, it is againſt the Catholike faith, to affirme, that the faith of the Church did not only reſt, or was preſerved in the Virgin Mary, in the paſsion of Chriſt: Bellarmine thinketh, that faith was preſerved as well in the Apoſtles, as in Mary; that theirs failed no more than hers, *lib.3.de Eccleſ.cap.*17. And herein the Ieſuite commeth neereſt the truth: The Apoſtles faith was not loſt, but greatly ſhaken at the death of Chriſt, and they remained wavering and doubtfull, till they were by Chriſt (riſen againe) confirmed.

23 Some affirme that the vow of continency or ſingle life, is annexed to Prieſthood by the Law of God, Iohan.Major.Clictovaeus. Others, that it it not grounded upon the divine law, but only brought in by the conſtitution and decree of the Church, and may be diſpenſed withall, Thom.Aquin.Cajetanus: ſo thinketh alſo *Bellarmin. de clericis, lib.*1.*cap.*18.

24 The Canoniſts hold, that the conſtitution of tithes, even in reſpect of the quantity and proportion of the tenth, is eſtabliſhed by the Law of God, and therefore cannot be altered to any other quantity. Bellarmine calleth it an error of the Canoniſts, and confuteth it, determining the matter thus: that the payment of tithes is, de jure divino, quoad ſubſtantiam, non quoad quantitatem, is by the word warranted, in reſpect of the ſubſtance or equity, not in regard of the preciſe quantity, de clericis, lib. 1. cap. 25.

25 The Canoniſts hold, that Clegie men are exempt from the power of ſecular Princes, not onely in eccleſiaſticall, but in politike and civill affaires by the Law of God. Others affirme, that they are freed, their perſons and their goods only by humane conſtitution, Franciſcus Victoria, Dominicus a Soto: and *Bellarm.de clericis, lib.*1.*cap.*28.

26 Scotus did hold, that veniall ſinnes were remitted in the very inſtant of the ſeparation of the ſoule from the body, but rhey were remitted, per merita pracedentia, by vertue of the merits, which went before in the life. Thom.Aquinas, held the contrary, that they were not remitted then, but afterward in purgatory. To this agreeth Bellarmine and the reſt, Bellarm. lib. 1. de purg. cap. 10.

27 Some Papiſts hold, that the ſoules in purgatory are uncertaine of their ſalvation: and though they ſhall be ſaved, yet they know it not, Dyoniſ.Carthuſianus, Michael Bay: but the generall opinion of the papiſts now is, that they are certaine of their ſalvation; *Bellarm.de purg.lib.*2.*cap.*4.

28 Some of them thinke, that veniall ſinnes by nature, deſerve eternall death, and that they are but veniall of Gods mercy: wherein they hold the truth: for the ſtipend of ſinne is death, Rom. 6. 25. ſo Michael Bay, Gerſon, Iohan.Roffenſ. But now the Ieſuits generally hold the contrary, that veniall ſinnes are pardonable of their owne nature, Bellarm.ibid.

29 Some are of opinion, that prayers may be made for ſoules that are in hell: Bellarmine, and generally all that rabble hold it onely to be lawfull to pray for ſoules in purgatory. But the truth is, the dead are not to be prayed for at all, *Bellarm.de purg.lib.*2.*cap.*5.

30 The Papiſts generally hold, that the ſoules which neede no cleanſing in purgatory, doe ſtraightwaies goe to heaven: yet Bellarmine hath a tricke by himſelfe, and thinketh it not improbable, that there ſhould be another place, not ſo full of joy as heaven is, nor in paine equall to purgatory, *lib.*2. *de purg.cap.*7. But we acknowledge neither the one nor the other: for Scripture no where maketh mention of more places than heaven and hell.

31 Thomas Aquinas holdeth, that the leaſt puniſhment in purgatory exceedeth the greateſt torment in this life. Bonaventure denieth that, and ſaith, that the greateſt paine of purgatory only exceedeth the greateſt of this life. And ſo thinketh Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 15. But this is a needleſſe queſtion to diſpute of the paines of purgatory, for there is no ſuch place, as we have elſewhere ſhewed.

32 That the Saints know our prayers, though it be not agreeable to Scripture, yet it is agreed upon amongſt the Papiſts: yet about the manner, how they come by the knowledge of our prayers, it is not amongſt them agreed. Some thinke that mens prayers are at that inſtant revealed to Saints when they are made. Others, that in the beginning of their happineſſe, ſo ſoone as they are received into Heaven, they behold all things in God, as in a glaſſe, which appertaine to them. And this Bellarmine taketh to be the more probalble opinion, *cap.*20. yet it is but a prophane ſpeculation: for God himſelfe only knoweth the heart, neither will he give his honour to another.

33 Cajetanus Cardinall confoundeth images and idolls, taking them for all one: Bellarmine and the reſt, make great difference betweene them. Images, they ſay, they have, but no idolls, *Bellarm.de imaginib.ſanctor. lib.*2.cap. 7.

34 Some Papiſts hold opinion, that the Images of the Trinity ought not to be made, Abulenſ. Durand. Pereſius, Caranza, who beſide alloweth not the Image of Chriſt to be made. Others hold the contrary, that they may ſafely be made and adored: Cajetanus, Catharinus, Sanderus: and Bellarmine, who for the moſt part holdeth with the worſt opinion.

35 Concerning the worſhip of Images, it is agreed amongſt Papiſts to be lawfull and commendable, though it be flat contrary to the ſecond Commandement: yet they diſagree about the manner of worſhip. Some hold, that the image in it ſelfe is not at all to be worſhipped; but before the image, that onely whoſe image it is: Sic Durandus, Alphonſus de Caſtro. Others, tha the Image is to be worſhipped and adored with the ſame kind of worſhip that the exemplar is, whoſe image it is, and ſo the Image of Chriſt to be worſhipped as Chriſt himſelfe: Sic Cajetanus, Bonaventure, Capreolus, and others. There is a third opinion, that images properly in themſelves may be worſhipped, yet with an inferiour kind of worſhip, than that which is due to the Saint reſembled by the image, Pereſius, Catharinus, Sanderus: to theſe conſenteth Bellarm. de imaginib. ſanctor. lib.2.cap.20.

36 The Papiſts make two kindes of religious worſhip, the higher and more excellent kinde, which is due only unto God, they call λατρεία, the inferiour kind, which may be given unto Saints, δουλεία, Sic Bellarm. Yet Martinus Pereſius, a learned papiſt, ſaith, that δουλεία, cannot ſignifie the worſhip of Saints: for the word is tranſlated ſervitude, or ſervice: but we are not ſervants to the Saints, but their fellew-ſervants, Bellarm. lib.1. de beatitud. ſanctor. cap.12.

37 Now, concerning the Sacraments; Some of them thinke, that the ſame definition of a Sacrament, cannot agree unto the Sacraments both of the old and new Teſtament, but improperly: Sic Magiſter ſententiar. Albertus, Bonaventure. Others thinke, that this definition of a Sacrament, eſt ſacræ rei ſignum, It is a ſigne of an holy thing, may properly comprehend both the old and new Sacrament, becauſe it is not of the eſſence of a Sacrament to be a cauſe of ſanctification, but a ſigne onely: Sic Thom. Dominicus a Soto, Martinus Ledeſmius, and thts is the truer opinion. But Bellarmine fully liketh neither: Lib.1. de Sacram. cap.12.

38 Now, whether the Sacraments doe conſiſt, ex verbis & rebus, of the words and the things, or elements, as their matter and forme, it is a great queſtion among Papiſts. Some hold that they doe not: but that any thing ſenſible, whether it be the element, or the word, is the matter, and the forme to be the ſignification, Sic Dominicus a Soto, Cajetanus. Others thinke, that all Sacraments conſiſt not of the word and elements, but ſome only: Sic Durandus. A third opinion is, that the Sacraments only of the new Teſtament doe conſiſt of theſe parts, not the Sacraments of the old: ſic Alexand. Alenſis. And others thinke, that all Sacraments doe conſiſt of theſe parts, either in themſelves, or ſomewhat in ſtead or place of them: Sic Dominicus a Soto. Bellarmine taketh ſomewhat from all theſe opinions, lib.1. de ſacram. cap.18. But to put the matter out of doubt, there muſt be in every Sacrament, both the word and the element; the word ſanctifieth, 1 *Timoth.*4.5. and therefore muſt needs be there, nothing can ſerve in ſtead of it: there muſt be alſo an element beſide the word, to be ſanctified, and therefore the word cannot be the element.

39 The Ieſuites doe hold, that the intention of the Miniſter is neceſſary to make a Sacrament: he muſt have a purpoſe and intention, Faciendi, quod facit Eccleſia, to doe that which the Church doth: that is, to make a Sacrament: Sic Bellarm. cum alijs. Catharinus a Papiſt, ſaith, it is not neceſſary to have ſuch an intention, but that a Sacrament may be without it: wherein hee thinketh aright, for the Sacrament no more dependeth upon the Miniſters intention, than the preaching of the word doth.

40 Concerning the efficacy of the Sacraments, they doe all hold, that they are cauſes of ſanctification, but not alike. Some hold, that the Miniſter is the efficient and working cauſe of juſtification, the Sacrament but the inſtrument: Sic Cajetanus, Scotus, Ledeſmius. Some contrariwiſe, that the Sacrament is the efficient cauſe, the Miniſter but the inſtrument: Ita Thom. Aquin. ex Bellarm. lib.1. cap.27. and of theſe there are two ſorts: ſome think that the Sacraments are but cauſes, Sine quibus non: without the which we are not juſtified, Sic Bonaventur. Scotus, Durandus. Others thinke that there is verily an effectuall power given to the ſacraments to juſtifie: Sic Bellarm. lib.2. cap.11. What adoe is here about nothing, the Sacraments are no inſtrumentall or efficient cauſes of our juſtification, but ſeales only of the righteouſneſſe of faith, *Rom.*4.11. And it is faith wherby we are juſtified, *Rom.*5.1.

41 As touching the Sacraments of the Law: ſome deny that they did juſtifie ex opeve operantis, that is, by the faith and devotion of the receiver: ſic Magiſter. Others thought they did. And for Circumciſion, ſome held it did juſtifie ex opere operatio, by the very worke wrought: Sic Alexander, Bonaventure, Scotus, Gabriel. Others were of opinion that it did not juſtifie of it ſelfe, but as it was a proteſtation and application of faith: Sic Thom. Capreolus, Scotus: to this Bellarmine enclineth, lib.2. cap.13. But if theſe fellowes would have contented themſelves with juſtification by faith, as the Scriptures teach us, they needed not to have made ſo many doubts.

42 Concerning the indeleble character, which they ſay is imprinted in the ſoule by the Sacraments, and can never be blotted out, Durandus ſaith, it is no reall thing diſtinct from the ſoule, or any abſolute quality, bnt a certaine reſpect and relation only: Scotus ſaith, it cannot be proved by Scripture: Gabriel doubteth, whether the Church hath determined it: yet Bellarmine holdeth his owne ſtill, that there is ſuch an indeleble character: which is but a mere device, and hath no ground out of Scripture, as Scotus ſaith, Ex Bellarmin. lib.2. de ſacram. cap.20.

43 Some Papiſts have held opinion, that in baptiſme it is ſufficient to baptize in the name of one of the perſons in Trinity, and eſpecially of Chriſt: Sic Hugo de S. Victor. Nicolaus Papa. Bellarmine holdeth, as the truth is, that baptiſme muſt be celebrated in the name of the whole Trinity.

44 Some hold, that martyrdome doth not give grace, Niſi ex opere operantis, but according to the affection and diſpoſition of the martyr: ſic Dominicus a Soto, Martin. Ledeſmius. Others, that it was available, ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought: Ita Thom. Gabriel. Iohan. Major, and Bellar. lib.1. de baptiſ. cap.6. The firſt is the truer opinion, for without love if a man give his body to be burned, it is nothing, 1 *Cor.*13. And yet neither martyrdome, nor any worke elſe, can be the cauſe of grace.

Some

45 Some hold that Iohns baptiſme was a Sacrament of the new law,and that they which were baptized therewith,and did not put their truſt therein,but had knowledge of the holy Ghoſt,needed not to have been baptized againe by Chriſt: Sic Petr. Lombardus. Others thought it was a kind of Sacrament,ſuch as were the ſacraments of the law, Ita Magiſter Thomas. But Bellarmine will have it neither Sacrament of the old nor new, De Sacrament. baptiſ. lib. 1.19. The Scripture putteth all out of doubt,that ſaith, Iohn baptized unto repentance for remiſsion of ſinnes, Luke 3. and ſo was in ſubſtance and effect one, and the ſame with the baptiſme of Chriſt.

46 That Chriſt in the ſixth of Iohn treateth not of the Euchariſt: it is the opinion of many Papiſts, Gabriel, Cuſanus, Caietanus, Tapper, Ianſenius: wherein they ſay, as the truth is. But Bellarmine,and generally the Papiſts now adaies doe apply it to the Euchariſt: though indeed, it maketh more againſt them, than for them, Lib. 1. de Euchariſt. cap. 5. ex Bellarm.

47 As touching the reall preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, Durandus thinketh,that the ſubſtance of Chriſt is there without magnitude or quantity. Others thinke,that the body of Chriſt is there with the due quantity and magnitude, but there is no diſtinction nor order of the parts: Sic Okam. But Bellarmine and the reſt, doe thinke that the body of Chriſt is in the Sacrament, in his due quantity and diſtinction and order of parts, Lib. 3. de ſacram. Euchar. cap. 5. Of all theſe,the firſt two opinions are more reaſonable: for how is it poſsible for the body of Chriſt, in his due proportion and bigneſſe,to be contained in a thinne wafer-cake? but none of all theſe opinions are true: for the body of Chriſt is no where elſe but in heaven,till his ſecond comming,as S. Peter ſaith, Acts 3.

48 Some did hold, that all the bread and wine in the Euchariſt was not tranſubſtantiate, but ſo much onely,as was received of the godly. Others,that the forme onely of the bread was changed,not the matter: ſic Durandus. Some contrariwiſe,that the matter was changed,not the forme. Others,that the bread is aſſumed hypoſtatically unto the Word,as the humane nature is, ſic Rupertus. Bellarmine with the reſt,that after the words of conſecration, the bread and wine is tranſubſtantiate wholly into the body of Chriſt,the accidents only remaining, Lib. 3. de Euchariſt. cap. 11.

49 It is the generall opinion of Papiſts, that there ariſeth no more ſpirituall fruit by receiving in both kindes, than by receiving in one: Yet there are ſome of the contrary opinion. Alexander Alenſ. Gaſper Caſſalius, Ruardus. And by a generall decree in the Councell of Baſile, the uſe of the cup was granted to the Bohemians, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Euchariſt. cap. 23. for if ſo the receiving in one kind were al out as full of comfort,and as profitable,as to doe it in both,then were one ſuperfluous, and ſo they take vpon them to controule our Saviour Chriſt, who inſtituted both, and uſed them at his laſt Supper.

50 About the popiſh ſacrament of extreme unction,ariſe theſe differences: They have but two places of Scripture upon which they ground that ſacrament, Marke 6. and Iames 5. About the former place they much diſagree: Some holding, that when the Apoſtles anointed the ſicke with oyle, it was not the ſacramentall unction,but an adumbration of it,and preparation thereunto: ſic Ruardus, Ianſenius, Dominicus a Soto. Others,that it is one and the ſelfe ſame kinde of unction, which is treated of in both places: ſic Thom. Waldenſ. Alphonſ. de Caſtro: Bellarmine enclineth to the firſt opinion, for no other reaſon, but becauſe the Proteſtans hold, the unction ſpoken of in both places to be the ſame, Bellarm. de extrem. unction. lib. 1. cap. 2.

51 Some thinke,that the corporall health of the body,is the abſolute and infallible effect of this their deviſed ſacrament: ſic Dominicus a Soto. Others,that it is but a conditionall effect,if it be profitable for the ſoules health, and that this ceremony is not principally applyed for the health of the body, but for the health of the ſoule: Concil. Tridentin. Sic Bellarm. cap. 6.

52 Some hold,that in time of neceſsity a lay-man may be the Miniſter of extreme unction: ſic Thom. Waldenſ. Others, that a lay-man may anoint with holy conſecrate oyle, but without a Sacrament: ſic Dominicus a Soto. A third ſort thinketh, that it is not lawfull for the lay ſort to doe the one or the other: ſic Ianſenius, Bellarm. cap. 9. Now who will give credit to theſe men, that there is ſuch a Sacrament of extreme unction: when they cannot agree amongſt themſelves, nor one beleeve another?

53 Some alſo thinke, that to anoint the five ſenſes together with the reines and the feete, is of the eſſence of extreme unction, and none ought to be omitted. Some the contrary, that none of them are of the eſſence, but the anointing of any one may ſerve. The third opinion is, that the anointing only of the five ſenſes is of the eſſence: ſic Thom. Aquin. Bellarm. ibid. cap. 10.

54 The Rhemiſts hold the mixture of water and wine in the Euchariſt to be neceſſary, and ſay the Proteſtants in not uſing that ceremony doe moſt impudently,and damnably, Annot. 1 Cor. 11. ſect. 10. yet the Canoniſts affirme that it is de honeſtate tantùm, non de neceſſitate. Of decency onely, not neceſsity: De conſecrat. diſtinct. 2. in gloſſ. Scotus 4. ſententiar. diſtinct. 11. quaeſt. 6.

55 Some deny that Epiſcopalis ordinatio, the ordaining of Biſhops, to be a Sacrament, Dominicus a Soto, Petrus a Soto, Caietanus, Durandus with others: Bellarmine with the reſt of the Ieſuits hold the contrary,that it is Sacrament: De ſacram. ordinis lib. 1. cap. 4.

56 Durandus denieth Matrimony to be a Sacrament, unleſſe Equivocè, Equivocally and improperly: Bellarmine, and generally the Papiſts hold it properly to be a Sacrament: Lib. de Matrimon. cap. 1.

57 Some of them againe do thinke,that matrimony is not a proper ſacrament of the new Teſtament: Sic Alphonſ. de caſtro, Petrus a Soto, Bonaventur. cum alijs. But that it was confirmed rather than inſtituted of Chriſt: Bellarmine with the reſt,hold the contrary, Lib. 1. de Matrim. cap. 5.

58 Some hold,that matrimony,which they affirme to be a Sacrament,giveth no graee: Sic Magiſter ſententiar. lib. 4. Diſtinct. 2. Bellarmine with the reſt,hold the contrary, ibid.

59 Some affirme,that they which being married, are afterward converted to the faith and baptized, ſhould after their baptiſme contract matrimony againe,and ſo then it becommeth a Sacrament, Sic Paludanus, Capreolus, Eckius. Others thinke that there neede no new contract,but that matrimony by the very act of baptiſme is confirmed: Sic Thom. de Argen. Bellarmine, that a new contract is not neceſſary,but that the parties after baptiſme by ſome ſigne ſhould expreſſe their conſent, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Sacram. cap. 5.

60 Melchior Canus affirmeth, that the parties themſelves cannot be the Miniſters of the Sacrament of matrimony, but of the contract only, but that it muſt be neceſſarily done by an Eccleſiaſticall Miniſter. Bellarmine with the reſt,teach the contrary,that the parties themſelves are the Miniſters of the Sacrament. Some againe ſay, that the mutuall conſent of the parties contracted in due forme of words expreſſed, are the matter and forme of the Sacrament of matrimony. Others, that the perſons themſelves are the matter: Bellarmine thinketh,both that in the contract while,the words are the matter expreſsing their conſent, and afterward the parties themſelves, Bellarm. cap. 6.

61 The times prohibited and interdict for marriage were in times paſt, three in the yeere, from the Advent to the Epiphany, from Septuageſima to the octaves of Eaſter: from three daies afore the aſcenſion, even to the octaves of Pentecoſt, Ruard. Tapper. The practice among them now is otherwiſe: for with the interdict time at Pentecoſt, they have diſpenſed: and the prohibited time at Eaſter is cut ſhorter, to beginne not from Septuageſima,but from Aſhwedneſday. So was it decreed in the late chapter of Trent, ſeſſ. 24. cap. 10.

62 Concerning the popiſh Sacrament of penance,there ariſe many doubts & differences among them: Some hold the ſinnes which are abſolved to be the matter of the Sacrament: others the ſinner himſelfe that maketh confeſsion: ſome the Prieſt that abſolveth, ex Bellarm. de pænitent. lib. 1. cap. 16.

63 Some, that the whole Sacrament doth not conferre grace, but abſolution only by the Prieſt, Sic Thom. Aquin. Bonavent. Vega, Franciſcus Ferraſienſ.

64 Others, that abſolution did not give grace alone, but the action of the penitent perſon was joyned, and did concurre with it in that caſe: Bellarmine enclineth to the firſt opinion, De pænitent. lib. 1. cap. 16.

65 Some thinke that the act of penance, is but a diſpoſition onely unto remiſsion of ſinnes, no merite at all whereby remiſsion is deſerved: Sic Iohan. Capreolus, Dominicus a Soto. Others, that it is not a diſpoſition only unto juſtification, but a meriting cauſe thereof of congruity, Sic Albertus, Bonavent. Scotus, Durandus, Gabriel: To this alſo Bellarmine ſubſcribeth, lib. 2. de pænitent. cap. 12. But the Ieſuite is here groſſely deceived, for before juſtification, it is impoſsible to pleaſe God without faith: therefore there is no place for merite.

66 Some, that perfect contrition is not ſufficient to attaine remiſsion of ſinnes, without the Sacrament of penance, and abſolution by the Prieſt,but onely at the point of death. Others, that it is ſufficient to be truly contrite, if the party have a vow and purpoſe afterward to receive the Sacrament of penance: ſic Bellarm. cum alijs, lib. 2. cap. 13. But the truth is, that true repentance before God is ſufficient with ſatisfaction to the Church in publike offences, without either ſacramentall penance, or the vow thereof, for ſuch Sacrament we acknowledge none.

67 Some hold, that men may ſatisfie God by their penall workes, both for the fault,and for eternall puniſhmen due thereunto: Sic Ruard. Tapper, Andreas, Vega. Others, that they can ſatisfie God for neither of theſe, but onely for temporall puniſhment, Sic Bellarm. cum Ieſuitis, lib4. cap. 1. But the truth is, that Chriſt hath ſatisfied fully and wholly in our behalfe, both for ſinne and whatſoever puniſhment due, as we have ſhewed before: ſo that no part or kinde of ſatisfaction remaineth to be done by us.

68 Some hold, that Auricular confeſsion is neceſſary to ſalvation, and that by the inſtitution of Chriſt, Hard. pag. 186. Others hold, that confeſsion is not neceſſary for ſecret ſinnes, but that they may be forgiven without: ſic Gratian. Holcot. Thom. Aquin. ex Iuel. defenſ. apol. pag. 190.

69 Some hold, that the Virgin Mary was conceived without originall ſinne: Friers Franciſcane. Others, that ſhe was conceived as all other children of Adam be: Dominike Friers. And Bernard thinketh it unlawfull therefore to keepe a feſtivall day of her conception, Fox. pag. 800.

70 The moſt part of them hold, that it is not meet or convenient, that the people ſhould receive in both kinds. Others more truly hold the contrary: Bartholomeus Latomus confeſſeth,that our requeſt is reaſonable to have the holy Sacrament adminiſtred in both kinds: Gerard. Lorichius calleth them Pſeudocatholicos,, falſe catholikes,that hinder the reformation of the Church in that point. And he calleth the wilfull maintaining of receiving in one kind, hereſis & blaſphemia peſtilens, & execrabilis: An hereſie, and blaſphemy curſed and peſtilent, ex Iuel. defenſ. apolog. pag. 28.

71 Laſtly (becauſe it were infinite to ſhew all their contradictions) they doe fully diſagree about the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, what ſhould become of it after conſecration: Some ſay, that Chriſts body paſſeth downe into the ſtomacke : other, that it entreth only into the mouth : Another, that as ſoone as the formes of bread and wine be grated of the teeth, the body of Chriſt is caught up into heaven : One ſaith, a mouſe may eat the body of Chriſt: Another, that a mouſe cannot eat it: yea, the Maſter of the ſentences himſelfe is to ſeeke, Deus novit, ſaith he, after much diſcuſſing of the matter, he reſolveth it thus : God knoweth, ſaith he, what is become of it, Ex citatim. Iuel.pag.289. And that we may ſee yet further how well they agree together in this maine point of popery, ſome of them ſay, that Chriſts body doth deſcend from heaven upon the Altar : for theſe are the words of their S. Francis, Chriſtus quotidie deſcendit de ſinu patris ſuper altare, &c. yet Turriane denieth, that the body of Chriſt doth come from heaven, 1.tract.cap.19.fol.116. Againe, the common gloſſe ſaith, that after the Euchariſt is eaten, the Angells take the body of Chriſt and carry it into heaven : But Scarga ſaith, that never any diſcreet Catholike ſo ſaid, Scarg.in art.5.fol.335. Bellarmine doubteth not to ſay, that the body of Chriſt is conſumed: for thus he writeth, Per conſervationem corpus Chriſti accepit formam cibi, cibus autem ad coniectionem, ac per hoc ad mutationem, & deſtructionem ordinatur : The body of Chriſt by conſervation receiveth the forme of meate, which meate is ordained to be eaten, and ſo to be changed, conſumed and deſtroyed, lib.1, de miſſ.c.17. Some of them hold, that the body of Chriſt remaineth ſtill after it is eaten, Vt tanquam ſemen vivificum in nobis inveniatur corpus vitæ, That the body of life may be found in us as a quickning ſeed, Turrian, tract.1.cap.19.fol. 114. But other of them thinke, that the body of Chriſt doth no longer remaine in the Euchariſt, quàm naturaliter manſiſſet ſubſtantia panis, than the ſubſtance of bread naturally ſhould have remained, Bellarm.lib. 1. de Euchar.cap.1. The old popiſh divinity was this, Corpus Chriſti in veritate frangi fidelium dentibus & atteri, That the body of Chriſt is in truth broken and ground with the teeth of the faithfull, decr.part. 3. diſtinct. 2. cap. 42. But their new divines are aſhamed of ſuch groſſe ſtuffe, as Bellarmine ſaith, Chriſtus non teritur, non roditur : Chriſt is not rent or torne, meaning his body, &c. lib.8.de Euchariſt. cap.13. Thomas Aquinas hath this concluſion, Quod non aliter poſſit corpus Chriſti incipere eſſe de novo in hoc ſacramento, niſi per converſionem ſubſtantiæ panis in ipſum : That the body of Chriſt cannot otherwiſe begin to be in the Sacrament, than by the turning of the ſubſtance of the bread into it, Summa.3. quæſt.65.art.2. But they doe now inſtantly deny any ſuch converſion of the bread into Chriſts body, Moſcus theſ.polon.13. ſo full of doubts and uncertainties is the popiſh doctrine of the reall preſence. Thus much ſhall ſuffice concerning the contradictions of the Papiſts of former times, with our new upſtart Pope-catholike doctors. And I hope by this it may appeare that their domeſticall diſſenſions are not, as they beare us in hand, in the ſmaller points onely, but in the very ground and ſubſtance of popiſh religion, as about the Sacraments, the reall preſence, juſtification, authority of the Scriptures, of the Pope, of generall Councells, and ſuch like. Now let us ſee how well our new Maſters of Popery, which are principally the Ieſuites, agree among themſelves.

The diſagreement and difference of opinion of Jeſuits and Seminary Prieſts among themſelves. Part. 2.

I Will here eſpecially match our Rhemiſts and Bellarmine, and compare their doctrine and opinions together, that the unity whereof they make ſuch boaſt and brags, may be made knowne to the world.

1 Bellarmine holdeth, that wicked men living in the externall profeſſion of the Church, are Vera 71 partes, & membra eccleſiæ : Are true parts and members of the Church, de Eccleſ.lib. 3. cap. 10.
The Rhemiſts ſay, that they are rather as ill humours, and ſuperfluous excrements, than true and lively parts of the body, Annot. 1.Iohn 2. ſect.10.

2 That place, Math.24. 15. of the ſtanding of the abomination of deſolation in the Temple, 72
Bellarmine underſtandeth of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, lib.3.cap.16.reſp.ad 5.ration. The Rhemiſts Math.24.15.
affirme it ſhall be eſpecially accompliſhed in Antichriſts time, when as the Sacrifice of the Maſſe (as they imagine) ſhall be utterly aboliſhed, Annot.Math.24 verſe 15.

3 Concerning the defection and apoſtaſie, which S. Paul ſpeaketh of, 2 Theſ.2.3. Bellarmine 73 ſaith, that it ſhall be a defection from the Romane Empire. Rhemiſts : It ſhall be a defection from moſt points of Chriſtian Religion : Secondly, Bellarmine ſaith, that though it be a defection from the Romane faith, yet it ſhall not be generall, but particular, Ibid.cap.16.reſp.ad 5. Argum. The Rhemiſts grant it ſhall be a revolt of kingdomes, peoples, Provinces, ſo that the publike entercourſe of the faithfull with the Church of Rome ſhall ceaſe : they ſhall only communicate with it in heart, Annot. 2 Theſſ.2.ſect.6.

4 The Rhemiſts hold, that Antichriſt ſhall be borne of the Tribe of Dan : Annot. 2 Theſſal. 2. 8. 74
Bellarmine doth not only vary from them, but oppoſeth himſelfe againſt them, and confuteth their arguments, Lib. 3. de pontif. cap.12.

5 Bellarmine, by that place, 1 Iohn 2.22. hee is Antichriſt that denieth the Father and the Sonne, 75 would prove, that Antichriſt, when he commeth, ſhall apertly and openly deny Ieſus to be Chriſt, 1 Iohn 2.22.
Lib.3 de pontif.cap.14. The Rhemiſts ſay this was a marke, ſerving only for thoſe times to deſcribe an heretike by, Annot. 1 Iohn 4. ſect.2. And therefore it cannot be applied to Antichriſt.

6 Bellarmine ſaith, that one of the wonders or miracles, that Antichriſt muſt work, ſhall be to cauſe 76 the image of the beaſt to ſpeake, *Ibid.cap.*15. The Rhemiſts, whereas the Text ſaith, another beaſt ſhall riſe out of the earth, and ſhall cauſe fire to come from heaven, and the image of the beaſt to ſpeake, Apoc. 13. They expound it not of Antichriſt, but of another falſe Prophet, inferiour to Antichriſt, *Annot. Apocal.*13.*ſect.*3.

77 7 Bellarmine ſaith: Soli Epiſcopi paſtores ſunt; That Biſhops only are paſtors of their Dioceſſe: and that inferiour Miniſters are not properly Paſtors of ſeverall flocks, Lib. 1. de Concil..cap. 15. The Rhemiſts doubt not to ſay, that many, which have no gift to preach, yet for their wiſdome and government, are not unmeet to be Paſtors and Biſhops, Annot. 1 *Tim.*5.*ſect.*13. If ſuch in their opinion may be made Biſhops, then are they not moſt properly Paſtors, as Bellarmine ſaith: for hee is moſt properly a Paſtor, that hath gifts to preach, which is ſpirituall feeding.

78 8 The Rhemiſts affirme, that Chriſt in plaine termes moſt amply imparted unto the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, his full power and authority to remit ſinnes: And further, they ſeeme to inſinuate, that what authority Chriſt had as he was man, it is now wholly reſiant in them, *Annot. Ioh.*20.*ſect.*3. Bellarmine notwithſtanding denieth, that the Pope may doe as much as Chriſt could, as he was man: For Chriſt did inſtitute Sacraments, and could remit ſinnes without Sacraments, ſo cannot the Pope, *de pontif.lib.*5. *cap.*4.

79 9 The day of the Lord ſhall reveale it, 1 *Cor.*3. 13. that is, ſaith Bellarmine, the generall day of Iudgement, *Lib. de purgat.*1. cap. 4. the Rhemiſts underſtand the particular day of every mans death, Annot. 1 *Cor.*3. *ſect.*3.

80 10 Whereas Iohn is forbidden by the Angell to worſhip him, *Apoc.*19.*verſ.*10. The Rhemiſts ſay, it was becauſe Iohn being deceived in the error of his perſon, and ſo taking the Angell for Chriſt, gave him divine honour, Annot. in eum locum. But Bellarmine ſaith, hee did but give the Angell the worſhip due unto him, and did well in adoring the Angell: and that the Angell did well in refuſing adoration, for reverence to the humanity of Chriſt. The Rhemiſts ſay, it was refuſed for reverence to the excellency of Iohns perſon, Bellarm. lib. 1. *de ſanctis, cap.*14. Thus theſe Ieſuites agree, as they ſay, as harp and harrow.

81 11 The Rhemiſts affirme, that images are not to be adored with godly or divine honour, Annot. Acts 17.*ſect.*5. Bellarmine yet granteth, that impropriè, improperly, notwithſtanding they may be adored with divine worſhip, Lib. 2. de ſanct. cap. 23.

82 12 Bellarmine denieth, that the body of Chriſt being eaten, goeth any further than the ſtomacke, *lib.*1. *de Euchar.cap.*14. The Rhemiſts goe further, they ſay wee are made a piece of his body and blood, 1 *Cor.*10.*ſect.*5. as though his body were converted into the ſubſtance of their bodies.

83 13 The Rhemiſts commend the reſerving of the water in Baptiſme, and carrying of it home, to give it the diſeaſed to drinke, *Annot. Iam.*5 ſect. 5. But Bellarmine alloweth the reſervation only of the Euchariſt, which only, ſaith he, remaineth a Sacrament, after the uſe, *lib.*4. *de Euchariſt.cap.*3.

84 14 The Rhemiſts ſay, wee doe improperly name the whole Sacrament, and miniſtration thereof Communion, Annot. 1 *Cor.*11.*ſect.*14. yet Bellarmine dealeth more liberally, for he frankly and freely uſeth the name of Communion, as *lib.*4. *de Euchar.cap.*24.tot.capit. and many other places.

85 15. The Rhemiſts upon thoſe words of the Apoſtle, *Heb.*13.10. We have an altar, doe ground the having of their materiall altars for the ſacrifice of the body of Chriſt: and would prove by this place, that Chriſtians have altars properly ſo called, Annot. in hunc locum. Bellarmine of purpoſe refraineth to urge this place againſt us, becauſe, ſaith he, divers Catholike Writers doe underſtand it either of the Croſſe, or of Chriſt himſelfe, *Lib.*1.de miſſ. cap. 14.

86 16 Bellarmine ſaith, that in the Euchariſt onely, the Prieſt doth Induere perſonam Chriſti, take upon him the perſon of Chriſt, when he ſaith, This is my body: In other Sacraments he is but the Miniſter of Chriſt, he doth not take his perſon upon him, *lib.*4.*de Euch.c.*14. Yet the Rhemiſts affirme, that the Prieſt in other popiſh Sacraments alſo doth take upon him the perſon of Chriſt: as in penance hee abſolveth in the perſon of Chriſt, Annot. 2 Cor. 2. ſect. 6. Bellarmine alſo varieth from other Papiſts of theſe daies, as well as from the Rhemiſts, and they vary from him.

87 17 Heskias a Papiſt, affirmeth, that the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the Croſſe, was after the order of *Aaron, lib.*1.*cap.*13. Bellarmine ſaith plainly, that it was not properly either after Aarons order, or *Melchiſedecks, lib.*1. *de miſſa, cap.*6. reſp.ad 5. argum.

88 18 The Concell of Trent concludeth thus, concerning the adoration of images, Honor qui eis debetur, refertur ad prototypa, quæ illa repræſentant: The honour due unto them, is to be referred to thoſe things which they repreſent, *Seſſ.*25. But Bellarmine holdeth, that there is religious worſhip properly due unto them, Et non ſolum ut vicem gerunt exemplaris, and not only as they repreſent another thing, De imaginibus Sanctorum, liber 2. cap. 22.

89 19 Bellarmine denieth that Auguſtine underſtood thoſe words of our Saviour figuratively, This is my body: when his words are moſt plaine, writing thus, Non dubitavit Dominus dicere, hoc eſt corpus meum, cum ſignum daret corporis ſui: The Lord doubted not to ſay, This is my body, when hee gave a ſigne of his body: yet Bellarmine laboureth by ſubtile and fraudulent diſtinctions to ſhift off and obſcure the evidence of theſe words, lib. 2. *de Euchariſt. cap.*24. By other Papiſts, notwithſtanding, of no meane account, it is confeſſed, that Auguſtine did expound thoſe words figuratively, *Fox, pag.*1428. col. 1. Secret. Bourne, Fecknam.

90 20 Concerning the ſtory of Pope Ioane, and the circumſtances thereof, it is pretty ſport to ſee what ſhifts the Papiſts are driven unto, and how they jarre one with another, to obſcure, if it were poſsible, the light of that ſtory. Harding denieth, that whereas the ſtory ſaith, upon that occaſion, in the election of the Popes they uſed a chaire with an hole to try the Popes humanity, he flatly denieth that there was any ſuch thing: Or that the Popes doe refraine to goe that way in proceſsion, where Pope Ioane travelled with childe: Or that there is any image repreſenting ſuch a thing, he counteth all theſe fables. But Bellarmine, which is better acquainted with Rome, than it ſhould ſeeme Harding was, doth ſomewhat more cunningly excuſe the matter; to the firſt he ſaith, there is indeed a porphyry chaire, but to ſhew the Popes humility, not to trie his humanity: to the next, he confeſſeth the Pope refraineth to goe that way, but not upon any ſuch occaſion, but onely becauſe it is a ſtrait way, and not fit for his traine: to the third, he granteth there is an image, not without faſhion or ſhape, as Harding ſaith, who compareth it to ſome of the ragged ſtones at Stonage, but it rather reſembleth, ſaith he, a heatheniſh Prieſt going to ſacrifice, than a woman, Harding. defenſ. apol. pag. 428. Bellarm. lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 24. Let us ſee yet a little further the manifold contradictions of the new popiſh writers, eſpecially concerning the Euchariſt.

91 Whereas the Euchariſt is ſo called of gratia, grace, Turriane ſaith, it muſt be underſtood of gratia ſubſtantialis, & autohypoſtatos, of ſubſtantiall and hypoſtaticall grace, tract. 2. cap. 13. Staniſlaus Socolovius will have it ſo called of accidentall grace, becauſe in the Euchariſt, mentionem facimus omnium bonorum, &c. Wee make mention of all Gods benefits, and give thankes for the ſame, de adorat. Euchariſt. fol. 26, 27.

92 Scarga de Euchariſt. lib. 1. cap. 5. ſaith thus, Speciem panis ita vocari corpus Chriſti, ut ſcrinium in quo eſt aurum, auri nomine vocatur: That the forme of bread is ſo called Chriſts body, as the caske, whereon the gold is, is called gold, but Bellarmine ſaith, never any of the Catholikes affirmed, the grace of the Spirit, in ſacramentis ſicut in vaſis contineri, to be in the Sacraments contained, as in veſſels, lib. 1. de Sacram. cap. 4. and yet one of his fellowes, as wee ſee, likeneth the Euchariſt to a caske, which containeth gold.

93 Bellarmine underſtandeth thoſe word of our Saviour, I am with you to the end of the world, not of the corporall preſence, but of the divinity of Chriſt, and the preſence of grace, ad quod non requiritur præſentia corporalis, to the which the corporall preſence is not neceſſary, de Chriſto, lib. 3. cap. 16. But Vega farre otherwiſe ſaith, it is an abſurd thing, Chriſtum tanquam magnum aliquod donum promiſiſſe non diſceſſurum ſe ſecundum divinitatem: That Chriſt ſhould promiſe this as ſo great a gift, not to depart from them in his divinity or godhead.

94 Vega de miſſ. theſ. 119. that the ſacrifices of the Law were availeable, ut expiarentur defunctorum culpæ, to expiate the ſinnes of the dead: Bellarmine ſaith flatly, Sacrificia non valuiſſe ad expiationem peccati, that the ſacrifices were not availeable for the expiation of ſinne, lib. 2. de effect. Sacrament. cap. 17.

95 Scarga art. 8. fol. 211. Signo crucis conſecratur corpus Dominicum, The body of Chriſt is conſecrated with the ſigne of the Croſſe: yet Bellarmne ſaith, Nec in characteribus, nec in ſono aut numero ſyllabarum vim ponimus: We place no vertue in characters or ſignes, not in the number or ſound of ſyllables: then conſequently not in the character or ſigne of the Croſſe, Bellar. lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 20.

96 Turriane counteth it hereſie, to deny that the body of Chriſt is paſsible in the Sacrament, tract. 1. cap. 7. fol. 36. Scarga ſaith, Impaſſibili modo in Euchariſtia manducatur, That hee is eaten in the Sacrament after an impaſsible manner, art. 11. fol. 333.

97 Scarga ſaith, A baptiſmo natura Euchariſtiæ non judicatur, That wee cannot judge of the nature of the Euchariſt by baptiſme, Turriane is more liberall, and ſaith, after hee had compared Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt together, aut proprietatem in utroque ſacramentor. ſerva, aut in neutro, keepe the property of ſpeach, either in both Sacraments, or in neither, 1. tract. cap. 1. fol. 4.

98 Whereas S. Paul ſaith, the Rocke was Chriſt, Turriane thus expoundeth it, Petra erat Chriſtus figuratè, the Rocke was Chriſt figuratively, tract. 1. cap. 2. fol. 7. Scarga ſaith, it was propriſſima non figurata locutio, a moſt proper ſpeech, and not figurative at all, art. 5. fol. 99.

99 Thoſe words of S. Auguſtine, Crede & manducaſti, Beleeve, and thou haſt eaten, are notably turned and toſſed of our adverſaries: Scarga underſtandeth them de voto & deſiderio ſacramenti, of the vow and deſire of the Sacrament, when it cannot be had, in art. 10. fol. 279. Vega underſtandeth them, de pane prophano, of prophane not ſacramentall bread, de tranſubſt. theſ. 167. Bellarmine ſaith, that Auguſtine did ſpeake, non de Sacramento, ſed de fide incarnationis, not of the Sacrament, but of the faith of the incarnation of Chriſt, lib. 2. de Euchar. cap. 24.

100 Scarga is bold to ſay, the holy fleſh of Chriſt is given unto us, non ut videamus, ſed etiam, ut dentes illi infigamus, not to ſee it, but to faſten our teeth into it, art. 11. fol. 34. Iurgivicius ſaith contrary: the Catholike Church teacheth not, dentem, non fidem, fauces, non cor, &c. that we muſt bring our teeth, and not faith, our jawes, and not our heart, &c. Cont. Volan. mendac. 53.

101 Scarga ſaith, durabit hic ritus, this rite whereby wee doe ſhew the Lords death, ſhall continue till Chriſts comming, art. 8 fol. 188. and Bellarmine affirmeth the ſame, lib. 1. de Sacram. cap. 9. but Vega ſaith, that the ſacrifice of the Maſſe ſhall be taken away by Antichriſt, de miſſ. theſ. 46. how then is it like to continue till Chriſts comming?

102 Bellarmine, lib. 4. de miſſ. cap. 22. In una ſpecie non habetur perfectè & integrè ſacrificij ratio, ſed utraq; neceſſaria eſt: The Sacrifice is not fully and wholy expreſſed in one kinde, but both are neceſſary: but Gradicius concion. fol. 86. writeth thus: I know, ad miſſæ ſubſtantiam utramque ſpeciem non pertinere, that both kindes doe not belong to the ſubſtance of the Maſſe: what can be ſaid more contrary?

103 Duræus cont. Whitaker. fol. 49. ſaith, that it cannot be found, neither in the 17. of Geneſis, nor in any other place of Scripture, Circumciſio eſt fœdus, this ſentence, Circumciſion is the covenant: but Bellarmine confeſſeth it in theſe words. Vbi circumciſio vocatur fœdus, ibi dicitur etiam ſignum fœderis, Where circumciſion is called a covenant, it is there alſo ſaid to be a ſigne of the covenant, Lib. 1. de Euchariſt. cap. 11.

104 Bellarmine, lib. 2. de miſſ. cap. 8. confeſſeth, Verum ſacrificium futurum, etiamſi nulla in eo fieret ſanctorum memoria, that it is a true ſacrifice, though there be no commemoration of the Saints: but Arturus chargeth the Proteſtants with ſacriledge, Quia martyrum commemorationes impiè ex veſtris liturgijs ſuſtuliſtis, Becauſe you have wickedly, ſaith he, taken away the commemoration of the martyrs out of your liturgies, apol. cont. Toſſan. cap. 3. fol. 30. then let him as well charge Bellarmine with ſacriledge, who thinketh, that ſuch commemorations are not neceſſary, but may be ſpared.

105 Scarga ſaith, Confitemur ceſſantibus ſpeciebus ceſſare corpus Chriſti, Wee confeſſe, that when the ſhapes or ſhewes of bread and wine doe ceaſe, the body of Chriſt alſo ceaſeth there to be, art. 11. fol. 335. but Vega, Nulli homini licere præſcribere tempus, &c. That it is not lawfull for any man to preſcribe the time how long this propoſition ſhould be true, This is my body, De real. præſent. theſ. 103.

106 Vega underſtandeth thoſe words, quod pro vobis frangitur, which is broken for you, de vero & reali corpore Chriſti, of the true and reall bodie of Chriſt: and confeſſeth, that the body of Chriſt can be broken, de real. præſentia, theſ. 84. But Scarga, Non dicimus tangi, aut frangi corpus Chriſti, We ſay not that the body of Chriſt can bee either touched or broken, art. 11. fol. 344. and Thomas Aquinas alſo flatly concludeth, Non poteſt dici, quod ipſum corpus Chriſti verum frangatur: It cannot be ſaid, that the true body of Chriſt is broken, part. 3. quæſt. 77. artic. 7.

107 Now, as touching the meaning of theſe words, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body, it is prety ſport, to ſee how they weary themſelves about the expoſition of this pronoune, hoc, this. Scarga would have it to be underſtood of Chriſts body, hoc, quod ſub ſpecieb. panis occultatur, This, which, is hid under theſe formes: and ſaith hee, nemo mentis compos, none in his right wit would ſay otherwiſe, lib. de Euchar. 1. cap. 5. But Vega de miſſ. fol. 13. underſtandeth it, de ſpecie panis, of the forme and ſhape of bread. Turriane ſaith, hoc ſubſtantiam panis demonſtrabat, This pronoune doth demonſtrate the ſubſtance of bread, tract. 1. cap. 22. Bellarmine hath a fourth opinion, Hoc demonſtat panem cœleſtem. This pronoune hoc, doth demonſtrate heavenly bread, lib. 2. de Euchariſt. cap. 7. Thus one of them ſaith, that hoc betokeneth the forme of bread: another, that it ſignifieth the ſubſtance of bread: a third, that it ſheweth not materiall, but heavenly bread: and yet another, that it referreth us to the body of Chriſt: what certainty then can pope-catholike profeſſors have of their faith, when the Maſters of their religion are not yet agreed? And theſe diſſenſions with an hundred more they have among themſelves as touching the Euchariſt: more who liſt to ſee, I referre him to the Treatiſe of Craſtovius, called Bellum Ieſuiticum, where he hath induſtriouſly gathered together 205. contradictions of the Ieſuites concerning the Sacrament of the altar: thus wee ſee, that neither the old Papiſts agree with the new, nor the new among themſelves: ſo that I may fitly apply againſt them that ſaying of Saint Ambroſe: Hæreſes velut quædam hydra fabularum, vulneribus ſuis crevit, & dum ſæpe reciditur, pullulavit: Hereſie, like to the ſerpent reported of in fables, doth increaſe by the wounds thereof, and where it is cut, it brancheth out againe, lib. 1. de fide, cap. 4. So popery groweth into one abſurdity after another; and as the heads of this hydra roſe up one in anothers place, ſo our adverſaries abound in new devices, and being but one body, have many heads, thinking and ſpeaking divers and contrary things. Now, to the third part, let us ſee how they doe not onely one vary from another, but the ſame writer doth often diſſent from himſelfe.

108 1 Bellarmine, for expounding of Scripture, referreth us to the [a] fathers of the Church: from them to generall Councells: laſtly to the Pope and Cardinalls, lib. 3. de verb. cap. 3. but other where, he makes the Pope the chiefe judge of all controverſies above generall Councells, who cannot erre in decreeing concerning faith, no, nor concerning manners: yea, it is probable he canot erre as a particular perſon, Lib. 4. de pont. c. 3. 5. 6. What need he then joine the Cardinals in cōmiſſion with the Pope?

109 2 Bellarmine in one place denieth, that faith is requiſite or neceſſary to make a true member of the Church, lib. 3. de Eccleſ. cap. 10. and yet elſewhere forgetting himſelfe, ſaith, Fide firmiſſima ac certiſſima credimus, we by a moſt certaine and infallible faith beleeve, which is the Church: ibid. cap. 16. If by faith only the Church is knowne, and ſo who are the true members thereof: much more doe the members themſelves ſtand by faith: and if by faith they are beleeved of others to be of the Church, much more by faith ought they to be aſſured of it themſelves: Theſe things therefore hang not currantly together.

[a] Though Bellarmine maketh not expreſſe mētion there of the fathers of the Church, yet he referreth to the fourth ſeſſion of the Councell of Trent, where that interpretation is preferred which hath the joint conſent of the fathers: ſo is the caviller anſwered. And Pope Pius the 4. in his Bull annexed to the Councell of Trent, preſcribeth an oath to be taken by Biſhops, Deans, Chanons, and all that have cure of ſoules, not to receive any interpretation of Scripture, which is not according to the uniforme conſent of the ancient fathers, ſee further, Retect. p. 46.

3 Bellarmine out of that Text, Paſce oves meas, Feede my ſheepe, would prove that Biſhops only are the Paſtors of the Church, and therefore that they only are to give deciding voices in Councels, *Lib.*1. *de Conc. cap.*15. But *cap.*19. he by that Text proveth the Pope to be univerſall Paſtor, and ſo to be preſident in Councells; ſo ſoone hath he forgotten himſelfe. 110

4 Bellarmine in one place maintaineth this point, Romani pontificis Eccleſiaſticum principatum, authore Christo principium accepiſſe, That the Eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction of the Pope tooke beginning of Chriſt, *lib.*2. *de pontif. cap.*12. But elſewhere he ſaith, that the Pope is not Peters ſucceſſour jure divino, by any divine right: neither is it ex prima inſtitutione pontificatus, quæ in Evangelio legitur, of the firſt inſtitution of that chiefe Paſtorſhip, whereof wee reade in the Goſpell, *cap.*17. In any mans eare, I thinke, theſe ſpeeches will make a contrary ſound. 111

5 Bellarmine confeſſeth that the Church of Rome cannot erre perſonally, and yet denieth not but that the Pope may erre perſonally, which is an abſurd and a contradictory ſpeech, ſeeing the Popes being at Rome, is the cauſe, as they ſay, of the not erring of that Church: and therefore hee holdeth that the Church of Rome is ſure no longer to be preſerved from error, than the Popes Apoſtolike Sea remaineth there. If the Pope then be the cauſe of their not erring, hee is much more free from error himſelfe: for how then is the Church free from perſonall error, and not the Pope? 112

6 Bellarmine in one place ſaith, that the Pope only ſucceedeth Peter properly; Biſhops ſucceede the Apoſtles, non proprie, not properly, *de pont. lib.*4, 25. But in another place he writeth thus, Epiſcopi proprie ſuccedunt Apoſtolis: Biſhops properly ſucceed the Apoſtles, *lib.*1. *de Clericis, cap.*12. proprie, non proprie, properly, not properly to ſucceed, I trow they be contradictory ſpeeches. 113

7 Bellarmine confeſſeth, that the marriage of Miniſters is not forbidden by the Word of God: and yet contrary to his owne opinion, he wreſteth places of Scripture againſt the marriage of Miniſters, as that 2 *Tim.*2.3. No man that warreth intangleth himſelfe, &c. lib. de Clericis 19. 114 2 Tim.2.3.

8 Bellarmine ſaith, that the care of children and houſhold, are a great impediment to the calling of a Miniſter, ibidem 19. and forbidden under the name of ſecular affaires in that place to Timothy: And yet elſewhere he affirmeth, regimen politicum, politicall government, is no hinderance to the Eccleſiaſticall calling: but that the ſame man may very well be both an Eccleſiaſticall and politicall Prince, *de Rom. pontif. lib.*5. *cap.*10. *ad object.*5. If then the care and charge of a whole City or Country, may ſtand very well with the Eccleſiaſticall function, much more the care of one family may: The Ieſuite is not well adviſed, ſo ſoone to forget himſelfe. 114

9 That place in Zachary, Thou haſt looſed thy priſoners out of the pit, where there was no water, *Zach.*9.11. Bellarmine in one place expoundeth of Limbus Patrum, The dungeon of darkneſſe, from whence the Patriarkes were delivered, *lib.*4. *de Chriſti anima. cap.*11. In another place, he alleageth it to prove purgatory, *lib.*1 *de purgat. cap.*3. But Limbus Patrum and purgatory, are places among Papiſts much different. 115 Zachar.9.11.

10 Bellarmine in expounding of that place, 1 *Cor.*3.13. The fire ſhall trie every mans worke, and *verſ.*15. He ſhall be ſaved, yet as it were by the fire, is put to ſuch trouble and buſineſſe, that within the compaſſe of one chapter, he admitteth contrary ſenſes of the ſame place: in the firſt place, by fire underſtanding the judgement of God: in the ſecond, the flames of purgatory, *de purgat. lib.*1. *cap.*4. 116 1 Cor.3.13.

11 Bellarmine in one place writeth thus: In extremo judicio duo tantum loca remanebunt, Paradiſus & Gehenna: At the laſt judgement, two places ſhall only remaine, Paradiſe and Gehenna, heaven and hell, *lib.*1. *de purgat. cap.*8. reſponſ. ad 5. object. And yet not long after, hee confeſſeth, that there are two places of eternall puniſhment, Limbus infantum, pro pœna ſolius damni æterna: the dungeon of infants for eternall puniſhment of loſſe without ſmart, and infernus pro pœna damni & ſenſus: Hell for the eternall puniſhment both of loſſe and ſmart, Theſe then are two places that ſhall laſt for ever, and heaven is the third: how then are they but two? *lib.*2. *de purgat. cap.*6. 117

12 Bellarmine otherwhile beareth us in hand, that there are but two kinds of Religious worſhip: The higher kind called λατρεῖα, due only to God, and an inferiour ſort, called δουλεῖα, proper to Saints: unto the which kind belongeth that which they call Hyperdouleia, a higher kind of inferiour ſervice or worſhip proper to the Virgin Mary and the humanity of Chriſt: ſo hee maketh three kindes in all, *lib.*1. *de Sanct. cap.*12. But in another place hee doubleth the number, and maketh ſixe ſeverall ſorts, Latreia ſimpliciter, and ſecundum quid: the firſt due unto God, the ſecond unto his Image: Hyperdoulia ſimpliciter, and ſecundum quid: and ſo likewiſe Dulia ſimpliciter, and ſecundum quid, the firſt proper unto the Virgin Mary, and other Saints, the other unto their images, *lib.*2. cap. 25. 118

13 Bellarmine, to prove amongſt other reaſons, that thoſe words of Chriſt, This is my body, are taken properly, not figuratively: alleageth this for one, Verba legum perſpicua, & propria eſſe debent: The words of lawes and ſtatutes ſhould be perſpicuous and proper. And againe, Dogmata præcipua non niſi proprijs verbis tradi ſolent in divinis literis: Principall precepts are wont in the Scriptures to be expreſſed in proper words: therefore it is not like, that Chriſt being now to preſcribe a perpetuall Law and forme of this Sacrament, would ſpeake obſcurely, *Lib.*1. *de Euchariſt. cap.*9. yet elſewhere he ſaith, Neceſſario fatendum eſt, Scripturas eſſe obſcuriſſimas: It muſt neceſſarily be granted, that the Scriptures are moſt obſcure, *de Verb. l.*3. *c.*1. And findeth great fault with us, for ſaying, that the pre- 119

cepts of faith are evidently expreſſed in Scripture, which is no more than hee himſelfe affirmeth.

120 14 Sometime Bellarmine telleth us, that Corpus Domini ſolo corpore ſine fide acceptum nihil prodeſt: That the body of Chriſt being only received with the body profiteth not, de Euchariſt.lib.3. cap.9. Wherein hee ſaith right. Sometime againe hee would make us beleeve, that the Sacraments are availeable, ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought, non ex merito agentis, vel ſuſcipientis, not for the worthineſſe either of the receiver or Miniſter. And againe, Fides & pœnitentia non dant efficaciam ſacramento: Faith and repentance doe not give efficacie to the Sacrament, Lib.2.de Sacrament.cap.1. How theſe things agree together I cannot ſee: that the Sacrament ſhould not profit without the faith of the receiver. And againe, that it ſhould availe, ex opere operato, without any reſpect had to the receiver.

121 15 Bellarmine ſaith, Opera bona ſine fide non proſunt: good workes profit not without faith, de Sacrament. Euchariſt. lib.3.cap.9. And yet elſewhere confeſſeth, that there may be Meritum de congruo, a merit of congruity before juſtification. If then workes may merit, then they are availeable, and that without faith, which cannot be had before juſtification, Bellarm. lib.2. de pœnitent. cap. 12.

122 16 Bellarmine in one place ſaith, Non ſolum res, ſed etiam verba in Sacramentis novæ legis à Deo determinata ſunt, ut non liceat quidpiam immutare: The words and matter in the Sacraments of the new law, are ſo determined of God, that it is not lawfull to change one jot, De Sacrament. lib.1. cap.21. Yet they have preſumed, contrary to their owne rule, to change both. As for the matter of the Euchariſt, they have taken away the one halfe, depriving the people of the cup. And concerning the words, they do ſhew no leſſe boldneſſe in altering them: They have put in (enim) into the words of conſecration, ſaying, hoc enim eſt corpus meum: and in conſecrating the cup, they adde theſe words, myſterium fidei, The myſtery of faith: and all this Bellarmine ſaith is well done, and that theſe words which are not found in the Goſpell, are ſupplied by tradition from S. Peter; de Sacram. Euchar.lib.4. cap. 14. Thus they offend againſt their owne rules: for they adde unto the words determined of God in his holy Word which is contained in the Scriptures.

123 17 Bellarmine ſometime granteth, that the body of Chriſt is made of bread in the Euchariſt, ut ex aqua factum eſt vinum, as of water Chriſt made wine, lib. 3. de Euchariſt. cap.24. But in another place, he flatly denieth it: for that was a productive converſion of the water into wine, which is, when that beginneth to be, which was not before: but the changing of bread into Chriſts body is no productive converſion, but only adductive, not making a thing to be which was not before: but only bringing it to a place where it was not before, de Euchariſt.lib.3.cap.18.

124 18 To ſay, that the Iews did not eate the ſame ſpirituall meate with us, and that the Manna, which they did eate, had no ſpirituall effect, which is affirmed notwithſtanding, by S. Paul, 1 *Cor.*10. 1,2. and yet to grant, that they which were then juſt or righteous, were ſo juſt, ob participationem ſacrificij crucis, by the participation of the ſacrifice upon the Croſſe, I thinke are plaine contraries: to ſay they were not partakers of the ſame ſpirituall meate with us, namely Chriſt, and yet againe, that they were: yet Bellarmine affirmeth both; the firſt, lib.2. de Sacram.cap.17.reſp. ad argum. 3. The latter, lib.1.de Miſſ.cap.20.

125 19 To ſay that faith goeth before repentance, or as they terme it, Penance: and that repentance goeth before juſtification, is all one to ſay, that repentance goeth before juſtification, and that juſtification likewiſe goeth before repentance: for by faith are we juſtified, *Rom.*5.1. As ſoone as faith commeth, juſtification doth accompany it: If faith goe before, ſo doth juſtification: and if juſtification follow repentance, ſo doth faith: yet are they both affirmed by Bellarmine, de pœnit.lib.1.cap.19.

126 20 To theſe contradictory ſpeeches of Bellarmine, other ſuch like a great number may be added: as ſometime he ſaith, Accipimus carnem & corpus non pro toto, ſed parte: Wee take the fleſh and the body not for whole Chriſt, but for a part, lib.3. de Euchariſt.cap.15. bur elſewhere he ſaith, per concomitantiam ſub utraque ſpecie totum eſſe Chriſtum indicatur: by way of concomitancy, whole Chriſt is ſignified under both kindes, lib.1. de Euchariſt. cap.2. whole Chriſt, and not whole Chriſt to be contained under each kind, are contrary.

127 21 Bellarmine ſometime ſaith, Chriſtus non teritur, roditur, crematur, &c. Chriſt is not torne, or chawed, or burnt, lib. de Euchar.cap.11. and yet againe, as forgetting himſelfe in the end of the ſame chapter, hee ſaith, that ſome men cannot abide to heare that Chriſt ſhould be incloſed in a boxe, be devoured of beaſts, burned, &c. do they not thinke that Chriſt in his fleſh might have bin both bitten of beaſts, and burned: and if Chriſt might have ſuffered theſe things in his owne ſhape, how much more under the ſhape of bread and wine, &c. to ſay that the body of Chriſt may be devoured, and not devoured, burned, and not burned, are contrary.

128 22 To ſay that the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and the ſacrifice of the Groſſe, are idem, quoad rem oblatam, are all one in teſpect of the thing offered: and to ſay that upon the Croſſe, Chriſts eſſe naturale, his naturall being was deſtroyed, in the Maſſe, his eſſe ſacramentale, his ſacramentall being, and that his naturall being is more noble than his ſacramentall: how are they not contrary? for if the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and of the Croſſe be the ſame, one cannot be better than the other: the firſt Bellarmine affirmeth, lib.1.de miſſ.cap.27. the other lib.2.de miſſ. cap.4.

129 23 To ſay Panem certè dici offerri pro Eccleſia, that the bread is falſely ſaid to be offered for the Church,and again abſurdiſſimum eſt, panem triticeum ſacrificari,it is moſt abſurd,that wheaten bread ſhould be ſacrificed,are moſt contrary: Bellarmine affirmeth the firſt,lib.2.de miſſ.ca.21.the ſecond, lib.1.de miſſ.cap.27.

24 To ſay, Res ſacra in conſecratione ex prophana effecta, &c. In the conſecration the prophane thing is made holy;and againe, the bread and wine paulo ante conſecrationem ſacrificia ſancta, a little before the conſecration,are holy ſacrifices, are contrary ſpeeches, to affirme the ſame thing before conſecration to be holy,and prophane: yet both affirmed by Bellarmine,the firſt,lib.1.de miſſ.cap.27. the ſeond, lib.2.de miſſ.cap.21. 130

25 Bellarmine in one place confeſſeth the change of the bread into the Body of Chriſt, to bee a generation: cum ſuccedit res nobilior, tota illa actio generatio dicitur: when as a more noble thing ſucceedeth,it is called a generation, lib.3.de Euchar.cap.24. elſewhere he denieth it, who findeth fault with Peter Martyr, quia toties inculcat corpus Chriſti generari: becauſe he ſo much urgeth, that the Body of Chriſt is generated,fol.399.ejuſdem capitis. 131

26 Sometime he ſaith,Sacrificium eſt actio,non res permanens: A ſacrifice is an action, not a permanent thing,lib.2.de miſſ.cap.4. And againe, Sacrificium eſt res aliqua ſenſibilis & permanens: A ſacrifice muſt be ſome ſenſible and permanent thing, lib.1.de miſſ.cap.2. to be a permanent thing, and not to be, are contraries. 132

27 In cœna Domini expreſſit remiſſionem peccatorum: Chriſt in his laſt ſupper expreſſed, and promiſed remiſsion of ſins, Bellarm.lib.1. de miſſa cap.8. and yet he confuteth the Lutherans for affirming,that the Euchariſt was inſtituted for remiſsion of ſins,lib.4 de Euchar.cap.18.19. 133

28 Chriſt doth not now offer any thing himſelfe,ſed vocatur caput eorum, qui offerunt, but is the head of thoſe that offer, Bellar.lib.1.de miſſa cap.6. And againe, Chriſtus per ſacerdotes ſacrificat & ſacrificatur, Chriſt by his Prieſts doth ſacrifice;and is ſacrificed,ibid. how can Chriſt be ſaid to ſacrifice,if he have nothing to offer? 134

29 Theſe words in the ſixth of Iohn, He that eateth this bread, ſhall live for ever, Bellarmine ſometime denieth to be underſtood of the Euchariſt,but of Chriſts incarnation.lib.2.de Euchar.c.8. ſometime he granteth it, as where he proveth out of this place, which maketh mention onely of bread,that the ſacrament in one kind is ſufficient,Bellar.lib.1.de Euchar.cap.7. 135

30 Bellarmine ſometime ſaith,that verba præſcripta in Baptiſmo invocationem ſonant Trinitatis, that the words preſcribed;in Baptiſme doe imply an invocation of the Trinity, lib.1. de Sacram. cap.19. but in another place he ſaith,that which maketh the Sacrament in Baptiſme,non ſunt humanæ preces, ſed illa verba Domini,&c: are not humane prayers,but thoſe words of our Lord, I baptize thee in the Name,&c. Here he denieth, that this forme of words containeth a prayer or invocation,which hee granted before,lib.4.de Euchar.cap.13. 136

31 Bellarmine ſometime ſaith,that there is no ſacrifice in the law for the greater ſinnes,as of idolatry,adultery, lib.2.de ſacram.cap.17. and yet he elſewhere approveth the Macchabees to be Canonical Scripture,for that mention is made with commendation of ſacrificing for the idolatry of thoſe which were dead,de Verbo Dei.cap.15. 137

32 Bellarmine concerning Manna,which the fathers eate in the wilderneſſe,ſometime ſaith it was called not the food of Angels,propter effectum,for any ſpirituall effect it had,lib. 2. de ſacr. in gener. cap.17. And againe he ſaith, that though the fathers in Manna did not receive the fleſh of Chriſt: ſumebant tamen effectum ejus, id eſt, gratiam, yet they received the effect thereof, that is, Grace, lib.1.de Euchariſt.cap.13. to ſay that Manna had a Spirituall effect, and againe,that it had none,are contrary, 138

33 Theſe words,Hoc eſt corpus meum,This is my body, Bellarmine ſo expoundeth, that he would have hoc, to demonſtrate, panem cœleſtem, heavenly bread, ſometime, terrenum panem,earthly and terrene bread, lib.2.de Euchariſt.cap.7. ſo well he agreeth with himſelfe. 139

34 Bellarm.lib.4. de miſſa cap.22. In una ſpecie non habetur integrè & perfectè ſacrificij ratio: The nature and reaſon of the ſacrifice is not expreſſed perfectly and wholly in one kind: and yet in the ſame place he ſaith, Duo illa ſigna, non ſunt partes eſſentiales ſacramenti, Thoſe two ſignes are not eſſentiall parts of the Sacrament: but how are they not eſſentiall, ſince that without them it is not perfect? theſe things agree not. 140

35 Lib.4.de Euchar.cap.23. Sacramentum ſub duplici ſpecie inſtitutum eſt, The Sactament was inſtituted under both kinds, Lib.4.cap.27. Si propriè & ſecundum Evangelium loqui volumus,cœna Domini non conſtat niſi ex una ſpecie: If we will ſpeake properly, and according to the Goſpell,the Supper of the Lord doth conſiſt but of one kind,&c: to be inſtituted under both kinds,and under but one kind,are contrary. 141

36 Lib.4. de Euchariſt.cap.23. The ſame thing being given in one kinde, or both, Famem & ſitim animæ ſedat,Doth ſlake the hunger and thirſt of the ſoule: And yet in the ſame place he ſaith,as forgetting himſelfe: Euchariſtiam ſub ſpecie panis conferre gratiam, ſed non ante ſumptionem alterius ſpeciei: That the Euchariſt under the forme of bread doth conferre grace, but not before the taking of the other kind,&c. Then it followeth,that under one kind it conferreth not grace,and ſo aſſwageth not the thirſt of the ſoule,which before was affirmed. 142

143 37 Bellarm. lib. 2. de effect. ſacram. cap. 24. Sacramenta ex divina inſtitutione promiſſionem habent annexam gratiæ juſtificantis: The ſacraments by the divine inſtitution, have a promiſe annnexed of juſtifying grace: and lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 14. he ſaith cleane contrary, Particula, quod promiſſio debet eſſe annexa ſigno divina ordinatione, falſa eſt: This clauſe, that a promiſe muſt by the divine ordinance be annexed to the ſigne, is falſe.

144 38 Lib. 1. de miſſa, cap. 10. Euchariſtia nullius miniſtri malitia pollui poteſt: The Euchariſt cannot be polluted through the evilnes of the Miniſter. And againe, lib. 2. de miſſa, cap. 24. Euchariſtia poteſt ex parte miniſtri non placere: The Euchariſt on the behalfe of the Miniſter may ſometime not be pleaſing, or acceptable unto God. If it is not accepted becauſe of the Miniſter, then it is by him polluted.

145 39 Sometime he ſaith, Sacrificium miſſæ recte celebrari pro ſanctis, That the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is ſolemnized for the Saints, lib. 2. de miſſ. cap. 8. and yet in the ſame place, Non tam oramus pro ſanctis, quàm pro nobis: We pray not ſo much for the Saints, as for our ſelves.

146 40 Bellarm. lib. 1. de miſſ. cap. 9. Vpon thoſe words in the 9. of Daniel, where it is ſaid, that Antichriſt ſhall take away the daily ſacrifice, confeſſeth, Quòd Antichriſtus ſimpliciter auferet juge ſacrificium: That Antichriſt ſhall ſimply take away the daily ſacrifice. But lib. 3. de Eccleſia militanti, cap. 16. he denieth it, and ſaith thus, Loquitur Daniel apertiſſimè de everſione Hieruſalem, & ceſſatione ſacrificij Iudæorum: Daniel ſpeaketh plainely of the overthrow of Ieruſalem, and the ceaſing of the ſacrifice of the Iewes: and he will not have the place to be expounded of Antichriſt.

147 41 Lib. 3. de Romano pontif. cap. 12. Bellarmine ſaith, Antichriſtus [a] licet verè ſit de tribu Dan: Though Antichriſt ſhall verily be of the Tribe of Dan, &c: and in the ſame place he confuteth that opinion, and ſheweth divers reaſons why he is not like to come of the Tribe of Dan.

[a] Yet is it denied by a certaine popiſh caviller, that Bellarmine here affirmeth, that Antichriſt ſhall come of Dan; wheras he directly ſaith, Though he verily ſhal be of the tribe of dã, yet he ſhall faine himſelf to be of the family of David. See our further anſwere, Retect. pag. 50.

148 42 Sometime Bellarmine confeſſeth, Antichriſtum diabolum adoraturum, That Antichriſt ſhall worſhip the divell, lib. 3. de Rom. pontif. cap. 14. ſometime forgetting himſelfe, he ſaith, Idola odio habebit Antichriſtus: Antichriſt ſhall hate Idols, ibid.

149 43 By the God Maozim mentioned in Daniel, one while he underſtandeth the divell, whom Antichriſt ſhall worſhip, lib. 3. de Roman. pontif. cap. 14. another while he expoundeth it to be Antichriſt himſelfe, ibid.

150 44 Thus have we ſeene the inconſtancy of Bellarmine, and how every where he doth contradict himſelfe: an hundred ſuch like contradictions and more may eaſily be found in his workes: but leaving him a little, let us ſee whether other of his fellowes are not of the ſame ſpirit, with the ſame breath, as they ſay, blowing hot and cold. Sixtus Senenſis bibl. lib. 6. annot. 156. ſaith, Sacramentum eſt caro Chriſti, &c. That the fleſh and blood of Chriſt properly is a ſacrament. But in another place; annot. 22. ſuper Chryſoſtom. he ſeemeth to place the Sacrament in the accidents of bread and wine, Neceſſarium eſt, ut una cum vero corpore & ſanguine Chriſti ſint in ſacramento altaris, panis & vini accidentia: It is neceſſary, that the accidents of bread and wine ſhould be joyned together with the body and blood of Chriſt to worke the ſacrament.

151 45 Scarga. in art. 4. fol. 83. ſaith, that Luke only uſeth that forme of words, This cup is the new teſtament, &c. and yet in the ſame place forgetting himſelfe, he thus writeth: Vna eadem perpetua & conſtans verborum forma apud hos Evangeliſtas: That all the three Evangeliſts uſe one conſtant and perpetuall forme of words; if they all uſe one forme, how then hath S. Luke a forme of words by himſelfe?

152 46 The ſame Scarga, in art. 4. fol. 83. ſaith, Euchariſtia ad normam baptiſmi examinari non poteſt; The Euchariſt muſt not be examined according to the rule of Baptiſme: and yet art. 7. fol. 157. he thus writeth, Quod de Baptiſmo oſtenſum eſt, idem de ſacroſancta Euchariſtia oſtenditur, That which I have ſhewed concerning Baptiſme, may be ſhewed in the bleſſed Euchariſt: here againſt his owne rule he compareth Baptiſme and the Euchariſt together.

153 47 Turrian. tract. 1. c. 22. fol. 139. ſaith out of Tertullian, that in Chriſts words, this pronoune, hoc, demonſtrabat panis ſubſtantiam, did demonſtrate the ſubſtance of bread; and yet fol. 140. he contrary to himſelfe affirmeth, that Chriſt non potuit ſignificare ſubſtantiam panis, could not ſignifie the ſubſtance of bread.

154 48 The ſame Turriane, tract. 1. cap. 22. fol. 145. ſaith, that the wicked which unworthily receive Chriſts body, non fiunt membra Chriſti, ſed membra Satanæ, are not made the members of Chriſt, but the members of Satan: and yet in the ſame place, fiunt una caro Chriſti, ſed non unus ſpiritus, they are made one fleſh with Chriſt, but not one ſpirit, &c. If they be one fleſh with Chriſt, how are they not his members?

155 49 Vega de diſtrib. Euch. fol. 15. theſ. 23 ſaith, that the Iewes did uſe to eate of the ſacrifice, but never to drinke: but in another place de miſſa, theſ. 25. to prove, that they did drinke of the ſacrifice, hee alleageth that text, ſedit populus, manducare & bibere, the people ſate downe to eat and drinke.

156 50 Againe, Vega de diſtrib. Euchar. theſ. 29. he ſaith, hæc conſuetudo ſub altera ſpecie communicandi ab apoſtolis inſtituta, that this cuſtome of receiving in one kinde, was inſtituted of the Apoſtles: yet theſ. 63. he ſaith, Eccleſia propter Neſtorianos ſub unica tantum ſpecie dari jubet Euchariſtiam: The Church, becauſe of the Neſtorians, doth appoint that the Euchariſt ſhall bee given but under one kinde,&c. If the Church upon this occaſion did appoint and command it,how did the Apoſtles inſtitute it?

157 51 Ianſenius, as Bellarmine reporteth his opinion,lib.3,de pontif.cap.6. upon the words of Malachy,that Helias ſhould come before the Meſsiah, firſt is of opinion, non adimplendum eſſe in propria ejus perſona, that it muſt not be fulfilled in his owne perſon: and yet againe in another place upon the 17.of Matthew,he writeth,that the place of Malachy cannot be underſtood, niſi de vero Helia, but of Elias himſelfe.

158 52 Arturus, concerning the invocation of Saints,thus writeth, apolog.contr.Toſſan.cap.3.Catholici implorant ſanctos,ut pro ſe Deum deprecentur,&c. Catholikes doe pray to Saints, to pray for them unto God,not as though they as patrones could grant any thing themſelves: and yet he ſaith,cap.10. quod res humanas cum Chriſto regnantes in cœlo adminiſtrant, that the Saints doe raigne with Chriſt in heaven,and have the adminiſtration of earthly things committed to them,&c.how then are they not patrones,and not interceſſors onely?

159 53 The ſame Arturus de invocat.ſanctor. theſ.91. calleth the Centuriators Atheiſts,for denying invocation of Saints;yet elſewhere,*apolog cap.3.*he ſaith nulla neceſſitate compellimur,&c. we are not compelled of neceſsity to pray to Saints,we may pray unto Chriſt without them,&c.If it be not of neceſsity,how can it be Atheiſme not to doe it?

160 54 Againe,Arturus de invocat.ſanctor.theſ.132. reproveth Melancton ſcornefully, calling him a Grammarian,for ſaying thus, ſingulis ſanctis ſingulæ procurationes commiſſæ ſunt: They doe appoint unto every Saint their ſeverall procurations and charges, as Anna to give riches,Sebaſtiane to heale the peſtilence,&c. yet he himſelfe theſ.133. affirmeth the ſame,that the Saints have ſuch ſeverall charges given them of God,ſome to cure one diſeaſe,and ſome another: ut ſanè habere & experimur & ſupra demonſtravimus: we find by experience that they have ſuch procurations,and have ſhewed before.

161 55 Arturus de invocat.ſanctor.theſ.93. Sancti non puniendo, ſed paſtorum more gubernando, The Saints are ſet ouer us,not to puniſh,but as paſtors to governe us: and yet theſ.88 Sancti inveniuntur qui vindictā de alijs ob ſcelera ſumpſerunt: We find,that the Saints have taken puniſhment of ſome for their ſins,&c. Thus the Saints doe not puniſh in his opinion,and yet againe they doe puniſh.

162 56 Arturus apolog. cap.4 Sanctos ut ea ratione non invocamus, ita quoque in eoſdem non credimus: As we do not in that manner pray unto Saints, neither doe we beleeve in them: and yet he ſaith, de invocat.ſanctor. theſ.158.cap.14. In ſanctos credere nos etjam docet Paulus: Paul teacheth us to beleeve and truſt in Saints,&c. Thus this popiſh Doctor one while would have us to beleeve, and againe not to beleeve and truſt in Saints.

163 57 Many ſuch contradictory and repugnant ſayings are eaſily to be found in Bellarmines volumes,and in the writings of other papiſts: ſo that they neither agree with others,nor with themſelves: as the Rhemiſts ſometime ſay, that the meritorious works of the Saints,the very ground of popiſh indulgences,are to be diſpoſed by the paſtors of the Church,2 Cor.2.ſect.5. Sometime,that they are applicable by the ſufferers intention,Annot.1.Coloſſ.1.ſect.4. Harding ſometime calleth their Legend ſtory an old moth-eaten booke, and confeſſeth, that among many true ſtories, it may have ſome fables,Defenſ.apolog.pag.166. And yet forgetting himſelf,he ſtoutly affirmeth,that there are no fables nor lies in that booke,pag.750.

Thus have we ſeene,what ſpirit popiſh writers are of,and how they are led: for if they were guided by the ſpirit of truth,they would both ſpeake and write the ſame things: but now are they like blind archers,that ſhoot at an unknowne marke,ſome ſhoote far off,ſome neerer,as it happeneth: ſo theſe men being wilfully blinde,every man ſpeake their fancies, ſome hitting,ſome miſsing the truth,as Origen well ſaith, Ut errantium à via multæ differentiæ ſunt, alij contra viam publicam vadunt, alij modicum recedunt: As they that goe out of the way, differ much, ſome goe quite beſide, ſome miſſe but a little: ſo it happeneth to our adverſaries,as it may appeare in their contrary poſitions: and thus much of the perſonall contradictions among the Papiſts both old and new. Now we will ſet downe for a taſte and triall the repugnances and contrarieties, which their religion hath within it ſelfe.

Popiſh Religion contrary within it ſelfe. Part. 4.

164 IT is generally taught and beleeved in the popiſh Church, that Baptiſme is neceſſary to ſalvation, which error they would ground upon thoſe words: Ioh. 3.5. That unleſſe a man be borne of water and the ſpirit,he cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven: yet they themſelves alſo affirme, that Baptiſme was not neceſſary before the paſsion of Chriſt,but began in the day of Pentecoſt after to bee neceſſary,Bellarm.lib.1 de baptiſ.cap.5. Yea and now alſo they make two exceptions,of Martyrs,and penitent perſons,who without baptiſme may be ſaved,Bellarm.ca.6. The Rhemiſts adde unto theſe a third exempt caſe,of thoſe that depart this life with vow and deſire of the ſacrament of baptiſm, Annot.Iohn.3.ſect. 2. But,if they ground the neceſsity of baptiſme upon thoſe words of our Saviour, it began to be neceſſary when thoſe words were uttered,and therfore was neceſſary before the paſ-ſion of Chriſt. Secondly, the words are generall, in ſo much, that there is no priviledge granted to Martyrs or penitent perſons, if they ſtand ſtrictly upon that place: In this point therefore papiſtry is not at unity in it ſelfe.

165 2 Bellarmine with the reſt, doe affirme, that Chriſt gave the cup onely to his Apoſtles, whom at that inſtant (they ſay) hee made Prieſts, and therefore Prieſts only, not lay-men, are bound by the Word of God to receive in both kindes. Yet the practice of their Church is contrary: For neither doe Prieſts, if they communicate only, and miniſter not the Sacrament, receive in both kindes, according to the decree of the Tridentine Chapter, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 25.

166 3 Againe, in their private Maſſes, the Prieſt ſaith, Quotquot ex hac altaris participatione ſumpſerimus: As many of us as have beene partakers of this altar: When as there be no communicants, beſide the Prieſt himſelfe, how can this hang together? ex canon. miſſe.

167 4 The Prieſt alſo being at Maſſe, ſaith, Command theſe to be carried by the hands of thine Angels, unto the higheſt altar in heaven: and anon he ſwalloweth downe the hoſte into his belly, that he would have conveyed into heaven: how doe theſe things agree?

168 5 The Papiſts generally make but ſeven degrees of Eccleſiaſticall orders, as Prieſts, Deacons, Subdeacons, Acolythiſtes or Attenders, Readers, Exorciſts, Doore-keepers, Bellar. de Cleric. cap. 11. And yet Bellarmine, the mouth of the reſt affirmeth, that Ordinatio Epiſcopalis, the ordaining of Biſhops is a Sacrament, as the other miniſteriall orders be: Ergo, it is alſo a diſtinct degree from the reſt, and ſo there are eight in all, Bellarm. de Sacram. Ordinis, cap. 5. Further, if there be eight diſtinct Orders, and every one by it ſelfe is a Sacrament, as Bellarmine teacheth them, then have we eight Sacraments of Order, beſide the other ſixe, for all theſe ſeverall orders cannot make one Sacrament, ſeeing they differ one from another, both in forme of words, and in the externall ſignes or ceremonies that are uſed, Conſul. Bellarm. lib. de Ordin. cap. 5. 6, 7, 8.

169 6 In words and outward profeſsion they affirme, that Matrimony is a Sacrament: And yet ſome of them call it a pollution, or prophanation of orders, Gregor. Martin. And that the marriage of Miniſters, is the worſt ſort of incontinency and fornication, Rhemiſt. 1 Cor. 7. ſect. 8, Have not theſe men now a very reverent opinion of their Sacraments?

170 7 Againe, they preferre continency before Matrimony, as a ſtate fare more excellent and meritorious before God: yet they hold Matrimony to be a Sacrament, and to conferre grace of juſtification: how then is it not more excellent, than ſingle life, which is no Sacrament, neither a conferrer of grace?

171 8 Bellarmine ſaith, Bonum eſt à Deo petere, tum ut ſanctos pro nobis orare faciat, tum ut illos pro nobis orantes exaudiat: It is good for us to crave of God, that hee would cauſe the Saints to pray for us, and that then he would heare them intreating for us, De miſſ. lib. 2. cap. 8. Thus they make God a Mediatour betweene the Saints and us. And what an abſurd thing is this, to pray to God, that the Saints may pray for us, whereas in thus ſaying, they confeſſe that wee have acceſſe unto God our ſelves without their mediation?

172 9 It is the opinion of the Schoole-men, approved by Bellarmine, that the Fathers of the Law were juſtified by the merit of Chriſts paſsion as we are: but herein to ſtand the difference, that the merit of Chriſt death is applied unto us by the Sacraments: Hebrais autem per ſolam fidem: But unto the Hebrues by onely faith, Bellarm. de Sacram. lib 2. cap. 13. I pray you now, if they were juſtified by faith only, who lived under the Law, which is oppoſite to faith: The Law is not of faith, ſaith the Apoſtle, Gal. 3. 12. ſhall not we much more under the Goſpell, which is by S. Paul called the word of faith? Rom. 10. 8. Who ſeeth not now the packing and jugling of Papiſts?

173 10 Now, coucerning the Pope, they every where beare us in haad, that he is head of the Catholike and univerſall Church: And yet in the end, being urged, they confeſſe that he is Chriſts Vicar, but in the regiment of that part which is on the earth, Rhemiſt. Annot. Epheſ. 1. ſect. 6. Hee is not then head of the univerſall Church, neither hath hee any thing to doe in Purgatory, as other of the popiſh ſort have written.

174 11 Bellarmine confeſſeth, that the Pope is not Peters ſucceſſour, jure divino, by divine right, neither by Chriſts inſtitution in the Goſpell, Lib. 2. de pontif. cap. 17. How then commeth it to paſſe, that they have made it an article of their faith, To beleeve the Pope to be the head of Chriſts Church? Seeing Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth in theſe words: Nihil eſt de fide, niſi quod Deus per Apoſtolos aut Prophetas revelavit, aut quod evidenter inde deducitur: Nothing is of faith, but that which God hath revealed by his Apoſtles or Prophets, or that which is evidently deduced from thence, Bellarm. de verb. Dei non ſcript. lib. 4. cap. 9. But that the Pope is Peters ſucceſſour, it is neither expreſſed, nor evidently deduced out of Scripture: therefore it is no point of faith.

175 12 Bellarmine, and likewiſe the reſt, make the perpetuall ſucceſsion of the Biſhops of Rome to be a manifeſt argument of the Church: hee calleth it inſolubile and evidentiſſimum argumentum: and yet afterward, being preſſed with the example of the Patriarchiall Sea of Conſtantinople, which hath had alwaies a perpetuall ſucceſsion, hee anſwereth that ſucceſsion is an argument of the Church, Negatively, that is, where there is no ſucceſsion, there is no Church; not affirmatively, that where there is ſucceſsion, there is ſtraightway a Church, lib. 4. de notis Eccleſ. cap 8. Thus wee ſee what is become of their evidentiſſimum argumentum, of this their moſt evident argument.

176 13 It is confeſſed by our adverſaries, that the Church of Rome was founded both by Peter and Paul, Rhemiſt.annot.Gal.2.ſect.6. And that they are both patrons of that ſea. How then commeth it about, that the Pope challengeth rather to be S. Peters ſucceſſor than S. Pauls?

177 14 In the popiſh Church, they doe devide the cup from the other element in the Euchariſt, miniſtring the Sacrament in one kinde onely to the Lay-ſort: Cleane contrary to the Canon of Gelaſius, which is to be found among the Popes owne decrees, in theſe words: We underſtand, that there are ſom which receiving onely the portion of the Lords Body, doe abſtaine from the cup of his ſacred blood, to whom we enjoine, that either they receive the whole ſacrament in both kindes, or elſe that they receive neither: for the dividing of that whole and one Sacrament cannot be done without ſacriledge: De conſecrat. diſt. 2. cap.12. Who ſeeth not now, that their practiſe is contrary to their owne decrees?

Let vs yet ſee further the inconveniences, and abſurdities, that muſt of neceſsity be admitted in popiſh religion.

178 15 They doe hold, that the Euchariſt is not a creature, but the Creator himſelfe after that the words of conſecration are pronounced, as Bellarmine reporteth the ſtory and words of S Anthony of Padua. Anthony holding the venerable ſacrament in his hand, ſaith thus unto his beaſt, in the vertue and name of thy Creator, whom though unworthy I hold in my hand, I ſay unto thee, beaſt, that thou come preſently, and doe him reverence, that hereticall pravity may know. Quod omnis creatura ſuo ſubditur Creatori, That every creature is ſubject to his Creator, *lib.3.de Euchar.cap.*8. So then the Euchariſt is their Creator: but yet ſuch a Creator as neither hath eternity nor omnipreſence: for firſt they deny that this creator of theirs either came from heaven, or goeth to heaven againe; as Sarga confeſſeth, Nos ut deſcenſum negamus, ita nec aſcenſum ſtatuimus: As we deny his deſcenſion, ſo neither doe we affirme his aſcenſion, in art.5.fol.335, And yet he further ſaith, Corpus Chriſti corruptis ſpeciebus ibi eſſe deſinit, ubi prius erat: After the formes and accidents be corrupted, the Body of Chriſt ceaſeth to be where it was. So this their Creator is neither to be found in heaven, nor yet in man that hath eaten him, and ſo conſequently their Creator ſhall be no where. And further, another thus writeth, Quaſi ſacramentum non cœlum & terram impleat, As though the ſacrament did not fil heaven and earth: Turrian.tract.1.cap.21. But if he be your Creator, he muſt be every where: but in truth you make him no where. Behold then the Papiſts Creator and godamight, that is neither to be found in heaven, whither they ſay he aſcendeth not, nor in earth, where they ſay he remaineth not.

179 16 Bellarmine and the reſt doe ſay, that after the accidents of Bread and Wine are corrupted, the Body of Chriſt ceaſeth there to be, and yet they ſay, Accidentia Chriſti ſubſtantiæ non inhærent, The accidents depend not on the ſubſtance of Chriſt, or are not inherent in it, lib.1.de Euchar.cap.2. How can theſe things hang together, that as ſoone as the accidents are corrupted, Chriſts Body is gone, and yet the one to have no coherence or dependance with the other.

180 17 They generally hold that by vertue of the words of conſecration, the elements are tranſubſtantiate into the body and bloud of Chriſt: and yet Turriane ſaith, that the Euchariſt is αὐτόχαρις, and autohypoſtatos, is a grace conſiſting, and having an hypoſtaſis and being of it ſelfe: How doth it conſiſt by it ſelfe, ſeeing it is made by the words of conſecration, and is unmade by the corruption of the accidents?

181 18 Bellarmine affirmeth, that there is a certaine converſion of the bread into Chriſts body, which he calleth, converſionem adductivam, an adductive converſion: and yet denieth, Quod per motum localem Corpus Chriſti è cœlo adducatur, That the Body of Chriſt is brought to, or adduced by any locall motion from heaven: but they ſpeake now againſt the law of reaſon, and nature and divinity too: for how can a body be induced, produced, or adduced, brought in, forth, or to, without the locall motion thereof?

182 19 Bellarmine lib.1.de miſſa, cap.10. Sacrificium à Deo inſtitutum, à Deo, non à nobis vim ſuam habet: The ſacrifice is inſtituted of God, and hath his valure from God, not from us, and yet he ſaith, Valor ſacrificij miſſæ finitus, The valure of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is finite, lib.2.de miſſ.cap.4. If the Maſſe derive the vertue thereof from God, who is infinite, how can the vertue of it be finite? and yet he that ſaith the Maſſe is not infinite, writeth thus of ſatisfaction, Sicut offenſio habuit infinitatem quandam, ſic habeat & ſatisfactio infinitatem aliquam ex parte principij ſatisfactionis: As the offence was in a manner infinite, ſo ſatisfaction muſt be infinite in reſpect of the beginning and ground of ſatisfaction, de pœnitent. lib.4. cap.1. Shall ſatisfaction then being but mans worke be infinite, and the ſacrifice of the Maſſe having the vertue from God, be finite? this is to preferre mans worke before Gods worke.

183 20 They all hold the reall preſence of Chriſts body, and yet Bellarmine granteth, Eſum Euchariſtiæ nec prodeſſe, ſi adſit, nec obeſſe, ſi non adſit: That the eating of the Euchariſt neither profiteth if it be had, nor hurteth if it be not had, *lib.2.de Euchar.c.*8. What manner of creator then is this, whoſe preſence profiteth not, nor his abſence hindreth? this is but light and deceitfull ſtuffe.

184 21 Thoſe words of our Saviour, Behold, I am with you to the end of the world, ſome of them, as Vega, as I have ſhewed before, doe underſtand of Chriſts corporall preſence in the ſacrament: they alſo doe affirme, and namely Bellarmine, that Antichriſt ſhall aboliſh the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: and thus they make Chriſt a lier, in promiſing a perpetuall preſence of his Body to the end of the world, which ſhall be taken away by Antichriſt at his comming.

185 22 Bellarmine ſaith, that Verba conſecratoria non habent perfectam ſignificationem & effectum, niſi in ultimo inſtanti: Theſe words of conſecration, This is my body, have not their full effect and ſignification till they be all pronounced, lib. 1. de Euchar. ca. 11. And againe he ſaith, Deus mentiri non poteſt, cum dicit aliquid eſſe, neceſſe eſt, ut illud ſit: God cannot lye, when he ſaith any thing is, it muſt needs be: &c. Wherefore if when Chriſt had ſaid, this is, it had not beene preſently his body, before all the words were brought forth, Bellarmine hath made Chriſt a lier, becauſe as ſoone as he had ſaid, this is, it was not; thus are they ſnared in their owne devices.

186 23 Bellarmine ſaith, that Prima redemptio ab omni malo culpæ & pœnæ non obtinetur per Miſſam, quia in cruce peracta eſt: The firſt redemption which is from all evill both of ſin and the puniſhment, is not given or obtained in the Maſſe, becauſe that was done upon the croſſe, lib. 2. de miſſa. cap. 21. and yet they ſay, that there is unum miſſæ & crucis ſacrificium, that there is but one ſacrifice of the Maſſe and the croſſe, and that Chriſt offered the ſame body at his laſt ſupper, which he the next day ſacrificed upon the croſſe: if the ſame body, and ſo the ſame ſacrifice be offered in the Maſſe and upon the croſſe, how hath it not the like redemption and worketh the ſame effect?

187 24 Bellar. lib. 1. de miſſ. ca. 4. Sacrificium crucis eſt ſacrificium omnium perfectiſſimum & ipſo ſacrificio miſſæ præſtantius. The ſacrifice of the croſſe is the moſt perfect ſacrifice of all, and more excellent than the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: hence it will follow that the Papiſts worſhip two Chriſts, and make him two bodies, for if the ſame body be offered in the maſſe, which is upon the croſſe, how can it be more excellent here, than there?

188 25 They hold that in the Maſſe, Chriſtus eſt & ſacerdos & ſacrificium, that Chriſt is both the Prieſt and the ſacrifice: and yet in the Canon of the maſſe, they pray in this manner, Command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of the holy Angell unto the high altar in heaven: hath Chriſt now need of the mediation of Angels, that his body ſhould by them be carried into heaven? or if Chriſt in the maſſe do ſacrifice himſelfe, is not his prieſthood ſufficient without the Aſsiſtance of Angels? what could be ſaid more abſurd?

189 26 Now concerning the body of Chriſt, which they affirme to be in the Euchariſt, what ſhould become of it after the Euchariſt is received, thus Bellarmine delivereth his opinion, Chriſtum intrare per os cōmunicantium, & tamen non emitti in ſeceſſum, ſed corruptis in ſtomacho ſpeciebus ſine ulla læſione ſui deſinere ibi eſſe: That Chriſt entreth in by the mouth of the communicants, and yet goeth not into the draught, but as ſoon as the accidents of bread & wine are corrupt in the ſtomacke, it ceaſeth without any hurt to it ſelfe there to be, l. 1 de Euch. c. 14. Here are many abſurdities uttered in one ſentence, 1. That Chriſts body ſhould enter in at the mouth, & ſo be chawed and bruſed in the teeth, whereas the Scripture ſaith, they ſhal not breake a bone of him. 2. That though he enter into the mouth, yet is not caſt into the draught, and yet our Saviour himſelfe ſaith, whatſoever thing entreth into man, entreth into the belly, and ſo goeth into the draught, which is the purging of all meate, Mar. 7. 18. whatſoever entreth by the mouth, goeth that way. 3. Chriſt goeth not away, til the accidents be corrupted in the ſtomacke: then if a mouſe chance to eate the hoaſt, by this rule Chriſts body goeth into the mouſes ſtomacke. 4. The Body of Chriſt there ceaſing to be, either is carried into heaven, or is annihilate and turned to nothing, or corrupted: a fourth way of ceaſing there cannot be, but they deny that it aſcendeth into Heaven, much leſſe is it turned to nothing; then muſt it needs be corrupted contrary to the Scriptures, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption.

Popiſh abſurdities which follow the carnal preſence.

190 27 Now unto theſe repugnant & contrary points in popiſh religion, we may adde alſo their uncertainties and undetermined articles: As firſt it is not yet knowne at what time Peter came to Rome, Oroſius ſaith, he came thither in the beginning of Claudius raigne, Ierome ſaith, the ſecond yeere of his raigne: other ſay, the fourth yeare: other the thirteenth yeere: Damaſus would have him come thither in Nero his raigne. This diſſention of writers ſheweth, that the matter may be doubted of whether Peter were ever at Rome or not. Againe, they can ſhew no certaine ſucceſsion from Peter, of the which they brag ſo much: Tertullian maketh Clement the next to Peter: Optatus firſt nameth Linus, then Clement; Ireneus after Peter placeth Linus and Cletus, and Clemens in the fourth. Thus alſo their ſucceſsion is made uncertaine and doubtfull.

Popiſh uncertanties in ſome chiefe points of their profeſſion.

191 28 They hold Lent to be an Apoſtolicall tradition, and warranted by the example of our Saviour Chriſt: Ireneus witneſſeth, that ſom faſted one day, ſome two daies, ſome forty houres day & night. Epiphanius ſaith, the wedneſdaies faſt alſo was an Apoſtolike tradition, and to faſt the ſixe daies of Eaſter, with bread and water, and ſalt, which the Papiſts themſelves doe not obſerve. One therefore is as like to bee an Apoſtolike tradition as the other: But it is certaine neither of them was, for then they would have beene kept more uniformely of the Church, and not every man left to his owne choice.

192 29 It is a matter yet undetermined and not concluded upon of all ſides, whether the Pope be above Councel:, or Councels above the Pope. And both opinions are maintained and defended in the popiſh Church.

193 30 As alſo it is uncertaine among papiſts, whether the Virgin Mary were conceived without originall ſinne, for both opinions are permitted and ſuffered among them, both of them that ſay ſhe was and that hold ſhe was not, Bellar. de cultu ſanctor. lib. 3 c. 16. Likewiſe they leave it as uncertaine, whether Mary were aſſumed and taken up into heaven in body, Ex Fulk. Annot. 1 Act. v. 14.

31 About and concerning Purgatory, they have many doubts, which they are not yet reſolved upon: as, firſt in what place Purgatory ſhould be. 2. How many yeers purgatory continueth, whether an hundred, two hundred or a thouſand yeers. 3. Whether it be materiall fire that burneth in purgatory, they are uncertain. 4. They make doubt how corporal fire ſhould work upon the ſoules in purgatory, which are ſpirituall and incorporall, Bellar.lib.2. de purgat.ca. 12. 5. It is doubted, whether the divels or Angels are miniſters of the torments in purgatory. 6. Whether the paine of purgatory be at all time alike, or by little and little ſlaked toward the end, and whether it exceed al the paines and ſorrows of this life, *Bellar.ca.*14. All theſe points remaine yet undetermined among them: and yet for all this the Ieſuite telleth us ſadly, that it is an article of faith to beleeve purgatory, and that hee which beleeveth it not is ſure to go to hell, *Bellar.lib.*1.*cap.*11. 192

32 Now as touching the Maſſe, there are many uncertainties: firſt of the name: they do not themſelves know what it ſhould ſignifie, nor whereof it is derived. Some ſay, this word Miſſa, hath his derivation from the Hebrew, and ſo ſhould ſignifie a voluntary oblation. Others take it to be a latine word, whereof ſome would have Miſſa to be derived à mittendis eleemoſynis, from ſending of almes at the Communion: others à miſſione precum, from the ſending up of prayers: others, à Miſſione Angeli, from the ſending of an Angel: ſome, à dimiſſione populi, of the diſmiſing of the people, would have it ſo called. And Durandus hath another conceit, Miſſa vocatur hoſtia, quaſi tranſmiſſa; The hoaſt is called the Maſſe, becauſe it is tranſmitted from us unto God, *lib.*4.rational. ſo uncertaine are they of their owne termes. 193

33 And as they are uncertaine about the name of the Maſſe, ſo they are doubtfull who was the firſt founder and author of their Maſſe. Some hold, that Chriſt did ſay the firſt Maſſe, others that the Apoſtles, but which of the Apoſtles did celebrate the firſt Maſſe, they know not: ſome ſay S. Peter; ſome S. Iames: but that long Liturgy which goeth under the name of S. Iames is worthily ſuſpected, ſeeing that Gregorie reporteth, that the Apoſtles did uſe to conſecrate by the ſaying onely of the Lords prayer. 194

34 Many uncertainties alſo they have as touching Antichriſt: ſome thinke that he ſhall have his ſeat in Ieruſalem, as Iurgevicius, Patres & Doctores ſedem Antichriſti Hieroſolymis conſtituunt, fol. 11. *mend.*5. The Fathers and Doctors do appoint Antichriſts ſeat to be at Ieruſalem: ſome of them think that not verily, but by way of alluſion he ſhall ſit in the temple at Ieruſalem, as *Vega, pro real. praſentia aſſert.*221. Ireneus ex alluſione templi Hieroſolymitani, templum Chriſtianorum interpretatur: Ireneus by alluſion to the temple of Ieruſalem, doth interpret it of the temple of Chriſtians. 195

35 Some of them thinke that under the perſecution of Antichriſt, the Chriſtian faith ſhall be utterly extinguiſhed, as Dominicus a Soto. Others hold the contrary, as Bellarmine: Hac ſententia meo judicio defendi non poteſt: This ſentence in my judgement cannot be defended, *lib.*3.*de pontif.cap.*17. 196 197

36 Some of them hold, that Iudæi ad veſperam convertentur, that Iewes ſhall be converted at the eventide, that is, the end of the world, *Socolovius, lib.*2.*de eccleſ.ca.*5. But Bellarmine ſaith, Antichriſtum præcipue propter Iudæos venturum, & ab eis tanquam Meſſiam recipiendum: That Antichriſt ſhall come chiefely for the Iewes ſake, who ſhall receive him as their Meſsiah, *lib.*3.*de Rom. pontif. cap.*12. But how is it like that the Iewes ſhould then be converted, when they ſhall by Antichriſt moſt ſtrongly be ſeduced? there can be no coherence at all in theſe opinions.

37 They doe gnerally hold, that there ſhall bee but 45. daies after the death of Antichriſt till the end of the world, *Bell.lib.*3.*de Roman.pontif.cap.*17. and yet Ezechiel ſaith, they ſhall be ſeven yeeres in burning the weapons of Gog, and Magog, which muſt needs be more then 45. daies. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Ezekiel ſpeaketh not properly, but figuratively. But why ſhould not Ezechiels prophecie properly and litterally be underſtood of ſo many yeeres, as Daniels of many daies: and admit a figure in that prophecie, we find in Scripture daies to ſignifie yeeres, but not yeeres to be taken for daies: and againe, if there ſhould be juſt 45. daies, it were poſsible to calculate the very day of Chriſts comming, which is contrary to Scripiture. We ſee then what an abſurd and inconſequent opinion is this. 198

38 Another maine point undetermined amongſt them, is of the manner of the real preſence in the Euchariſt: Thomas Aquinas ſaith, it muſt be done by one of theſe two waies, vel per loci mutationem, vel per alterius converſionem in ipſum, either by local mutation, or by the converſion of another thing into it, not by locall mutation, ſaith he, and therefore he concludeth it is done by the converſion of the bread into Chriſts Body: *Sum.*3.*qu.*63.*art.*2. But now the new maſters of Popery deny the converſion of bread, as well as the locall mutation, and rather incline to thinke that the bread is annihilate, ſuch uncertainty there is in the greateſt points of popery. 199

39 It is a reſolution in the popiſh Church, that what the greater part of the Fathers thinke is Catholike verity: and by the Bull of Pope pius the fourth: An oath is preſcribed to be taken by biſhops, Deanes, Chanons, that they ſhall not receive any expoſition of Scripture, which is not according to the uniforme conſent of the ancient Fathers: and yet notwithſtanding the popiſh writers take great liberty in correcting the expoſition of the Fathers: as Salmeron expounding theſe words, 1 *Corinth.*6. 18. He ſinneth againſt his owne body, preferreth his owne conceipt before the interpretation of the Fathers, ſo doth Maldonate expounding theſe words. Matthew 19.11. All men cannot receive this thing. 200 Canus loc. Theol. lib.5. cap.5.

200 40 Laſtly, that we may ſee at once the fraile and brittle foundation of popiſh religion: the Rhemiſts boldly affirme that juſtice is reputed to men, or that they are juſtified by beleeving onely the articles of Chriſts death and reſurrection, and this they call the Catholike faith, Annot. Rom.4. ſect.9 If this be Catholike faith, to beleeve only the articles of faith to be true: then reprobates, yea and the divell himſelfe may be true Catholikes, for the divels beleeve and tremble, Iames 2.19. Yea, they confeſs Ieſus to be the Son of God, *Mat.*8.29. *Mar.*5.7. Is not this a proper faith for Chriſtians to ſave themſelves by? It is not then a bare knowledge or generall beleefe of the articles of faith, or giving aſſent or credit unto them onely, that is ſufficient to juſtifie us, as the Rhemiſts affirme: but ſuch a beleefe of theſe articles, as is joyned with an aſſured truſt and confidence in God, and undoubted perſwaſion, that all the promiſes of God, and whatſoever Chriſt wrought in his fleſh, are not only true, but even doe belong and appertaine to every one in particular.

Here follow an other hundred of Contradictions collected out of the Popes Canons, which are the very marrow and ſinewes of POPERIE.

THus hitherto I have ſhewed both the perſonall contradictions of popiſh writers, jarring one with another, and diſagreeing alſo with themſelves: a taſte alſo I have given of their unſavory religion, how full of abſurd and inconſequent opinions, doubts and uncertainties it is, in theſe few examples ſet down; to the which I will adde their diſſonant and diſagreeing Canons, which are the very body of popiſh profeſsion, that it may appeare to all the world, how vaine their brag of unity is, and how untrue, which Bellarmine proclaimeth, Nunc omnes Catholici toto orbe diſperſi, de omnibus dogmatibus fidei ſentiunt idem: Now all the Catholikes in the world, of all the articles of faith, hold and thinke the ſame, *lib.*4.*ca.*10.de notis eccleſi.

201 1 Firſt, *Decret.part.*1, *diſt.*26.*ca.*1. He is not counted bigamus, that hath one wife before baptiſme, another after, *Ca.*3. Innocentius 3. determined the contrary: Bigamus probatur, &c. Hee is noted of bigamy, that had one wife before baptiſme, and another after.

202 2 *Par.*1. *diſt.*27.*ca.*2. Poſt votum nubentes non ſunt ſeparandi: They that marry after a vow muſt not be ſeparated: but the contrary is determined, *ca.*8. Contracta matrimonia ab hujuſmodi perſonis disjungi volumus: We will that ſuch perſons be disjoyned from their marriage.

203 3 *Diſtinct.*31.*ca.*1. Gregory giveth leave to the ſubdeacons in Sicily to keepe their wives which they had maried: for thus he ſaith, Durum mihi & incompetens videtur: It ſeemeth to me an hard and inconvenient thing, &c: that is, that they ſhould be ſeparated from their wives: but *diſtinct.*32.*ca.*1. Leo defineth the contrary: Neque etiam ſubdiaconis connubium creditur: Neither is marriage lawfull for ſubdeacons.

204 4 *Diſtinct.*16.*cap.*2. Zepherinus ſaith, there are 60. ſeverall heads or canons of the Apoſtles: *ca.*3. Leo but 50.

205 5 *Diſtinct.*34 *ca.*4. He that hath not a wife, ſed pro uxore concubinam habet: but hath a concubine in ſtead of a wife, muſt not be repelled from the communion: this canon ſeemeth to allow, or at the leaſt to tolerate concubines: but *ca.*6. it is directly forbiden, Si non habetis uxores, tamen non licet vobis habere concubinas: Though you have no wives, it is not lawfull for you to have concubines.

206 6 *Diſtinct.*50.*ca.*1. Gregor. Lapſi in ſuum ordinem reparari non poſſunt: They which are fallen, cannot be reſtored to their orders: *ca.*14. Calixtus. Clerici poſt lapſum in ſuis ordinibus reputari poſſunt: Clarkes after their fall, may be accounted in their former orders: they may, and they may not, I thinke are flat contrary.

207 7 *Diſtinct.*63.*ca.*23. Leo. Electio Romani pontificis ad jus pertinet imperatoris: The election of the Biſhop of Rome belongeth to the Emperour: *ca.*29. Hadrianus 2. inconſultis legatis imperatoris eligitur: is elected without the conſent of the Emperours embaſſadors.

208 8 *Diſtinct.*68.*ca.*1. *Gregor.*1. Semel conſecratus, iterum conſecrari non debet: He that is once conſecrated, muſt not be conſecrated againe: *ca.*2. *Gregor.*3. conſecrentur: let them bee conſecrated againe.

209 9 *Diſtinct.*74.*ca.*2. Gregor. Nullus promoveatur invitus, That no man ſhould bee promoted againſt his will: *ca.*3. They that refuſe to be promoted by the Biſhop, à locis ſuis reijciantur: let them be put by their places: how are they not then promoted againſt their will?

210 10 The Canons agree not about the foure ſolemne faſts of the yeere: *Diſtinct.*76.*ca.*2. the time is thus limited, that the foure faſts muſt be kept in the firſt weeke of March, the ſecond of Iune, the third of September, in the fourth of December: cap. 3. the Calends, that is, the beginning of theſe moneths is preſcribed.

211 11 The Canons are very divers concerning the yeares and age of ſuch as are to be admitted to orders: *Diſt.*77.2. Zozimus alloweth, that one in his infancy may be a lector, or exorciſt, and ſo after five yeers a ſubdeacon: *ca.*4. none is allowed to be a ſubdeacon before 25. yeeres: *ca.*3: Syricius at 25 yeeres granteth the degree of prieſthood: *cap.*6. it is not permitted before 30. yeeres.

212 12 *Diſt.*93.ca. 14. Ne diaconi presbyteris ſacramenta porrigant, That deacons ſhould not miniſter the ſacraments to presbyters: *ca.*23. the contrary is decreed: Sacerdotibus propter præſumtionem non licet de menſa Domini calicem tollere, niſi eis traditus fuerit à diacono : It is not lawfull for Prieſts becauſe of preſumption, to take the Cup, unleſſe it be given them of the deacons.

13 Diſt.95.ca.1: Greg. Concedimus, ut presbyteri tangere debeant chriſmate in fronte baptizatos : Wee 213 allow Prieſts to annoint with chriſme in the forehead, thoſe that are baptized, cap.2. Gelaſius defineth the contrary: Conſignationis pontificalis adhibendæ ſibi accipere facultatem prohibemus : We forbid them to take any ſuch power to ſigne in the forehead.

14 Diſtinct.96.ca.1. Laicis nulla unquam de eccleſiaſticis facultatibus aliquid diſponendi legitur attributa 214 facultas: We do not find, that ever Lay-men had any authority to diſpoſe of eccleſiaſtical goods: Contra.par.2.cauſ.10.quæſt.2.ca.4. Communicationes rerum eccleſiaſticarum nulla perſona ſine licentia regia facere præſumat: That no perſon ſhould preſume to alienate or communicate the Church goods without the licence of the King.

15 Decr.part.2.cauſ.1.quæſt.1:ca.97. Ordinatio in ſchiſmaticis manet integra : Schiſmatikes doe re- 215 taine the power of ordination, or giving of orders. Contra.ibid.in gloſſ. Innocent. Ordinatos ab hereticis ſolam damnationem accipere, That they which receive orders of heretikes, receive nothing but damnation.

16 Quæſt.7.ca.23.gloſſ.Gregor. Semel conſecratus iterum conſecrari non debet : He that is once con- 216 ſecrated, muſt not be againe: Contr.ca.24.Vrbanus. Reiterari oportet, quod malè actum eſt: That which is not rightly done, muſt be iterated againe.

17 Cauſ.2.quæſt.5.ca.4. Presbyter vice juramenti per ſanctam conſecrationem interrogatur : That a 217
Presbyter, in ſtead of an oath, ſhould be examined by vertue of his conſecration: Contra.ca.5.Gregor. If a Presbyter be accuſed, jusjurandum in medio erit, let him be put to his oath.

18 Cauſ.2.quæſt.5.ca.7.Gregor. Vulgarem legem ferventis aquæ, ignitique ferri contactum, te nolumus 218 ullo modo poſtulare : the common triall by hot water, or burning yron, I would not have you by any meanes require. Contra.ca.15.Si non ſit ingenuus, ferventi aqua, vel candenti ferro ſe expurgat : If he be not a freeman, let him purge himſelfe by ſeething water, or burning Iron.

19 Cauſ.2.qu.4 c.1. If any man doe accuſe any of the Clergy of fornication, Secundum præceptum 219
Pauli, duo, vel tria teſtimonia requirantur, according to S. Pauls precept, let two or three witneſſes be required: Contra. ca.2. A Biſhop ſhall not be condemned under 72. witneſſes, a Prieſt under 44. nor a deacon with leſſe than 27. witneſſes: how then are two or three ſufficient?

20 Cauſ.8.ca.1. Calixtus. Accuſatio ſemper fiat in ſcriptis : Let an accuſation bee alwaies framed 220 in writing: Contra.ca.5. Stephanus, per ſcripta nullius accuſatio ſuſcipiatur, Let no mans accuſation be received in writing.

21 Cauſ.3.qu.6.ca.1. Ibi ſemper cauſa agatur, ubi crimen admittitur : Let the cauſe alwayes there 221 be heard, where the crime is committed: Fabian.contra Stephan.ca.4. Niſi appellatum fuerit : Vnleſſe the appeale be made to the ſea Apoſtolike. If appellations from forraigne countries to Rome are to be admitted, then the canon of Fabian faileth, who ſaith, that alwaies the cauſe muſt be heard where it is done.

22 Cauſ.3.qu.8.ca.2. Felix. Epiſcopus non niſi à duodecem Epiſcopis audiatur & judicetur : That a Bi- 222 ſhop ſhould not be judged of fewer than twelve Biſhops. Contra.cauſ.11.qu.1:ca.36. Teſtimonium etjam ab uno epiſcop. perhibitum, &c. The teſtimony given by one Biſhop, every judge in every cauſe ought to receive.

23 Cauſ.2.qu.4 ca.3.Leo. That a Biſhop ſhould not be condemned under the teſtimony of fewer 223 than 72. witneſſes. Contra.Cau.2.qu.7.ca.19 Sixtus. The Apoſtle willeth, that no accuſation ſhould bee received againſt an elder, but under two or three witneſſes: Si hæc de presbyteris ſunt præcipienda, quanto magis de epiſcopis : If this muſt hold concerning presbyters, how much more in Biſhops?

24 Cau.35.quæſt.6 ca.3. in gloſſ. Nullius perſona quantumlibet exercitata teſtimonio aliquid credatur : 224
To one mans teſtimony, though he be never ſo well exerciſed, no credit muſt be given. Contr. decr.Gregor.lib.4.tit.1.ca.27.Innocent. Ad denunciationem unius viri honeſti fides adhibenda, &c. Credit may be given to the report of one honeſt man.

25 Cau.6.quæſt.2.ca.3. Non putet ad injuriam ſuam epiſcopus pertinere, ſi illi ſoli non creditur : Let 225 not a Biſhop thinke it any wrong to himſelfe, if he alone be not beleeved: Contra.cau.11. quæſt.1. ca.36. Teſtimonium etiam ab uno epiſcopo perhibitum, &c. The teſtimony of one Biſhop muſt be received as before.

26 Cau.6.quæſt.2.ca.2. Epiſcopus quamdiu nihil probari poteſt, &c. That if a Biſhop know any man 226 guilty, and have no proofe thereof, he ſhould refraine to communicate with him: Contra. ca.3. If the Biſhop refraine to communicate with him, other Biſhops likewiſe ſhall refuſe to communicate with the Biſhop: the firſt canon permitteth the Biſhop not to communicate with the guilty party; other doth cenſure him if he doe.

27 Cau.9.quæſt.1.ca.2.Gregor. Non poteſt appellari conſecratio, quæ ab ſit excommunicatis : It is no 227 conſecration, which is done by ſuch as are excommunicate: Contra.ca.4. Vrbanus 2. Ordinationes ab excommunicatis facta tolerantur : Orders given by excommunicate perſons are tolerated.

38 Cau.9.quæſt.2.ca.7. Ordinatio irrita, &c. Orders given in another dioceſſe are void: Contra.ca. 228
10. Vrbanus: Clerici ab epiſcopo alterius parochiæ ordinati, &c. Clarks ordered by a Biſhop of another dioceſſe, may be received of their owne Biſhop, which is proved by the example of Epiphanius, who gave orders to certaine of the dioceſſe of S. Chryſoſtome.

229 29 Cau.11.quaeſt.1 ca.8. Bonifac: Neque pro civili, neque criminali cauſa epiſcopus apud civilem judicem producatur : That a Biſhop ſhould not be brought before a civill judge : Contra. ca.21.Greg. Epiſcopum Mediolanenſ.ad clementiſſ. principem ſub digna cuſtodia dirigatis : Send the Biſhop of Millane under ſafe cuſtody to the moſt gentle Prince, &c.

230 30 Cau.11.quaeſt.1.ca.15. Pelagius.In cauſis, in quibus Eccleſiaſtica perſona loco petitoris exiſtit, &c. In cauſes, where any Eccleſiaſtical perſon is plaintife againſt a Lay-man, apud ſuæ provinciæ judicem, &c : he muſt bring the cauſe before the judge of the province. Contra.ca.26.Innocent. Inter clericos & laicos cauſa exortæ ab epiſcopis audiantur : Matters ariſing betweene the Clergy and Laity, muſt receive hearing before the Biſhops.

131 31 Cau.11.quaeſt.1.ca.43. Clericus apud civilem judicem judicari non debet, &c. A Clergy man muſt not be judged by a civill judge, neque ſi crimen fuerit intentatum, vel civilis cauſa commota fuerit, neither in cauſe criminall, nor civill : Contra.cap.45. Si de criminali cauſa litigium emerſerit, tunc competentes judices in hac civitate interpellati, &c. If the ſtrife be about any criminall cauſe, let them call upon a competent judge in the City, &c: the other canon refuſeth the civill judge in cauſes criminal, this Canon alloweth him.

232 32 Ibid.ca.30 in gloſſ. Ex his datur intelligi, quòd in civili cauſa Clericus ante civilem judicem conveniendus eſt : By this we are given to underſtand, that in a civill cauſe, a Clergy man muſt be brought before a civill judge. Contr.c.47.in gloſſ. Ex his omnibus datur intelligi, quòd Clericus ad publica judicia, nec in civili, nec criminali cauſa eſt producendus : By this we are given to underſtand, that a Clergy man muſt not be brought to publike judgement, neither in cauſe criminall nor civill : what could be ſpoken more contrary?

233 33 Cauſ.11.qu.3.ca 46. Gelaſi. Neminem poteſt iniqua gravare ſententia, An injuſt ſentence bindeth no man : in this caſe, Non eſt petenda ſolutio, A man need not require abſolution, cont.ca.4 Excommunicatum per iracundiam ante cauſæ cognitionem, nemo communioni ſociet: Let no man receive to the communion him, that is haſtily excommunicated, before his cauſe be heard.

234 34 Cau.12.q.1.ca.7. Clericis nihil proprium habere licet : It is not lawfull for Clergy-men to have any thing proper. Contra.ca.19. De reb. proprijs epiſcopi hæredibus relinquant : Biſhops of their proper goods may leave to their heires.

235 35 Qu:2.ca.10. Auferens eccleſiæ in quadruplum damnum reſtituat. Euſeb. He that taketh away from the Church, muſt reſtore foure fold. Contra.Gregor.ca.11. Sine augmento eccleſia ſibi ablata recipere debet : The Church muſt take ſuch things as were taken away, without any increaſe.

236 36 Cau.16.qu.1.ca.8. Eugen. Nullus monachorum, pœnitentiam dare debet, baptizare, &c. A Monke ought not to give penance, to baptize, nor preach, ca.11. Contra.ca.24. Gregor. ſacerdotib. monachis, licet prædicare, baptizare, pœnitentiam imponere, &c. Monks, that are Prieſts, may preach, baptize, enjoyne penance.

237 37 Cauſ.16.qu.2.ca.[illegible] Ioannes. Presbyteri in monachorum eccleſijs per Abbates inſtituantur : Prieſts muſt be inſtituted by the Abbots in thoſe Churches which belong to the Monks. Contra.ca.6. Abbates ſine epiſcoporum conſilio in parochialibus eccleſijs presbyteros non ordinent : The Abbots ought not to ordaine Prieſts in pariſh Churches without the adviſe of the Biſhops.

238 38 Cauſ.19.qu.3.ca.7. Gregor. Poſt monaſterij ingreſſum nulli relinquitur licentia teſtandi : After entrance into any monaſtery, they have no power to make a will : ſed res eorum ejuſdem monaſterij juris fiant, but their goods belong of right to the Monaſtery : *Contra.ca.*8. There is mention made of one Petronilla, which after her entrance into a monaſtery, res ſuas ſpecialiter donationis titulo ei contulit, did by a ſpecial gift beſtow her goods upon that Monaſtery : then the other canon faileth, that after their ingreſſe and entrance, they have no more power to diſpoſe of their goods.

239 39 Cauſ.20. qu.12. Virgines ante 60. annos non conſecrentur : Virgins muſt not be conſecrated before 60. yeares, ca.13. non ante 40. annos, not before forty yeeres: ca.15. non ante 25. annos, not before 25. yeeres : ſo well theſe canons agree.

240 40 Cauſ.21.qu.3.ca.1. Clerici ad minorum ætatum tutelas, &c. Clergy-men may be admitted to the tuition of thoſe, which are under yeeres. Cont.ca.4. ne quis de Clericis tutorem conſtituat, that no man make any of the Clergy a tutor or guardian, &c.

241 41 Cauſ.23.qu.8.ca.22. Vrbanus. Eccleſiæ de ſuis exterioribus tributa ſolvant, the Church ought to pay tribute of outward things. Contra.ca. 24. De agro eccleſiaſtico presbyter non cogatur cenſum perſolvere : A Prieſt ought not pay tribute for the land belonging to his Church.

242 42 Cauſ. 24 qu. 1. ca. 36. Non habentur excommunicati, qui ab hæreticis excommunicantur ; They muſt not be counted excommunicate, which are excommunicate of heretikes: Contr. ca.38. Pro aliquo facinore ab hæreticis excommunicatus à Catholicis non eſt recipiendus: He that is excommunicate for any offence of heretikes, muſt not be received of Catholikes: ſo the excommunication of heretikes, muſt be held for good, and againe it muſt not.

243 43 Ibid.ca.42. Potius eſt mortem accipere, quàm à manu hæretici communionem accipere: It is better to die, than to receive the communion at the hands of an hereticke. Contra.ca. 40. In extremo poſitus, &c. Hee that is in the point of death, may receive, pœnitentiam, repentance or penance, that is, reconciliation at the hands of an heretike: why may they not receive one Sacrament as well as another: for penance with them is a Sacrament.

44 Cauſ.24:qu.2.ca.2.Eccleſia non poteſt mortuos ligare.Gelaſ. The Church cannot binde, or excommunicate 244 the dead, Contra. ca.6. Haeretici etiam poſt mortem excommunicandi: Heretikes may be excommunicated after their death.

45 Cauſ.27.qu. 1.ca.40. Innocent. Siquis poſt profeſſam continentiam uxorem duxerit, non eſt matrimonium: 245
If any man take a wife after the profeſsion of continency, it is no marriage: Contra. cap.41. Qui dicunt talium nuptias, non eſſe nuptias videntur mihi non ſatis diligenter conſiderare quid dicant: They that ſay that the marriage of ſuch is no marriage, are not well adviſed what they ſay.

46 Cauſ.33.qu.5.ca.4. Non poteſt vir continentiae vota reſcindere, quae ejus aſſenſu mulier Deo promiſit: 246
The husband cannot breake off the vow of continency which the wife hath made to God with his conſent, Contra.ca.11.Vota abſtinentiae, quae viro permittente mulier promiſit, illo prohibente ſervare non cogitur: The vow of abſtinence which the woman made by her husbands ſufferance, if hee afterward forbid it, ſhee is not bound to keepe: by this Canon, the husband may breake a vow made with his conſent, contrary to the other Canon.

47 Cauſ.27.qu.1.cap.24. Virgins marrying after their profeſsion, inter bigamos haberi debent, are 247 to be numbred amongſt thoſe that are twice married: for they make Chriſt, to whom they vowed themſelves, their firſt husband: Contra. cap.41. This Canon is confuted, and there it is further ſhewed, that Chriſt in this caſe is not to be counted an husband: for by this reaſon, Chriſtus ſanctis viduis videatur ſecundus maritus, Chriſt ſhould be the ſecond husband to holy widowes.

48 Decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.21.cap.6. Qui plures habuit concubinas ex eo non eſt bigamus: Hee that 248 hath had many concubines, is not noted of bigamy, and yet cap.5. maritus viduae, the husband of a widow, becauſe of bigamy, is barred from taking orders, or he that hath had two wives: and thus wee ſee, how injurious theſe Canons are to holy marriage, preferring concubines before honeſt wives, and fornication before marriage.

49 Cauſ.31.qu.1.cap.10. Hee is convinced of bigamy that hath two wives together: Primus 249
Lamech unam carnem in duas diviſit uxores: & digamiam eadem cataclyſmi delevit poena: Lamech, firſt of one fleſh made two wives, but the flood was ſent as a juſt puniſhment for digamy: But now hee is generally held bigamus in popery, that hath two wives one after another.

50 Cauſ.27. qu.2.cap.12. Sponſae uxores, appellantur: They that are eſpouſed, are called wives; 250 and therefore it is forbidden in that Canon, for a man to marry the ſpouſe of his nephew deceaſed: Contra.cap.17.Iulius. Mulier praeter commiſtionem carnis, &c. non pertinet ad matrimonium: The woman beſide carnall knowledge, is not for the eſpouſalls to be accounted in the degrees of marriage: ſo one Canon counteth eſpouſalls in the computation of the degrees, the other excludeth them.

51 Part.2.cauſ.27.cap.8. Velit, nolit, ſanctimoniae habitum induat, licet Sacramento confirmare velit, 251 ea ratione ſibi velamen impoſuiſſe, ut iterum poſſet deponere: That woman taking upon her the vaile of chaſtity, ſhould be conſtrained, will ſhee nill ſhee, to profeſſe ſanctimony, though ſhee will ſweare that ſhee did take it no otherwiſe upon her, than with purpoſe to lay it downe: here wee ſee ſingle life is enforced, Contra. cauſ.32. quaeſt.1. cap.13. Virginitas ex conſilio ſuadetur, non ex imperio praecipitur: Virginity may be perſwaded in counſell, not enjoyned by commandement.

52 Concerning the marriage of infidells, whether after their converſion it ought to hold, the Canons 252 ſpeake diverſly Cauſ.28.qu.1.ca.1.Innocent. Quod Deus conjunxit, homo ne ſeparet: That which God hath coupled, let no man put aſunder: which ſaying is applied to the marriage of infidells: and Ca.8. ſomewhat otherwiſe: Ab infidelibus conjugibus licet diſcedere, ſed non expedit: It is lawfull to leave an unbeleeving wife, though not expedient; and Ca.10. the contrary is concluded: Iudaeus ſeparetur ab uxore fideli: An unbeleeving Iew muſt be ſeparated from a beleeving wife.

53 Cauſ.29 qu.2.cap.2. Ancillam in matrimonio ſuſceptam viro dimittere non licet: It is not lawfull 253 for the husband to diſmiſſe a bond-maid, whom hee hath married, Contra. cap.4. Siquis Ancillam alterius uxorem acceperit, &c. ſi voluerit, aliam accipiat: If a man take to wife another mans bond-ſervant, hee may marry another, if hee will.

54 Cauſ.30.quaeſt.1.cap.2. Ab uxore ſeparetur, qui filiaſtrum ſuum coram Epiſcopo tenuit: Let him 254 be ſeparated from his wife, that doth undertake for his owne ſonne before the Biſhop: that is, is his ſonnes Godfather, Contra.cap.3.Nicolaus. Non ſeparetur, Let not him or her ſo undertaking for their ſonne at their baptiſme, be ſeparated.

55 Cauſ.30.quaeſt.3.cap.4. Vrbanus. Poſt compaternitatem geniti legitimè conjungi poſſunt: The children 255 of Godfathers may marry together lawfully: Contra. cap.5. Paſchalis. Non poſſunt copulari: They may not, &c.

56 Quaeſt.4. cap.3. Innocentius. Nullus duabus commatribus miſceatur: A man cannot marry his 256 wives commother, that is, if they were fellow Godmothers: Contra. ca.5. Paſchalis. Vxorem compatris ducere licet: A man may marry his fellow Godfathers wife. This Canon alloweth to marry the fellow Godfathers wife, and by the ſame reaſon, it is as lawfull to marry the wives fellow Godmother, which is forbidden in the other Canon.

257 57 Decret. Greg. lib.4. tit.11. cap.1. Alexander. Filij duorum compatrum, ſive ante, ſive poſt compaternitatem geniti, licitè conjungi poſſunt: Godfathers children, borne before they were Godfathers, or after, may lawfully marry: Contra.7. Innocent.3. Hujuſmodi perſona non poſſunt matrimonium contrahere, & ſi contraxerint, poſſunt adinvicem ſeparari: Such perſons cannot marry together, if they doe, they may be ſeparated.

258 58 Cauſ.28. qu.3. cap.1. Non eſt bigamus, qui ante baptiſmum habuit unam, & poſt baptiſmum alteram: Hee is not to be counted a bigamiſt, which had one wife before baptiſme, and another after: Contra. cap. 2. Innocentius affirmeth the contrary, that he is.

259 59 Cauſ.31. quæſt.1. cap.1. Leo. Adulterio polluta non ducatur ab eodem in matrimonium: Shee that was defiled by adultery, cannot marry the adulterer: Contra cap.2. Auguſtin. Licet alicui ducere in matrimonium, quam priùs polluit adulterio: A man may marry her, with whom before hee committed adultery.

260 60 Cauſ.31. quæſt.2. ca.1. Vrbanus. Iuramento patris non cogitur puella nubere, cui nunquam aſſenſum adhibuit: The daughter is not bound notwithſtanding her fathers oath to marry, where ſhe never gave conſent: Contra. ca.2. Hormiſda. Poteſt de filio nondum adulto pater cui vult in matrimonium trahere: The father may give his ſonne in marriage to whom hee will, being under age: and when hee commeth to yeeres of diſcretion, omninò adimplere debet, the ſonne is bound to fulfill the marriage.

261 61 Cauſ.32. quæſt.1. cap.6. Qui adulteræ debitum reddit, tribus annis pœniteat: He which companieth with an adulterous wife, let him doe three yeeres penance: Contra. cap.5. Illam tua ordinatione ſub cautela recipiat; Let the husband take his adulterous wife by your appointment, &c.

262 62 Cauſ.32. quæſt. 2. cap.1. Partus fœminarum eſt eis ſola cauſa nubendi: Women muſt marry only for children: Contra. ca.6. Conjuges ſunt, qui cauſa ſolius incontinentiæ ſibimet invicem copulantur: They are man and wife which are joyned together, only to avoid incontinency.

263 63 Cauſ.32. qu.5. cap.10. Illa eſt glorioſa continentia, quam complectitur voluntas ſancti propoſiti: That is a glorious kinde of continency, which is found in the will and purpoſe, non quam tranſgredi non poteſt neceſſitas debilitati corporis, not that which is kept in the body, having no power thereunto. This Canon commendeth virginity of mind, before virginity of the body: Contra. ca.14. Quæ opprimuntur incontaminatis ſe virginibus non audeant comparare: Virgins by violence oppreſſed, muſt not compare themſelves with virgins which are vndefiled, that is, in their body.

264 64 Cauſ.32. qu.7. cap.18. Ob infirmitatem corporis licet viro aliam ducere. Gregor. 3. It is lawfull for the husband to take another wife, if his other be not able to performe the duty of marriage: Contra. cap.25. Nicolaus. Ob infirmitatem conjugia ſolvere non licet: Marriages muſt not be diſſolved becauſe of impotency or infirmity.

265 65 Cauſ.33. qu.2. cap.12. Syricius: Pœnitentes matrimonia contrahere prohibentur: They that are in penance muſt not contract matrimony: Contra. cap. 14. Leo. Non negantur pœnitentibus licita conjugia: Lawfull marriages muſt not be denied to thoſe that are under penance.

266 66 Cauſ.33. qu.3. diſtinct.4. ca.12. Futuri filij perditionis æternæ recedendo à juſticia, cùm piè tamen & fideliter vivunt, verè ſunt filij Dei: They which are like to be the children of deſtruction, by departing from juſtice, yet while they live godly, are truly the ſonnes of God: Contra. cap.8. Non erant filij, quando erant in nomine & profeſſione filiorum: They were not ſonnes, no not when they ſeemed ſo to be in outward name and profeſsion: to be truly the ſonnes of God, and not to be, are contrary.

267 67 Diſtinct.4. cap.8. in gloſſ. Alij dicunt peccata remitti in baptiſmo ſecundum præſentem juſtitiam, non ſecundum præſcientiam: Some thinke that ſinnes are remitted in baptiſme, not verily, according to Gods preſcience, but in appearance in reſpect of their preſent juſtice: Contra. alij perfectè peccata expiata affirmant: Some ſay that ſinnes are perfectly expiated, and afterwards doe returne, if they ſinne againe: ſinnes to be verily, and not verily remitted, are contrary.

268 68 Cauſ.33 qu.4. ca.3. Nullus uxori jejuniorum diebus conjungatur: Let no man company with his wife in the daies of faſt: Contra. ca.12. Apoſtolus nec ad tempus niſi ex conſenſu voluit conjuges carnali invicem fraudare debito: The Apoſtle would not have the one to defraud the other of their carnall duty, but for a time, and that with conſent: if but for a time, how then for many weekes, and ſome moneths together?

269 69 Cauſ.35. qu.3. ca.1. Greg. Vſque ad ſeptimam generationem, &c. None muſt marry his kinſman to the ſeventh generation: cap. 3. Fabian. Affines in quinta generatione copulari poſſunt: They may marry in the fifth generation.

270 70 Ibid. cap. 7. Iulius. Ex propinquitate ſanguinis nullus ducat uxorem uſquè ad ſeptimum gradum: No man muſt marry with any of his kindred to the ſeventh degree. Contra. cauſ.35. qu.1.8. cap.2. Gregor. Vſque ad quartum gradum genealogiæ abſtinere debent: They muſt refraine to the fourth degree of their kindred.

271 71 The Canons agree not in the computation of the degrees of conſanguinity: ſome make the father to be the firſt degree, part.2. cauſ.35 qu.4. cap.21. gloſſ. Some would have brethren to be the firſt, Iſidor. ibid. qu. 5. cap. 1. Some againe begin the computation from brothers children, Alexand. ibid. cap. 2.

72 Arbor. Affinitat.cauſ.35.qu.5 in fine: Certum eſt, quod affinitas non habet hodie prohibitionem niſi 272 in primo genere: It is certaine that affinity is not forbidden but in the firſt kinde: As if my kinſmans wife is of my affinity in the firſt kinde, if ſhee afterward marry another, hee is of my affinity in the ſecond kinde, but in the ſame degree: and in this kinde of affinity there is no prohibition. Contra. cauſ.35.qu.10.cap.4. Hyginus: Proles ex ſecundis nuptijs mulieris non poteſt ſe copulare cognationi prioris mariti: The children which a woman had by her ſecond husband, cannot marry with the kindred of the firſt husband, which are in the ſecond kinde of affinity at the leaſt.

73 Cauſ.36.qu.2. cap.8. Voluntate patris rapta poteſt nubere raptori: With the conſent of the Pa- 273 rents, ſhe that is raviſhed, may marry with him that offered the violence. Contra. cap.11. ne voluntate parentis, ſhe cannot marry, no not with the conſent of her parents.

74 Decret. part.3 diſtinct.2.cap.42. Berengarius was conſtrained to ſubmit himſelfe to the con- 274 feſſion of Pope Nicolas, as touching the reall preſence in this forme, Corpus & ſanguinem Chriſti ſenſualiter in manibus ſacerdotum tractari, frangi & fidelium dentibus atteri: That the body and blood of Chriſt is ſenſibly handled by the Prieſt, and broken and chawed with the teeth of the faithfull. Contra.cap.44.Gratia ejus non conſumitur morſibus: His grace (that is, his gracious body) is not bitten or chawed, or with biting conſumed, &c. For, that the Canon ſpeaketh of the chawing onely of Chriſts body, not the conſumption of it, it is cleare by theſe former words, where Chriſt is made thus to ſpeake and expound himſelfe: Non hoc corpus, quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis, you ſhall not eat this body which you ſee, &c.

75 Par.3.diſtinct.2.cap.65. Qui diſcordat à Chriſto, non manducat carnem ejus: Hee that diſſenteth 275 from Chriſt, eateth not his fleſh. Contra.cap.68. Qui indignè accipit, corpus Chriſti accipit, Hee that receiveth unworthily, yet receiveth the body of Chriſt.

76 Part.2. cauſ.1.qu.1. cap.88. Chriſtus traditori ſuo Euchariſtiam primam confectam manibus ſuis 276 tradidit: Chriſt delivered the Euchariſt conſecrated with his owne hands firſt unto the betrayer. Contra.part.3.diſtinct.2.cap.7. Iulius. Intincta buccella magiſtri proditorem oſtendit, non ſacramenti inſtitutionem ſignavit: The dipped ſop did not betoken the Sacrament, but did bewray the betrayer of Chriſt: that Iudas received the Sacrament, and that he did not, are contrary.

77 Part.3. diſtinct.4. cap.24. Nicolaus: Qui in nomine tantum Chriſti baptizantur, denuò non bapti- 277 zandi: They which are baptized onely in the name of Chriſt, muſt not be baptized againe. Contra. cap.30.Pelagius. Si ſolammodò in nomine domini baptizatos ſe confitentur, & eos nomine ſanctæ Trinitatis baptizabis: If they are onely baptized in the name of the Lord, thou ſhalt baptize them againe in the name of the Trinity: to be baptized againe, and not to be baptized, are contraries.

78 Diſtinct.4.cap.79. Qui ſemel mergit in baptiſmate, deponatur: He that doth dip but once in bap- 278 tiſme, let him be depoſed. Contra. ca. Greg. Reprehenſibile eſſe nullatenus poteſt, infantem in baptiſmate ſemel, vel ter immergere: It is not a matter worthy of reprehenſion, to dip the infant once or twice in baptiſme.

79 Ibid. cap.82. Evangelicum preceptum eſt trina merſione baptiſma tribuere; It is an Evangelicall 279 precept, to miniſter baptiſme with thrice dipping. Contra. cap.85. Propter vitandum hæretici dogmatis uſum teneamus ſimplam merſionem: Let us dip but once in baptiſme, to avoid the uſe and cuſtome of heretikes, &c. If it be hereticall to dip but once, how is it evangelicall?

80 Diſtinct.5.ca.2. Melchiades. Spiritus ſanctus in fonte plenitudinem tribuit ad innocentiam: The 280 holy Spirit in baptiſme giveth fulneſſe of innocency: Contra.ca.1. Vrbanus. Spiritum poſt baptiſmum accipere debent, ut pleni Chriſtiani inveniantur: They muſt receive the Spirit after baptiſme (in confirmation) that they may be found full Chriſtians: then they had no fulneſſe before, which is affirmed in the other Canon.

81 Decret.Gregor.lib.1.tit.11.cap.14. Ordinans puerum tredecim annorum ſuſpendatur: Hee that 281 giveth orders to a childe of thirteene yeeres, let him be ſuſpended: Contra. tit. 14. cap. 3. Alexand. Nemini intra annum 14. conſtituto perſonatum concedatis: You ſhall not give a perſonage to any under foureteene yeeres of age, &c. It is then lawfull by this Canon to give a perſonage, and conſequently orders to a childe of foureteene yeeres: unlawfull by the other Canon to doe it to a childe of thirteene yeeres: what great oddes can there be in one yeere?

82 Decr.Gregor.lib.1. tit.17.ca.4. Si filius inſtitutus eſt in Eccleſia patris, eum inde non differas amo- 282 vere: If the ſonne be inſtituted into his fathers Church, you ſhall remove him without delay. Contra. ca.5. Qui ſcienter contulit filio ſacerdotis paternam Eccleſiam, exinde eum removere non poteſt: Hee that wittingly beſtowed upon the ſonne his fathers benefice, cannot remove him out of it: to remove, and not to remove, are contrary.

83 Ibid.tit.20.ca.4.Clemens. Qui ſe abſcidit, ut obſequium præſtet Deo, abſque alterius miniſterio. &c 283
He that geldeth himſelfe to be the more obedient unto God, muſt not miniſter at the Altar. Contra. ca.5.Innocent.3. Qui ſibi virilia abſcindit propter lepram, officium exequatur: He that geldeth himſelfe to prevent the leproſie, may execute his office, &c. as though the health of the body were to be preferred before the ſervice of God: but indeed in neither caſe is it tolerable or commendable.

84 Decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit.16. ca. 2. Honor.3 Sepulti à ſchiſmaticis non exhumandi: 284
They, whom ſchiſmatikes have buried, muſt not be taken out of their graves: Contra. lib.3. tit. 28. ca. 12. Clemens 3. Oſſa excommunicatorum, ſi diſcerni poſſunt, exhumanda: The bones of excommunicate perſons, if they may be diſcerned, muſt be taken up.

285 85 Lib.3.tit.32.cap.17. Innocent.3. Vxor maritum profeſſum repetere poteſt, non obſtante licentia profitendi ab ea metu extorta: The wife may require her husband profeſſed, though ſhe gave him leave being conſtrained by feare. Contra.cap.20. licet ſeductus, & deceptorie illectus, &c. If a man make profeſsion of a ſingle life, though hee were ſeduced and deceived, it muſt ſtand, &c. Why ſhould a vow by conſtraint be diſſolved, and not a vow alſo made by deceipt?

286 86 Lib.3.tit.42.cap.3. Some thinke that children have no faith at all: Nonnulli concedunt, quod parvuli credant non per uſum, ſed per habitum fidei: Some thinke that children doe beleeve, not by the act, yet by the habite of faith.

287 87 Decret. Gregor.lib.4.tit.1.cap.10. Alexander. Qui juravit cum aliqua contrahere, contrahere compellitur: Hee that hath ſworne to contract marriage with any, muſt be compelled to doe it: Contra.cap.17. Lucius. Moveri potius debet, quam compelli: Hee muſt be admoniſhed rather than compelled to doe it.

288 88 Lib.4.decr.Greg.tit.1.cap.3. Eugen. Siquis puellam nondum ſeptennem duxit, & eam tentavit, conjunx ipſius dicitur: If one marry a childe under ſeven yeeres, and hath attempted her, ſhe is his wife. Contra.tit.2.cap.10 Verban.3. Votum Contractus ante pubertatem, etiam cum niſu carnalis copulæ non fecit matrimonium: A contract made before ſufficient yeeres for marriage, maketh no marriage, though there can be an endevour of carnall knowledge.

289 89 Lib.4.tit.6.cap.3. Alexand.3. Votum ſimplex non dirimit matrimonium poſt contractum: A ſimple vow doth not diſſolve matrimony afterward contracted. Contra.cap.7. Innocent.3. Votum ſolemne dirimit, &c. A ſolemne vow doth diſſolve matrimony afterward contracted: and yet Can.6. Celeſtinus ſaith, Votum ſimplex, non minus apud Deum obligat, quam ſolenne: A ſimple vow doth binde no leſſe before God than a ſolemne, &c. Then the one as well as the other is of force, or not of force to diſſolve matrimony.

290 90 Decr.Greg.lib.5.tit.33.ca.6. Alexand.3. Contra privilegium Eccleſiæ præſcribitur ſpatio 30. annorum: Thirty yeeres may preſcribe againſt the priviledge of the Church. Contra.cap.15. Innocent.3. Contra privilegia Eccleſiæ non præſcribitur minori ſpatio 40. annorum: fewer yeeres than forty cannot preſcribe againſt the priviledge of the Church.

291 91 Decr.Gregor.lib.3.tit.5.cap.28. Innocent.8. Plures dignitates licet tenere cum diſpenſatione: It is lawfull to hold divers dignities of the Church, and thoſe with cure, with a diſpenſation: Cont.extravag.Ioann.22.tit.3.cap.1. Virtute diſpenſationis non licet plures dignitates obtinere: It is not lawfull to hold divers dignities, no, not with diſpenſation, &c. and this Canon commeth neerer the rule of conſcience and equity.

292 92 Decr.Gregor.lib.3.tit.28.cap.3. Innocent.3. Qui ſepulturam eligit in loco minùs religioſo, non tenet electus: Hee that chuſeth his buriall in a place not religious, his choyce cannot hold: Contra.Sext. Decretal.lib.3.tit.12.cap.3. Bonifac.8. In loco minùs religioſo poteſt nova eligi ſepultura: A man may make choyce of a place not religious to be buried in.

293 93 Sext.Decret.lib.3.tit.20.cap.1. Innocent. Nullam pecuniam ratione procurationum, ſed in victualibus expenſas tantùm recipiat moderatas: That the Biſhop ſhould take no mony in his viſitation, in the name of his procurations, but onely his moderate expences in diet: Contra.cap.3. Bonifac.8. reverſeth this Canon, and decreeth thus: Pecuniam licitè recipere valent pro ſumptibus moderatis faciendis in victualibus: They may take mony for the moderate expences and charges of their diet. One Canon ſaith, they may not take mony, but their diet: another ſaith, they may take mony.

294 94 Sext.Decret.lib.4.tit.3.cap.12. Clement.3. cognatio ſpiritualis per catechiſmum vix impedit matrimonium: Spirituall kindred which commeth by catechizing that goeth before baptiſme, doth hardly hinder marriage, Contra.ibid.Bonif.8. Impedit matrimonium, it doth hinder marriage.

295 95 Decret.Gregor.lib.5.tit.33.cap.28 Honor.3. Pariſijs, & locis vicinis jus civile legi non debet: The Civill law muſt not be read at Paris, and the Cities adjoyning, Contra.ſext.Decret.lib.5.tit.7.cap.2. Innocent.4. Romæ vigeat ſtudium juris divini & humani, canonici videlicet & civilis: At Rome the ſtudy both of divine and humane Law, that is, Canon and Civill muſt flouriſh, &c. And why, I pray you, at Rome more than Paris, which is as famous an Vniverſity?

296 96 Sext.Decret.lib.5.tit.2.ca.15. Filij hæreticorum, uſque ad ſecundam lineam paternam, ad primam vero maternam ſunt inhabiles ad beneficium Eccleſiaſticum: The ſonnes of heretikes are incapable of any Eccleſiaſticall benefice to the ſecond degree of their fathers kindred, aud firſt of their mothers: Contra.lib.5.tit.9.cap.4. Pœna alicui impoſita & ejus poſteris, non extenditur ad poſteros lineæ fœmineæ: Puniſhment inflicted upon any and their poſterity, is not to be extended to the poſterity of the womans line.

297 97 Sext.Decret.lib.3.tit.14.cap.5. Bonif.8. Poteſt quis poſt votum emiſſum de certa religione intranda, religionem aliam laxiorem ingredi: A man after his vow made to enter into a certaine religious profeſſion, may goe unto another religion more large, Contr.Clement.lib.1.tit.3.cap.1. Clemens.5. Rationi non congruit, ut homines diſparis profeſſionis ſimul in eiſdem monaſterijs ſocientur: It is againſt reaſon, that men of divers profeſsions, ſhould company together in one monaſtery, &c. how then can one that hath vowed one religious profeſsion, enter into another, as in the former Canon?

298 98 Sext.decret.lib.5.tit.12.cap.3. Nicholaus 2. Abdicationem proprietatis omnium rerum Chriſtus

verbo & exemplo firmavit: Chriſt did by his word and example, teach the abdication and diſclaiming of the very property of things. Contra. extrav. Ioan. 22. tit. 14. ca. 4. Opinio, quæ aſſerit Chriſtum & diſcipulos nihil habuiſſe, erronea eſt & heretica: The opinion, which affirmeth, that Chriſt and his Diſciples had nothing, is erroneous and hereticall: this Pope Iohn maketh Pope Nicolas that ſo affirmeth, an hereticke.

99 Ibid. lib. 5. tit. 12. ca. 3. Pope Nicolas granteth unto the Franciſcans Simplicium uſum facti non Iuris, The ſimple uſe in fact, not in right or property of ſuch things, as were neceſſary for their ſuſtentation, Dominium vero & proprietatem ad Romanam ſedem pertinere, But the dominion and property of ſuch things to belong to the Sea of Rome. Contra. extra. Ioann. tit. 14. ca. 3. This diſtinction is confuted at large, and there it is further ſhewed, quòd actus utendi ſine jure in rebus conſumptilibus conſtitui non poteſt: That there cannot be a bare uſe without right, or property in things conſumptible, as thoſe things which belong to meat and drinke: and this reaſon is given thereof: Quia uti re aliqua nihil aliud eſt quàm fructus ex ea, ſalva ſubſtantia percipere: To uſe a thing without property, is to take profit of it, the ſubſtance or ſtocke ſtill remaining, but ſo cannot a man uſe meat and drinke, becauſe the ſubſtance is conſumed: and this Canon ſeemeth of the two to be built upon the better reaſon. 229

100 Laſtly, that it may appeare to all men, how uſuall a thing it is in popery for one to contradict another, let a view be taken of the Popes themſelves, with whom it is a very common thing ſo one to reverſe and abrogate that which another had eſtabliſhed and decreed: as whereas Boniface 8. had made a decree, that the Laity ſhould not lay any taxes or impoſitions upon the Clergy: Sext. decret. lib. 3. tit. 23. ca. 3: Clemens 5. doth abrogate that conſtitution, and maketh it of no force. Clemens lib. 3. tit. 17. ca. 1. 300 1

And as Clemens ſerveth his predeceſſor, ſo Pope Iohn 22. offereth the like meaſure to him, Extravag. tit. 9. ca. 1. Conſtitutio Clementis torneamenta inhibens ſub pœna excommunicat. hic revocatur: The conſtitution of Clement, forbidding Iuſtings and torneaments under paine of excommunication, is here reverſed. 2

Extrav. Ioan. tit. 7. c. unic. Bonifacius abrogateth whatſoever was decreed by Celeſtinus his predeceſſor, and not by him approved. 3

Extrav. lib. 14. ca. 2. Iohn. 22. reverſeth the conſtitution of Nicolas 4. which he made againſt thoſe which ſhould take upon them to write gloſſes, or commentaries upon the rule of S. Francis. 4

Ibid. ca. 3. Hee repealeth the conſtitution of the ſame Nicolas, whereby, the property & right of ſuch things as were conferred upon the Franciſcanes, was reſerved to the Church of Rome. 5

Ibid. ca. 5. The ſame Pope Iohn 22. ſheweth, that it was lawfull for him to diſſent from his predeceſſors, Si nobis non licuit contra conſtitutionem Nicolai 4. prædeceſſoris noſtri aliquid ſtatuere, nec ſibi licuit contra ſtatuta Gregor. Innocent aliquid declarare, &c. If it were not lawfull for us to eſtabliſh any thing againſt the decree of Nicolas 4. our predeceſſor, how was it lawfull for him to doe the like againſt the decrees of Gregory and Innocentius his predeceſſors? 6

Againe, in the ſame place he ſheweth the like practiſe to have been before his time; Licet Innocent. 3. in generali concilio interdixiſſet novas religiones inſtitui, tamen ſucceſſores ipſius (non obſtante interdicto) plures leguntur ordines confirmaſſe, qui fuerunt poſtea per Gregor. 9. diſſoluti: Though Innocent. 3. in a generall Councell had forbidden any new religion to be inſtituted, yet, that prohibition and interdiction notwithſtanding, his ſucceſſors confirmed divers orders which afterward, Gregory 9. diſſolved. 7

Thus we ſee manifold diſſentions, and civill warres, as it were, which popiſh religion hath in it ſelfe, and into how many opinions, as formes and ſhapes, they can change themſelves, that a man may worthily uſe againſt them that verſe of Horace:

Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea nodo:
No knot ſo faſt or ſure to hold,
Which changeable Proteus cannot unfold.

And as Origene well interpreteth that ſaying of our Saviour, Surget gens contra gentem, id eſt, una hæreſis contra aliam: One nation ſhall riſe againſt another, that is, one hereſie againſt another. So we doe ſee the effect of that propheſie in Popiſh religion, which as Saint Ambroſe well ſaith, Velut quædam monſtruoſi Scylla portenti in varias formas diſtincta perfidia: Like to the hideous monſter of the gulfe Scylla, doth devide it ſelfe into divers deformed ſhapes. Cujus ſpeluncam, ut ferunt nautæ, nos clauſa aure præterire debemus: But as the marriners are ſaid to paſſe the gulfe ſtopping their eares, ſo let us paſſe over their monſtrous abſurdities and diſſentions, not regarding them.

Hom. 7. in Levitic.

Lib. 1 de fide, cap. 4.

Thus, I thinke, I have requited Bellarmines kindneſſe towards us, who chargeth us untruly with no leſſe than an hundred ſeverall diſſentions in opinion amongſt our ſelves: I have here repaied him for one hundred three, and more truely, and if that be not intereſt ſufficient, he may have more hereafter.

And here againe is ſome ods betweene us: Bellarmines hundred is in word onely, but our large hundred we have proved by particular induction.

Now then, if we will compare the firſt and the laſt, and lay all altogether, their raylings, ſlanders, forgeries, lying and untruths; Again, their blaſphemies, opinions contrary to Scripture, hereſies, and abſurdities: Thirdly, their weak and feeble arguments, inſufficient anſwers, ſubtile and vaine diſtinctions: Laſtly, their contradictions among themſelves, the new with the old: the new one with the other: the ſame men many times with themſelves: yea, their religion fighting and jarring with it ſelfe: If theſe things be weighed and conſidered, it will eaſily appeare whether their houſe bee built upon a ſandy or a rocky foundation: Beggerly, paltry, diabolicall, Antichriſtian, is that religion, which is driven to uſe ſuch lewd, unhoneſt, and unchriſtian deviſes and ſhifts.

Now, to the Reader of this booke, thus much firſt I ſay, as touching himſelfe: If he hath been at any time doubtfull or wavering in the faith of the Goſpell, I truſt by this here ſet downe he may, partly be confirmed to cleave unto the Goſpell with a reſolute minde, and to thinke of Popery as it deſerveth, and to follow the Apoſtles counſaile, To try all things, and having tried, to keepe that which is beſt, 1 Theſ.5.21. And as Auguſtine very well adviſeth in theſe words: Si jactatus curru inanium quaſtionum cadis in fluctus vana contentionis, &c. Revertere & ſede in portu fidei Catholica, ubi te nulla poſſit fluctuoſa curioſitatis tempeſtas turbare vel mergere: If at any time having beene carried away, as with a chariot of vaine queſtions, thou haſt fallen into light and unneceſſary contentions, and as a ſhip forſaken of the governour, been toſſed, and caſt upon unknowne coaſts, returne and reſt thy ſelfe in the haven of the Catholike faith, where no tempeſt of troubleſome curioſity, can either trouble or drowne thee, Hypognoſt: art.6.

And as concerning my ſelfe, this I have to ſay, that I doe not take upon me to be a champion, or profeſſed propugner of our faith, there are other upon whom that care and charge may rather lie, as whoſe leiſure is more, their encouragement greater, and their meanes better. I ſay here with S. Auguſtine, anſwering the Donatiſts in the like caſe, who ſpak it modeſtly of himſelfe, but I more truly; Abſit, ut mihi apud Catholicos arrogem, quod (Bellarminus) ſibi (apud Pontificios) arroget: unus ſum è multis qui profanas veſtras novitates, ut poſſumus, refutamus, ſicut unicuique noſtrûm Deus partitus eſt, menſuram fidei: Farre be it from me to chalenge that place among true Catholikes and goſpellers, that Bellarmine doth among the popiſh ſort. I am one amongſt many, which labour to my skill and power, to confute your prophane novelties, as God hath given to every of us a meaſure of faith, Cont. Iulian. lib.6.ca.4.

My travell herein ſhall not prejudice other mens more painefull labours, I have but ſhewed my deſire, and endeavoured rather, than performed that which I deſired, yet I truſt the chriſtian Reader will accept of this my good will: and to others more curious than courteous, I ſay with S. Hierome, Aut profer meliores epulas, & me conviva utere, aut qualicunque noſtra cœnula contentus eſto, Either bring forth better dainties, and let me be a gueſt, or elſe content your ſelfe in the meane time with this ſmall refreſhing of mine.

Auguſt. ad Paulinum epiſt.34.

And now to conclude, to thee (Chriſtian Reader) I direct my ſpeech, In his quæ tibi diſplicebunt, ego conſpicior; in his quæ per donum Spiritus ſancti tibi placent, ille amandus, ille prædicandus. Wherein any thing in this book ſhal juſtly diſpleaſe or offend thee, it is my fault, the blame is mine;
but what ſo by the gift and grace of the Spirit of God is wel ſaid, and approved by thee;
he is to be loved, hee is to be praiſed for it. Now to God the Father, and his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, with the ſame holy Spirit, be all praiſe, honour, and glory for ever.
Amen.

SYNOPSIS PAPISMI,

THAT IS,

A GENERALL VIEW OF PAPISTRIE: WHEREIN THE WHOLE Myſterie of Iniquitie, and Summe of Antichriſtian Doctrine is ſet downe, which is maintained this day by the Synagogue of Rome, againſt the Church of Chriſt.

TOGETHER WITH AN ANTITHESIS
Of the true Chriſtian Faith, and an Antidotum or Counterpoyſon out of Scripture, againſt the Whore of Babylons filthy cup of abominations.

Confuted by Scriptures, Fathers, Councels, Imperiall Conſtitutions, Pontificiall Decrees, their owne Writers, and our Martyrs, and the conſent of all Chriſtian Churches in the world.

Divided into five Books or Centuries, that is, ſo many hundreds of Popiſh hereſies and errours.

Now the fifth time publiſhed by the Authoritie of his Majeſties Royall Letters Patens, with addition of a Preface truly relating the life and death of the learned and laborious Doctor Andrew Willet, the Author of this, and many other worthy works.

By Peter Smith, Dr. in Divinitie.

There are alſo annexed in the end three Tables, 1 Of the Controverſies and Queſtions, 2 Of the Scriptures, 3 Of the Matters.

1 Corinth. 11.9.
There muſt be hereſies, that they which are approved amongſt you, might be knowne.
Titus 3. 10.
A man that is an heretike, after the firſt and ſecond admonition, avoyd.

Aug. de vera Relig. Cap. 6.
Eccleſia Catholica utitur gentibus ad materiam operationis ſuæ, hæreticis ad probationem doctrinæ ſuæ, ſchiſmaticis ad documentum ſtabilitatis ſuæ: alios invitat, alios excludit, alios relinquit, omnibus tamen gratiæ Dei participandæ dat poteſtatem: ſive illi informandi adhuc, ſive reformandi, ſive recolligendi ſunt.
The true Catholike Church doth uſe the Gentiles as matter to worke upon, Heretikes for the triall of their doctrine, Schiſmatikes to prove their conſtancie: the firſt ſhe inviteth, the ſecond ſhe excludeth, the third ſhe leaveth, yet to them all ſhe offereth the grace of God: in inſtructing the Gentiles, reforming of Heretikes, and bringing home againe Schiſmatikes.

as it may be beſt underſtood: the hebraiſme doth not ſo well fit our Engliſh phraſe: the like libertie they Deut.33.2. tooke themſelves in reading, Deut.33. 2. a fierie law, as if the words in the originall were a law of fire:
whereas they are, eſh dath, a fire of a law, as if wee ſhould ſay, a law-making fire.

8 The Hebrew word דבר dabhar, ſignifieth indifferently a word, or a thing done: as it is uſed, Gen.
Geneſ.18.14. 18. 14. is there any word hard to God: yet they there read, is there any thing, which is the meaning: and ſo is it taken heere, as the participle γεγονος done, joyned unto it ſheweth.

9 The vulgar reading in the Latine, is very faulty. 1. The Hebrew prepoſition enl, doth not ſignifie under, but towards: as the Septuagint reade πρὸς σὲ, to or toward thee: how can the deſire of ſinne be ſaid to bee toward one. 2. The affix is of the maſculine, his deſire, whereas the word Chatath ſinne is of the feminine: it hath not then relation to ſinne. 3. In this ſenſe, it ſhould bee in a wicked mans Geneſ.3.16. power, ſuch as Cain was, to have dominion over ſinne. 4. In the ſame phraſe, chap. 3. 16. the ſubjection of the woman toward her huſband is expreſſed: thy deſire ſhall bee turned, &c. And ſo here it is moſt fitly referred to Abels ſubjection to Cain, as the elder brother, not to the ſubjection of ſinne, which is improperly ſaid to have a deſire.

10 Though ſometime the Hebrew particle vau, bee tranſlated for, it followeth not it ſhould bee ſo every where: the Septuagint doe not tranſlate it, for hee was, but expreſſe it by the particle δὲ erat autem, but he was, not erat enim, for he was: and Vatablus their owne interpreter readeth, & erat, and he was, ſo alſo Pagnin and Montanus.

11 Why may not teraphim in that place bee as well tranſlated images, as they themſelves thinke it
1.Sam.19.13. may bee ſo Engliſhed, 1 Sam.19.13. where it is ſaid, Michal tooke a ſtatua or image, and put it on upon the bed, &c.

Now on the other ſide, let us take a view of their goodly tranſlations: it would fill a whole volume by it ſelfe, to ſet downe all their groſſe ſcapes, and corruptions herein: but theſe for example ſake ſhall ſuffice.

Geneſ.3.15. 1 Geneſ.3. 15. They read according to the vulgar Latine, ſhee ſhall bruſe thy head, whereas in the Hebrew, it is put in the neuter, ipſum, it ſhall breake, &c. And ſo read Montanus, Pagnin, Vatablus: the Septuagint reade in the maſculine, he ſhall breake, &c. that is, Chriſt.

Geneſ.4.13. 2 Geneſ.4.13. My ſinne is greater than I may deſerve pardon: whereas there is not a ſyllable in the Hebrew, that ſignifieth to merit or deſerve: neither doe the ſeptuagint, or any other interpreter ſo tranſlate.

Geneſ.6.4. 3 Geneſ. 6. 4. All the cogitations of their heart was bent to evill: for, all the imagination of the thoughts of their heart, are onely evill: which is more than inclined or bent to evill: which tranſlation extennuateth originall ſinne.

2.Sam.21.19. 4 2 Sam.21.19. Adeodatus the ſonne of the forreſt, a broderer: for, Eſhanan the ſonne of Iaare-oregim: as Montanus, Pagnin, Vatablus, their owne tranſlaters reade according to the Hebrew: Iunius alſo and our Engliſh.

1.Chron.2.55. 5 1.Chron.2.55. Theſe are the Cinites which came of the heat of the father of the houſe of Rechab:
without any ſenſe, for, which came of Hamath the father, &c. as the Septuagint, Montanus, Pagnin, Vatablus reade: Iun. Eng.

1.Chron.4.22. 6 1.Chron.4.22. And hee that made the ſunne to ſtand, and the man of lying, ſecure and burning, which were Princes in Moab; for, and Iokim, and the men of Chozeba, and Ioaſh and Saraph, which had the dominion in Moab: as the Septuagint, Montanus, Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng.

1.Chron.7.18. 7 1.Chron.7.18. And his ſiſter Queene bare Goodliman: it is not like that Gilead had a Queene to his ſiſter: for, and his ſiſter Molecheth bare Iſhod. Sept. Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng.

Iob 1.5. 8 Iob 1.5. Leſt my ſonnes have ſinned, and bleſſed God in their hearts: as though it were a ſinne to bleſſe God: though the Hebrew word ſignifie both to bleſſe and curſe: yet neither the Latine nor Engliſh word will beare it. The Septuagint doe read, leſt they have thought evill in their hearts: ſo alſo Vatablus, leſt they have curſed. Montanus.

cap.5.7. 9 Iob 5.7. Man is borne to labour, and the bird to flight: for, man is borne to labour as the ſparkes flie upward: Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Engliſh.

cap.6.6. 10 Cap.6.6. Can a man taſte that which being taſted bringeth death: for, is there any taſte in the white of an egge. Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Engliſh.

cap.6.16. 11 Cap.6.16. They which feare the hore froſt, ſnow ſhall fall upon them: for, which are blackiſh (namely the brookes which hee ſpake of) with yce, and wherein the ſnow is hid. Montanus, Pagnin. Vatablus. Iunius. Eng.

cap.9.13. 12 Cap.9.13. Under whom they ſtoope, that carrie the world: that is (ſay they) the Angels: for the helpers or Patrons of pride doe ſtoope. Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng.

cap.9.26. 13 Cap.9.26. They have paſſed by, as ſhips carrying fruits, &c. for, as the moſt ſwift ſhips: Montan.
Vatab. Iun. Eng.

cap.11.12. 14. Cap.11.12. Hee thinketh himſelfe borne free, as a wilde Aſſes colt, &c. for, man borne is like a wilde Aſſe colt: that is, without underſtanding, Septuagint. Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng.

cap.21.2. 15 Cap.21.2. Heare my words and doe penance: for, *heare my words, and this ſhall bee in ſtead of your cap.21.33. 16 Cap.21.33. Hee hath beene ſweet to the valley of Cocitus: which they ſay is a river of hell: for, the clots or turfes of the valley ſhall be ſweet unto him. Septuagint, Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng.

17 Cap. 22. 30. The innocent ſhall bee ſaved : for, the innocent ſhall ſave an Iland : Montan. Pag. Vatab. Iun. Eng. cap.22.30.

18 Cap. 24. 11. They have reſted at noonetide among the heapes, for, they that make oyle betweene their walles. Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng. cap.24.11.

19 Cap. 24.19. Let him paſſe from ſnow waters to exceeding heat : for, as the drie ground and heat conſume the ſnow waters, Mont. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng. cap.24.19.

20 Cap.26.5. The gyants groane under the waters : for, the dead things are formed under the waters. Montanus, Pagninus, Vatablus, Iunius. Engliſh. cap.26.5.

21 Cap.28.4. The torrent divideth from the pilgrim people : for, the flood breaketh out againſt the inhabitant : Montanus, Pagninus, Vatablus, Iun. But that they would picke out ſomwhat here for pilgrimage. cap.28.4.

22 Cap.28.18. High and eminent things ſhall not bee mentioned, &c. for, no mention ſhall bee made of Corall, or of the Gabiſh. Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Eng. cap.28.18.

23 Cap.28.19. Neither ſhall it bee compared to the cleaneſt dying : for, it ſhall not bee valued with the moſt pure gold. Montan. Pagnin Vatab. Iun. Eng. cap.28.19.

24 Cap.31.18. From mine infancie mercy hath growne up with mee, and from my mothers womb it came forth with mee : for, from my youth he hath growne up with me, as a father (that is, the fatherleſſe) and from my mothers wombe I have beene a guide unto her : that is, to the widow, Septuagint, Montanus, Pagnin. Iunius, Engliſh. cap.31.18.

25 Cap.32.21. I will not make God equall to man : for, I will not give titles to man. Montan. Pagnin. Vatablus, Iunius. cap.32.21.

26 Cap. 33.23. If there ſhall bee an Angell ſpeaking for him : for, a meſſenger : ſo alſo the Septuag. and Vatab. tranſlate a meſſenger, not an Angell. cap.33.23.

27 Cap.33.25. His fleſh is conſumed with puniſhments : for, his fleſh ſhall bee as freſh as of a childs: Montan. Pagnin. Iunius, Engliſh tranſlation. cap.33.25.

28 Cap.37.11. Corne deſireth clouds : for, hee maketh the clouds to labour to water, &c. Montan. Pag. Vatab. Iun. Engliſh. cap.37.11.

29 Cap.41.16. When hee ſhall bee taken away, the Angels ſhall feare : for, the mighty are afraid of his excellency, Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng. cap.41.16.

30 Cap.42.14. Hee called the name of one (of his daughters) Dies, the name of the ſecond Caſſia, the name of the third Cornuſtibij : for Iemimah, Keziah, Keren-happuch : Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng. cap.42.14.

If their vulgar tranſlation be ſo full of corruptions in this one booke of Iob, we may eaſily gueſſe how corrupt the whole is.

Let us ſee the judgement and practice of other Churches, concerning vulgar tranſlations of Scripture.

1. The Eaſt Church have the Scriptures read in the vulgar tongue, or ſuch a language, as is underſtood of all: the [a] Prieſts in Armenia read the Goſpell in the Armenian tongue, which every one underſtandeth: ſo likewiſe teſtifieth [b] Villamont, that the Armenians, though they can ſpeake divers languages, yet they uſe the Armenian tongue in divine ſervice, which is underſtood both of men and women : [c] Thevet writeth of the Muſcovites, that the Prieſts every Sunday read the Goſpell and the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles in a language that they underſtand.

4 Wee want not alſo here the teſtimony of ſome of the Latine Church, Eſpenceus, a learned Popiſh Biſhop : Iudæi filios ſuos quinquennos ad ſacra biblia adaptabant, &c. The Jewes did fit and apply their children at five yeeres of age to the ſacred Bible, and they did attribute the chiefe place in the inſtructing of children to the Scriptures, where they began, &c. Pudeat igitur Chriſtianos, &c. Let it bee a ſhame for Chriſtians to ſhake off this care, &c. So Agrippa, Ioſua legit omnia verba legis, &c. Ioſua read all the words of the Law, before a multitude of men, women and children : and Chryſoſtome would have the wives with their husbands to diſpute and conferre thereof. Adde hereunto the teſtimony of Lorinus the Jeſuite : *The more noble of Theſſalonica were women, and men not a few, Act. 17. 11. Comment. in Act. 17. 11.

An Appendix or part of the queſtion, concerning publike prayers and divine ſervice in the vulgar tongue.

The Papiſts.

4.Error.

IT was decreed in the Tridentine Councell, that the ſervice of the Church which they call the Maſſe, ſhould not be celebrated in the vulgar tongue, *ſect.22.cap.*8. And it is the common practice every where of the Romiſh Church to uſe the Latine tongue onely. We muſt be content (ſay they) with thoſe three tongues which God honoured upon the croſſe: namely, the Hebrew, Greek, and Latine. This libertie onely they grant, that their prieſt may expound ſome things, as hee readeth, and ſhew the meaning to the people,

*Argum.*1. Thus they argue: The majeſtie and gravitie of the ſacred buſineſſe, doe require alſo to be uttered in a ſage, ſanctified and grave language: Ergo not in the vulgar. *Bellar.lib.2.cap.*15.*argum.*7. Wee anſwer, the gravitie, reverence and holineſſe conſiſteth not in words, phraſes, and ſounds, though never ſo eloquent, but in the things themſelves. Neither is any tongue that is underſtood, before the Lord counted barbarous: for S. Paul ſaith, that hee is a barbarian, and ſpeaketh barbarouſly in the Church, that cannot bee underſtood, 1 Cor. 14.11. And Acts 2.11. the very ſtrangers and barbarians heard the Apoſtles utter in their languages the wonderfull things of God: they thought the tongue no diſgrace to thoſe holy myſteries they uttered.

Pope Nicholas 1. Epiſt.ad Michaelem Imperator. Conſtantinop. writeth thus of this matter, the Emperour in a certaine Epiſtle to the Pope had termed the Latine tongue barbarous: whom hee anſwereth thus: Omnis operis derogatio, redundat od opificis injuriam: ô furorem, qui nec linguæ novit parcere quam Deus fecit: in eo ipſo, quo verum Deum colit lingua Latina, quantum barbaram, vel Scythicam linguam antecedit, agnoſcitur: The diſgracing of the worke, tendeth to the injurie of the worker: What madneſſe is this, not to ſpare that tongue which God hath made? and herein, how farre the Latine tongue exceedeth the Barbarians and Scythians language, it is ſeene, becauſe it worſhippeth the true God. By theſe two reaſons, wherby hee proveth the Latine tongue not to be barbarous, wee likewiſe affirme neither the Engliſh tongue, nor any other vulgar language of Chriſtians to bee barbarous: both becauſe they are the gifts and workes of God, and becauſe the true God is by thoſe vulgar tongues acknowledged and worſhipped.

Bellarm. lib.2. de verb.c.16. reſ.ad arg.2.

*Argum.*2. *Levit.*16. *verſ.*17. The people is commanded to ſtand without, till the Prieſt went in and made attonement for them: they underſtood not the prieſt, for they heard him not: Ergo it is not neceſſarie the people ſhould underſtand the Miniſter. Wee anſwer: Firſt, that was a type of our Saviour Chriſt, who even ſo aſcended into heaven, as the high Prieſt did into the holy place: but types and figures prove nothing, ſaving wherin they are types, and whereunto they are deſtined, and appointed. Secondly, they underſtood not the Prieſt, becauſe they heard him not: but they cannot prove that the Prieſt uttered any thing in their hearing at any time, which they underſtood not.

Rhemiſt.annot.1.Cor.c.14. ſect,14.

*Argum.*3. Wee muſt onely uſe thoſe tongues in holy affaires, which were ſanctified in the croſſe: that is, Hebrew, Greek, and Latine. Wee anſwer: Thoſe tongues were not then uſed for any ſuch purpoſe, but that the death of Chriſt might by thoſe common and univerſall tongues bee the further ſpread abroad. And ſurely if they would prove that theſe tongues were hereby ſanctified, mee thinkes Pilate was no fit inſtrument of that ſanctification, by whoſe appointment the title was written: why then are not all tongues as well ſanctified, wherein the holy Ghoſt ſpake, as theſe which were written by Pilate? Thirdly, doth not the Apoſtle ſay, that every tongue ſhall confeſſe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Lord, &c. 2. *Philip.*11. Seeing God hath ſanctified every tongue and language for the confeſſion of the faith, how dare you goe againſt Gods ordinance? Laſtly, if thoſe three tongues onely were conſecrated upon the croſſe, why did Pope Nicholas the 1. when he had decreed that ſervice ſhould bee ſaid in the Latine tongue, yet diſpenſed with the Sclavonians and Polonians, to have it in their owne vulgar tongue?

The Proteſtants.

VVE doe affirme, that as it hath beene the commendable uſe of all ancient Churches, to have the ſervice in the vulgar tongue, that the people might underſtand, and bee better ſtirred up to devotion: ſo the ſame godly uſe ought for ever to remaine and be retained in the Church of God.

1.Cor.14.26.

*Argum.*1. This is moſt agreeable to S.Pauls doctrine, 1.*Cor.*14. *verſ.*26. who would have all things done to edifying: but by an unknowne tongue no man is edified: and hee ſaith, hee had rather ſpeake five words to bee underſtood, than ten thouſand otherwiſe. Some of the Papiſts ſay, that Saint Paul ſpeaketh of preaching eſpecially, and but obiter of praying: ſo B. Brookes, Fox pag.1879. But in the 14.verſ. hee ſpeaketh namely of prayer, and in the 16. of the peoples ſaying Amen, which was not given at ſermons, but in the end of prayers: this is but a weake anſwer. The Rhemiſts and the Jeſuite ſay, hee meaneth certaine extraordinarie Hymnes and giving of thankes, whereof S.Paul ſpeaketh *Epheſ.*5.19. Anſw. S.Paul ſpeaketh generally of all publike exerciſe in the Church, whether of prayer, preaching, ſinging, that it ſhould all bee done in a knowne tongue: for hee uſeth the generall termes of ſpeaking, τῶ λαλεῖν, and of the voyce, as *verſ.*11. If I underſtand not the power of the voyce (hee ſaith not of the ſong or preaching) I ſhall be to him that ſpeaketh, a barbarian : ſo he miſliketh not onely preaching, or ſinging, but any kinde of ſpeaking in the Church in a ſtrange tongue. And againe, S. Pauls reaſon is generall againſt all exerciſes in the Church ordinarie or extraordinarie in an unknowne tongue, becauſe he would have all things referred to the edification of the Church. Bellarmine againe thus anſwereth, that the reaſon is not alike, for theſe extraordinarie ſongs and prayers, which were uſed in thoſe times, and for the ordinarie ſervice : for the end of thoſe ſongs, was the inſtruction and conſolation of the people : but that is not the end of our ordinarie prayers, but the ſervice and worſhip of God: Bellarm. cap. 16. ad obiect. 1. Anſw. How is not the Jeſuite aſhamed thus to contradict the Apoſtle, who ſaith directly that the Scriptures are written for our comfort and conſolation, Rom. 15. 4. yet he ſaith the end of reading the Scriptures in the divine office is not for conſolation. Secondly, as though the worſhip or ſervice of God, can be ſevered from the inſtruction and conſolation of the people; or can God be rightly worſhipped by that, which giveth no inſtruction to the worſhipper? Thus would the Jeſuite bring in again, a Samaritane ſervice or worſhip: for they (as our Saviour ſaith) worſhip they know not what, and ſo doe the Papiſts: but we, ſaith hee, all true worſhippers, worſhip that we know, Iohn 4. 22. and conſequently we know that wee worſhip. This place of Saint Paul is too evident and plaine, than that it may bee ſo eaſily wreſted and depraved by their hereticall and deceitfull gloſſes.

Out of this place of the Apoſtle, which maketh ſo directly againſt prayer in a ſtrange tongue, theſe arguments may be gathered. Firſt, no language not underſtood ought to be uſed in the Church, becauſe it edifieth not, and they ſhould ſpeake in the aire, that is, vainly, to no purpoſe, verſ. 9. Ergo, ſervice in the Latine tongue is unprofitable where it is not underſtood. So ſaith S. Ambroſe: Si ad adificandam eccleſiam convenitis, ea debent dici quæ intelligunt audientes : If you come together to edifie the Church, thoſe things muſt bee ſpoken which may be underſtood. Secondly, he that ſpeaketh with a ſtrange tongue, muſt keepe ſilence if there be no interpreter, verſ. 28. Ergo, Latine ſervice muſt bee abandoned, unleſſe they will interpret it, which were a loſt labour, ſeeing they may have it as well in Engliſh. Againe, S. Ambroſe : Tacere debet in eccleſia, qui lingua loquitur, quam ſolus ſcit : He muſt hold his peace in the Church, which ſpeaketh with a tongue, which he onely underſtandeth. Thirdly, he that ſpeaketh in a ſtrange tongue is as a Barbarian, or an alien to the hearer that underſtandeth not, verſ. 11. but it were abſurd, that the Miniſter of the word or Sacraments ſhould be an alien to the people. Ergo. ſo S. Ambroſe : Non competit fidelibus audire linguas, quas non intelligunt, ſed infidelibus, qui non ſunt digni intelligere : It is not meet for beleevers to heare thoſe tongues, which they underſtand not, but for unbeleevers, who are not worthie to underſtand. Fourthly, no prayer or giving of thankes ought to be uſed in the Church, unto the which the people cannot ſay Amen, verſ. 16. but they cannot ſay Amen to Latine prayers, becauſe they know them not. Ergo. Fifthly, if it were not lawfull to uſe the miraculous gift of tongues, ſuch as this was in the Apoſtles time, without interpretation : much leſſe is the Latine to be uſed, which may be pronounced and read without a miracle, Argum. Proteſtant. diſput, Weſtmonaſt. pag. 21. 20. apud Fox.

In 14. 1. ad Cor.

Argum. 2. Who ſeeth not that prayers made with the underſtanding are more comfortable and fruitfull : the other nothing to profit at all, nor yet to be availeable before God? Howſoever our adverſaries ſay, that the heart and affection may pray, though the underſtanding pray not, yet Saint Paul ſaith, they ſpeake in the aire : their prayer is but winde, 1. Cor. 14. 9. and mine underſtanding (ſaith the Apoſtle) is without fruit, verſ. 14. Therefore not amiſſe did that godly Martyr M. Wiſehart compare the ridiculous geſtures of the Prieſt at Maſſe, being not underſtood of the people, to the playing of an Ape: Fox pag. 1156. col. 1. And one Iohn Riburne was unjuſtly troubled of Longland Biſhop of Lincolne anno 1530. for ſaying, if wee had our Pater noſter in Engliſh, one ſhould ſay it nine times, againſt once now: Fox pag. 898. col. 1. And was not that ghoſtly and Biſhoplike counſell thinke you of the Biſhop of Cavaillon to the Merindolians in France? that it was ſufficient to know their Pater noſter, and Creed in Latine : it was not neceſſarie to ſalvation to underſtand or expound the articles of faith : for there were many Biſhops, Curats, yea Doctors of Divinitie, whom it would trouble to expound the Creed or Pater noſter. Fox Martyrolog. pag. 866. col. 1.

1 Cor. 14. 9.

Fox pag. 1156. col. 1. of the laſt edition, anno 16.0.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that a prayer in an unknowne tongue may be profitable, if there bee the intention of the heart, for the prayer is made unto God, and it is ſufficient if he underſtand it : wee ſee alſo, that they which are abſent, who neither heare, nor underſtand our prayers, yet may be profited by them : neither is the inſtruction or edification of the people any end of prayer, but it is a part of ſervice that belongeth unto God : Bellarm. cap. 16. reſ. ad 2. & 4. object. Againe, ſaith he, the Apoſtle doth not ſay that his prayer is without fruit, but onely his minde or underſtanding, but his ſpirit and affection is profited : for he ſaith, thou verily giveſt thanks well : and the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch a tongue as none doe underſtand in the Church; but the Latine, though the common people underſtand it not, yet many that know the language doe.

Anſw. The heart cannot bee neere unto God without faith, whatſoever intention it hath; but faith is joyned with knowledge : he then that praieth, he knoweth not what, can have no faith or hope of thoſe things which hee knoweth not. And if it were ſufficient, that God underſtood our praier, then need not the praier to be uttered by the voice, becauſe God knoweth the thoughts of the heart. Secondly, they which are abſent underſtand not the praiers made for them, becauſe they know them not: and they are prayed for, they pray not: but the people is preſent, within hearing of the voyce, and they all offer up one prayer, therefore they ought to underſtand it. Thirdly, it is an abſurd anſwer, that publike reading is not for the peoples inſtruction: it hath no uſe nor end, in reſpect of God, who need not to receive any information, or to have his memorie renued by reading of ſtories: wherfore it is either in vaine, or elſe the end thereof is the peoples inſtruction. And if prayer bee a part of Gods worſhip, which muſt proceed from the love of God, and God is to be loved with all our heart, our ſoule and minde, Matth. 22.37. then our prayers muſt not bee made with a bare intention onely, but with knowledge and underſtanding: for God requireth both the heart, the minde and the ſoule. Further, where the Apoſtle ſaith, My ſpirit prayeth, but my minde is without fruit, hee doth not ſo ſpeake, as though the ſpirit (that is, the affection) could pray without the underſtanding: but by the ſpirit is underſtood the ſpirituall gift of ſpeaking with tongues, as Hierome, Sedulius, Primaſius expound this place, as they are cited by Eſpenſæus: de Chriſt. Mediator. pag. 234. g. So that the meaning is this, he for his owne part, that hath the gift of tongues, prayeth or giveth thanks well, knowing and underſtanding what he prayeth; but the underſtanding of other, that heare, is not edified. Fifthly, therefore the Apoſtle miſliking that any ſhould ſo pray, not being underſtood of others, I will pray with the ſpirit, and I will pray with the underſtanding alſo, verſ. 15. And that the affection cannot be good in prayer without the underſtanding, and that ſuch prayer is without fruit, Saint Ambroſe expounding this place, ſaith: Quemfructum habere poteſt, qui ignorat quæ loquatur? What fruit can he have, who knoweth not what hee ſpeaketh? Sixthly, neither were theſe ſtrange tongues underſtood of none in the Church, for there was alſo the gift of interpretation, as well as the gift of tongues, verſ. 27. and yet many times your Latine ſervice is underſtood of none in the Church, no not of the Prieſt that ſaith it: as may appeare by that Prieſt that ſpake falſe Latine, when he baptized, ſaying: In nomine patria, filia, & ſpiritu ſancta: Which baptiſme was called into queſtion: and for better reſolution, they were faine to poſt up to Rome to Pope Zacharie, who after much conſultation determined that notwithſtanding the falſe Latine, the baptiſme was good: Decret. par. 3. diſtinct. 4. cap. 86. And that many Popiſh Prieſts are no better Clerkes now adaies, than they were in thoſe times; let us heare what Eraſmus ſaith: Quanquam ſacerdotum vulgus hodie magni faciat ſua verba, quæ nec ipſi qui ſonant intelligunt: Though now adayes the moſt ſort of Prieſts doe ſo magnifie their Latine words, which they underſtand not, that ſpeake them: Præfat. in Hieron. epiſt. Paulino. tom. 4.

Argum. 3. In the time of the Law, all things pertaining to their publike prayer, benedictions, thankſgivings, ſacrifices, were celebrated in their vulgar tongue, 2 Chron. chap. 29. Ezechias commanded the Levites to praiſe God with the Pſalmes of David and Aſaph, which no doubt were in the Hebrew tongue: If they did ſo in the ſhadowes of the Law, much more ought we now, who, as our Saviour ſaith, ought to pray, ſpiritu & veritate, in ſpirit and truth. Argum. Proteſtant. diſput. Weſtmonaſt.

We will conclude with Auguſtine: Quare dicta ſunt, niſi ut ſciantur? quare ſonuerunt, niſi ut audiantur? quare audita ſunt, niſi ut intelligantur? Tract. in Iohan. 21. Why are things ſpoken in the Church (ſaith he) but to be knowne? why are they pronounced, but to be heard? why are they heard, but to be underſtood? Ergo, Leſſons, and Scriptures, and publike prayers muſt bee uſed in a knowne tongue, and eaſie to be underſtood.

It was thus alſo decreed not long ſince in a Generall Councell: Concil. Lateranenſ. ſub Innocent. 3. cap. 9. Quoniam in pleriſq; partibus intra eandem civitatem permixti ſunt populi diverſarum linguarum, diſtricte præcipimus, ut pontifices hujuſmodi civitatum, provideant viros idoneos, qui ſecundum diverſitates rituum & linguarum divina officia illis celebrent, & eccleſiaſtica ſacramenta miniſtrent: Becauſe in many places, in one and the ſame Citie there be mixed together people of divers languages, we doe ſtraightly charge the Biſhops of thoſe Cities to provide able men, to celebrate divine ſervice, and miniſter the Sacraments of the Church unto them, according to the diverſitie of their rites and languages, &c. What could be ſaid plainer, for the celebrating of divine ſervice in the vulg a rtongue? Bellarmine thus would anſwer this authoritie, that Innocentius decree is to bee underſtood onely of the Greeke and Latine tongues, and of no other; and that he would have the ſervice of the Church celebrated in theſe two tongues and no other. Anſw. 1. This appeareth to bee a weake anſwer, for the decree maketh mention of people, diverſarum linguarum, of divers languages; and therefore he would have the divine office celebrated according to the diverſitie of their tongues. But divers tongues imply not a dualitie onely of two, but a pluralitie of many. 2. This Canon provideth, that ſervice ſhall bee ſaid in divers languages, becauſe of the diverſitie of the people: but what need this proviſion, if that the underſtanding of the people ſhould not be reſpected? for otherwiſe one language might ſerve divers people. 3. A little before, if the Jeſuite be remembred, hee ſaid, that many hundred yeeres agoe, long before Innocentius time, neither the Greeke in Grecia, nor the Latine in Italy were the vulgar tongues, nor commonly underſtood, chap. 15. and yet now he granteth, that Innocentius would have Greeke and Latine Service, becauſe of the diverſitie of the people; that is, to their underſtanding: ſo Bellarmine neither agreeth with himſelfe, nor with their owne Canons.

Laſtly, in defence of this truth, that prayers ought to be uſed in the vulgar tongue, Iohn Ardelie, and Iohn Simſon gave their lives. Fox pag. 1438. col. 1. and Iohn Hallingdale, pag. 1837. col. 2. See the confeſſion alſo of Maſter Rogers before Wincheſter, pag. 1350. col, 1. and of Maſter Bradford, pag. 1469.

1469. col. 1. holy Martyrs : let the Papiſts ſhew the like conſtancie in their Popiſh profeſſors if they can.

Wee will adjoyne here the teſtimonie of other Churches. 1. The Eaſt Churches doe celebrate divine ſervice in a tongue which is underſtood of all. The Armenians in their divine Service, Maſſes, Prayers and Ceremonies uſe the Armenian tongue, which is underſtood both of men and women throughout all their Countrey. The Grecians doe celebrate the Liturgie in their owne language, to the end the common people may be able to underſtand them : what the uſe of the Muſcovites is herein, is ſhewed in the next queſtion before.

2 Of the Ethiopicke Church Thevet thus reporteth : I have ſeene many Biſhops, and have heard their Maſſes, which they ſay in the Abyſſine language, which is very neere the Arabike, which is the tongue of the Countrey.

Coſmoſgr. lib. 2.c.14.

3 The reformed Churches doe conſent herein : Confeſſion of Helvetia : Let all ſtrange tongues keepe ſilence in the holy aſſemblies, and let all things be uttered in the vulgar tongue, which is underſtood of all men in the company. Confeſſion of Wittemberg. c.27. This ſinging, becauſe it was uſed in a tongue commonly knowne, had a godly uſe : and afterward in the ſame Chapter : They doe therefore godly, who doe ſo appoint the diſpenſation of the Sacraments, ſinging of Pſalmes, reading of holy Scriptures, that the Church may underſtand that which is ſaid and read, &c. Confeſſion of Sweveland, chap. 14. No man ſhould ſpeake with tongues in the congregation without an interpreter. The ſame is the confeſſion of our Engliſh Church. We make our prayers in that tongue, which all our people, as meet is, may underſtand, &c. even as all the holy fathers and Catholike Biſhops, both in the old and new Teſtament, did uſe to pray themſelves, and taught the people to pray too &c.

The fourth Queſtion : of the authority of the Scriptures.

The Papiſts.

THe Papiſts of former times doubted not to ſay, that the Scripture is not authenticall without the authority of the Church ; ſo Echius ſaith, ſo Pigghius, that the authority of the Scripture dependeth of the authority of the Church neceſſarily. Hermannus a Papiſt moſt impudently affirmeth, that the Scripture ſhould be of no more credit than Æſops fables, without the approbation of the Church : a foule blaſphemie. But our Papiſts of latter time, being aſhamed of their fore-fathers ignorance, they ſay that the Scriptures in themſelves are perfect, ſufficient, authenticall, but that to us it appeareth not ſo ; neither are we bound to take them for Scripture without the authority of the Church : ſo Canus, Bellarmine, Stapleton. So that (ſay they) in reſpect of us the Church hath abſolute authoritie to determine, which is Scripture, which not. Ex Whittacher. quaſt. 3. de Script. cap. 1.

5 Error. Echius enchirid. loc. de authorit. eccleſ. Pigghius lib. 1. de Hierarch. eccleſ. cap. 2. Can. loc. com. lib. 2. cap. 8. Stap. lib. 9. doc. princip. cap. 1.

Argum. 1. There is no more certaine authoritie, than of the Church : Ergo the Church muſt determine of Scripture, ſic Stapleton. We anſwer : Firſt, the majeſtie of the Scriptures themſelves is more certaine, and the inward teſtimony of the ſpirit, without the which wee cannot be perſwaded of the truth and authority of the Scripture. Secondly, if they meane by the Church, the Synagogue of Rome, it hath nothing to doe to judge of Scripture, being the ſeat of Antichriſt : neither is the authority of that Church to be credited, but rather ſuſpected and miſtruſted.

Argum. 2. There are certaine writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles, not Canonicall ; and other writings of ſome that were no Prophets, made Canonicall : Ergo the Church hath authoritie to judge of Scripture, ſic Stapleton. For the firſt, where he objecteth that there are many writings of the Prophets, as of Salomon, Nathan, Abija, Ieedo, 2 Chron. 9.29. that are loſt, and if they were extant, ſhould not be received : We anſwer : Firſt, it is not to be doubted of, but ſome part of the Canonicall Scripture is loſt. Secondly, how proveth hee that if they were extant, they were not to bee acknowledged for Scripture ?

2. Chron. 9.29.

Stapleton further objecteth, that Saint Pauls Epiſtle written to the Laodiceans, whereof mention is made, Coloſ. 4.16. was never received into the Canon. We anſwer, there is no ſuch Epiſtle mentioned in that place ſent to the Laodiceans, but from Laodicea, as it is in the Originall, which was not like to have beene of the Apoſtles writing to them, who at that time had not ſeene the Laodiceans, Coloſ. 2.1. but an Epiſtle rather written by them to the Apoſtle ; which S. Paul would have the Coloſſians read, becauſe it might containe ſomewhat, which did concerne them : that Epiſtle therefore, that carrieth S. Pauls name to the Laodiceans, is but a forged, and baſtard writing, and therefore worthily rejected out of the canon. This was the judgement alſo of a generall Councell. Nicen.2. action.6. tom.5. Inter epiſtolas divini Apoſtoli, quadam fertur ad Laodicenſes, quam patres noſtri tanquam alienam reprobarunt : Amongſt the Epiſtles of the divine Apoſtle there is one counted, bearing the name to the Laodiceans, which our fathers have rejected as a baſtard and forraine writing. Their ſentence is that this Epiſtle was fained, and never written by S. Paul.

To the ſecond, that bookes not made by Prophets are judged canonicall, as of Toby, Iudith : Wee anſwer, that theſe bookes ought not to be canonicall, neither that ever they were ſo taken, till of late it was decreed by Councels of no great antiquitie : for in the Laodicene Councell and other ancient Councels, they were deemed not to be canonicall, as hath been ſhewed before, Error 1.

Argum. 3. Certaine bookes of the new Teſtament before doubted of, as the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, the Apocalypſe, the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter, the ſecond of Iohn, are received into authority by the Church : and other bookes, as the Goſpell of Thomas, Matthias, Andrew, Peter, were rejected by the authority of the Church. We anſwer : Firſt, we deny not but that the Church is to diſcerne betweene the true Scriptures and forged bookes : but this ſhe doth not of her owne authoritie, but following the direction of Gods ſpirit ſpeaking in thoſe writings : for the Church looking into the ſacred and divine matter of the Apoſtles writings, was moved to acknowledge them for the word of God, though of ſome they were doubted of : and finding the other to be fabulous bookes, did by the direction of the ſame ſpirit reject them. Secondly, Auguſtine and Hierome thinke that the canon of Scripture might be confirmed in the Apoſtles time, Iohn being the ſurviver of them all, who both acknowledged the true writings of the Apoſtles, and condemned the contrary. If it be ſo (the ſpirit of God in the Apoſtles having determined this queſtion already concerning the canonicall Scripture) the Church hath no authority to alter or change that decree. Concerning this matter, S. Auguſtine writeth thus unto S. Hierome, epiſt. 19. Veritas divinarum ſcripturarum, &c. non à quibuſlibet, ſed ab ipſis Apoſtolis ; ac per hoc in canonicum authoritatis culmen recepta, ex omni parte verax & indubitata perſiſtit : The truth of the divine Scriptures was received into the canon of authoritie by none other but the Apoſtles themſelves, and therefore is undoubtedly true. The Apoſtles then by the ſpirit of God have ſet downe the canon of the Scriptures, which the Church is bound to receive, and beleeve : it hath no authority to make the canon of the Scriptures.

Ob. Argum. 4. The Church is more ancient than Scripture, and was before it. Ergo, it is of more authoritie than Scripture : Argum. Eckij Enchirid. & Hoſ. lib. 3. de authoritate ſcriptura.

Sol. Anſw. 1. We grant, that the Scriptures, that is the word written, have not beene from the beginning : yet though there were a Church before the Scriptures, that is the word written, the word of God notwithſtanding was before the Church, which is the ſame now written, that was before unwritten. 2. Neither is the argument good, for alwaies that, which is more ancient, is not of greateſt authoritie : for Iohn Baptiſt, in reſpect of his office came before Chriſt, yet was not his authoritie greater.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe not deſpiſe the ſentence of the Church, as our adverſaries doe falſly charge us : nay wee doe reverence the judgement of the Church of God, and heare it with all obedience, to whom we confeſſe it belongeth. 1. As a faithfull keeper or treaſurer, carefully to preſerve and keepe the holie Scriptures from being violated or corrupted by heretikes or other enemies of Scripture. 2. According to her ſpirituall cunning, to diſcerne the Scripture from other forged and baſtard writings, as the Goldſmith doth the gold from other adulterate metall. 3. To propound and preach, and hold out the light of Gods truth to the people. 4. To interpret and expound Scripture according to the analogie of faith : Whitac. quaeſt.3. cap.2. de ſcriptur. We confeſſe alſo as much, as hath beene in former times decreed by the Papiſts themſelves : Penes eccleſiam eſt diſcernendi authoritas ſcripturas veras ab adulterinis : ſic etiam poteſtatem habet interpretandi, atque adeo ex eiſdem ſcripturis eliciendi & explanandi dogmata : The Church hath power to diſcerne true Scripture from falſe, alſo to interpret the Scripture, and out of the ſame to derive and explane precepts of religion, that is to preach, &c. But the Church ought not to ſet the Lords ſtamp upon falſe coyne, as the Papiſts doe in making Apocryphall bookes canonicall. Neither doe we only beleeve the Scripture, becauſe of the Churches teſtimonie, nor chiefly, but becauſe the ſpirit of God doth ſo teach us, and the Scriptures themſelves doe teſtifie for themſelves : ſo that every man is bound to acknowledge the Scripture, though there were no publike approbation of the Church : Fulk 2. Galat. 6. Whitacher. quaeſt.3. cap. 1. de Scripturis. We doe reaſon thus.

Inter relig. Cæſarea cap. 11. anno 1548.

Argum. 1. The Jeſuite doth reaſon ſtrongly for us : he bringeth five arguments to prove the Scripture to be the word of God : veritas vaticiniorum, the conſtant and perpetuall truth of the Prophecies : incredibilis ſcriptorum conſpiratio, the wonderfull harmonie and conſent of holie writers of the Scripture : teſtis eſt Deus ipſe, the ſpirit of God is a principall witneſſe unto us : teſtis eſt ipſa Scriptura, the Scripture it ſelfe beareth witneſſe, as 2. Tim.3. all Scripture is given by inſpiration : teſtis eſt divinorum numerus infinitus miraculorum : laſtly, the many and great miracles wrought by the Prophets and Apoſtles doe teſtifie for the truth thereof. See this place excepted againſt and anſwered, Retect.p.58. He maketh no mention here of the teſtimony of the Church, but ſaith the ſame that we hold, that the ſpirit of God inwardly working in our hearts by the Scriptures themſelves, which wee finde to be moſt perfect,conſonant,true,of ſingular majeſty,doth teach us which is the Word of God: *Bellarm.de Verbo Dei,lib.*1.c.2.

Thoſe arguments or inducements,which do ariſe of the conſideration of the Scriptures themſelves (as Bellarmine here ſetteth downe ſome,and other may be added unto them) are more forcible to perſwade us,that it is the Word of God,than the bare teſtimony of the Church:First, doctrinæ majeſtas,the ſingular majeſty of the Scriptures, in the books of the Prophets and Apoſtles,and of the heavenly doctrine therein contained: wherein none of the writings of the Philoſophers or orators,are to be compared unto them. Secondly, beſide the majeſty of the matter, the pureneſſe of ſtile, gravity and divineneſſe of ſpeech, doth commend the excellency of Scripture. Thirdly, the antiquity of theſe holy writings, ſheweth them to be divine: for the bookes of Moſes are found to be more ancient, than all the writings in the world. Fourthly, the propheticall predictions and prophecies, which afterward were accompliſhed, yea the very names of certaine men were ſet down many yeeres before they were borne, as Ioſias, 1 King. 13.2. Cyrus, Eſay 44.28. Fifthly, the wonderfull and ſtrange miracles, which were wrought by the Prophets and Apoſtles. Sixthly, the teſtimonies alſo of Martyrs, which gave their lives in defence of the holy doctrine ſet foorth in Scripture, doe evidently declare, that they are divine writings. Seventhly, the enemies of the Scriptures, which have attempted all meanes to extinguiſh them,and could not prevaile,do ſet foorth the majeſty,and authority thereof. Eightly the writers alſo of the Scriptures, the Prophets and Apoſtles, doe not a little move us: who were but ſimple and plaine men, as ſhepheards, heardmen, fiſhermen, before they were called and ſet a part of God for this work: whereby it is apparant,that God who inſpired them with ſo great grace, was the author of the Scriptures: *Hæc Calvin.lib.inſtitut.*1.c.8. Theſe aforeſaid motives do eaſily convince, that the Scriptures are no humane, but divine writings: and they are more able to move us, than the bare teſtimony of the Church: yet perſwade us they cannot,which is the only worke of the ſpirit,but only prepare our hearts,and ſtirre us up: Ergo,much leſſe is the authority of the Church able to doe it.

Argum.2. The Scripture giveth authority to the Church: Ergo,the Church giveth not authority to the Scripture: the firſt we proove by our adverſaries own confeſſion: for being asked,how they know that the Church erreth not,they alleage ſuch places of Scripture, as Matth. 28.20. I am with you to the end of the world,and the like: how then doth the Church give authoritie to Scripture,ſeeing it taketh her warrant and authoritie from thence; The Jeſuite himſelfe ſaith, that nihil eſt certius vel notius ſcripturis,nothing is more certaine or notoriouſly knowne than Scripture. And againe, ſacra Scriptura eſt regula credendi certiſſima, the holy Scripture is the moſt certaine rule of faith: Bellarm. de verbo. 1. 2. If the authority of Scripture then be moſt certaine,what reaſon is it, that they ſhould depend upon the judgement of the Church, which is nothing ſo certaine? The leſſe certaine ought rather (and ſo doth indeed) depend of the more certaine; the Church upon the Scripture, not contrariwiſe; for the Scriptures are the foundation of the Church,Epheſ 2.20.

Epheſ.2.20.

Argum.3. To beleeve the Scripture is a worke of faith: the Church cannot infuſe faith into us, but the Spirit of God: Ergo,the Spirit of God, not the Church teacheth us to beleeve Scripture. Argum.Whitach.18.

Againe,if the Scripture depend upon the approbation of the Church,then the promiſes of ſalvation and eternall life contained in the Scriptures doe ſo likewiſe: but it is abſurd to thinke that the promiſes of God doe ſtand upon the allowance of men: Ergo,neither the Scriptures, Argum.Calvini,lib. 1.inſtitut.c.7.

Argum.4. The Scripture is the chiefe judge,and ought ſo to be in all controverſies: we may appeale from the Church to the Scripture,not from the Scripture to the Church: the Church is ſubject to the Scriptures, the rule of faith is in the Scriptures,not in the Church: for the company of the faithfull, which is the Church, are ruled by faith: they doe not overrule faith: neither are a rule thereof: the Church is a point of beleefe,as in the Creed,not a rule or meaſure thereof: Ergo,the Church is not the chiefe judge of Scripture,but it ſelfe to be judged by Scripture.

Argum.5. We have evident places of Scripture, Iohn 5.34. ſaith Chriſt,I receive no witneſſe of men: but the Scripture is the voice of Chriſt,and of the ſame authority. Ergo,verſ.34. I have a greater teſtimony than of Iohn,the Scriptures doe teſtifie of me, verſ.39. The teſtimony of the Scriptures is greater than the record of Iohn: Ergo,than of the Church. 1 Iohn 5.6. The ſpirit beareth witneſſe, that the ſpirit,that is,the doctrine of the ſpirit,is the truth. And verſ.9. If we receive the witneſſe of man,the witneſſe of God is greater: Ergo, not the judgement of the Church, but the witneſſe of the ſpirit doth certifie and aſſure us of the truth and authority of Scripture.

1 Iohn 5.6.

I will adde one ſaying out of Auguſtine: *Mihi certum eſt, nuſquam a Chriſti authoritate diſcedere non enim reperio valentiorem. Contra Academ.lib.*3.c.20. I am reſolved for no cauſe to leave the authority of Chriſt (ſpeaking in the Scriptures) for I find none more forcible: Ergo,the authority of Scripture is above the Church,which is denied by the Rhemiſts, *annot.*2.Gal.ſect.2. I will here urge them with their owne authority: Thomas Aquinas hath this diſtinction: that God worketh two waies; firſt by mediate cauſes,as the Prophet ſaith, Pſ.138. Thou haſt made me,that is,by the work of nature: ſecondly,he worketh ſome things immediatly,as miracles: ſo he ſaith, Deum hominis intellectum per alias literas mediate inſtruere, per ſacras immediate: God inſtructeth man mediate by other writings, but immediatly by the Scriptures: as miracles then are Gods works immediatly,ſo are the Scriptures his words.

Excitation. Eſpenſæi in 2 Tim.pa.20.g.

Then as miracles of themſelves are knowne to be Gods works, as the Magicians in Ægypt could ſay, digitus Dei eſt, it is the finger of God; ſo are Scriptures knowne to be Gods writings: for if we ſhould need the teſtimony of men to perſwade us of the word, then God thereby doth not immediatly inſtruct us, as Thomas Aquinas here ſaith. So then, as the Lawes of Emperours, though they were, ſine die & conſule, without the date of the day and the conſul, were notwitſtanding authentike, becauſe they were imperiall, *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*4.*leg.*1.Juſtinian. Much more the holy Scriptures ought of themſelves to beare credit, becauſe they are divine.

Laſtly, let us ſee the confeſſion of the holy Martyrs, whoſe judgement in matters of faith, though our adverſaries regard it not, yet is of us much to be regarded, ſeeing they doubted not to ſpend their lives in defence of their faith.

Maſter Philpot thus anſwereth to Morgans argument, who urged that the Church was before Scripture, and therefore above Scripture: that the Word of God conſiſted not only in letters and externall writing, but it was the word, wherewith the hearts of the Patriarches, Prophets and Apoſtles were inſpired, even before it was written, as the ſalutation of the Angel was the Scripture of Chriſt, and word of God, even before it was written: *ſic Philpot.p.*1288.col.2.diſput.con.vocat.

Maſter Bradford ſaith, that the Church is a meane more ſpeedily to bring us to know the Scriptures: as was the woman of Samaria a meane to bring the Samaritanes to know Chriſt: but as they, when they had heard Chriſt, beleeved not ſo much becauſe of her report, as for that they heard him themſelves ſpeake: ſo after that Scriptures are diſcerned, and ſhewed to us by the Church, we beleeve them to be the Word of God, not becauſe the Church ſaith ſo, but for that indeed we find them to be ſo, as true ſheep acknowledging the woyce of our ſhepheard Chriſt Jeſus ſpeaking therein, *hæc ille.pag.*1467.col.1.

Maſter Glover Martyr, to this argument propounded, the Church ſheweth which is the Word of God, Ergo, it is above the word, anſwereth thus: this is no good reaſon, for by the ſame argument John Baptiſt ſhall be above Chriſt, becauſe hee ſhewed Chriſt: and he that telleth one which is the King, ſhould be above the King.*p.*1555.col.1.

Robert Drakes Martyr, being asked how he knew the Scriptures to be the Word of God, anſwered: by the holy doctrine which it containeth, teaching ſalvation by Chriſt, and giving precepts of holines, to withdraw us from a wicked life. William Tims anſwered, that the old Teſtament doth give witneſſe to the new, and one of them doth teſtifie for another: whereby it appeareth, they are the very Word of God. *Fox,p.*1722.col.1. All thoſe holy Martyrs died in this confeſſion of their faith: therefore bleſſed be God that hath not left his truth without ſuch excellent witneſſes, in thoſe crooked and evill daies.

For forraine teſtimonies. 1. Firſt, the Eaſt Church doth aſcribe the ſupreame authority to the Scriptures. 1. The King of Muſcovia thus ſaid, if the Goſpell had not beene written, how could the Word of God have beene underſtood, and if the Apoſtles had not reduced into writing, their delegation and commiſſion, how had it beene knowne to the world, that they were ſent to men? 2. Damianus a Goes writeth of the Abyſſines in Africa, that they have certaine writings beſide the Scriptures, but they held the Scriptures ſufficient without them, and deny not the name of true Chriſtians to thoſe which have not thoſe bookes, &c. Thus they make the Scripture abſolute in it ſelfe, without the decrees and ordinances of men.

The fifth queſtion concerning the perſpicuity and plaineneſſe of the Scripture.

The Papiſts.

6.Error.

OUr adverſaries do hold, that the Scriptures are moſt hard, difficult, and obſcure. Bellarmine ſaith, Neceſſario fatendum eſt, Scripturas eſſe obſcuriſſimas, It muſt needes be graunted that the Scriptures are moſt obſcure, de verbo Dei, lib.3.c.1. They doe not only affirme that ſome things are obſcure in the Scriptures: but that they are all hard, and doubtfull, and uncertaine, and compare them therefore to a leaden rule, which may be turned every way, Petrus a Soto. And to a noſe of wax, Lindanus a Papiſt, ex Tilmanno de verbo Dei, error.5. Our Rhemiſts ſay, it is all one to affirme ſome things to bee hard in a writer, and the writer to be hard: ſo they conclude, that the Scriptures are both in reſpect of the matter and manner, very hard, and therefore dangerous for the ignorant to reade them. Rhemenſ. annot. in 2 Pet.3.verſ.16.

2 Pet.3.16.

Argum.1. They object that place, 2 Pet.3.16. where the Apoſtle ſaith, ſpeaking of S. Pauls Epiſtles, that many things are hard. Ergo, the Epiſtles of S. Paul are hard, and ſo the Scriptures: this is Bellarm. argument. We anſwer. Firſt, he ſaith not, that Pauls Epiſtles are hard, but many things, which hee entreateth of. Secondly, they are hard not to all, but the unſtable and unlerned do pervert them. Thirdly, we deny not, but that ſome places in the Scripture are obſcure, and have need of interpretation: but it followeth not, that therefore the whole Scripture is obſcure: and becauſe of ſome hard places, that the people ſhould be forbidden the reading of all.

Argum.2. The Scriptures are obſcure both in reſpect of the matter and manner: firſt, the matter is high and myſticall: as of the Trinity, of the incarnation of the word, of the nature of Angels, and ſuch like. We anſwer, theſe myſteries may be conſidered three divers waies. 1. In their own nature: ſo are they hard indeed, for by humane reaſon, we cannot attaine to the depth of them. 2. In reſpect of their handling in the Scripture: ſo are they not obſcure, for all theſe things are plainly declared in the word, as the nature of ſuch deepe myſteries will afford. 3. In reſpect of us: ſo muſt they needes be obſcure, if men be not contented with the knowledge in the word, but curiouſly ſearch further. Luther therfore doth aptly diſtinguiſh of theſe things, he ſaith that, res Dei, the things of God are obſcure, the very depth of his myſteries cannot be comprehended of us: but, res Scripturæ, theſe things, as they are opened in Scripture, are plaine, if we will content our ſelves with that knowledge.

Secondly, ſaith Bellarmine, the manner of handling is hard and obſcure: there are many tropes, metaphors, allegories, Hebraiſmes, which cannot eaſily be underſtood. We anſwer. Firſt, many of theſe are rather ornaments of the Scripture, as tropes, metaphors, than impediments to the reader. Secondly, though the phraſe of Scripture ſeeme hard at the firſt, yet by further travell in the Scriptures it may become eaſie and plaine: for all things are not underſtood at the firſt. Thirdly, we deny not but that ſome places are obſcure, and had need to be opened.

Argum.3. If the Scriptures be not hard, what need ſo many Commentaries and expoſitions? Rhemiſt. 2 Pet.3.16.& Bellarm. lib.3.de verb. Dei.c.1. We anſwer. Firſt, ſo many Commentaries are not requiſite, ſome may be ſpared. Secondly, expoſitions are needfull for the underſtanding of darke places; but many things are plaine enough without expoſitions, and may be underſtood of the ſimple. Thirdly, expoſitions alſo of the plaineſt places are needfull, not ſo much for the explication of the meaning, as application for manners.

Gen.36.2.

Argum.4. Becauſe that place, Gen.4.23. How Lamech ſaith, I would ſlay a man in my wound, &c. is hard: as likewiſe, that place, Geneſ.11.12. where Cainan is put in by the Septuagint, whom Luke followeth, which name is not in the originall: and Gen.36.2. Eſaus wives are ſet forth by other names, then Gen. 28. hereupon, by reaſon of the difficulty of theſe places, they inferre the Scriptures to be hard: Doway tranſlators, in their ſeverall annotations upon theſe places.

Contra.1. It followeth not, becauſe ſome places in the Scriptures are hard to be underſtood, therfore, all the Scriptures are obſcure: we deny not, but that ſome places are profound, and of deep ſenſe, yet other, and they the moſt, which concerne faith and manners, are plaine and eaſie to be underſtood, and fit for the capacity of the meaneſt, that will apply his heart.

2. The places given in inſtance, are not of ſuch inextricable difficulty, as that the Reader ſhould be diſcouraged from the reading of ſuch places: in the firſt place Lamech vaunteth himſelfe upon hope of Caines impunity, that he will not take the leaſt wrong at any mans hand, but ſlay and kill in his wrath, and yet hope to goe unpuniſhed: for the ſecond, it is moſt like, that S. Luke in a matter of no greater weight, would not diſſent from the Septuagint, being a tranſlation ſo generally received; leſt he might have thereby offended, and brought a prejudice to the whole ſtory of the Goſpell: touching the third, it is not unuſuall for the ſame perſons to be known by divers names, and ſo is it like Eſaus wives were called. See Iunius upon that place.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe not hold that the Scripture is every where ſo plaine and evident, that it need no interpretation, as our adverſaries doe ſlander us, and therefore here they doe fight with their own ſhadow.Bellarm.lib.3.de verb.c.1. We confeſſe, that the Lord in the Scriptures hath tempered hard things and eaſie together, that we might be exerciſed in the Scriptures, and might knock and labour by prayer and ſtudy, for the opening of the ſenſe: and that there might be order kept in the Church, ſome to be hearers, ſome teachers and expounders, by whoſe diligent ſearch and travell, the harder places may be opened to the people. But this we affirme againſt our adverſaries: firſt, that all points of faith neceſſary to ſalvation, are plainely ſet forth in the Scriptures. Secondly, that the Scriptures may with great profit be read of the ſimple and unlearned, notwithſtanding the hardneſſe of ſome places, which in time alſo (uſing the meanes) they come to the underſtanding of, Ex Fulk annot.2.Pet.3.16.Whitach. quaſt.4.c.1.

Deut.30.11. Argum. 1. Firſt, that which we maintaine is evident out of the Scripture, Deut.30.11. The commandement, which I command thee, is not hid from thee, nor farre off. And as it followeth, Thou needeſt not aſcend to the Heavens, or goe beyond the ſea: the word is neere unto thee, even in thy mouth and heart, to doe it, argum.Brentii. Ergo, the Scriptures are plaine. The Jeſuite anſwereth, that it is meant only of the decalogue and the ten commandements, that they are eaſie, not of the whole Scripture. As though if the Commandements be eaſie, the reſt of the Scriptures be not likewiſe, as the Prophets and hiſtoricall bookes, being but commentaries and expoſitions of the decalogue. Saint Paul, Rom. 10.6. underſtandeth this place of the whole doctrine of faith, who better knew the meaning of Moſes than the Jeſuite. Againe, the Prophet David ſaith, Thy word is a lanterne to my feet, and a light to my pathes: which is not to be underſtood onely of the Commandements and Precepts in Scripture, but of the whole word of God, as Auguſtine expoundeth it: Quod ait lucerna pedibus verbum tuum, verbum eſt, quod Scripturis omnibus ſanctis continetur: where he ſaith, thy word is a lanterne to my feet, he underſtandeth the Word of God, which is contained in all the holy Scriptures, Auguſtin. concion. 23. *in Pſal.*118.

Pſal 119.105. 2 Pet.1.19. Argum. 2. The Prophet David ſaith. *Pſal.*119.105. Thy word is a lanterne unto my feet, and a light unto my path: and S.Peter compareth the word of the prophets to a light that ſhineth in a darke place, 2 *Pet.*1.19. The Scriptures then are eaſie, cleare and plaine: Bellarmine telleth us that the Scriptures are called a light, non quia facile intelligantur, &c. Not becauſe they are eaſily underſtood, but being once underſtood, then they do lighten and illuminate the mind, and ſhew the way unto Chriſt. *c.2.reſp. ad argum.2.&4.Contra.*1. Yes the Scripture is both waies a light, both for inſtruction and underſtanding, and then for ſpirituall direction: as David ſheweth, both it is a lanterne to the feet for inſtruction, and a light to the path for direction. 2. Like as a lanterne is both eaſie to be ſeene, and being ſeene directeth; ſo is the Scripture eaſie to be underſtood, and being underſtood it guideth: for it giveth Pſal.19.7. wiſedome to the ſimple, *Pſal.*19.7. But if it were ſo hard and obſcure, it ſhould be without the reach and compaſſe of the ſimple.

2 Cor.4.3. Argum. 3. 2 Cor. 4.3. If our Goſpell be hid, it is to them onely that are loſt: Ergo, the Scriptures are plaine to the faithfull. The Jeſuite anſwereth, S. Paul ſpeaketh of the knowledge of Chriſt, not of the Scriptures. Firſt, it is manifeſt out of the ſecond verſe, that S.Paul ſpeaketh of that Goſpell, which he preached to the Corinthians, which is the ſame he wrote unto them: wherefore if the Goſpell preached were eaſie and plaine, why is not the Goſpell written by him, I meane the doctrine of faith, being the ſame which he preached? Secondly, if they grant that the knowledge of Chriſt is eaſy, we aske no more: for this is that we ſay, that the doctrine of faith and ſalvation is plainly expreſſed in Scripture.

Eſay 29.11. Apoc.5.5. Argum. 4. This is the difference betweene the new Teſtament and the old: the old is compared to a claſped booke, Eſay 29.11. the new to a booke opened, *Apoc.*5.5. The knowledge of Chriſtians farre exceedeth the knowledge of the Jewes: it is lawfull for them to reade the Scriptures, much more for all Chriſtians. The Jeſuite anſwereth that our knowledge is greater than theirs, not in all Scripture, but in the myſteries of our redemption only. We anſwer, this is all we deſire: for if the miſtery of ſalvation and redemption be plainly opened in the Scripture, why ſhould not the people be admitted to the reading of the word, to be confirmed in the knowledge of their redemption? Who ſeeth not what ſilly anſwers theſe be? Auguſtine thus writeth of this matter, In iis (inquit) quæ apertè in ſcripturis poſita ſunt, inveniuntur ea omnia, quæ fidem continent moreſq; vivendi: de doctrin.Chriſtian.lib.2.c.9. The plaine and eaſie places of Scripture containe all things neceſſary unto faith and good life: Ergo, the doctrine of ſalvation in the Scriptures is not hard and difficult, but eaſie of good Chriſtians to bee underſtood.

*Toletan.*5.*c.*16. it was thus decreed: Qui Apocalypſin Iohannis à Paſcha uſque ad Pentecoſten Miſſarum tempore in eccleſia non prædicaverit, excommunicationis ſententiam habebit: He that refuſeth to preach to the people in the time of divine ſervice from Eaſter to Whitſuntid the Apocalypſe of S.Iohn, ſhall have the ſentence of excommunication. By this appeareth, that this Councell deemed not the reſt of the Scripture ſo very hard, ſeing they ſo ſtraightly enjoyne the reading and preaching of the hardeſt booke in Scripture to the people: which ſome reformed Churches even at this day doe forbeare the reading of.

Further, if that by the Emperiall law it was provided, Vt ad omnium notitiam, conſtitutiones valeant pervenire: That the conſtitutions ſhould come to every mans knowledge: Cod.lib. 1. tit. 1. lege 3. Iuſtinian: And againe, *Conſtitutionum noſtri codicis jubar omnibus clareat. leg.*3. That as the Sunne beames our conſtitutions ſhould ſhine upon all. How much more comfortable and perſpicuous to all is the Sunne-light of the Scriptures?

I will alſo urge them with their owne decrees: Decret.part.1.diſt. 38. cap.9. Ignorantia ſcripturarum, ignoratio Chriſti: The ignorance of the Scripture, is the ignorance of Chriſt. If then the people be kept from the knowledge of Scripture, they cannot attaine to the knowledge of Chriſt.

Heare alſo what a writer of your owne alleageth to this purpoſe out of Proſper; Parvuli, magni, fortes, infirmi, habent in ſcripturis unde alantur & ſatienter: Great and ſmall, ſtrong and weake, may finde nouriſhment in the Scriptures. And in the ſame place he hath theſe verſes:

Quæ nullis animis, nullis non congruit annis,
Lacte rigans parvos, pane cibans validos.

Which may be tranſlated thus;

No age ſo young, no wit ſo ſmall, which Scripture doth not fit:
There's milke for babes, and yet withall, there's meat for ſtronger wit.

If then children and little ones, and men of ſimple wit may be admitted to the reading of Scripture, it ſeemeth not that it ſhould be ſo difficult and obſcure, as they would beare us in hand.

I will in the laſt place adde the judgement of a reverend and learned man, that faithfull martyr, and bleſſed ſervant of God, D. Taylor, who in an Epiſtle of his confuteth a certaine Sermon made by a Popiſh Prieſt in Hadley, whereof the ſaid D. Taylor was Paſtor: he ſaith, the Scripture is full of darke ſentences: but indeed it is called of David, a candle to our feet, and a light to our ſteps. The ſixth queſtion; concerning the interpretation of Scripture.

THis queſtion doth divide it ſelfe into three parts: Firſt, concerning the divers ſenſes of the Scripture. Secondly, to whom the chiefe authoritie to expound Scripture is committed. Thirdly, what meanes muſt be uſed in the interpretation of Scripture.

The firſt part of the ſixth queſtion; of the divers ſenſes of Scripture.

The Papiſts.

THere are two ſtrange aſſertions of our adverſaries concerning this matter. Firſt, they affirme that the Scripture may have divers ſenſes and meanings in the ſame place. The ſenſe of the Scripture is either literall (ſay they) and hiſtoricall, which is the firſt and moſt proper ſenſe; or ſpirituall, that is, an higher ſenſe derived out of the other. The literall ſenſe, which there is gathered directly and immediately out of the words: the ſpirituall, which hath another reference, than to that which the words doe properly ſignifie. The literall is of two ſorts, either plaine and ſimple, or elſe figurative: as where Chriſt ſaith, I have other ſheepe which are not of this fold, &c. Ioh. 10. Whereby hee underſtandeth other people beſide the Jewes. The ſpirituall is of three kindes; Allegoricall, Tropologicall, Anagogicall : they ſhew by particular inſtance and induction, that the Scripture beſide the literall ſenſe may have theſe alſo.

Galat.4.24. The Allegoricall ſenſe is, when beſides the plaine hiſtoricall and literall meaning, ſomewhat is ſignified, which by an Allegorie is referred unto Chriſt, or the Church, as Galat.4. beſide the truth of the ſtory of the bond and free woman, S. Paul applieth it unto the two Teſtaments : Ergo, one place may have more ſenſes than one.

Deut.25.4. The Tropologicall ſenſe is, when as there is ſomewhat ſignified appertaining to manners, as Deut.25. Thou ſhalt not muſle the mouth of the Oxe that treadeth out the corne : this by S. Paul is applied to the Miniſters of the Goſpell, 1 Cor.9. Ergo, the Scripture hath divers ſenſes.

Pſal.95.11. The Anagogicall ſenſe is, when the place is applied to decipher and ſet forth the kingdome of heaven and eternall things, as Pſal.95. I ſware unto them, if they ſhould enter into my reſt : this is literally underſtood of the reſt in Canaan, and ſpiritually of life eternall : Ergo, many ſenſes. Thus reaſoneth Bellarm. lib.3. de ſcriptur.cap.3.

The Doway Tranſlaters doe here concurre with Bellarmine, that there are three ſpirituall ſenſes, beſide the literall : the Allegoricall, Morall, Anagogicall, &c. As Jeruſalem ſignifieth literally the head City of Jurie, Morally, the ſoule of man, Allegorically, the Church militant, as Hebr.12. and Anagogically the Church triumphant, Apoc.21. annot.in Gen.1.pag.4.

2 Sam.7.13, 14. They give inſtance of that place 2 Sam.7.13. I will eſtabliſh his kingdome : which words they would have underſtood of Chriſt : but verſ.14. If he ſhall doe any thing unjuſtly, &c. this cannot be ſaid of Chriſt, but of Saul: whereupon they inferre, ſo this place hath many literall ſenſes.

Contra 1. When divers things are inferred out of one place of Scripture, as an Allegoricall, or Anagogicall myſterie : if it be intended by the ſpirit, it is part of the literall and direct ſenſe : when one is contained within another ; and ſo the whole ſenſe is partly hiſtoricall and literall, partly allegoricall : but if it be an allegorie deviſed by man, it is no part of the ſenſe at all. 2. Wee deny not but that the ſame word or ſentence being found in divers places of Scripture, may have divers literall ſenſes : as Jeruſalem, given in inſtance, but not in one and the ſame place : and yet they are deceived in this allegation ; for Jeruſalem is taken for the triumphant Church, Heb.12.22. It is called celeſtiall Jeruſalem, where an innumerable company of Angels is : likewiſe in the ſame place of Scripture, one clauſe may be underſtood literally, as of Salomon, another typically, as of Chriſt, and yet one and the ſame ſentence or clauſe in that place, ſhall not have two divers ſenſes. 3. They are contrary to themſelves : for in one place they tell us there are three ſpirituall ſenſes beſide the literall : and in another, that there are two literall ſenſes, whereof the one is anagogicall concerning Chriſt : ſo that place, Deuter.25.4. Thou ſhalt not muſle the mouth of the oxe, &c. they ſay hath two literall ſenſes ; it is meant of ſpirituall labourers, and of oxen ; whereof one is the tropologicall and morall ſenſe.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme that of one place of Scripture there can be but one ſenſe, which wee call the literall ſenſe, when as the words are either taken properly, or figuratively, to expreſſe the thing which is meant : as in this place, The ſeed of the woman ſhall breake the Serpents head : the literall ſenſe is of Chriſt, who ſhould triumph over Satan, though it bee ſpoken in a borrowed and figurative ſpeech. There can be therefore but one ſenſe, which is the literall : as for thoſe three kindes, they are not divers ſenſes, but divers applications onely and collections out of one and the ſame ſenſe : as Saint Ambroſe ſaith, in 17. cap. Luc. Non una tantum figura, ſed multiplex in Scripturis eſſe conſuevit, ut unus ſermo plures ſpecies comprehendat : The Scripture is accuſtomed to afford not one, but divers figures, that one ſaying may comprehend divers kinds under it : that is, divers ſpeciall ſenſes, or applications of one generall ſenſe.

Argum. 1. It ſhall appeare by a ſeverall induction of all theſe kindes : In the firſt example of the Allegoricall ſenſe, Galat.4. the Apoſtle ſaith not that there is a double ſenſe, but that it may bee allegorically applyed, which is hiſtorically ſet downe. There is then but one ſenſe of the place, part whereof conſiſteth in the ſtory, part in the allegorie : ſo that the whole ſenſe is contained in them both. Concerning the ſecond example of the Tropologicall : there is not a twofold ſenſe of that place, but one whole generall ſenſe, that as the mouth of the oxe was not to be muſled, ſo the Miniſter of the Goſpell muſt be provided for. Likewiſe of the Anagogicall kinde : it is not one ſenſe to underſtand the reſt of Canaan, another of the kingdome of God : but there is one whole ſenſe, that as they for their Idolatry were deprived of the land of promiſe ; ſo we ſhould take heed leſt by our diſobedience wee loſe the hope of the kingdome of heaven. So we conclude that thoſe are not divers ſenſes, but one ſenſe diverſly applied ; the one ſenſe having a ſubordination unto the other.

Argum. 2. The literall ſenſe is the onely ſenſe of the place, becauſe out of that ſenſe onely may an argument ſtrongly bee framed : wherefore ſeeing allegories and tropes doe not conclude, they are not the ſenſes of the place. An Allegorie or type may be part of the literall ſenſe, and then it concludeth : but when an Allegory is framed beſide the literall ſenſe, it concludeth not ; and therefore is no part of the ſenſe : as to reaſon thus, the Oxes mouth muſt not be muſled : Ergo, the Miniſter muſt be maintained, it followeth well, becauſe it is part of the ſenſe. But Allegories deviſed beſide the ſenſe prove not, though they may illuſtrate.

Argum. 3. That properly is the ſenſe of the place, which the text alwayes yeeldeth : for no text of Scripture is without his ſenſe : but the ſpirituall ſenſe is not in every place to be found, but the literall ſenſe alwayes. And this the Jeſuite confeſſeth : Non invenitur ſpiritualis ſenſus in omni ſententia ſcriptura : The ſpirituall ſenſe is not found in every ſentence of Scripture : Ergo, it is not the ſenſe properly.

Here alſo I will urge the Jeſuite with his owne teſtimonie : Spiritnales ſenſus licet ædificent, & tamen non ſemper conſtat, an ſint à ſpiritu ſancto intenti : The ſpirituall ſenſes, though they may edifie, yet it is not alwayes certaine, whether they be intended by the ſpirit : but the literall ſenſe is certaine alwayes to bee the ſenſe of the ſpirit, Bellarm.cap.3. The literall ſenſe therefore is the onely ſenſe, becauſe it is the ſenſe of the ſpirit.

I will alſo oppoſe againſt them their owne decrees: Sext. decretal. lib.5. tit. 12. c.3. Nicholaus 4. Gloſſæ non fiant, niſi forſan per quas verbi ſenſus, vel constructio, quaſi grammaticaliter ad literam, vel intelligibilius exponatur : Let there be no gloſſes made, but ſuch, whereby the ſenſe or conſtruction of the word may be grammatically expounded according to the letter. This decree alloweth none but the grammaticall and literall ſenſe.

8. Error. Heb.4.5.

THeir other aſſertion is this, that it is lawfull to allegorize Scripture both in the old and new Teſtament, Bellarm.lib.3.cap.3. They reaſon thus, Rhemenſ. annot. Hebr.4. verſ.5. The Apoſtle applieth the reſt of the Sabbath to the eternall reſt : Ergo, the like applications of the Fathers are lawfull. See Annot.Hebr.7.2. The Apoſtle (ſay they) findeth great myſteries, even in the very names : Ergo, It is lawfull to make allegories.

The Proteſtants.

WEE ſay it is dangerous to make allegories of Scripture, without the warrant and direction of Gods ſpirit. This was the occaſion that divers of the ancient Fathers greatly erred : as the Jeſuite himſelfe giveth an inſtance of Origen, who doth allegorize the ſtory of Geneſis concerning the terreſtriall Paradiſe. And it is much to be wondred at that our adverſaries doe ſo much ſtand for the allegorizing of Scripture, beyond the literall ſenſe, ſeeing that, contrary to their owne judgement, who ſo much eſteeme of tropes and allegories, in theſe words of Chriſt, hoc eſt corpus meum, they ſtand onely upon the literall and verball ſenſe, admitting no trope, figure, or allegorie at all. I will put them in minde here of a ſaying of an old popiſh Biſhop, above two hundred yeares agoe : The words in Scripture (ſaith he) muſt not be judged by the ſenſe which they make, but the ſenſe whereof they are made, the conſtructions in Scripture are not bound to Donates rules, where faith is farre placed from the capacitie of reaſon : Sic Iohan. Treſnant. Epiſcop. Hereford. Fox pag.465. How well the Papiſts now adayes doe follow this rule, it appeareth by the former example.

To their arguments our learned Countrey man D.Fulke anſwereth : Firſt, it followeth not, becauſe it was lawfull for the Apoſtles, governed by the ſpirit, to make allegories, that it is therefore lawfull for others. Secondly, when the Fathers, or any other writers can be aſſured of the ſame ſpirit which the holy writers had, and of the like dexterity in underſtanding and expounding Scripture, they may likewiſe be bold to make allegories.

Let us heare what Auguſtine ſaith of this matter : Sicut mihi multum errare videntur, qui nullas res geſtas aliquid aliud præter id, quod eo modo geſta ſunt, ſignificare arbitrantur : ita multum audere, qui prorſus ibi omnia ſignificationibus allegoricis involuta eſſe contendunt : As they are much deceived which thinke that the ſtories in the Scripture doe ſignifie no other thing but that which was done : ſo they are too raſh and bold, that would draw all things to allegories, which they read in Scripture. Ergo, it is not lawfull for any to invent allegories of Scripture, as it ſeemeth good to themſelves.

Concil. Bracarenſ. 1.can.30. it was thus decreed : Placuit, ut nihil veteris teſtamenti poetice compoſitum in Eccleſia pſallatur : It ſeemeth good to us, that no part of the old Teſtament ſhould bee ſung in meeter in the Church, or compoſed after a poeticall manner. But what doe they elſe but follow poeticall fictions, that draw the Scripture as they liſt, to imagined allegories ? Synod. Auguſt. cap.13. Concionator ſe ad captum auditorum demittat, nunc Catechiſtam agat, nunc interpretem Scripturarum, nunc vitiorum reprehenſorem, nunc doctorem myſteriorum. The Preacher muſt apply himſelfe to his auditors capacity, ſometime playing the Catechiſt, ſometime interpreting Scriptures, otherwhile reprehending vice, and againe unfolding myſteries, &c. He muſt then unfold myſteries, not allegorize Scripture at his pleaſure, and make more myſteries.

Let them heare alſo their owne decrees : Decr.par.1.d.37.c.4. Pſeudoprophetas eos debemus accipere, qui aliter Scripturarum verba accipiunt, quam ſpiritus ſanctus ſonat : We underſtand them to bee falſe Prophets, which doe take the words of Scripture otherwiſe than the ſpirit ſoundeth. And againe, ibid. cap.14. Clemens 1. Multas quidem, ut audivimus, veſtrarum partium ingenioſi homines, ex iis quæ legunt veriſimilitudines capiunt : Certaine wittie conceited men in your parts, as I heare, doe gather ſimilitudes and reſemblances out of that which they read, &c, which uſe is forbidden in this decree : the former canon calleth them, imagines, umbras, phantaſmata : ſhadowes, and phantaſies. And I wiſh in my heart, that in handling of Scripture, this age of ours were not too much given to follow ſuch wittie rather than pithie conceits and phantaſies.

Buxdorfius Synag.Iudaic. cap.1. pag.6

This peremptory boldneſſe of allegorizing Scripture, which the Romaniſts are addicted unto, is not much unlike the blinde practice of the Jewes, who, as Buxdorfius writeth, are bound to give as great beleefe to the myſticall and allegoricall expoſitions of the Rabbines, as to the Law of Moſes.

The

The ſecond part of the ſixth Queſtion: to whom the chiefe authority to expound Scripture is committed.

The Papiſts.

9. Error.

IT was decreed in the Councell of Trent, that Scripture ſhould be expounded, as the Church expoundeth it, and according to the common and conſonant conſent of the Fathers, *Seſſ.*4. The Rhemiſts ſay, that the ſenſe of the Scriptures muſt be learned of the Fathers and Paſtors of the Church, *Præf.ſect.*18. If the Fathers agree not, the matter is referred to a generall Councell: if there it bee not determined, wee muſt have recourſe to the Pope and his Cardinals. The Jeſuite dare not referre the matter to the Pope alone to expound the Scripture, but joyneth the College of Cardinals with him, *Bellarm. lib.*3. *de ſcript. cap.*3.

Deut. 17.9.

*Argum.*1. They object that place, *Deut.*17.9. where the people are commanded to reſort unto the Prieſt or Judge in doubtfull matters: Ergo, there ought to be a chiefe and ſupreme Judge in Eccleſiaſticall matters, Bellarmine. Wee anſwer: Firſt, here the civill Magiſtrate and the Judge are joyned together, as *verſ.*12. Wherefore if they will gather hereby, that the Pope muſt bee ſupreme Judge in all Eccleſiaſticall matters, then the Emperour ought to be as well in civill. Bellarmine anſwereth, that by the Judge is underſtood the chiefe Prieſt: or if it be taken for the civill Judge, hee is but to execute the ſentence given by the Prieſt. Contra 1. It appeareth in the 12. verſe, that the high Prieſt, and the chiefe Judge are not all one: that man that ſhall not hearken to the Prieſt, &c. or unto the Iudge, howſoever the vulgar Latine reade otherwiſe. 2. Wee grant that the Prieſts office was to declare to the Judge the Word of God, but not to give ſentence: for the Prieſt had not to doe with matters of bloud, which are named amongſt other cauſes, *verſ.*8. Secondly, the text ſaith, they ſhall come to the Prieſts, *verſ.*9. aſſigning many, not to one onely Prieſt. Thirdly, they muſt judge according to the law, *verſ.*11. not as they liſt themſelves. Bellarmine ſaith, that this is no condition, If they ſhall judge according to the law; for then the people ſhould judge the ſentence of the Prieſt: but it is a promiſe, &c. Contra 1. Wee ſay not that the people ſhould judge the ſentence of the Prieſt, but the Law of God it ſelfe: as the Diſciples by the Scriptures did examine the Apoſtles preachings, *Act.*17. who were not inferiour in office in the Goſpell, to the Prieſts in the Law. 2. Neither had the Judges any ſuch promiſe not to erre in judgement, but ſo farre forth as they followed the law: for there were among them unrighteous Judges, as Abimelech, *Iudg.*19. and the two Elders that condemned Suſanna, which booke is good Scripture with them. Yea, and divers of the high Prieſts were in great errour, as Aaron in making the golden Calfe, Urias in making an idolatrous Altar, 2 King. 16.15. the Prieſts and Prophets ſentenced Ieremie to die: the judgement then of the high Prieſt was not to be obeyed otherwiſe, than if he judged according to the law: as their ordinary Gloſſe obſerveth upon that place: Note, that it is not ſaid unto thee thou ſhalt obey, Niſi docuerint ſecundum legem; Unleſſe they teach according to the law. Fourthly, here is no mention made of doubts in interpreting Scripture, but of controverſies that may fall out betweene man and man, either Eccleſiaſticall to bee decided by the Prieſts, or civill by the Magiſtrate. Fifthly, wee grant, that in every Countrey there ought to bee a ſupreme and high ſeat of judgement for the determining of controverſiall matters betweene men: but it followeth not that there ſhould bee a ſupreme Judge over the whole Church, eſpecially in ſuch matters as this concerning the ſenſe of the Scriptures, which is not committed to the judgement of men, neither is any ſuch controverſie named in that place, *verſ.*8.

Argum. 2. *Eccleſiaſt.*12.11. The Wiſe man compareth the words of the wiſe to nailes which are faſtened, given by one Paſtor. In this place Salomon teacheth, that men ought to reſt in the ſentence of the chiefe Paſtor, without any further inquiry or ſearch. And if the chiefe Paſtor in the old Teſtament had ſuch authority, much more the chiefe Prieſt in the new: Ergo, wee ought to reſt in the ſentence and judgement of the Pope with his aſſiſtants, *Bellarm. cap.*4. *argum.*3.

We anſwer, the wiſe men are here underſtood to be the Paſtors and Miniſters of Gods Word, but this one Paſtor ſignifieth neither the high Prieſt in the old Law, nor the Pope in the new, but Jeſus Chriſt the high ſhepherd for our ſoules. What great boldneſſe is this, to attribute that to the Pope, which is onely proper to Chriſt.

Argum. 3. They alſo picke out ſome places in the new Teſtament, as Matth. 16.19. To thee will I give the keyes of the Kingdome of heaven. Chriſt ſaith ſo to Peter: Ergo, the Pope hath authoritie to expound Scripture. Wee anſwer: Firſt, by the keyes here is meant commiſſion to preach the Goſpell, not onely to expound doubts. Secondly, they were given to all the Apoſtles, not to Peter onely, Matth. 18. *verſ.*18,19. Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. cap. 9. ex Iſidor. Cæteri Apoſtoli cum Petro par conſortium honoris & poteſtatis acceperunt: The reſt of the Apoſtles were received together with Peter, into the ſame fellowſhip of dignity, and authority, or power. Thirdly, the Pope is not ſucceſſor of Peter, no more than any other godly Biſhop, nor ſo much, unleſſe he follow Peters ſteps: As S. Hierome ſaith to Damaſus, as it is alleaged in your owne decrees: Decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. cap. 14. Petri & fidem & ſedem tenes: You hold both Peters ſeat and faith. So they abuſe that place, *Matth.*18.17. He that will not heare the Church, &c. Ergo, the Biſhops and chiefe Paſtors muſt expound the doubts in Scripture. Anſw. Firſt, our Saviour ſpeaketh here of the diſcipline of the Church, of corrections and admonitions, not of interpreting Scripture, which dependeth not upon the will and phantaſie of Pope, Cardinals, or Popiſh Councels, but muſt be tried by the Scriptures themſelves. Secondly, we muſt give eare to the Church, but with a double condition: firſt, we muſt be ſure it is the Church of God, as our Saviour himſelfe expoundeth, v.20. Where two or three are gathered together in my name,&c. ſo that every congregation is not the Church, but that which is aſſembled in the name and authority of Chriſt. Secondly, we muſt not heare them, contrary to the Scriptures, but ſo long as they do teach the doctrine of Chriſt: for otherwiſe an Angell from Heaven is not to be heard, 1 *Galath.*1.8.

Argum.4. Our Saviour ſaith, *Matth.*23.2. The Scribes and Phariſies ſit in Moſes chaire, all things that they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do: We muſt ſtand then to the judgement and interpretation of the Prelats of the Church, *Bellarm.c.5.teſtimon.*3.

Contra. To ſit in the chaire of Moſes, is not to ſucceed in the place of Moſes, but to teach according to the law of Moſes: the Phariſies then teaching doctrines not agreeable to that law, did not therein ſit in Moſes chaire: this place then proveth not an infallibility of judgement in the Prelates of the Church to interpret Scripture, nor a neceſſity of obedience: here we will appoſe unto Bellarmine, the judgement of their owne writers: Stella thus interpreteth that place, they ſit in Moſes chaire, Cum bona docebant,&c. When they taught good things, ſuch as Moſes preſcribed. Ianſenius, Non eſt illis obediendum,&c. They muſt not be obeyed, when they teach any thing contrary to that chaire. So alſo Maldonat the Jeſuite, de doctrina legis & Moſes loquitur, He ſpeaketh of the doctrine of the law, and of Moſes.

Concord in Matth.23.2. c.120.
Maldonat. commentar. in hunc locum.

Argum.5. S. Paul went to Jeruſalem to conferre with S. Peter, Iames and Iohn, otherwiſe he ſaith, he ſhould have runne in vaine: Ergo, the judgement of faith belongeth to Peter, and Peters ſucceſſor, *Bellarmine c.*5.

Anſw. Firſt, S. Paul went not up to Jeruſalem of neceſſity; as though he needed to have his doctrine confirmed by the former Apoſtles: for he himſelfe ſaith contrary, *Gala.*2.6. They that ſeemed to be the chiefe communicated nothing with me. And again, Peter was rather confirmed by him, whom he openly rebuketh for a certaine ſlip of infirmity, v.12. but he ſpeaketh in reſpect of others, that ſaid he taught contrary to the Apoſtles, leſt he ſhould have run in vaine. Secondly, S. Ambroſe ſaith to this purpoſe, that Paul went up to Jeruſalem to ſee Peter, not of neceſſity, Neque ut aliquid ab eo diſceret, qui jam ab authore didic erat, ſed propter affectionem Apoſtolatus, & propter concordiam: Neither to learne any thing of him, who had learned of Chriſt the author himſelfe, but for love unto his fellow Apoſtle, and for concord ſake. Ambroſ.in hunc locum.

The Proteſtans.

WE have a more compendious way to come to the underſtanding of the Scripture: It were too long when we doubt of any place to ſtay till we have the generall conſent of the Paſtors of the Church, or to expect a generall Councell, or go up to Rome. And it were too much to trouble the Popes gravity with every queſtion: the Lord hath ſhewed us a more eaſy and ready way, ſo that we need not aſcend to heaven, or compaſſe the earth, or paſſe the alpes: but the word of God is amongſt us, the Scriptures themſelves and the ſpirit of God opening our hearts, do teach us how to underſtand them. And yet we ſay not, as they doe falſly charge us, that we allow every private mans interpretation of Scripture; and refuſing the judgement of the Paſtors of the Church, place the gift of Interpretation in every mans particular breaſt, *Bellar.de verb.dei,lib.*3.*c.*4. But we deny, that the interpretation of Scripture is aſſigned to any ſucceſſion of Paſtors, or tied to any place or Perſons: and yet grant that it is the office of the Paſtors and Miniſters, to whom the diſpenſation of the word is committed, not of private men to expound Scripture according to the ſenſe and meaning of the ſpirit; and to diſcerne betweene the orthodoxall and hereticall interpretations: yet they are but the inſtruments; the ſpirit of God ſpeaking in the Scriptures is the interpreter of himſelfe: and in this underſtanding we conſent to a decree of one of your own Synods: *Synonenſ.ſynod.decret.*4.de fide: Eccleſia catholicum ſenſum ab haretico germanum ab adulterino diſcernit: The Church doth diſcerne the Catholike ſenſe from the hereticall, the true from the falſe. It hath no power to make or coyne interpretations beſide Scripture, but to diſcerne and diſtinguiſh. Our arguments now follow.

*Argum.*1. That only hath power to give the ſenſe of Scripture, which doth beget us faith: the ſpirit only by the Scriptures begetteth faith, *Rom.*10.17. faith commeth by hearing the word: Ergo, the ſpirit of God is the only interpreter of Scripture. The propoſition alſo is cleere: for ſeeing the Scripture is the true ſenſe and meaning thereof, if any ſhould give the ſenſe of the Scripture, but that which worketh faith, then upon him ſhould our faith be grounded. If the Pope therefore give the ſenſe of Scripture, and our faith ariſeth of the Scripture underſtood, then our faith is builded upon the Popes ſenſe, *argum.Whitach.*2.& 9.

Rom.10.17.

Argum. 2. The Scriptures cannot be interpreted but by the ſame ſpirit, wherewith they were written: but that ſpirit is found no where but in the Scriptures. Ergo, The firſt part the Papiſts themſelves graunt: the ſecond is thus proved. The ſpirit of the Apoſtles is not given by ſecret inſpiration, that ſavoureth of Anabaptiſme: where is it then to be found: whether is it like that Saint Peters ſpirit ſhould be found in the Popes chaire, or in his Epiſtles? or if they have S. Peters ſpirit, where is S. Pauls found but in his writings? Yet it is all one ſpirit, and appeareth not elſewhere but in the Scriptures: 1 Cor.2.15. where every man may find it as well as the Pope: The ſpirituall man judgeth all things. 1 *Cor.*2.15. You have an oyntment from him that is holy, and you have knowne all things. 1 *Ioh.*2.*ver.*27. You need not that any man teach you. By theſe places it is evident, that every faithfull man by the ſpirit of God according to the meaſure of his gift, and quality of his calling, may underſtand the Scriptures. To this beareth witneſſe that decree, *Synod. Colonienſ. part.*2.*c.*4. Presbyteri in lege Domini meditentur die & nocte, & judicia divina exquirant & ſcrutentur non propria præſumptione, aut humano ſenſu, ſed ſpiritu ſancto dictante, &c. Let the Preachers and Presbyters meditate in the law of God day and night, and ſearch and try out the divine judgements, not by their own preſumption, or humane ſenſe, but according to the direction of the ſpirit. This Canon referreth Preachers for the underſtanding of Scripture, not to the Pope or Cardinals, but to the ſpirit of God as the author; and the diligent ſearching of Scripture as the meane.

Argum. 3. The doctrine of the Church muſt be examined by the Scriptures: Ergo, the Scriptures are not to ſtand to the judgement of the Church. The former part is prooved by the example of the Berrœans, Acts 17. 11. If they did well in examining Pauls doctrine, much more may the decrees Act.17.11. of the Pope, Church, Councels, be examined by the Scriptures. But they knew not whether Paul was an Apoſtle or not, therefore they might examine his doctrine, ſaith the Jeſuite. Anſwer. Firſt, they could not bee ignorant of his Apoſtleſhip, who was famous throughout the Churches. Secondly, they doubted onely whether Paul was an Apoſtle; but we are ſure the Pope is none, neither ſucceſſour of any Apoſtle, but very Antichriſt: Ergo, we have more juſt cauſe to examine his decrees. Thirdly, if S. Pauls Apoſtleſhip might be doubted of, much more may the Popes authority be called into queſtion.

Argum. 4. S. Paul ſaith, We are builded upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Epheſ. 2. Epheſ.2.20. 20. The Pope nor his Church are not the foundatiõ of the Saints: Ergo, we are not to build upon them nor their interpretation. Bellarm. denieth the aſſumption or ſecond part, and ſaith, that the teſtimony of the Church is a ſecond foundation: for we know not which is the word but by the Church. *reſp. ad arg.*13. Anſw. 1. The Jeſuite ſpeaketh abſurdly, in ſaying the Church is the foundation, the Church is the building: and the building and foundation cannot bee all one. Secondly, there cannot bee divers 1 Cor.3.11. foundations: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 *Cor.*3.11. Other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, Jeſus Chriſt. If it ſhall be objected, how then are Apoſtles ſaid to be foundations? I anſwer, the perſon of the Apoſtles is not the foundation, but their doctrine, which is the faith in Jeſus. Thirdly, it is another untruth, that the Scriptures are not knowne but by the teſtimony of the Church: as partly hath beene ſhewed before, and ſhall more afterwards, as Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 5.34. He did not receive the teſti- Iohn 5.34. mony of men, his own works did witneſſe of him; ſo the efficacy of the ſpirit ſpeaking in the Scriptures doth teſtifie of it, that it is the word.

*Arg.*5. If the Pope have authority to judge of Scripture, and that the ſenſe of the Scripture without his approbation is not authenticall, then it would follow, that the Pope is above Scripture, which were not only a great abſurdity, but a grievous blaſphemy.

Bellarm. To be ſaid to judge of the Scripture, may be taken two waies, either to judge whether the Scripture be true or no: and who ſo thus judgeth, ſhould be above Scripture; but ſo doth not the Pope: or elſe to judge of the ſenſe of Scripture, which is not to bee above Scripture, but above the private judgements and interpretations of men, *ſic Bellarm. lib.*3.*c.*10.*reſp. ad argum.*14.

Anſw. Firſt, to expound and give the ſenſe of Scripture, by the Scripture it ſelfe, is not to be a judge of Scripture, or ſuperiour to it, but to be ſubjected rather unto it and ordered by it: but the Pope in taking upon him abſolute authority to expound Scripture, doth make himſelfe ſuperiour to it, in as much as the Scripture is not the letter, but the ſenſe thereof: he therefore that overruleth the ſenſe, overruleth Scripture. Secondly, again, hee that may give the ſenſe to Scripture, as it pleaſeth him, may at his pleaſure make the Scripture true or falſe; for the Scripture is the ſenſe: the Pope for the moſt part giveth a falſe ſenſe of Scripture, and ſo maketh the Scripture falſe: and thus is he become a Judge of Scripture after the firſt way, which the Jeſuite denieth.

Now let Auguſtine ſpeake: Novit charitas veſtra omnes nos unum magiſtrum habere, & ſub illo condiſcipulos eſſe, nec ideo magiſtri ſumus, quia de ſuperiore loco loquimur vobis, ſed magiſter eſt omnium, qui habitat in nobis omnibus, &c. You know brethren (ſaith he) that we are all fellow ſchollers under one maſter, and though we ſpeake to you out of an higher place, yet are we not your maſter, he is the teacher and maſter of us all that dwelleth in us all, &c. Ergo, the ſpirit of God ſpeaking in the Scriptures, is the chiefe and beſt interpreter thereof.

I will enforce againſt them firſt their Imperial lawes, then their own Pontificiall conſtitutions, which order I purpoſe God willing to obſerve throughout.

Firſt, Iuſtinian hath this law, *Cod. lib.*1.*tit.*17.*leg.*11. Quis legum ænigmata ſolvere idoneus eſſe videbitur, niſi is, cui ſoli legiſlatorem eſſe conceſſum eſt? Who is thought more fit to open the darke ſentences of the law, but he that hath authority to make them? And therfore he concludeth, Tam conditor, quam interpres legum ſolus Imperator juſtè cenſebitur: The Emperour only is of right taken to bee both the maker, and interpreter of the law. As then the Imperiall lawes muſt be interpreted by the Emperour that made them; ſo the divine lawes by the ſpirit of God that gave them: ſo alſo ſaith your owne law, *decret.Gregor.lib.*5.*tit.*39.*c.*31.*Innocent.*3. Vnde jus prodiit, interpretatio quoque procedat: Let the interpretation proceede from whence the law commeth.

Secondly, ſearch further your own decrees, *part.*1.*diſt.*20.præfat. Divinarum tractatores ſcripturarum in ſacrariis ſcripturarum expoſitionibus eis præponuntur: The interpreters of Scripture for the expoſition thereof, muſt be preferred before the Popes: Ergo, all reſteth not in the Popes breaſt.

Let us laſtly heare the judgement of an holy Martyr, that maintained this truth with the loſſe of his life; who being demanded of Boner, denied that the Pope had any authority to expound Scripture: adding further, what a goodly expoſition did the Pope make of Scripture, when he ſet his foot upon the Emperours neck, and ſaid, *Thou ſhalt walke upon the Lyon and the Aſpe, the young Lyon and the Dragon, ſic Roger. Holland. Fox p.*2040.col. 2. His reaſon is this, the Pope miſconſtrueth Scripture, and expoundeth it as he liſt. Ergo, this authority is not given him of God.

Pag.1851. laſt edit.

That the Pope with his adherents hath no ſuch authority to interpret Scripture, it is the opinion alſo of other forrain Churches. 1. Nilus Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica, thus delivereth the judgement of the Greeke Church: That Peter in the aſſembly at Ieruſalem tooke not upon him the primacy, but both he and the reſt condeſcended unto the opinion of S. Iames. The Muſcovites deny that Peter was the true Biſhop of Rome, or that he was the only head of the militant Church: The ſame they beleeve of the Biſhop of Rome. &c. The Pope then hath no ſuch ſoveraigne power from Peter to expound Scripture.

2 The Ethiopike Church conſenteth: Preſter Iohn ſaid to Alvares, who had confeſſed that they were obliged to all, which the Pope commanded: If the Pope would uſurpe ſo great prerogative, as to uſe toward them an unlawfull commandement, they would not make any reckoning of it. And if by ſuch meanes their Abuna (who is their Church Biſhop) would preſume ſo farre, they would burne the copy of ſuch commandement.

Alvares de ſcript. Ethiop. c.29.

3 The reformed Churches make the Scripture interpreter of it ſelfe: the former confeſſion of *Helvetia artic.*1. The interpretation of the Scripture is to be taken only from her ſelfe, that her ſelfe may be the interpreter of herſelfe, the rule of faith and charity being the guide: confeſſion of Bohemia, *c.*1. The ſpirit himſelfe, openeth and diſcloſeth the meaning, how it ought to be underſtood. confeſſion of Wittemberg. c. 30. Whereas they ſay that the right of expounding Scripture lieth in the power of the chiefe Biſhops, it is evident that the gift of expounding Scripture is not of mans wiſedome, but of the holy Ghoſt, &c. confeſſion of Auſpurg. *artic.*7. The Church hath the gift of interpretation, that is, of underſtanding the heavenly doctrine, but that it is not tied to the name or degree of Biſhops, &c. But thoſe that are learned in the word of God, and borne againe by his ſpirit in what place ſoever they be, they aſſent unto the Word of God, and underſtand the ſame, ſome more, ſome leſſe, &c.

4 Concerning the teſtimony of the Popiſh writers, it is alleaged before, as of Stella, Ianſenius, and Maldonat, in the anſwer to the 4. argument.

The third part of the ſixth queſtion: concerning the meanes or method to be uſed in interpreting of Scripture.

The Papiſts.

OVr adverſaries preſcribe this method and courſe to bee taken in expounding of Scripture, which conſiſteth in foure rules: the generall practice of the Church, the conſonant interpretation of the Fathers, the decrees of generall Councels; laſtly, the rule of faith, conſiſting partly of the Scriptures, partly of traditions unwritten, Stapleton. Concerning the three firſt, we have already touched them in part: they appeare to be inſufficient. Firſt, the Councels and Fathers he made chiefe interpreters of Scripture before, and now they are but meanes: what other chiefe judge then is there to uſe theſe meanes? ſurely none but the Scriptures. Secondly, theſe meanes are moſt uncertaine, the practice of the Church is often changed, Fathers agree not in their expoſitions, and Councels cannot alwaies be had.

10. Error.

Concerning the rule of faith conſiſting of unwritten verities: he groundeth it falſly upon that place, Rom. 12. 6. Let us prophecy according to the rule of Faith, and Galat. 6. 16. As many as walke according to this rule. This rule was a certaine platforme of Religion, given by the Apoſtles before the Scriptures were written, according to the which (ſay they) the Scriptures were afterward compiled by the Apoſtles. Rhemenſ. in Rom. 12. 6. Anſwer: Saint Paul meaneth no other rule, but that which is ſet downe in his writings: no other forme of doctrine but that contained in his Epiſtles, as in the 6. to the Galathians, ſpeaking of this rule, he alludeth to the former verſe, where he ſaith, he rejoyced in nothing but in the Croſſe of Chriſt: his rule therefore is to receive Chriſt onely without the ceremonies or works of the Law; againſt the which hereſie he diſputeth in the whole Epiſtle. But of all other it is a great blaſphemy to ſay that the Apoſtles ſet downe the Scriptures by a rule, as though the ſpirit of God, by whom they ſpake, had need of any ſuch direction. So then no unwritten rule can give a direction to the written word, but the written word rather giveth a rule to all other things, as one of your owne Popes confeſſeth: Cum ex ſcripturis integram quis & firmam regulam ſuſceperis veritatis, &c. When a man hath gathered a firme and certaine rule of truth out of the Scriptures, then may he compare with it other liberall arts, &c. Concerning alſo theſe foure waies of theirs, Rom.12.6. Galat.6.16.

Clemen.1.decr. p.1.d.37.c.14.

I will appoſe them againe with their owne authority : decr.p.1.d.20.c.3.Innocentius 1. the decree ſtandeth thus, which I will only ſet downe tranſlated, becauſe it is long : If there be any cauſe which cannot be diſſolved by the books of the old Teſtament, the foure Evangeliſts and writings of the Apoſtles, then have recourſe to the divine writings in Greek : if nothing be found there, then to the Canons of the Apoſtolike See: if not there, then to the Catholike ſtories of the Church : if neither there, conſider the practice of the Saints: if yet the queſtion cannot be diſſolved, gather the elders of the Province, and aske them, &c. Out of this decree I gather three things: firſt that the meanes here preſcribed, are not to be uſed, but where the Scripture is ſilent: and therefore where any thing may be decided by Scripture, theſe helpes are ſuperfluous. Secondly, in the laſt place we are not referred to the Pope and his Cardinals, but to the elders, that is, the Biſhops, Paſtors and Miniſters of every Province. Thirdly, hee ſendeth us to the Greeke originall of the Scriptures, which is one of the meanes that we doe preſcribe.

The Proteſtants.

WHen we ſay that the Scriptures muſt expound themſelves, our meaning is, that by certaine compendious and ready meanes, we ſhould labour to underſtand the Scriptures by themſelves: the meanes are eſpecially theſe foure : Firſt, to have recourſe to the originall tongue, as in the old Teſtament to the Hebrue; in the new, to the Greeke : as 1 Tim.2.15. Through bearing of children they ſhall be ſaved, if they continue in faith and love : in the Engliſh it is doubtfull whether this clauſe, if they continue in faith, be referred to children, or to thoſe that beare them ; but reade the Greeke and the doubt is removed : for bearing of children is all one word in the originall τεκνογονία, ſo that it muſt needs be underſtood of the women, for the word τεκνογονία, bearing of children is in the ſingular number, that which followeth of the plurall, and it is but an action, not a perſon ; ſo that it ſhould be improperly ſaid, if they continue, that is, the bearing of children. 1Tim.2.15.

Stapleton objecteth againſt this meane : that it is not now needfull, ſeeing there is a perfect and abſolute tranſlation authoriſed by the Councell of Trent, he meaneth the vulgar Latine. We anſwer: firſt, it is no perfect, but an erroneous tranſlation, and very corrupt. Secondly, if it were never ſo perfect, yet for more certainty, it is profitable to ſearch the originall: every man will truſt his own skill, rather than another mans. Thirdly the Councell did fondly in authoriſing an old blind tranſlation, before the authenticall copies of the Hebrue and Greeke. For the Greeke originall, we have the decree of Innocentius the firſt, before repeated : and for recourſe to be had to the Hebrue, we have the practice of their own Maſter of Sentences: who in deciding of a certaine queſtion, in the ſecond of Geneſis, whether we ſhould reade conſummavit Deus, or complevit, God did conſummate, or accompliſh his works upon the ſeventh day, reſolveth upon the latter reading : Quod habet Hebraica veritas, which is, ſaith he, according to the Hebrue verity. lib 2.d.15.g.

2. Secondly, the ſcope of the place, the circumſtance of it, with that which goeth before and commeth after, muſt be weighed, which will bring great light to the place we have in hand: an example we have 1 Pet.4.8. Love covereth the multitude of ſinnes : the Papiſts gather out of theſe words, that love doth juſtifie us before God, and taketh away our ſins : but by the circumſtance of the place, the Apoſtle ſaying immediately before : Have fervent love among you, it is evident he underſtandeth brotherly love amongſt our ſelves, whereby faults are buried, forgiven, and forgotten. 1Pet.4.8.

Stapleton objecteth, that this is but an uncertaine way, and many times faileth : for the Scripture paſſeth many times from one matter and argument to another : how then can it helpe to conſider the circumſtance of the place being of a diverſe matter? We anſwer, we ſay not that any of theſe meanes ſerveth for every place, but when one faileth, to uſe another: when the circumſtance helpeth not, to run to the originall; if there we find no ſuccour, to compare places together; and when wee may, to uſe them all or the moſt. This rule of examining the circumſtances, as the precedence, and conſequence of a text, may be alſo warranted by their own practice: So Nicholas the fourth, in expounding of the rule of S. Francis giveth this precept: Sext. decret. lib.5. tit.12. c.3. Vtriuſq; juris argumenta nos docent, ea, quæ in principio ad medium & finem ; illa vero, quæ in medio, ad principium & finem; & quæ in fine ad utrumq; vel eorum alterum ſæpe referri : The reaſon of both lawes doth teach us, that the beginning muſt be referred to the middeſt and the end ; the middeſt to the beginning and the end ; the end unto both the other, or the one of them at the leaſt, &c. If they themſelves then are ſo curious in the ſifting out of the meaning of their ſuperſtitious Father, with what face can they blame our diligence in ſearching the ſenſe of the Scripture?

3. Thirdly, the conference of places is very profitable, as James 2.21. Abraham was juſtified by works, compare it with that place, Rom.4.2. there Saint Paul ſaith flatly, that Abraham was not juſtified, by works. Wherefore ſeeing one Apoſtle is not contrary to the other : wee muſt needs gather, that this word juſtified is diverſly taken : Paul ſaith that Abraham was not juſtified, that is, made righteous before God by his works ; James ſaith he was juſtified, that is, declared to be juſt before men, and ſo Thomas Aquinas expoundeth it.

Stapleton objecteth, that this meanes in comparing of places is of it ſelfe many times of ſmall force. Anſw. As though we affirme that theſe meanes muſt bee uſed aſunder, and not rather jointly together, and where one faileth, another to helpe. Secondly, ſome things are found but once in the Scriptures. Anſwer, they are then either very plaine, or not greatly neceſſary. Thirdly, heretikes have erred red in comparing of Scripture. Anſw. They compared them not diligently, nor with a ſincere mind, but corruptly and negligently.

Bellarmine objecteth, that the Scripture cannot interpret, or bee Judge of it ſelfe: for when one place receiveth divers ſenſes, non poteſt dicere, &c: The Scripture cannot ſay which is the true ſenſe: and in the Common-wealth, the Law and the Judge are two diſtinct things, &c.cap.9.

Contra 1. It is untrue that the Scripture cannot ſay or ſhew, which is the true ſenſe: the Apoſtle often uſeth this phraſe, The Scripture ſaith, Rom.9.17. 11.2. Therefore the Scripture both ſaith and ſpeaketh to the faithfull, that have eares to heare the voice of the Scripture. 2. Wee denie not but as in the Common-wealth there is the Judge and the Law; ſo in the Church, there is the Scripture and interpreter of Scripture: who although hee hath not like authoritie over the divine law, as the Judge over an humane; yet as the Judge muſt fetch the interpretation of the Law out of the Law it ſelfe; ſo he that interpreteth muſt expound Scripture by Scripture.

Let us heare what that reverend and learned man, and conſtant Martyr, B. Cranmer thinketh of this meane in comparing and conferring of Scripture: I wonder, ſaith he, that you doe attribute ſo little to the reading of Scripture, and conferring of places, ſeeing the Scriptures doe ſo much commend the ſame, as Ioh.5. Scrutamini Scripturas, ſearch the Scriptures, *Fox.*Pag.1460. in diſput. Oxonienſ. This reverend fathers judgement, I dare ſet againſt either Stapletons opinion, or any others of that ſide: nay, put the ſentence of their whole Church in one ballance, it ſhall not bee able, in this, or any other point of the Chriſtian faith, to weigh againſt the faith of theſe holy Martyrs in the day of judgement, but ſhall bee found lighter than vanitie.

Leo the firſt alſo ſometime Biſhop of Rome, whoſe judgement our adverſaries, I thinke, dare not refuſe, thus writeth of this meane in having recourſe to the Scripture; Epiſtol.decretal.10.cap.1. In hanc inſipientiam cadunt hæretici, qui cum ad cognoſcendam veritatem aliquo impediuntur obſcuro, non ad propheticas voces, Apoſtolicas literas, nec ad Evangelicas authoritates, ſed ad ſeipſos recurrunt, &c. Such is the fooliſhneſſe of Hereticks, that when as by ſome darke place they are hindred from knowing the truth, they will not reſort to the Prophets and Apoſtles writings, but truſt onely to themſelves, &c. His counſell is, if wee meet with any darke place in Scripture, to reſort to none other but to the Prophets and Apoſtles for the underſtanding thereof. And Clemens the firſt ſaith, as hee is cited by Gratian.decr.p.1.tit.37.c. 14. Ex ipſis Scripturis debemus ſenſum capere veritatis: We muſt take the ſenſe of the Scripture, from the Scriptures themſelves.

4 The fourth rule is the analogie and proportion of faith, which is nothing elſe but the ſumme and grounds of religion gathered out of Scripture, ſuch as are contained in the Creed, the Lords Prayer, the ten Commandements, and in our whole Catechiſme. We muſt take heed that in the interpretation of Scripture we ſwarve not from this rule of faith, nor impugne any principle of Religion. Wherefore the Papiſts interpretaion of thoſe words of Chriſt we doe reject, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body: who would have the very fleſh of Chriſt preſent in the ſacrament: for this is againſt the article of the Creed, that Chriſt is aſcended into heaven, and there ſitteth till his comming againe in judgement.

Concerning theſe meanes, thus writeth Auguſtine, *Rariſſimè invenitur ambiguitas in verbis propriis, quam non aut circumſtantia ipſa ſermonis qua cognoſcitur Scripturarum intentio, aut interpretum collatio, aut præcedentis linguæ ſalvat inſpectio, de doctrin. Chriſt.lib.*3.4. There is almoſt no ambiguitie in any word properly uſed (that is not metaphoricall or borrowed) which may not either by the circumſtance of the place, the conference and comparing of interpreters, or by looking into the Originals, eaſily be taken away. Auguſtine wee ſee approveth this method, though our adverſaries like it not. So alſo in your owne decrees: decr.p.2.cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 22. Quicunque aliter Scripturam intelligit, quam ſenſus ſpiritus ſancti flagitat, quo ſcripta eſt, hæreticus appellari poteſt: He that otherwiſe underſtandeth Scripture, than after the meaning of the ſpirit wherewith it is written, is an heretike, &c. Wherefore the Scripture out of Scripture muſt bee expounded: for where elſe is the ſpirit of the Scripture to bee found, but in the Scripture?

Beſides theſe meanes, which I have ſhewed, prayer muſt bee uſed before wee enterpriſe any thing, that the Lord would direct us. And they which cannot ſo eaſily take this courſe, which is preſcribed, ſhall doe well to ſeeke helpe of learned and godly expoſitors, or to conſult with their Paſtors and Miniſters.

Concerning forraine teſtimonies, that the interpretation of Scripture muſt bee agreeable to the Scripture it ſelfe, and taken out of it. 1. Ieremie Oecumenine Patriarch, in the name of the Greeke Church, thus teſtifieth: Let theſe things ſuffice you, which as you ſee doe beſt accord and agree with the Scriptures, unto us divinely given, according to the interpretation and expoſition of the moſt wiſe and holy fathers inſpired of God, &c. And a little after: Some of you will demand, by what meanes one may attaine unto this; that ſhall be doe by the aid and aſſiſtance of God, if he attempt nothing, and follow but that which hath beene ordained by the Apoſtles and holy Councels, &c. 2. The Abyſſines beleeve, that there is not any power, Councell, or whatſoever, to make lawes, &c. much leſſe any doctrine, which is not grounded upon the Scripture. The ſame author relateth, that the Abyſſines have certaine writings beſide the Scripture, of great authoritie among them, called Manda and Abetilis, which they ſuppoſe to have beene compoſed by the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem; and Preſter Iohn asked Alvares, whether hee had ſeene that booke: yet they make the Scripture ſufficient without theſe bookes : wherby it appeareth, that they preferre the Scripture it ſelfe before all by-interpretations.

Harm. ſect.1. pag.5.

3 The reformed Churches : Helvetia, latter confeſſion, chap.2. thus approveth of theſe meanes of interpreting Scripture : We acknowledge that interpretation of Scripture for authenticall, which is taken from the Scriptures themſelves, that is, the phraſe of that tongue, in the which they were wruten, they being alſo weighed according to the circumſtances, and exponnded according to the proportion of places like or unlike, or of more and plainer, according with the rule of faith and charitie, &c. Here all thoſe foure rules are approved before ſet downe. Confeſſion of Wittemberg, chap.30. The true meaning of Scripture is to be ſought in the Scripture it ſelfe, and among thoſe, that being raiſed up by the ſpirit of God, expound Scripture by Scripture, &c.

Harm. p.15.

4 Some teſtimonies of the Romane Church are produced before, as of Leo 1. *Clement.*1. Gratian: whereunto I will adde that obſervation of Arias Montanus of the Phariſies, who interpreting that place *Matth.*23. how they ſhut up the kingdome of heaven, thus writeth: They did ſo obtrnde the obſervation of their owne ceremonies, &c. that they would not permit that any, vel de ſacris ſcripturis cogitarent, ſhould ſo much as thinke of the ſacred Scriptures, but according to the preſcript of their interpretations. Theſe Phariſies, as the Papiſts now, would not have men to have recourſe to the Scriptures, but to relle upon their interpretations onely. Eſpenſæus alloweth that ſentence of Gregorie : Qui verè loqui deſiderant, à ſacris literis ſumant, &c. They who will ſpeake truth, let them take out of the ſacred Scriptures, what they will ſpeake, that whatſoever they ſpeake, they may reduce to the foundation of the divine authoritie.

Comment. in Matth.23.

Greg. moral. in Iob, lib.18. cap 14.

The ſeventh Queſtion : Concerning the perfection and ſufficiencie of Scripture.

11. Error.

THis queſtion is divided into three parts. Firſt, whether the Scriptures bee abſolutely neceſſarie. Secondly, whether they bee ſufficient without unwritten traditions. Thirdly, whether there be any traditions of faith and manners beſide the Scriptures.

The firſt part of the neceſſity of the Scriptures.

The Papiſts.

THe Jeſuite laboureth to prove that the Scriptures are not ſimply neceſſarie : which we denie not, for meat is not ſimply neceſſarie, for God may preſerve man without : ſo in reſpect of God, nothing is ſimply neceſſarie : God is not neceſſarily tied to uſe this or that meanes. But his arguments doe tend to this end, to ſhew that the Scriptures are not neceſſarie at all, and may bee ſpared in the Church (ſo ſaith Petrus à Soto) the Scripture was not alway extant, and it is not neceſſarie unto faith: and the Scripture is not now ſo neceſſarie ſince Chriſt, as it was afore : *Tilman. de verb. Dei error.*17.

*Argum.*1. There was no Scripture from Adam to Moſes, for the ſpace of two thouſand yeeres, and yet true religion was kept and continued , and why might not true religion bee as well preſerved 1500 yeeres after Chriſt without Scripture, as afore? *Bellarmine de verb. Dei, lib.*4.*cap.*4.*argum.*1.

We anſwer : It followeth not, becauſe in times paſt God taught his Church immediately by a lively voyce, and other extraordinary meanes, as viſions, revelations, prophecies, that the written word is not neceſſarie now, when all other meanes ceaſe : for the Lord ſaw it good, that his word ſhould bee left in writing, that we might have a certaine rule of our faith in this corrupt and ſinfull age. And what elſe is this, but to controll the wiſdome of God, ſaying, it is not neceſſary or needfull for the Church, which the Lord ſaw to be needfull : for if the Lord had thought it as good for us to be taught without Scripture, as in that ſimple and innocent age of the world (I meane innocent in reſpect of us) he would not have moved and ſtirred up his Apoſtles to write.

Argum. 2. After the time of Moſes, when the law was written, yet there were many that feared God amongſt the Gentiles, which had not the Scriptures, as Iob, and the other his friends : Ergo, the Scripture not neceſſarie. The Jewes alſo themſelves uſed traditions more than Scriptures, as Pſalme 44. *verſ.*1, 2. The fathers did report the workes of God to their children : by the negligence alſo of the Prieſts the law was loſt, as 2 *King.*22. we read that the volume of the law was found, which had beene miſſing a long time : Bellarm. ibid.

We anſwer : firſt, even the faithfull amongſt the Gentiles did read the Scripture , as the Eunuch Act. 8. had the booke of the Prophet Eſay. Secondly, the Jewes declared the workes of God unto their children , but the ſame were alſo written , as how the heathen were caſt out before them , and of their deliverance out of Egypt : thoſe were the things they heard of their fathers, as wee read *Pſal.*44. and 78. yet all theſe things are recorded in the Bookes of Moſes. Thirdly, what though the Prieſts were negligent in preſerving the Scriptures, it is no good argument to prove that therefore they are not neceſſarie, neither was the whole booke of the law loſt, but either Moſes owne manuſcript, or the booke of Deuteronomie. Yet he hath proved nothing.

Argum.*3. The Church after Chriſt wanted the Scriptures many yeeres : Ergo, they are not neceſſarie, Bellarm. ibid.

We anſwer, it is a great untruth : for the old Teſtament the Church could not be without, and the new Teſtament was written not long after in the age of the Apoſtles : whoſe lively voyce and preachings were unto them, as their writings are now to us. See now what ſtrong arguments they bring: the Scriptures were not neceſſarie in the time of the Patriarkes, when God taught them by his owne voyce : they were not neceſſarie in the time of the Prophets and Apoſtles, when they had men inſpired of God to teach them : Ergo, they are not now neceſſarie, when neither God teacheth from heaven, neither have we any Prophets or Apoſtles to inſtruct us by heavenly revelations : nay rather becauſe they were not neceſſarie then, when they had other effectuall meanes, notwithſtanding they are neceſſarie now, ſeeing there is no other way of inſtruction left unto us.

Argum.*4. If the writing of the Scriptures were neceſſarie, then Chriſt would not have omitted to have given his Apoſtles charge and commandement ſo to doe : but this hee doth not ; neither doe the Apoſtles make mention of any ſuch charge that was given them, but onely to preach : *Bellarmine cap.*4. *argum.*2.

Anſw.*1. It was not needfull that our Saviour Chriſt ſhould give his Apoſtles charge concerning all neceſſarie things to bee done in the Church, ſeeing hee was to ſend them the holy Ghoſt who ſhould leade them into all truth : and therefore our Saviour telleth them, that he had many things to ſay, but they could not beare them, but the ſpirit afterward ſhould teach them, Iohn 16.12,13. The inſtitution of Deacons, *Act.*6. the forbidding of things ſuffocated, *Act.*15. for a time were neceſſarie; yet herein they received no inſtruction from Chriſt, who referred them to the direction of the ſpirit. Secondly, Chriſt notwithſtanding did alſo give them a charge to write, both by way of implication, where he biddeth them teach all nations, *Matth.*28. which was impoſſible to be done by their lively voyce, and therefore muſt be ſupplied by their writing : as alſo directly Iohn is charged to write to the Churches, *Apocal.*1,11. And this being the laſt booke which is commanded to be written, it is not to be doubted of, but that the reſt were written by the ſame authoritie. Thirdly, the Jeſuite himſelfe ſaith: Apoſtoli non niſi neceſſitate quadam coacti : The Apoſtles did not write, but thereunto moved of neceſſitie. But if the Scriptures were not neceſſarie, there ſhould be no neceſſitie of writing.

John 16.12, 13.

Revel. 1.11.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Scriptures are neceſſarie for the people of God, the reading, preaching, and underſtanding whereof is the onely ordinarie meanes to beget faith in us, wee thus prove out of the Scriptures themſelves.

Argum.*1. Theſe Scriptures containe neceſſarie knowledge to ſalvation, which cannot be learned but out of the Scripture : Ergo, they are neceſſarie. The knowledge of the law is neceſſarie ; but that only is derived from the Scripture : as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, *Rom.*7.7. he had not knowne luſt to be ſinne, unleſſe the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not luſt. And if the right knowledge of the law is not learned, but out of Scripture ; much more the knowledge of the Goſpell which is more high and myſticall, and more ſtrange unto our nature.

Rom. 7.7.

Argum.*2. That whereby we are kept from error and doubtfulneſſe in matters of faith is neceſſarie: but this is performed by the Scripture. Ergo. Firſt, the Scripture keepeth us from error : *Matth.*22.29. Ye erre, not knowing the Scriptures (ſaith our Saviour.) The ignorance of Scripture was cauſe of their error. Secondly, if our knowledge were only builded upon tradition without Scripture, we ſhould be doubtfull and uncertaine of the truth : ſo S. Luke ſaith in his Preface to Theophilus, I have written (ſaith he) that thou mighteſt be certaine of thoſe things, whereof thou haſt been inſtructed. Hence we conclude, that although we might know the truth without Scripture, as Theophilus did, yet wee cannot know it certainly without it.

Matth. 22.29.

Argum.*3. If the Scriptures be not neceſſarie, then we may be without them ; but this cannot be : Ergo, the Scriptures cannot be ſpared : for then God had done a needleſſe and ſuperfluous worke in ſtirring up the Prophets and Apoſtles to write. S. Paul ſaith, that whatſoever is written, is written for our learning, that through patience and conſolation of the Scriptures we might have hope, *Rom.*15.4. The Lord ſaw in wiſdome that his people could not bee without the Scriptures, which are neceſſarie for their learning, for their comfort, and to ſtrengthen their hope : how then dare our adverſaries ſay, that the Scriptures are not neceſſarie, ſeeing theſe things wrought in us only by the Scriptures, knowledge, conſolation, hope, are moſt neceſſarie.

Rom 15 4.

Argum.*4. The knowledge of eternall life is neceſſarie ; but that commeth only by the Scriptures: Iohn 5.39. Search the Scriptures, for in them you thinke to have eternall life : Ergo, they are neceſſarie. Againe, to be made wiſe unto ſalvation, and perfect to every good work, are neceſſary : but theſe things the Scripture worketh, 2 *Timoth.*3.15.17. Further, a man cannot walke in darkneſſe without light, ſo that light in darkneſſe is neceſſarie : but the Scriptures are light in a darke place, 2 *Pet.*1.19. Laſtly, our Saviour himſelfe ſaith to Martha, *Luk.*10.42. unum neceſſarium, one thing is neceſſarie, namely that which Mary had choſen, to heare the word and voyce of Chriſt, who elſewhere ſpeaketh not but in Scripture, Iohn 5.39. they teſtifie of me, and verſe 46. Moſes wrote of me : Ergo, the knowledge of the Scriptures is neceſſarie.

Let Auguſtine now put in his verdict: Illud credo, quod etiam hinc divinorum eloquiorum clariſſima au- thoritas eſſet, ſi homo illud ſine diſpendio ſalutis ignorare non poſſit. de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. lib. 2. 36. I thinke (ſaith he) that even concerning this matter (ſpeaking of the Originall or beginning of the ſoule) the Scriptures would not have been ſilent, if wee might not ſafely be ignorant of this matter, without danger of ſalvation, &c. Ergo whatſoever is neceſſarie to ſalvation, is onely to be found in Scripture (for other matters there not expreſſed, there is no danger in not knowing them) therefore the Scriptures by this Fathers Judgement are moſt neceſſarie. Let us heare a teſtimonie of their owne.

Concil. Lateranenſ. ſub Innocentio 3. cap. 10. We finde this decree: Inter catera, qua ad ſalutem ſpectant populi Chriſtiani pabulum verbi Dei permaxime noſcitur ſibi neceſſarium, quia ſicut corpus materiali, ita anima ſpirituali nutritur cibo. Among other things which concerne the ſalvation of Chriſtian people, the food of the word of God is knowne to bee moſt neceſſarie; for as the body is fed with materiall food, ſo the ſoule with ſpirituall, &c. the food therefore of Gods word is moſt neceſſarie. And leſt it might be imagined, that the word unwritten is as well here underſtood, as the word written: let it be conſidered what Gelaſius Biſhop of Rome writeth in his decretals, Epiſtol. ad Euphemiam. Fides ex auditu, auditus per verbum Dei: illudi. verbum, quod confeſſioni B. Petri Apoſtoli portas inferni nunquam prævalituras eſſe promiſit: Faith commeth by hearing, hearing by the word of God: that is, that word which promiſed that the gates of hell ſhould not prevaile againſt the confeſſion of Peter, &c. And this is the word written; the neceſſity, then of the word of God, is the neceſſity of the word written.

Reſponſ. Rohit.

Here we have the teſtimonie of forraine Churches for the neceſſitie of Scripture. 1. For the Greeke Church: the King of Muſcovia ſaid. If the Goſpell had not been written, how could the word of God have been underſtood.

2 The Abyſſines have certaine writings beſide the Scriptures, which they call Manda, and Abetiles, whereof they make great account; but they doe beleeve that the holy Scripture is ſufficient to ſalvation without thoſe; they hold then the Scriptures onely to be neceſſarie.

3 The reformed Churches in the Weſt: confeſſion of Helvetia, the latter, chapt. 1. Wee judge that from theſe Scriptures is to be taken true wiſedome and godlineſſe, the reformation and government of Churches, alſo the inſtuction in all duties of pietie, &c. But thoſe inſtructions and directions are moſt neceſſarie: confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 2. Afterward God himſelfe for that exceeding tender carefulneſſe which he hath of his and their ſalvation, gave in commiſſion to his ſervants the Prophets and Apoſtles, that they ſhould put thoſe his oracles in writing, and he himſelfe alſo wrote the two Tables of the Law with his owne finger, &c. But if the Lord had not ſeene, that the Scriptures were neceſſarie, his tender carefulnes ſhould not have ſo much appeared, in cauſing them to be written: 2. of Bohemia, cap. 1. Without the revelation of Scripture, there is no wholeſome knowledge, no faith nor acceſſe to God.

4 The teſtimonie of the Romaniſts is not here wanting. Roffenſis: The Scripture is a certaine conclave of all truthes; Quæ Chriſtianis omnibus neceſſaria ſunt: which are neceſſarie for all Chriſtians: Ederus: whatſoever things are neceſſarie to ſalvation, præſcripta ſunt omnia, They are all written in the Scriptures.

The Papiſts.

12. Error.

THey doe ſtrangely affirme, that the Scriptures containe not all things neceſſarie to bee knowne concerning faith and manners, and that they are not ſufficient without traditions, Bellarmine cap. 3. 4. Lindanus a Papiſt ſaith, that the Scriptures containe not all things neceſſarie to ſalvation. Andradius, that their approved traditions are of equall authoritie with the Sciptures, Ex Tilmam. de verbo error. 2.

Argum. 1. The Jeſuite thus reaſoneth againſt the ſufficiencie of Scripture: There are divers books of Canonicall Scripture loſt and Periſhed: Ergo that part of Canonicall Scripture which remaineth, is not ſufficient. That much is loſt, he thus proveth, 1. Chron. cap. vlt. mention is made of the books of Nathan and Gad. 2. Chron. 9. of the books of Abijah and Ieedo: and in the new Teſtament, Col. 4. of the Epiſtle of S. Paul. to the Laodiceans: all thoſe books are loſt.

Anſw. 1. S. Auguſtine thus anſwereth, thoſe books of the Prophets, which are named in the Kings, are not found in the Canon, for what cauſe, ſaith he, I know not, Niſi quod exiſtimo prophetas illos, alia ſicut homines, hiſtorica diligentia; alia ſicut prophetas inſpiratione divina ſcribere potuiſſe: But that I think, that thoſe Prophets might write ſome ſtories as men, and ſome things as Prophets, by the inſpiration of the ſpirit, lib. 36. de civitat. Dei. c. 38. Thus Auguſtine thinketh that thoſe books now wanting, were no part of the Canonicall Scripture. But we denie not, but that ſome bookes are now wanting, which were part of Canonicall Scripture, and yet that which remaineth is ſufficient: as ſome of Salomons bookes are Periſhed, which he wrote of hearbs and plants, and many of his Proverbs: the Lord ſaw that they were not ſo greatly neceſſarie for us to ſalvation, as containing matter of ſtorie rather than of doctrine. Secondly, there is not ſo much wanting, as the Jeſuite would beare us in hand: for the bookes of the Prophets which he nameth, are the ſame with the bookes of the Chronicles and of the Kings, which no doubt were written by thoſe Prophets. And as for the Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Laodiceans, there was never any ſuch : The text is, Written from the Laodiceans ; it was the Epiſtle rather of the Laodiceans to Saint Paul, unto the which he partly maketh anſwer in the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, and therefore he would have it read alſo in their Church. And this is Saint Hieromes judgement concerning this Epiſtle : Legunt quidam & epiſtolam ad Laodicenſes, ſed ab omnibus exploditur : Some doe read the Epiſtle to the Laodiceans, but it is refuſed of all men : catalog. ſcriptor.

*Argum.*2. There are two things in Scripture, the letter and the ſenſe : the firſt is knowne to all that can read, but the ſecond is not had without tradition : Ergo, the Scriptures are not ſufficient, Bellarm.

Anſw. Firſt, the ſenſe of the Scriptures is contained in the Scriptures themſelves, and if it bee not there to be found, it is not the ſenſe of the Scriptures. And of this matter your owne Clemens giveth a good rule, as he is alleaged by Gratian: Decret. par. 1. diſt 37. cap. 14. Non ſenſum, quem extrinſecus adulteretis, alienum & extraneum debetis quærere, &c. ſed ex ipſis ſcripturis ſenſum capere veritatis : You muſt not ſeeke for a ſtrange ſenſe without, which you may adulterate at your pleaſure, but out of the Scriptures themſelves the ſenſe of truth muſt be had. Secondly, the Jeſuite is intangled in his owne ſpeech : for he ſaith, Duo eſſe in ſcriptura. voces ſcriptas, & ſenſum : There are two things in Scripture, the written words, and the ſenſe : Ergo, the ſenſe of Scripture (by his owne confeſſion) is in the Scripture.

*Argum.*3. There are many points which we ought in no wiſe to be ignorant of, which the Scripture ſpeakes either obſcurely of, or not at all.

Firſt, theſe things are obſcurely and doubtfully ſet downe in Scripture, the equality of the perſons in Trinitie, the proceeding of the holy Ghoſt, from the Father and the Sonne ; the doctrine of originall ſinne.

Wee anſwer : firſt, if theſe things be found at all in the Scriptures, it is ſufficient concerning the queſtion we have in hand. Secondly, the Scripture doth manifeſtly declare the truth in all theſe points, the quality of the perſons is directly proved, 1 *Ioh.*5.7. There are three which beare record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are one : the proceſſion of the ſpirit, Iohn 15.26. The ſpirit is there ſaid to be ſent from the Father and the Sonne ; and Iohn 14. 26. Whom the Father will ſend in my name : Originall ſinne is deſcribed plainly by the Apoſtle, Rom. 5. 12. though the name be not found in Scripture : By one man ſin entred into the world, and death by ſin, for as much as all men have ſinned.

Iohn 15.26.
Iohn 14.26.
Rom. 5.12.

Secondly, there are divers things neceſſarie to be knowne, not at all declared in Scripture : theſe examples he ſetteth downe. It is neceſſary to beleeve that the Canonicall Scriptures are contained in the old and new Teſtament. And not onely ſo, but to know which bookes are Canonicall, as that the Goſpell of Marke and Luke are Canonicall, and ſo of the reſt : yea it is neceſſary to know that theſe are the very Goſpels which were written by S. Marke and Luke, and ſo of the reſt of the Scripture : but theſe things cannot be knowne out of the Scriptures themſelves, but by tradition. Ergo, the Scriptures containe not all neceſſary knowledge.

Anſwer : Firſt, the Scriptures doe give teſtimony of themſelves, the old Teſtament giveth witneſſe to the new, and the new againe to the old. All Scripture is given, ſaith S. Paul, by inſpiration : and the harmonie and conſent of Scripture, the propheticall predictions, the holy precepts, the chaſte and pure ſtile, doe evidently ſhew, that they are the writings of the holy Ghoſt : and the judgement and ſentence of the Church concerning Canonicall Scripture, if it be right, muſt and doth ariſe, and is grounded upon theſe conſiderations drawne out of the Scriptures themſelves.

Secondly, likewiſe to know every particular booke of Scripture to be Canonicall, it is not ſimply neceſſary to ſalvation, ſeeing many godly learned men have doubted of ſome bookes, who (God forbid) but might notwithſtanding be ſaved. Againe we anſwer, that thoſe very particular bookes, as the Goſpels of Marke and Luke are received, the Goſpels of Bartholmew and Thomas refuſed, not ſo much becauſe the Church hath ſo determined, but becauſe their determination agreeth with the truth it ſelfe : ſeeing thoſe forged Goſpels are found to be full of fables, and therefore worthy of ſmall credit : the other are pure, chaſte, and divine writings. So S. Auguſtine ſaith ; In Apocryphis licet invenitur aliqua veritas, tamen propter falſa multa, nulla eſt canonica authoritas : In the Apocryphall bookes, though ſome things be true, yet becauſe there are many falſe, they are not of any canonicall authoritie: Lib. 15. *de civitat. Dei, cap.*23.

Thirdly, we anſwer, that it is not neceſſary to know the author of every booke, for as much as there are divers bookes of Scripture whoſe authors are not knowne : it is enough to beleeve them to bee Scripture.

Further ſaith the Jeſuite, it is neceſſary to know that Mary continued a perpetuall virgin. We anſwer, the Scripture ſaith every where ſhe was a virgin, neither maketh mention of any children ſhee had : and therefore out of the Scripture we gather, that ſhe ſo continued. And thus doth S. Hierome anſwer Helvidius : Ut hæc, quæ ſcripta ſunt, non negamus, ita ea, quæ non ſunt ſcripta renuimus : As we denie not what is written, ſo we refuſe what is not written. That God was borne of a virgin we beleeve, quia legimus, becauſe we read ſo in Scripture : but that Mary was married afterward, wee beleeve not, quia non legimus, becauſe we doe not read it. Secondly, Baſil ſaith that it is ſufficient to know ſhe was a virgin before the birth of Chriſt. Laſtly, to know that the Paſch or Eaſter muſt be kept upon the Lords day is neceſſary. Anſ. There is no ſuch neceſſitie in it to ſalvation, neither needed the Church downe, they ſhould not exceed 48. in all : and to every citie was a quantitie and circuit of ground allotted, which ſhould in length and bredth containe every way three thouſand cubits, *Numb.*35. *verſ.*5.8.

Numb.35.5.8.

2 It muſt alſo be provided, that the gifts and legacies beſtowed upon the Church be for the maintenance of pietie and true religion, and to good uſes, not to nouriſh idolatrie and ſuperſtition : or if they be given through ignorance of the time, to ſuch unlawfull purpoſes, they ought by the Prince to be converted to better and more godly uſes : As now in England, the lands of Colleges which were firſt given to maintaine that abominable Idoll of the Maſſe, are turned to the maintenance of learning and true religion. So was the law of Moſes, that the gold and ſilver, braſſe, iron, tinne, lead, which the Iſraelites ſhould receive of the Heathen, firſt ſhould paſſe through the fire, and ſo be made cleane, and fit for holy uſes : Even thus according to this law, the lands conſecrate to ſuperſtition, having now paſſed through the fire of Gods word, and triall of the truth, may ſafely be uſed to the glory of God in advancing and ſetting forward true religion and vertue : As *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*8.*leg.*8. Valentin. Martian. It is made a law, that the houſes wherein heretiks did meet, ſhould be adjudged to the orthodoxall Church : *tit.*12.*leg.*11. Honor. That the habitations of certaine heretiks called Cælicolæ, ſhould be annexed to the true or right beleeving Church. Likewiſe, *leg.*17. The Synagogues of the Jewes are confiſcate to the uſe of the Church, Theodoſ.Valentin.

Numb.31.23.

3 Another thing muſt be required, that Church-men ought not to abuſe the poſſeſſions of the Church, to maintaine pride, idlenes, and riotous living : for in caſe they doe notoriouſly ſpend and waſte the Church goods, the Prince (by whoſe authoritie they were given to the Church) may juſtly take from them their ſuperfluities, not leaving the Church deſtitute of ſufficient maintenance. This is notably proved by Iohn Huſſe, in the defence of Wickliffes articles : And we have ſeene the practice thereof in England, in the late ſuppreſſion of Abbeyes ; wherein (though ſome of thoſe lands might otherwiſe have beene diſpoſed of) yet the providence of God notably appeared in bringing deſolation upon thoſe Cels of ſinne, and uncleane cages of birds. Neither hath this beene an unuſuall and unaccuſtomed practice in the Church, for Princes to correct the miſdemeanour of Prieſts, by cutting them ſhort of their temporalties : for in Auguſtines time the Chriſtian Emperours diſpoſſeſſed the Donatiſts of their Churches and poſſeſſions, and gave them to the Catholike Biſhops. And at that time the Donatiſts cried out, as the Papiſts now doe, Quid mihi eſt imperator ? What hath the Emperour, the King to doe with our lands ? Auguſtine anſwereth, Secundum jus ipſius poſſides terram : by the law of Princes the Church enjoyeth her poſſeſſions : Recitemus leges imperatorum, videamus ſi volverint aliquid ab hæreticis poſſideri : Let us then rehearſe the lawes of Emperours, and ſee whether they ſuffer hereticks to enjoy the Church poſſeſſions.

Tractat. in Iohann. 6.

That it is lawfull for the civill Magiſtrate to diſpoſſeſſe eccleſiaſticall perſons of their livings and maintenance abuſing them to wantonnes and impietie : ſee *Concil.Colonienſ.part.*9 *cap.*21. Fraternitates, quæ vocantur,&c. The brotherhoods, as they are called, which are made in the honour of ſome Saints, have a ſhew indeed of godlineſſe, but as they are now uſed, both Clerkes and lay men doe follow nothing elſe in ſuch places but riot and drunkennes, and ſometimes they intend conſpiracies againſt potentates, we thinke it better that they ſhould be cleane taken out of the way, and their revenewes given to the poore.

Now, whereas there is a great complaint amongſt malecontents and ſuperſtitious favorites of the popiſh profeſſion, that the Abbey lands were taken away from their Cels, confiſcate to the Prince, and converted to lay uſes : for the better anſwer thereof, I will briefly ſet downe theſe concluſions. Firſt, that it hath been alwayes lawfull for the Prince to ſeaze upon ſuch goods and lands as were abuſed to idolatrous and ſuperſtitious purpoſes, which afterward being in the Princes right, were at his devotion and diſpoſition to be employed. See the law of *Conſtantine Cod.lib.*1. *tit.*14.*leg.*1. That the goods of ſacrificing Prieſts were confiſcate to the Prince. And *leg.*5. Honor. Theodoſ. Omnia loca quæ ſacris veterum error deputavit, noſtræ rei jubemus ſociari : All thoſe places which have beene in the error of former time appointed to ſacred uſes, wee bid to be joyned to our treaſurie : excepting ſuch things as were beſtowed by the liberalitie of Princes upon private perſons. So S. Ambroſe anſwereth Symmachus, making the like objection, for that the Emperours had ſpoiled the Idoll prieſts of their revenewes, Sublata ſunt prædia, quia non religioſe utebantur iis quæ religionis jure defenderent : Their lands were taken away, becauſe they did not religiouſly uſe thoſe things which they held under colour of religion. The ſame anſwer may we make our adverſaries in the like caſe.

Secondly, we ſay it had been very meet, that a greater part of the Abbey lands had beene converted to godly uſes, as it was religiouſly by the Prince intended, if his godly purpoſe had not been by the covetouſneſſe of ſome other hindred : according to the law of Anaſtaſius, Cod.lib. 1.tit. 8.*leg.*9. who decreed that the poſſeſſions of hereticks ſhould be confiſcate to the Prince, yet ſo, that the oratories and places of prayer be ſtill maintained.

Thirdly, if any were rather led with the expectation of their private gaine, than the hatred of ſuperſtition in the diſſolution and ſpoile of Abbeyes, we defend them not, neither hold them excuſed, as Auguſtine ſaith to the Donatiſts, and it is alleaged in the decrees, *Cauſ.*23.*qu.*7.*c.*1. Quiſquis occaſione hujus legis,&c. If any man by occaſion of this law, which Kings ſerving Chriſt have promulgated to correct your impietie, doth greedily covet your goods, he pleaſeth not us.

Secondly, concerning the ſecond kinde of maintenance, which ariſeth by the proper and peculiar inheritance, which Church Miniſters have: we alſo yeeld our conſent, that a Miniſter, to whom ſome inheritance is befallen, is not bound to diſclaime therefore the maintenance which hee hath of the Church: for the Levits, beſide the allotment of the tithes, had their proper houſes, which they might ſell, and redeeme againe, *Levit.*25.32. As alſo that place, *1 Timoth.*3.2. will beare it, where the Apoſtle would have a Biſhop to be harborous, and given to hoſpitalitie: which hee ſhall be much better able to performe, having ſome helpe, beſide the Church living, of his owne inheritance. So then it is not to be doubted, but that Eccleſiaſticall perſons may, together with ſpirituall livings, retaine their owne proper inheritance: referring them both to one and the ſelfe ſame end, that is, to countenance their Miniſterie, and to be the better able to performe the externall duties thereof, in releeving the poore, helping the needie, and ſuch like. Yet notwithſtanding there was an imperiall law, that hee which lived of the Church, ſhould renounce his owne patrimonie: of the which law S. Ambroſe maketh mention, writing againſt Symmachus: Nobis etiam privata ſucceſſionis emolumenta recentibus legibus denegantur: Wee alſo by a late law are forbidden to reape any advantage by private inheritance. And the ſame is ratified in the decrees, cauſ. 1.*q.*3.*c.*6.Clericos illos, &c. Such of the Clergie ſhould be maintained by the Church ſtipends, as have no goods nor patrimonie from their parents, &c. As then this law, that whereas a man hath ſufficient maintenance beſide of the Church, his patrimonie ſhould paſſe to the next heire, is not of it ſelfe unjuſt, nor unreaſonable, where the ſtate of the Common-wealth doth require it: ſo where there is no ſuch poſitive law, it is both lawfull and convenient, that Miniſters together with their eccleſiaſticall calling, ſhould enjoy their patrimonies, for the gracing and dignifying of their Miniſterie. Bellarm.c.27. Levit.25.32. 1 Tim.3.2.

Thirdly, as touching the proper maintenance and revenue of the Church, which is by tithes: divers points are agreed of and accorded betweene us, 1. That tithes are due onely to the Church, and cannot be alienated to any other uſe, nor be turned to the maintenance of lay-men: for there muſt be, where tithes are payed, a matter of giving and receiving, *Philip.*4.15. We give ſpirituall, and receive temporall: which becauſe lay-men doe not performe, they have nothing to doe with the tithe: for not keeping the condition, they cannot claime the covenant. Philip.4.15.

Damaſus, decret. 3. thus writeth of this matter: Qua fronte, qua conſcientia oblationes vultis accipere qui vix valetis pro vobis, nedum pro aliis Deo preces offerre? With what face or conſcience can you receive tithes and oblations (ſpeaking of lay-men) ſeeing ye are neither able to pray for your ſelves nor others?

*Lateranenſ. ſub Alexand.*3.*part.*26.*cap.*8. Qui decimas laico in ſeculo manenti conceſſerit, eſt deponendus: He that granteth tithes to a ſecular lay-man, ſhould be depoſed. And many ſuch decrees they have beſide againſt the appropriating of tithes to lay-men, as *decret. Greg. lib.*3.*tit.*30.*c.*15. Decimas laicis, &c. Tithes can in no caſe be granted to lay-men for their inheritance. *Cauſ.*16.*qu.*1.*c.*68. Uſus decimarum, &c. The uſe of tithes muſt in no wiſe redound to ſecular men, &c. It may therefore juſtly be marvelled at, how contrarie to their owne Canons, they made ſo many impropriate benefices: for it is certaine, that impropriations (which may more fitly ſo be called, than appropriations) have been founded of ancient time in Poperie, and by the Popes themſelves maintained: for in King Henrie the third his reigne, ſuit was made up to Rome to Pope Alexander the fourth by the Biſhops of this land, that benefices appropriate to religious houſes might be reſtored: but they could not be heard, ex Flor. Hiſtor.

Firſt, it may be ſaid, that by the Canons it was not lawfull for the Civill Magiſtrate to make a benefice, appropriate, but the Biſhop might.

*Contra. Cauſ.*16.*qu.*7.*c.*1. Periculum animæ, &c. They of the lay ſort incurre the danger of their ſoule, that receive tithes either of Biſhops or Kings. Secondly, though it be not permitted to every Biſhop, yet the Pope hath authoritie to doe it.

*Contra, Cauſ.*16.*qu.*7.*c.*3. *Gregor.*7. Si quis amodo Epiſcopus, &c. If any Biſhop hereafter doe grant the tithes to lay-men, let him be counted amongſt the greateſt heretikes, &c. This Pope maketh no exception, but includeth all Biſhops, and ſo the Pope too, if he will be a Biſhop.

Thirdly, it will be anſwered, that they made no grant of tithes to lay-men, but only to religious houſes, and Cathedrall Churches, and ſuch like.

Contra. Firſt, the multitude of Canons made againſt the holding of tithes by the lay ſort, doth evidently ſhew, that it was a continuall practice in Poperie, to alienate the tithes of the Church to lay-men. Secondly, it is alſo againſt their owne Canons, that benefices ſhould be annexed or appropriate to houſes or Churches of religion. *Decret. Gregor. lib.*3.*tit.*5.*c.*30. *Innocent.*3. decreeth, that no penſions ſhould be granted out of benefices: which is a leſſe matter, than to alienate all the tithes, and reſerve only a penſion. Againe, *ibid.c.*33. mention is made of a generall Councell, that would not ſuffer Chappels or Churches to be annexed to Prebends. Likewiſe, *Clement. lib.*1 *tit.*5.*c.*1. Ut prælati beneficia non applicent menſis: That Prelates ſhould not employ benefices for the maintenance of their table, &c. Thus if they had obſerved their owne Canons, this pernicious device of appropriating benefices ſhould not have found entertainment.

2 The people are bound in conſcience, to give of their goods unto their lawfull Paſtors, according to the determination of the Church, and the poſitive lawes of Princes made in that behalfe, the which they are bound to obey : and the tenth being the hire of the labourer, and the wages of the Matth.10.10. Lords workman, Matth. 10. 10. it ſhall be as great a ſin to defraud the Miniſter of his portion, as to Iam.5.4. keepe backe the meat or wages from the hireling and labourer, *Iam.*5.4.

Cabilonenſ. cap. 18. Qui decimas dare neglexerint, excommunicentur : They that neglect to pay their tithes, let them bee excommunicate. It is no ſmall ſinne therefore which deſerveth excommunication.

3 We utterly denie alſo, and herein conſent with our adverſaries, that tithes are not pure almes, as ſome have beene of opinion in times paſt, but are a plaine debt of the people to their Miniſters. Firſt, the wages or reward of the labourer is no almes, but his due, and of right belonging to him : but Bellar.cap.25. tithes are ſo unto Miniſters who labour in the Lords harveſt, 1 Timoth. 5. 16. Ergo, no almes. Se- 1 Tim.5.16. condly, almes doe alway exceed the deſert of the almeſman, they ſhew the benevolence and free heart of the giver, not any merit or worthineſſe in the receiver ; but tithes and all other temporall 1 Cor.9.11. gifts are farre inferiour to the labours of Miniſters : for what are temporall things to ſpirituall, 1 Cor. 9.11? Ergo, no almes. Thirdly, the tenth is the Lords part, and by him it is aſſigned to his faithfull Mi- 2 Cor.5.20. niſters, which in Gods ſtead doe teach us, 2 *Cor.*5.20. But almes cannot be given unto God. Againe, the tenth is as an inheritance to the Church, and to be counted as the corne of the barne, or the abun- Numb.18.26.27 dance of the winepreſſe, *Numb.*18.verſ. 26.27. it is unto them as the fruit of the earth, and increaſe of the ground to the husbandman : Therefore to be counted no almes from men, but the bleſſing of God both upon the Paſtor and the people.

*Concil. Moguntienſ. ſub Arnulpho cap.*17. Admonemus, ut decima omnino dari non negligatur, timendum eſt enim, ut quiſquis Deo debitum abſtrahit, Deus propter peccatum ei auferat neceſſaria : Wee ſtraightly charge, that no man neglect to pay his tithes : for it is to be feared, that as a man doth withhold from God his due, ſo God ſhould for his ſinne deprive him of things neceſſarie, &c. Tithes therfore are debitum, a due debt, therefore no almes.

*Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. lib.*1.*cap.*34. Attende diligenter lector, quod omnes primitia, & quicquid ad ſanctuarium oblatum eſt ſacerdotis ſint, & ad jus ejus pertineant : Underſtand diligent reader, that all firſt fruits, and whatſoever was offered in the ſanctuarie, was the Prieſts, and belonged to him of right. Therefore tithes are more than almes.

Likewiſe, *decret. Greg. lib.*3.tit. 30.*c.*14. Cum decima, &c. Seeing tithes were not inſtituted of men, but of God, quaſi debitum exigi poſſunt, they may be exacted as a due debt.

4 Wee alſo agree, that it is not meet that the maintenance of Miniſters ſhould be voluntarie, or left to the peoples choiſe : but that it is convenient, juſt, equall, requiſite, that both by lawes of Princes, and conſtitutions of the Church, proviſion ſhould be made, as there is, for the neceſſarie, certaine, and competent maintenance of the Church. Firſt, the tenths in the law were eſtabliſhed by a perpetuall ordinance : Ergo, the maintenance of Miniſters ought now alſo to bee confirmed by poſitive lawes, as then tithes were : the argument followeth : for if their Miniſterie deſerved ſuch aſſurance of their maintenance, which did but ſerve at the Altar, much more now doth the Miniſterie of the Goſpell deſerve it. And the Apoſtle alſo ſeemeth ſo to reaſon, 1 *Cor.*9.14.15. that as they which waited 1 Cor.9.14. on the Altar were partakers of the Altar : ſo God hath ordained (ſaith he) that they which preach the Goſpell, ſhould live of the Goſpell. That is, as then the people did not onely give tithes voluntarily, but were bound by law to doe it : even ſo God hath ordained, that Miniſters ſhould live of the people : and by this ordinance of God, the people may as well be bound unto it now, as they were then. Secondly, if Miniſters, bound in conſcience to feed and inſtruct the people, may alſo be enforced and urged by the conſtitutions of the Church and lawes of Princes to doe that which in conſcience they are bound : why may not the people likewiſe be conſtrained by publike law, to performe that dutie to their Paſtors, which their owne conſcience doth urge them unto? Thirdly, experience teacheth, that men are hardly (even living under a law) brought to pay their rights to the Church, no not in thoſe places where they can take no exception againſt their Paſtors : how much more unwilling would they be (I ſpeake of thoſe which are not yet wonne to a through liking of the Goſpell) if they were left to their owne libertie?

Neither is it ſafe to give the people this libertie to detaine their tithes from unſufficient Clerks, leſt under this colour afterwards they might denie them to thoſe which were worthie. Sometimes indeed it was put to the peoples choice to pay their tithes to whom they would, and to withhold them, if they ſaw cauſe, for as yet there was no poſitive law made, but ſince it hath beene otherwiſe determined by civill conſtitutions of Princes, as Concil. Ticinenſ. ſub Lodovico Pio : Ut non pro ſuo libitu Clericis laici decimas tribuerent, &c. That the lay ſort ſhould not pay tithes at their pleaſure to the Clergie : *Synod. Auguſt. cap.*19. Qui juſtas non ſolvunt decimas, ter moniti, eis neganda communio : They that being thrice admoniſhed doe not pay their full tithe, let them be denied the Communion. Anno 1538. King Henrie the eighth of excellent memorie, made this poſitive law concerning tithes : For as much as by a law eſtabliſhed, every man is bound to pay his tithes, no man ſhall by colour of dutie omitted by their Curates, detaine his tithes, or be his owne Judge, but ſhall truly pay the ſame, as hath beene accuſtomed without any reſtraint, or diminution ; and ſuch lack and default as they find in their Parſons or Curates, to call for reformation there- Pag.1001.2.45. of at their Ordinaries, and other ſuperiours hands ; Fox pag. 1096. col. 2. Such civill conſtitutions of Princes not contrarie to the word of God, doe binde ſubjects to obedience.

5 We alſo acknowledge (as Bellarmine ſeemeth to grant, chap.25.) that to pay preciſely the tenth, is not now commanded by the law of God: as though that order could not be changed by any humane law, as the Canoniſts hold, but men neceſſarily were bound to pay tithes. But thus farre forth we hold, that it is grounded upon Gods law: firſt, in reſpect of the equitie of the law, in paying of tithes, which is this, that the Miniſters ought to live of the people, and to have ſufficient and competent maintenance by them: which equitie and ſubſtance of the law is morall, and ought alwaies to continue, being grounded upon the law of nature: Thou ſhalt not mouſle the mouth of the Oxe that treadeth out the corne. 1 Cor.9.8. Secondly, in asmuch as the lawes of the land and of the Church doth confirme this ancient conſtitution of tithes, (which is left indiferent of it ſelfe) wee are bound to obey ſuch lawes, being agreeable to the Word of God: And in this ſenſe alſo, tithes may be ſaid to be due by the law of God, becauſe Gods word commandeth obedience to our Magiſtrates, in all lawfull ordinances.

Synod, Moguntin. cap. 75. Statuimus, ut decima, quæ jure debentur divino, ſolvantur ſine fraude: We appoint that tithes, which are due by the divine law, be payd without any fraud. This Councell doubteth not to affirme, tithes to be due by the word of God.

6 Though the law of tenths be not now neceſſarie, as it was a ceremonious dutie: but it is lawfull either to keepe that or any other conſtitution for the ſufficient maintenance of the Church, whether it be more or leſſe than the tenth part; yet we doubt not to ſay, that this proviſion for the Church maintenance by paying of tithes, is the moſt ſafe, indifferent and ſureſt way, and no better can come in the place thereof. Firſt, it is the moſt equall way to have every thing in the kind, according to the Apoſtles rule: Let him that is taught make his teacher partaker of all his goods, Gal.6.6. But this Gal 6.6. cannot be ſo conveniently done any other way, as by erecting of a ſet ſtipend, or ſuch like, as by paying the tenth in the kind.

2 Whereas S. Paul requireth, that the Paſtor ſhould be given to hoſpitalitie, 1 *Tim.*3.2. who ſeeth 1 Tim.3.2. not, that for the better and more convenient maintenance of his houſe, it is the fitteſt courſe to receive the tenth in his owne nature and kinde: being ſo more able to relieve the poore, having ſufficient proviſion and ſtore of his owne?

3 The tenth is as the corne of the barne, and the abundance of the winepreſſe, *Numb.*18.27. that Num.18.27. is, it is more or leſſe, as God giveth encreaſe to the fruits of the earth: which is the moſt equall and indifferent way: for then the Miniſter, as God bleſſeth them, ſhall be partaker of the bleſſing; and if they ſuffer loſſe, he likewiſe ſhall beare the burthen with them.

4 This manner of tithe-paying is farre more ſafe and ſure, than any way can be deviſed, becauſe of the long cuſtome and continuance, which without great hazard of the Church cannot bee broken. Neither is it poſſible by any act of Parliament, to make ſtipends ſo certaine, as this conſtitution of tithes is: for the people will hardly yeeld to breake their cuſtome: and when an old cuſtome is broken, a new is not ſo ſoone received: nay, many yeeres muſt runne to make a cuſtome. Againe, whatſoever may be objected againſt tithes, that they breede much trouble, wrangling and contention, may be more juſtly feared, in the collection, levying, impoſing and demanding of ſtipends.

5 Hitherto we have ſhewed, that it is moſt naturall, that the Miniſters portion ſhould be payed in the kind. Now, concerning the tenth, though it be not neceſſarie, yet that proportion being firſt appointed by the wiſdome of God, is verily thought to be moſt equall and indifferent betweene the Paſtor and the People, as both affording competent ſuſtenance for the one, when hee liveth of the tenth, rather than the fifteenth, or twentieth part, which were too ſcant allowance; nor yet grieving or oppreſſing the other, when the owner hath nine parts reſerved to himſelfe. And ſo if it bee moſt meete, that things ſhould be anſwered in their kind, no proportion can ſerve better, than that which was firſt deviſed by the Lord himſelfe: yet we hold neither the one nor the other to be neceſſarie.

It hath beene an old objection, that the owner ought firſt to deduct his ſeede, and of the reſidue to pay his tithe: thus was it articulated againſt one Thomas Clarke, Fox pag.830. col.1. But this notwithſtanding, people ought to pay the full tenth, and not to be ſo ſtraight handled, ſeeing God hath Pag.758.263. given them nine parts for that one tenth: See to this purpoſe, *Concil. Triburienſ. cap.*13. ex Auguſtino. Da mihi decimam, &c. Give mee thy tithe (ſaith the Lord,) if thou will not give me the tenth, I will take away thy nine parts: if thou giveſt me the tenth, I will multiplie thy nine: If any man aske why tithes are given, let him know, that they are given, both that God being well pleaſed therewith, ſhould give us things neceſſary, and that the Miniſters being thereby relieved ſhould more freely attend their ſpirituall ſervice, and have to give to the poore, &c. Thus we ſee why both the tenth is to be given, and why in the kinde.

Hitherto for the moſt part we and our adverſaries are agreed, both concerning tithes, as alſo other maintenance of the Church: but we differ about tithes in two points. Firſt, there is a queſtion betweene us and the Rhemiſts about the neceſſitie of paying of tithes: Secondly, concerning the right whereby the Miniſters of the Goſpell may demand their duties, which they ſay, is by reaſon of their Prieſthood; of both theſe now briefly in their order.

The Firſt part, whether the paiment of tithes be neceſſary.

The Papiſts.

86.Error. THe payment of tithes is a naturall dutie, that men owe to God in all Lawes, and to be given to his Prieſts in his behalfe for their honour and livelyhood, Rhemiſt.annot.7.Hebr.ſect.4.

Gen.28.22. *Argum.*1. Iacob vowed to pay tithes to God, before the law, *Gen.*28. Ergo, it is a perpetuall law, Rhemiſt.

Anſwer. One Papiſt ſhall anſwer another at this time. Bellarmine proveth by this example the cleane contrarie, that the payment of tithes is not morall, becauſe it did not binde before the law of Moſes: for Iacob made a voluntarie vow to pay his tithes, upon a condition: but if hee had beene bound abſolutely to pay tithes, they ſhould have beene payed without any ſuch condition. It was therefore a voluntarie and a franke offering in Iacob.

Match.23.23. *Argum.*2. Chriſt confirmeth the law of tithes, *Matth.*23.23. though he preferre the workes of mercie and judgement, yet he ſaith that the other ought not to be left undone, ſpeaking of the paying of tithes, Rhemiſt ibid.

Anſw. Wee muſt conſider in what time our Saviour Chriſt ſo ſpake unto the Phariſies: for as yet neither the law nor the ceremonies thereof were fully abrogated: Chriſt was circumciſed and Mary Luk.2.21.22. his mother purified according to the law, *Luk.*2.21.22. Our Saviour alſo biddeth the leper to ſhew himſelfe to the Prieſt, and offer a gift as Moſes commanded, *Matth.*8.4. Yet none of all theſe ceremonies doe now ſtand in force, though Chriſt did them at that time, and bade them to be done. The ſame anſwer may ſerve alſo concerning his injunction to the Phariſies as touching their tithes.

The Proteſtants.

THe law of paying tithes did borrow part of the morall, part of the judiciall, and part of the ceremoniall law. The morall part therefore, is the equitie of the law, which is perpetuall, that as the Levites then lived of the tenth, ſo the Miniſters at all times ought ſufficiently to be provided and cared for. The judiciell part was in this, that as the Levites were not much leſſe in common account than the tenth part, being one of the tribes, (though in proportion of number, they made welneere the thirtieth part: for the reſt of the tribes were numbred to ſix hundred, three thouſand five hundred and fifty perſons, *Numb.*1. the Levites made but two and twenty thouſand, *Numb.*3.) As I ſay the Levites made one whole tribe, and were not much leſſe than the tenth part in that account, being in number the thirteenth tribe, for there were twelve beſide: So it was thought reaſonable that the tenth part of their brethrens goods ſhould be allotted unto them; which being a judiciall and politike conſtitution of that countrie, doth neither neceſſarily binde Chriſtians now, neither is forbidden, but left in that reſpect indifferent. Thirdly, the ceremonie of the law was in this, becauſe the tenth was due to the Prieſts and Levites for their ſervice at the Altar, and as belonging to their Prieſthood: In which ſenſe tithes are neither due now unto Miniſters, nor in any ſuch reſpect can be challenged, ſeeing the Prieſthood of the law is gone, and all the ceremonies thereof: wherefore although it be a wiſe and politike conſtitution, that the people ſhould pay their tithes, and may conveniently be retained, yet is it not now of neceſſitie impoſed upon Chriſtians, as though no other proviſion for the Church could ſerve but that.

*Argum.*1. Bellarmine thus reaſoneth (for herein he is an adverſary to our Rhemiſts) (one Jeſuite againſt another) If the law of tithes be morall, then the other precept annexed to this law was morall alſo, that the Levites, becauſe they lived of the offerings and tithes, ſhould have no patrimonie or inheritance beſide. And by this reaſon every Miniſter now ought to reſigne ſuch inheritance and poſſeſſions, as are left him by his friends: which is not to be admitted: Ergo, neither the other law ſtandeth neceſſarily in force, *Bellarm.cap.*25.

*Argum.*2. S. Paul ſaith in flat words, If the Prieſthood be changed, of neceſſitie there muſt alſo be Heb.7.12. a change of the law, *Hebrew.*7.12. But the Prieſthood of the law is altered and changed: Ergo, alſo the law of the Prieſthood, and ſo conſequently the ceremoniall dutie of tithes.

3 In Auguſtines time, it was no generall law nor cuſtome in the Church, that tithes ſhould bee In Pſal.146. payed. Præcidite & deputate aliquid fixum ex annuis fructibus vel quotidianis quæſtibus: Defaulke, ſaith he, and appoint ſome certaine portion, either of your yeerely fruites; or your ordinary and daily gaines. Decimas vis? decimas exime; Will you make choiſe to pay tithes? then let that be the portion. And yet this is no great matter: for the Phariſies, whoſe righteouſneſſe you ought to exceed, De tempor. ſerm.205. payed their tithes: Tu vix milleſimam das: Thou ſcarce payeſt the thouſanth part: Tamen non reprehendo, vel hoc fac, ſic ſitio, ut ad iſtas micas gaudeam: Yet I finde not fault: doe ſo ſtill: for I ſo thirſt after your well doing, that I refuſe not your very crummes, &c. We ſee then, that then the payment of tithes was voluntarie: Auguſtine refuſeth not the ten hundreth, that is milleſimam partem, the thouſandth part, which he calleth their crummes.

*Concil. Aurelianenſ. can.*17. Sicut in arbitrio dantis eſt, ut tribuere, quod voluerit, debeat, ita ſi inbedientia vel contumacia, in aliquo accipientis extiterit, in arbitrio ſit præſentis, utrum debeat revocare: As it is in the will of the giver, to give what pleaſeth him, ſo if he find him ſtubborne and froward, which receiveth it, it is in his power to revoke the gift, &c. Wee ſee then that the word of God hath laid no ſuch neceſſitie upon tithes, for then this Councell would not have permitted ſuch libertie.

Let us adde the ſeale, The profeſſed Bohemians thus deliver their opinion, who endured much for Gods cauſe: They preach and ſay, that men are bound to give them tithes, wherein they ſay falſly, for they cannot prove by the new Teſtament, that our Lord did command it, and his Diſciples warned no man to doe ſo, neither did they themſelves receive them: exhortat. Bohemor. articul. 15. Therefore tithes are not neceſſarily due by the word of God.

This may further appeare by the practice of other Churches, that the payment of tithes (though of all other moſt fit) is not impoſed as a neceſſarie law. 1. For among the Muſcovites: ſacerdotes ex contributione quadam ſuſtentantur, the Prieſts are maintained by a certaine contribution; and certaine houſes are aſſigned unto them with fields and medowes, whereof they live, as husbandmen, by their owne labour, or their ſervants. Guagnin. de religion. Ruth.

2 The ſame is the cuſtome of the Æthiopike Church, the Prieſts have no tithes, but certaine grounds, whereof they live by their owne labour, or their ſervants: Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Biſhop: I alleage not the practice of theſe Churches, as allowing the ſame, (for I preferre the condition of thoſe Churches, which yet doe enjoy the ancient proviſion of the Miniſterie by tithes) but onely to ſhew, that the cuſtome of tithing is not impoſed by any neceſſitie. Damianus a Goes de morib. Æthiop.

3 The former confeſſion of Helvetia .c. 18. The faithfull Miniſters are worthie of their reward, neither doe they offend, when as they receive a ſtipend, and all things that be neceſſarie for themſelves and their familie, &c. Saxonie artic. 14. The paſtors ought chiefly to be releeved out of the revenewes of rich monaſteries, that the ſtudies of the poore be thereby furthered, ſchooles may be erected, &c. They urge not the tithes, but ſufficient releefe for the maintenance of Miniſters. Harm. ſect. 11. pag 346. S: ct. 15. p. 473.

4 Bellarmine is a witneſſe againſt them in this caſe, who denieth, that the paiment of tithes is of divine right, or a morall precept, quoad determinationem quantitatis, in reſpect of the determinate quantitie, and he confuteth the Canoniſts for ſo holding: and therein hee conſenteth unto Alexander 3. par. qu. 51. m. 3. and Thomas in 2. 2. q. 87. art. 3.

The ſecond part, by what right tithes are due to the Miniſters of the Goſpell.

The Papiſts.

Tithes or their equivalent are due to Chriſt and the prieſthood of the new Teſtament, Rhemiſt. annot. Heb. 7.4. This then is their opinion, that the prieſthood of the Goſpell being more excellent than the prieſthood of the Law; and their ſacrifice, which they offer up in the Maſſe, being of greater worthines, they may with better right challenge tithes, then the Prieſts of the law did for their ſervice at the Altar: So that Tithes are due to the Church onely becauſe of the Prieſthood, not for any other dutie appertaining to that office, as preaching the word, miniſtring the Sacraments, or any ſuch. 87. Error.

Abraham payed tithes, they ſay, to Melchiſedech, which was the prieſt of the moſt high God, in offering the formes of bread and wine, wherein Melchiſedech did ſacrifice: Ergo, tithes are now due to the Prieſts of the Goſpell and new law, which are all after the order of Melchiſedech, Rhemiſt. Heb. 7. ſect. 4. & 8.

Anſw. First, Melchiſedechs prieſthood conſiſted not in offering bread and wine to God, but brought them forth to refreſh Abraham: neither were they formes of bread and wine onely, as you imagine, but very materiall bread and wine: for it Melchiſedechs prieſthood had conſiſted therein, the Apoſtle would not have omitted the chiefe thing, wherein Chriſts prieſthood was ſhewed forth, as he doth, making no mention at all of it, Heb. 7. Againe it is great blaſphemie to ſay, that every popiſh Prieſt is after the order of Melchiſedech, nay that the proper act of Chriſts prieſthood conſiſteth in the perpetuall offering of his bodie and bloud in the Church: for by this reaſon every impure prieſt doth more properly offer the bodie of Chriſt in the Maſſe, than it was offered by himſelfe upon the Croſſe: than the which, what greater blaſphemie can be uttered? And yet they are not aſhamed to ſpeak it: yea the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the Croſſe, (ſay they) was after the order of Aaron, and not after the order of Melchiſedech; and ſo they prefer every popiſh prieſt offering in the Maſſe, before Jeſus Chriſt ſacrificing himſelfe upon the Croſſe: contrarie to the Scipture, which maketh this difference betweene the prieſthood of Aaron and the prieſthood of Melchiſedech; that the prieſts of the law were many, becauſe they were taken away by death: but Chriſts prieſthood is eternall, becauſe he dieth not, Heb. 7.23. But if there ſhould be many prieſts after Melchiſedechs order, there ſhould herein be no difference at all. Wherefore ſeeing Melchiſedechs prieſthood only reſteth in Chriſt, and is not tranſlated to any other; and that there is now no ſacrifice left but ſpirituall, of praiſe and thankſgiving, Heb. 13.15. it followeth that by reaſon of any ſuch externall prieſthood or ſacrifice, tithes are not now due unto the Church, neither in any ſuch regard ought to be challenged.

The Proteſtants.

Tithes, or their equivalent are not due to the Church in reſpect of any ſacrificing prieſthood, of which ſort there is none in the new Teſtament ordained to continue: but for other paſtorall duties,and principally the preaching and diſpenſing of the word,and inſtructing of the people.

Argum. 1. If there were any ſuch prieſthood,and tithes in that right did appertaine to the Church; it is moſt like, that our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles would have challenged them: But there is no one precept in the new teſtament concerning paying of tithes but onely for a ſufficient maintenance for the Miniſters of the Goſpell, *Fulk.Heb.7.ſect.*4.

Galath.6.6.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul every where, ſo oft as he ſheweth the dutie of Chriſtians in relieving and maintaining their paſtors,maketh only mention of ſowing of ſpirituall things, 1 Cor.9.11. and of teaching and inſtructing, Gal.6.6. Ergo, tithes are due unto Paſtors and Miniſters only or eſpecially for their feeding and inſtructing, and ſowing ſpirituall ſeed, which is the word of God.

Argum. 3. There is no ſuch ſacrificing prieſthood now in the Church, as wee have partly ſhewed before,and ſhall of purpoſe more fully declare it afterward: for every where in the new Teſtament ſpirituall ſacrifices are commanded: and all Chriſtians are made Kings and Prieſts unto God, Apoc. 1.6. Other prieſthood we read of none. Wherefore in that reſpect tithes cannot be due.

Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith, Si mendicum non contemnis, quanto magis bovem, per quem triturатur hac area? If thou deſpiſeſt not a begger, how much more oughteſt thou to have regard of the oxe that treadeth out the corne on the floore?&c. That is,the Miniſter that preacheth the Goſpell: for ſo Saint Paul expoundeth it, 1 *Tim.*5.17. The Elders,ſaith he,that labour in the word and doctrine are worthy double honour: and then it followeth, *verſ.*8. for the Scripture ſaith, Thou ſhalt not mouzle the mouth of the oxe that treadeth out the corne. Sufficient maintenance therefore to the Miniſters is due for their labour and travell in the word.

Concil.Ticinenſ.ſub Lodovico Pio: Vt decima eccleſiis tribuerentur, ubi baptiſmum, prædicationem, & alia Chriſti ſacramenta percipiunt: That tithes ſhould be payed to theſe Churches, where men receive Baptiſme, preaching of the word,and other Sacraments. Concil.Lateran.ſub Alexand.3.part.48. c.1. Illi eccleſiæ decima ab his perſolvenda,qui ab ea eccleſiaſtica percipiunt ſacramenta: To that Church men muſt pay their tithes,where they receive the Sacraments of the Church,&c. So likewiſe their Canon law giveth two reaſons for the payment of tithes,one in reſpect of God himſelfe; In ſignum univerſalis dominii: To ſignifie the univerſall dominion and ſoveraigntie, which God hath, decret. Gregor.lib.3. tit.30.c.33. Innocent. Another reaſon is in regard of the Miniſters themſelves, as eod. libro. tit.28.c.1.Leo 3. tithes and other rights are due unto that Church, In qua cœleſti pabulo refici conſuevit; Where a man hath uſed to be refreſhed with the heavenly food. Tithes therefore are due not in reſpect of any ſacrifice, but for the Sacraments and the Word preached.

W. Thorpe holy confeſſor: Tithes were the hire and wages limited to the Prieſts and Levites in the law for bearing about the tabernacle, for ſlaying of beaſts, and for burning of ſacrifice, &c. But now, as Saint Paul ſaith, ſeeing the prieſthood is changed, there muſt alſo be a change of the law, &c. pag.537. col.2. The argument is framed thus: By what right tithes were payed under the law, they are not payable now, becauſe the law is changed; but then they were due for ſacrificing: Ergo, they are not ſo due now.

And for further evidence: 1 The Greek Scholia,upon theſe words of S. Paul, 1 Cor.9.11. If we have ſowne unto you ſpirituall things, doe thus note; Magiſtrum paſci oportere inſinuat, he inſinuateth, that the maſter and teacher muſt be nouriſhed: ſpiritualia fidem vocans, &c. hee calleth ſpirituall things faith, and carnall food. Egeſippus upon theſe words Iſay. 1.2. the oxe knoweth his owner, thus obſerveth, Quid per bovem niſi ſanctus quiſque prædicator intelligitur, &c. What is underſtood by the oxe but every holy preacher labouring in the ſeed of the word.

THE SIXTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE SVPERSTITIOVS ORDERS, AND SECTS OF MONKES AND FRIERS.

MOnkes, in Latine called Monachi, derived of the Greeke word, were ſuch as lived ſolitarily, and thereupon had they their name: And they were at the beginning of three ſorts: ſome were called Eremites, that lived in woods and deſerts by themſelves: there were other which were mued up and incloſed in Cels and walls, which had not ſo much libertie as Eremites had; but kept alwaies in their cages and cloſets, and ſo in miſerie ſpent their daies: and theſe were called Anchorites, that is, ſeparated, ſet apart from all men and living by themſelves. There was a third ſort called Cœnobites, which lived in companies, as it were in Colleges by themſelves, and had all things common; and theſe properly were called Monks, Bellarm. lib. 2. de monach. cap. 3. This controverſie hath many queſtions.

1 Concerning the beginning and originall of Monkes, and of their divers ſects, two parts.

2 Concerning Counſels of perfection, whether they differ from Evangelicall precepts.

3 Concerning vowes in generall, three parts: Firſt, whether it be lawfull for Chriſtians to make vowes. Secondly, in what things lawfull vowes conſiſt. Thirdly, whether voluntarie vowes are any part of the worſhip of God.

4 Concerning monaſticall vowes in particular, three parts. Firſt, of the vow of voluntarie povertie. Secondly, the vow of obedience. Thirdly, the vow of continencie.

5 Concerning Monaſticall perſons. Firſt, whether the younger ſort ought to be admitted to profeſſe Monkerie. Secondly, whether children can profeſſe without conſent of their parents. Thirdly, whether married perſons may with mutuall conſent. Fourthly, whether either of the parties, the marriage not conſummate, may enter into profeſſion.

6 Concerning the rules and diſcipline of Monaſticall life. Firſt, of their ſolitarie and ſevere kind of life. Secondly, of their canonicall houres. Thirdly, their habit and apparell. Fourthly, of their maintenance, whether they ought to live by begging, or labour of their hands. Of theſe in order.

The firſt queſtion, of the beginning and originall of Monkes, and of their divers ſects.

THis queſtion hath two parts: Firſt, of their originall. Secondly, of the diverſitie of their ſects.

The firſt part, of the originall of Monkes.

The Papiſts.

THey make this profeſſion to be as ancient as the time of our Saviour Chriſt, and prove the beginning thereof both out of the new and old Teſtament. 88. Error.

Argum. 1. Elias and Elizæus were Eremites, and lived without wives, neither poſſeſſed any riches: Ergo, this profeſſion of life is moſt ancient, Bellarm. cap. 5. Rhemiſt annot. in Mark. 9. 3.

Anſ. Firſt, the argument followeth not; they had no wives, nor riches: Ergo, were Eremites: for even amongſt the Papiſts themſelves many were kept from wives, (as their prieſts) and yet were neither Monkes nor Eremites. Secondly, though we read not that Elizæus was married, yet the ſonnes of the Prophets were, that lived as it were in the ſame College with him, which Bellarmine maketh a College of Monkes and Eremites; and ſaith very untruly, that they all lived without wives, cap. 5. 2 King. 4. 1.
Thirdly, though Elias and Elizæus were ſometime in the wilderneſſe, yet they alwaies remained not, neither lived there.

Argum.*2. Iohn Baptiſt a perfect patterne of Eremiticall life, for living in the deſert and wilderneſſe, for his rough apparell, for abſtaining from all delicate meat, *Rhemiſt.annot.Matth.*3.1.

Anſw. Firſt, Iohn Baptiſts calling was ſingular and extraordinarie, and therefore he cannot be made an author of any ordinarie profeſſion. Secondly, we denie not but his life was auſtere, and that he made his abode in a ſolitarie place, yet there were houſes and villages not farre off: his apparell alſo was courſe cloth, made of the hard haires of Camels: his food was of locuſts and wilde honey, the uſuall and common meat of that countrie: he was an extraordinarie preacher of repentance, and ſhewed in himſelfe an example of auſtere life, as it became the forerunner of Chriſt: but being no miniſter of the Goſpell, but the laſt Prophet of the law, he cannot be a patterne of an ordinarie profeſſion under the Goſpell, *Fulk.annot.Matth.*3.*ſect.*1.

Arg.*3. Nay Bellarmine fetcheth his Monkiſh order from a more ancient beginning than from Elias, and Iohn Baptiſt; yea from before the floud: for Enos (ſaith he) ſeemeth to have brought in ſome ſtricter kind of life, and peculiar maner of worſhipping God: whereas the text ſaith, that he began to call upon the name of God: that is, after another manner: for Adam, Seth, Abel, before this time called upon the name of God, *cap.*5.

Anſ. Firſt, who would have thought, that there had beene Monkes and Eremites before the floud if the Ieſuite had not ſaid it, or that this text, which he alleageth, could have proved it? The argument followeth not: Enos brought in a peculiar worſhip of God, therefore was founder of the Eremiticall life: for he brought in the true worſhip of God: but the other is ſuperſtitious and erroneous. Secondly, Tremelius readeth agreeably to the Hebrew, Tum nomen Dei cœptum eſt invocando profanari: Then the name of God began to be prophaned in calling upon, that is, his worſhip began to be corrupted: for the Hebrew word ſignifieth both to invocate and call upon God, as alſo to corrupt, pollute, or prophane. Thirdly, if we read as they doe, the name of God began to be called upon: it only ſheweth a reſtoring and renuing of the true worſhip of God, which was polluted by the poſteritie of Cain, whoſe ſtocke and familie is ſet downe in that chapter, *Geneſ.*4. and when prophaneſſe increaſed in the poſteritie of Cain, then the faithfull ſeparated themſelves from the reſt, and aſſembled by themſelves apart, to worſhip God.

Argum.*4. Bellarmine alſo ſaith, that the inſtitution of Monkes proceeded from the Apoſtles, who appointed all things to be common, as it may appeare, *Act.*4. and the Apoſtles were the firſt Chriſtian Monks: So that his argument concludeth thus, All things were common in the Apoſtles time: Ergo, there were Monkes then, *lib.*2.*de monach.c.*5.

Anſ.*1. If the Apoſtles were the firſt Monkes, how then is Iohn Baptiſt, princeps monachorum, prince of the Monkes, as Bellarmine hath affirmed a little before? he cannot be the firſt, and the Apoſtles the firſt too. 2. If the communitie in uſe amongſt the beleevers in thoſe daies, made them Monks, then the whole congregation was of Monks: for as many as beleeved had all things common, *Act.*2.44. which were reckoned to the number of three thouſand ſoules, *v.*41. So then by this reaſon all Chriſtians muſt be Monks. 3. There was a communitie amongſt them, but not like the Monkiſh communitie: for firſt their communitie was voluntarie, not impoſed upon them; but the other is inforced by vow: ſecondly, their communitie was not, in relinquiſhing their goods, and not to meddle with them themſelves, as men were perſwaded in monkery: but an equal diſtribution of them to as many as needed: thirdly, that communitie was in reſpect of that preſent neceſſitie in the time of perſecution; but Monkiſh communitie is not upon neceſſity, but upon ſuperſtitious curioſity, whereby they think to merit heaven. 4. We grant there was ſuch a communitie, as we ſay, amongſt them, but they cannot ſhew a profeſſion of ſingle life amongſt the beleevers in thoſe daies, of whom many were married, as Ananias and Saphira, *Act.*5. and therefore they could not be Monks. 5. I oppoſe againſt them the judgement of their owne Thomas, who affirmeth, that there were no Monks in Saint Pauls time, *ex citat. Eſpenc.in.*2.*Tim.pag.*189.c. Act.2.44.41.

Our Doway men will picke out Monkes in the old Teſtament: as whereas Moſes ſheweth what fiſh may bee eaten and are counted cleane in ſeas, rivers, and ſtanding pooles: by the firſt they underſtand Chriſtian people taken out of the Sea of this world, by the ſecond Preachers, by the third Monks, which keepe alwaies in their cloiſters, as thoſe fiſh in their pooles. Levit.11.9. Doway Bible, pag 409.

Contra. Thus have they fiſhed in theſe waters, as the ſaying is, and caught a frogge, firſt, there is no ſuch word in the originall which ſignifieth a lake or ſtanding poole: there are three words, bamaijm, ἐν τοῖς ὕδασιν, in the waters, bajammim, ταῖς θαλάσσαις, in the ſeas, bannechalim, ἐν τοῖς χειμάῤῥοις, in the rivers: the firſt is the generall word, which comprehendeth the two either ſalt waters on the Sea, or freſh water in the rivers. Secondly, of all other waters, the ſtanding pooles are the worſt, and therefore thereby their cloiſter Monkes are unfitly ſignified, whom they take to be the beſt. Thirdly, even in all theſe there were ſome cleane fiſh with finnes and ſcales, and ſome uncleane, as the muddie eeles: and ſuch were their uncleane cloiſter Monks, of muddie and ſtinking life: thus have they loſt a good argument for Monkes.

The Proteſtants.

VVE ſee then that this Monaſticall and ſolitarie kinde of life hath no proofe nor ground out of the Scriptures, either by precept or example: Nay, this kind of profeſſion was not knowne in the Church, for divers hundred yeeres after Chriſt; how could then the Apoſtles bee the founders of this order? And though the name of Monkes be of ſome antiquitie in the Church, yet they were farre unlike unto Popiſh Monkes, that for theſe many yeeres have peſtered the Church.

1 It is certaine, as Hierome witneſſeth, that Antonius, and his diſciples Amathas and Macarius, were the firſt beginners of Monkiſh profeſſion almoſt three hundred yeere after Chriſt, Fulk. annot. Mark 9.3. Anno 260. when Sixtus the 2. was Biſhop of Rome, Paulus began the profeſſion of Heremites, as Mantuan writeth:

Iſta ego crediderim per noxia tempora Paulum:
Niligenam ſole ardentem, qui primus eremum
Incoluit, liquiſſe urbes, &c.
About this time Paul was the firſt, I geſſe,
Who neere to Nilus dwelt in wilderneſſe.

Hierome alſo reporting divers opinions of the originall of Monkes, as how ſome ſhould fetch their beginning from Elias and John Baptiſt, which conceit hee miſliketh, at the laſt alleageth the common opinion, Antonium huius propoſiti fuiſſe caput, that Antonie was the head or beginning of this profeſſion: to the which he ſubſcribeth, in vita Pauli. And he ſaith of Hilarion, Nec quiſquam monachum ante ſanctum Hilarionem in Syria noverat: There was no Monke knowne in Syria before Hilarion. But the Apoſtles were not unknowne in thoſe countries.

2 The beginning of Monkes, was not for the more merit, and to doe penance for their owne ſins and the ſinnes of the world: for Antonius the firſt Monke confeſſed, that Chriſt only ſuffered for the ſinnes of the world: But the firſt occaſion was given in the time of perſecution, when as men were not ſuffered to worſhip God aright publikely: and therefore they fled into the wilderneſſe, Rhemiſt. Matth.3. ſect.3. As Hierome reporteth of Paulus the Heremite, who being perſecuted of his ſiſters huſband under Decius and Valerian, fled to the Mountaines, & ſic neceſſitatem in voluntatem vertit, and ſo made a vertue of neceſſitie, vita Pauli. But now ſeeing the Chriſtian faith is openly profeſſed, they have no ſuch cauſes to ſeeke ſolitarie and ſecret places.

Fulk Matth 3. ſect 3.

3 The popiſh Monkes are altogether unlike theirs: Firſt, they lived in ſolitarie places, farre from reſort of people: but the popiſh Mock-monkes live in cities and the frequencie of the people, Fulk. annot. Matth.3. ſect.3. Secondly, the Monkes in times paſt laboured with their hands: but the popiſh fat-bellies pampered themſelves in idleneſſe. Thirdly, they are altogether unlike in life and doctrine, as we ſhall ſee more at large afterward, Fulk. ibid.

Concil. Colonienſ. part.10. cap.1. Vita monaſtica non multo poſt Apoſtolorum tempora cœpit, quanquam multis perſuaſum ſit, aliam tunc fuiſſe, quam nunc eſt monachiſmi rationem: The Monkiſh life began not long after the Apoſtles time, although many think that the profeſſion of Monkes was farre otherwiſe in thoſe times, than now.

This Councell maketh Monkerie not to be ſo ancient as the Apoſtles, and beſides ſaith, that the Monkiſh life now, is farre unlike the life of the ancient Monkes: as it followeth, cap.9. Videmus monaſteria mulierum in pleriſque locis, in ſuſpectas de incontinentia domos, ut quid gravius dicam, eſſe commutata: We ſee the monaſteries of women, to be turned into wanton houſes ſuſpected of incontinencie, to ſay no more, &c. But ſuch were not the ancient Colleges and aſſemblies of Monkes.

Their owne Extravagant alſo ſaith, that the rule of S. Francis is not grounded upon the example of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: Quam utique nec Chriſtus, nec Apoſtoli, &c. Which neither Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles did either teach by word, or confirme by example, Ioann.22. Extrav. tit.14. c.5.

I will adjoyne the teſtimonie of Sir Iohn Brathwicke Knight, who endured much trouble for the faith of Chriſt: What ſhall I call the cloyſters of Monkes in theſe our daies otherwiſe than brothel-houſes, ſwine-ſtyes, and Dennes of diſcord, &c.? Wherefore I conclude, that this their kind of life is wicked and naught, which is not grounded nor eſtabliſhed of any certaine calling of God, Fox. pag. 1265. col.1. In this holy mans judgement therefore, the profeſſion of Monkerie tooke no beginning neither from Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles.

Pag. 1152. 2. 50.

And further, that popiſh Monkerie had not the beginning from the Apoſtles times, it is evident: 1 For the Greeke Church, Sozomen ſheweth that the firſt Monkes did betake themſelves to ſolitarie places, to avoid perſecution: The Tripartite ſtorie ſaith, that the Monkes which laboured not with their owne hands, violentis latronibus ſunt æquales habendi, are to be held like unto violent theeves and robbers.

Lib.1. cap.12.
Tripartit hiſt. lib.1. cap.8.

2 For the South Church, Athanaſius teſtifieth, that divers Monkes were married. In the Æthiopike Church, as Zaga Zabo witneſſeth, Monachi labore ſuo vivunt. The Monkes live by their labour, and digge the ground.

3 The popiſh Monkes are altogether unlike theirs: Firſt, they lived in ſolitarie places, farre from reſort of people: but the popiſh Mock-monkes live in cities and the frequencie of the people, Fulk. annot. Matth. 3. ſect. 3. Secondly, the Monkes in times paſt laboured with their hands: but the popiſh fat-bellies pampered themſelves in idleneſſe. Thirdly, they are altogether unlike in life and doctrine, as we ſhall ſee more at large afterward, Fulk. ibid.

Concil. Colonienſ. part. 10. cap. 1. Vita monaſtica non multo poſt Apoſtolorum tempora cœpit, quamquam multis perſuaſum ſit, aliam tunc fuiſſe, quam nunc eſt monachiſmi rationem: The Monkiſh life began not long after the Apoſtles time, although many think that the profeſſion of Monkes was farre otherwiſe in thoſe times, than now.

This Councell maketh Monkerie not to be ſo ancient as the Apoſtles, and beſides ſaith, that the Monkiſh life now, is farre unlike the life of the ancient Monkes: as it followeth, cap. 9. Videmus monaſteria mulierum in pleriſque locis, in ſuſpectas de incontinentia domos, ne quid gravius dicam, eſſe commutata: We ſee the monaſteries of women, to be turned into wanton houſes ſuſpected of incontinencie, to ſay no more, &c. But ſuch were not the ancient Colleges and aſſemblies of Monkes.

Their owne Extravagant alſo ſaith, that the rule of S. Francis is not grounded upon the example of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: Quam utique nec Chriſtus, nec Apoſtoli, &c. Which neither Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles did either teach by word, or confirme by example, Ioann. 22. Extrav. tit. 14. c. 5.

I will adjoyne the teſtimonie of Sir John Brathwicke Knight, who endured much trouble for the faith of Chriſt: What ſhall I call the cloyſters of Monkes in theſe our daies otherwiſe than brothel houſes, ſwine-ſtyes, and Dennes of diſcord, &c.? Wherefore I conclude, that this their kind of life is wicked and naught, which is not grounded nor eſtabliſhed of any certaine calling of God, Fox. pag. 1265. col. 1. In this holy mans judgement therefore, the profeſſion of Monkerie tooke no beginning neither from Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles.

Pag. 1152. a. 50.

And further, that popiſh Monkerie had not the beginning from the Apoſtles times, it is evident:
1 For the Greeke Church, Sozomen ſheweth that the firſt Monkes did betake themſelves to ſolitarie places, to avoid perſecution: The Tripartite ſtorie ſaith, that the Monkes which laboured not with their owne hands, violentis latronibus ſunt aequiparandi, are to be held like unto violent theeves and robbers.

Lib. 1. cap. 12.
Tripartit hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 8.

2 For the South Church, Athanaſius teſtifieth, that divers Monkes were married. In the Æthiopike Church, as Zaga Zabo witneſſeth, Monachi labore ſuo vivunt, The Monkes live by their labour, and digge the ground.

4 Gregorie in his time hath this obſervation of certaine hereticks: Qui populi admiſceri fugiunt,

ſed

Moral.lib.16. in 21.c.Iob.

ſed ſeceſſum vitæ ſecretioris petunt,&c. which refuſe to be conſorted with the people, but ſeek to leade a ſolitarie life, which doe ſo much the more infect others, peſte perſwaſionis, with their peſtilent perſwaſions, &c. by how much more they have them in greater reverence for the merit of their life, &c. Who ſeeth not, how fitly this deſcription ſuiteth the popiſh Monkes and Heremites? theſe three markes agree unto them, ſolitarie life, perverſe doctrine, opinion of merit. Some of their owne ſide have complained of their Monkes: Though they have the likeneſſe of the Apoſtles, yet they are farre removed from their life, let the Church lament her Monkes, &c. Bellarmine confeſſeth, that Athanaſius affirmeth, that there were no Eremites before Antonie, who lived in the beginning of the fourth age or hundreth yeere from Chriſt,&c. Their Monkes then and their heremites had not their beginning from the Apoſtles.

Lib.2.de Monach.c.5.

The ſecond part, concerning the divers ſects of Monkes and Friers.

The Papiſts.

39.Error.

THey ſay that imitation of divers holy men, as of S. Francis, S.Benet, S. Dominicke, which hath brought in divers ſects and orders of Religious men, doe tend all to the imitation of Chriſt, Rhemiſt.annot. Philip cap.3.ſect.2.1 Theſ.1.2.

Philip.3.17.

This their aſſertion they would ground upon the Apoſtles words, Philip.3.17. Be ye followers of me brethren, Rhemiſt.

1Cor.11.1.

Anſw. Firſt, Saint Paul would have them no otherwiſe to follow him, than hee did Chriſt, 1 Corinth.11 1. Neither gave any other rules to his followers, than he had learned of Chriſt, as the patrons of the Monkiſh ſects have done. Secondly, neither did S. Paul errect a new order of Paulians, as Franciſcus did of Franciſcans, Dominick of Dominicans. Thirdly, S. Paul was a perſwader of unitie, not a maker of diviſions among Chriſtians; as the Monkes and Friers have done, one ſort perſecuting another for their opinions even to death: Fulk. annot.1 Theſ.1. ſect.2. Fox pag.798. Fourthly, if the rule of S.Francis, the beſt approved ſect amongſt you, be no other than this, as witneſſeth one of yout Popes; Domini noſtri ſanctum Evangelium,&c. to obſerve the holy Goſpell of our Lord, ſext. decret.lib.5.tit.12.c.3.Nichol.4. Then is the rule of S.Francis ſuperfluous, ſeeing every man is bound, that is called a Chriſtian, to follow the Goſpell of Chriſt.

The Proteſtants.

COntrariwiſe wee affirme, that it is a great derogation to Chriſt when the people ſhall ſay, I follow the religion of Auguſtine, the religion of Francis: another ſaith, I hold of Dominicke: another, I hold of Jeſus, as the Jeſuites doe, Fulk.Philip.3.verſ.17.

1 Cor.3.4. 21,22.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul reproveth the Corinthians, becauſe they made the like ſects amongſt themſelves: one ſaid, I am Pauls, another I am Apolloes, and concludeth, that therefore they were carnall, 1 Cor.3.4. And further, he ſaith, they ſhould not rejoyce in men, for all things were theirs, whether Paul, Apollos, or Cephas, verſ.21.22. That is, they were not maſters of their faith, to inſtitute new religions and ſects, but the Miniſters and ſervants of the Lords inheritance. If therefore it was not lawfull to ſay, I hold of Paul, I hold of Cephas; neither is it lawfull to ſay, I hold of Dominicke, I hold of Francis, I hold of Jeſus: for ſeeing they make their ſects, and Jeſus maketh his, it is evident that they are not all referred to the imitation of Jeſus: for then they might all as well be called Jeſuites. So then in the Apoſtles time there was not any ſuch following of ſects, or calling of men by the names of their Patrons and authors, as it is now in Poperie; but all that beleeved in Chriſt, were called of his name Chriſtians, Act.11.26.

Acts 11.26.

*Argum.*2. The number of Monkes and Friers was almoſt infinite, ſects upon ſects, and new orders daily were deviſed, as Auguſtinians, Bernardines, Carmelites, Carthuſians, Dominicans, Franciſcans, and a great ſort more, to the number of an hundred ſects, as they are reckoned by Maſter Fox pag.260 and Tilmanus Heſhuſ. ſetteth downe 65. ſeverall ſects or rather ſchiſmes of Monkes, loc.25. error.10. This irkeſome rabble therefore of Monkes is fitly ſhadowed forth by the ſwarme of Locuſts, which came up out of the bottomleſſe pit, Apoc.9.3. And verily as the Locuſts and Graſhoppers conſume and devoure the fruits of the earth, ſo the begging Friers, and idle Monkes devoured the goods of the people, and corrupted the doctrine of the Church.

Revel.9.4.

3 Laſtly, this diviſion of Monkerie into ſects and ſundry orders, is of no great antiquitie: they were not knowne in Auguſtines time, who knew no other name of them, than Monkes for he wrote a book of purpoſe, De opere Monachorum; Of the labour of Monks: But other names of Carmelites, Carthuſians, Franciſcans, or ſuch like, were not heard of in the Church in thoſe daies; but came in long after in the time of Innocentius the 3. about *an.*1212.many yeeres after Auguſtine; *Fox.p.*259.

The time by peruſing the ancient monuments and records, may eaſily be aſſigned, when moſt of theſe Frierly and Monkiſh ſects began, Anno 1100. Urbanus the 2. confirmed the ſects of the Carthuſians, and Ciſterſians, Anno 1118.under Paſchal the 2.began the ſect of the Templaries, *Anno.*1125. Calixtus the 2.confirmed the order of the Præmonſtratenſes, Anno 1150. Eugenius the 3. confirmed the order of the Gilbertines in England, Anno 1223. Honorius the 3.received under his protection the Auguſtinians, Carmelites, Franciſcans, Dominicans, Anno 1295. under Celeſtinus the 5. the order of the Celeſtines began. Iohn the 23. confirmed the ſect of the Grandimontenſes. Anno 1371. Vrban the fifth confirmed S. Bridgets order. Gregorie the 12. did approve the ſect of the Hieronymites and Montolivetenſes, anno 1410. Iohn the 24. ratified the order of the Friſonarians, anno 1418. Anno 1555. Paulus the 3. or thereabout, confirmed the ſect of the Ieſuites : ex Cælio 2. Vergerio. Baleo & aliis.

This invention of ſects and new Profeſſions, hath bin by the Emperiall lawes prohibited, as Cod. lib.1.tit.12.leg. 11. Honor. Theodoſ. Calicolarum nomen inauditum, &c. The ſtrange and unknowne name of Calicolites, that is, inhabitants of heaven, hath found out a new ſuperſtition: and ſo the law proceedeth, Niſi ad fidem Chriſtianam converſi fuerint, &c. Unleſſe they be converted to the Chriſtian faith, ſhall bee puniſhed as hereticks. This law approveth no name or faith to be uſed, but of Chriſtians: the name of Calicoliter was a goodly title, as the name of Ieſuites is; but as that name was made a cloake for ſuperſtition and hypocriſie, ſo is this: and, howſoever they are called, if they ſwarve from the name and faith of Chriſtians, by this law they are accounted hereticks.

This innumerable rabble of Monkes hath miſliked alſo their owne patrons the Popes of Rome: Concil. Lateranenſ. ſub Innocent. 3. cap. 3. Firmiter prohibemus, &c. We doe ſtraightly forbid, that no man from henceforth invent a new Religion, leſt the too great diverſitie of religious perſons doe bring great offence into the Church of God; but he that will enter into religion, let him chuſe ſome one of them which is alreadie approved: and he that is diſpoſed to erect an houſe of Religion, let him follow ſome rule alreadie in uſe, &c. But yet for all this decree, many ſects of religions were afterward invented. Likewiſe Gregorie the 10. doth not only forbid new religions to be invented, but condemneth Ordines mendicantes, all the orders of begging Friers, begun ſince that generall Councell of Laterane: ſext. decret. lib. 3. tit. 17. c. 1. Ioann. 22. doth alſo reverſe and diſſolve the order of the Fratricelles, who were after the order of Francis: Extrav. Ioann. tit. 7. c. 1. Clemens 5. deſtroyed the ſect of the Beguines, which is revived notwithſtanding by Iohn. 22. Extrav. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. Thus we ſee, what good opinion the Popes themſelves have of their owne ſects.

Adde the ſeale of holy Martyrs, Iohn Wickliffe holy Confeſſor; Benedict, Francis, Dominicke, with all ſuch as have beene patrons of private religion, except they have repented, with ſuch as have entred into the ſame, are in a damnable ſtate. Fox pag. 450. col. 1. artic. 43. Pag.414.1.60.

Maſter Tindall holy martyr, to follow the rules of Auguſtine, Benedict, Francis, and ſuch other, is to leave the faith: Fox pag. 1251. col. 1. Pag.1140.1.60

I adde for further proofe: 1. That the Greekes have no Monkes but after the order of S. Baſil Biſhop of Cæſarea, who inſtituted his order of Monkes, about anno 380. 2. The Æthiopians have but one only order of religion, which is of S. Anthonie the Heremite: and their great Patriarke is allwaies of that order, as Zaga Zabo ſaith, an Æthiopian Biſhop. Theves.lib.6. cap.2. Alvares deſcrip. of Æthiopia. Damianus a Goes de morib. Æthiop.

Confeſſion of Baſil, artic. 5. The Church of Chriſt doth labour all that ſhe can, to keepe the bounds of peace, therefore ſhe doth by no meanes communicate with ſects, and the rules of orders, deviſed to make difference of daies, meats, apparell, &c. Harm. ſect. 16 pag. 484.

4 Eraſmus complaineth of the unneceſſarie rabble and ſects of Monkes: Ego puto, cucullatam vitam ſatis expertus, rem Chriſtianam nihilo deteriùs habituram, &c. I thinke, as having good experience of a Monkes cowle, that Chriſtianitie would be no whit the worſe, ſi non eſſent tot cultuum, ciborum, titulorum diſcrimina, if there were not ſuch difference of profeſſions, meats, titles: ſeeing Monkerie is come to that paſſe, that if you take away certaine externall things, ferè deteriores ſunt cæteris, they are almoſt worſe than others, and the better part of the Monaſteries have ſo little exerciſe of religion, ut nuſquam minus liceat religioſam vitam agere, that no where may one leade a leſſe religious life, &c. Epiſt. lib. 22. ad Ioann. Gacchum Monachum.

Our Doway countrimen may be here brought forth as witneſſes againſt their fellowes: for upon that place, Deuter. 25, 10. where he was to put off his ſhoe, as a ſigne of ignominie, that would not raiſe up ſeed to his brother, they give this rule: Paſtors and Doctors muſt beget ſpirituall children to Chriſt, not to themſelves, and ſo they are called Chriſtians, not Paulians, whom S. Paul converted: and why then, I pray you, are your Franciſcans, Benedictins, Dominicans, and the reſt, ſo called of Franciſcus, Benedictus, Dominicus, and other their founders? Doway Bible, 447.

The ſecond queſtion, concerning the Counſels of perfection.

The Papiſts.

THis they ſay, is the very foundation of the Monaſticall life, which is the moſt perfect eſtate and calling of Chriſtians: for they performe more than Chriſt hath commanded, not only his precepts, but even his counſels alſo; which they ſay, doe much differ: for the precepts are enjoyned to all Chriſtians, and to leave a precept undone, is ſinne: but the Evangelicall Counſels are given only to thoſe that are perfect, which they are not bound to keep, neither doe they ſinne in leaving them undone: yet if they obſerve them, they doe merit more and ſhall have a greater reward: Such Counſels of perfection are theſe; to give all we have to the poore; to abſtaine from eating of fleſh, to vow chaſtitie, and ſuch like: Bellarm. cap. 7. Rhemiſt. annot. Matth. 19. ſect. 9. 90. Error.

Argum.

Math.19.21. *Argum.*1. *Matth.*19.*verſ.*21. Chriſt ſaith, Goe and ſell all thou haſt, if thou wilt be perfect. This was a Counſell of perfection, not a precept given to all Chriſtians.

Anſw. Firſt, this was both a Counſell and precept, though not to all, yet to this one man, to diſcover his hypocriſie and vaine confidence which he had in himſelfe, as though he had kept the law, when he was farre from it, *Fulke Matth.*19.9. *Mark.*10.3. Secondly, it is a generall precept unto all to love the Lord with all the heart, and to be content, when the Lord requireth, for Chriſts ſake, to leave all we have, *Calvin. Inſtitut.*4.*cap.*13.*ſect.*13.

Bellarmine replieth: Firſt, it is not like that this young man was an hypocrite, or a vaine boaſter of himſelfe, becauſe it is ſaid Chriſt loved him; but he loveth no hypocrites or proud men.

Matth.12.20. Zach.4.10. Mark.12.34. Matth.22.35. Anſw. Firſt it was propheſied of our Saviour, as it is alleaged, Matth. 12.20. that he ſhould not quench the ſmoaking flax; that is, that Chriſt ſhould accept and approve the leaſt good things that he found in men, increaſing and not extinguiſhing them: as it is alſo ſaid, *Zach.*4.10. Who hath deſpiſed the day of ſmall things? ſo Chriſt is ſaid to have loved this young man, becauſe he ſaw ſome beginning and likelihood of goodneſſe in him, though in the reſt he approved him not. Secondly, the like example we have, Marke 12.34. where our Saviour ſaith to a certaine expounder of the Law, that had anſwered him diſcreetly, Thou art not farre from the kingdome of heaven: which was a great commendation of him: and yet the other Evangeliſt Saint Matthew reporting the ſame ſtorie, *chap.*22.35. ſaith he came to tempt Chriſt: he was not then void of ſome diſſimulation, yet Chriſt commendeth him.

Secondly, Bellarmine ſaith, that a man may love God with all his heart, and yet is not bound to doe all which God counſelleth, but which he commandeth, Bellarm. lib. 2. *de Monach. cap.*9. *in argum.*5.

Prov.1.25.26. Dan.4.24. Contra. This is a moſt groſſe anſwer, and contrarie to the Scripture: for he that loveth God with all his heart, is bound to keepe the Counſels of God, and it is ſinne to tranſgreſſe them: as *Prov.*1.25. 26. You have deſpiſed all my counſell, and therefore I will laugh at your deſtruction: and Daniel ſaith to Nabuchadnezzar, 4.24. Let my counſell be acceptable unto thee, breake off thy ſinnes by righteouſneſſe, &c. Will they ſay now, that the King was not bound to obey this counſell?

Acts 2.44. *Argum.*2. Acts 2.44. They had all things common. This is not a rule or precept to all Chriſtian men to live in common, but a life of perfection and counſell followed of the religious, Rhemiſt.

Anſw. This living in common among the brethren in the Apoſtles time, is the ſame that ought alwaies to be among all Chriſtians, that no man account that to be his owne, which the neceſſitie of his brother requireth to be beſtowed upon him: this the rule of charitie requireth, which is one of the great commandements: Fulke in hunc locum.

1 Cor.7.25. *Argum.*3. 1 *Cor.*7.25. Concerning Virgins I have no commandement of the Lord, but I give mine advice. A precept therefore is one thing, a Counſell of perfection another: *Bellarm. cap.*9.

1 Cor.7.40. Math.19.12. Anſw. Firſt, Paul hath no generall commandement from God to impoſe the yoke of continencie upon any, becauſe God had left marriage free, and therefore no man is to be barred and kept from it: But the Apoſtles particular advice and ſentence (being moved by the ſpirit of God, *verſ.*40) is not only a Counſell, but a commandement, that both they which have the gift of continencie, ſhould glorifie God by that gift, *verſ.*7. and they which have it not, ſhould marrie rather than burne, and ſo diſhonour God, *verſ.*9. Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, *Let every man wherein he is called therein abide with God, verſ.*24. If a man be called to live ſingle, he ought to obey his calling, having received the gift: if a man be called to the married eſtate, he muſt not preſume beyond his ſtrength, to live unmarried. Wherefore it is both a Counſell and a precept, to thoſe that have received the gift of ſingle life: for otherwiſe they diſobey Gods calling, which is ſinne. And our Saviour ſaith, he that is able to receive it, let him receive it, *Matth.*19.12. He that hath the gift is commanded to uſe it, for in leeſing it he ſinneth. And laſtly, every man by commandement is bound to the uttermoſt of his power to ſet forth Gods glorie: But God is moſt glorified by the ſingle life of thoſe which are able to containe, and therefore they ought in dutie ſo to doe.

Hom.16.in 3. cap.Ionæ. Againe, in that the Apoſtle ſaith he had no commandement of the Lord, his meaning is, that he was not directed in this caſe of virginitie by any ſpeciall precept out of Scripture, otherwiſe than by the counſell of the ſpirit ſpeaking in him: but that the advice of the Apoſtle is of the ſame nature and authoritie with a precept it may appeare, for that he ſpeaketh not of himſelfe, but by the ſpirit of God, *verſ.*40. and he had received mercie, to be faithfull, *verſ.*25. Wherefore if it be faithfulnes in the Apoſtle to give this advice, it was faithfulneſſe in them to follow it. Unleſſe any man will entertaine Origens light conceit, that thinketh S.Paul to have ſpoken of himſelfe, without warrant from God: as he untruly ſaith of the Prophets, that they ſpake ſome things of themſelves, as namely, when that came not to paſſe which they propheſied: as that of Ionas 3. that within three daies Ninivie ſhould be deſtroyed: and that of Gad, that ſpake of three daies peſtilence to David, 2 *Sam.*24. whereas it ceaſed the ſame day: So he ſaith S.Paul ſpeaketh of himſelfe in this place. But he is both there and here deceived: for the Prophets ſpake as God bid them, who notwithſtanding upon their repentance ſeemed to change the decree, as when he ſent the Prophet to tell Hezekiah he ſhould die: But this by the way of Origens error.

Thirdly, as S.Paul ſaith here concerning Virgins hee had no commandement, but gave advice; ſo he ſaith of marriage, verſ. 6. I ſpeake this by conceſſion, or as giving advice, not by commandement: that is, that to avoid fornication a man might marrie: but this is a commandement, as verſ. 9. to marrie rather than burne; and yet the Apoſtle calleth it an indulgence, or conceſſion.

Fourthly, verſ. 12. the Apoſtle ſaith in the ſame ſenſe, to the remnant I ſpeake, and not the Lord, that is, I give counſell, having no preſcript commandement in the word; that is, that a faithfull man ſhould not leave his unbeleeving wife, if ſhe be content to dwell with him. But this is a commandement, and not to be tranſgreſſed; as it may thus appeare: firſt by the manner of ſpeech, being imperative, let him not forſake her, verſ. 12. Secondly, verſ. 15. if ſhe will depart, the man is not in ſubjection: therefore if ſhe will not depart, but abide, the man is in ſubjection, that is, bound to keep her. Thirdly, verſ. 16. The beleeving man may be an inſtrument to ſave his unbeleeving wife: but we are bound to doe all that may further anothers ſalvation: Ergo, even this counſell alſo of the Apoſtle is a commandement. And thus hath Bellarmine gained nothing by this place.

1 Cor.12.15.16.

Here alſo the Doway gloſſe-men doe thus argue for Evangelicall Counſels: becauſe under the law there were ſpeciall ſtates not commanded by law, but voluntarily profeſſed, as of the children of the Prophets, the Nazarites, Rechabites, &c. which were exemplar figures of religious orders in the new Teſtament: to this purpoſe the Doway ſtudents, p. 936.

Contra. 1. The old Teſtament cannot bee a rule unto the new in the ceremoniall obſervations thereof. 2 Some of thoſe ſpeciall ſtates were commanded to ſome, as the profeſſion of a Nazarite to Samſon, Iudg. 13.7. And the Rechabites were enjoyned that ſtate of life by their father Ionadab, Ierem. 35. 8. 3. The children of the Prophets did not vow chaſtity, for they were married, 2 King. 4. 4. wee grant a difference betweene thoſe which they call precepts and counſels: but thus farre, that although in particular the Counſell is not commanded, yet in the generall it is included, that every man is bound to ſerve God with all his might, in what thing ſoever he may; as one may have more ſtrength than another: yet neither the keeping of a precept nor counſell is meritorious.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe truly affirme and according to the Scriptures, that it is impoſſible for any man to performe the law and commandements of God, much leſſe to fulfill more than is commanded: And therefore it is falſe, that beſide the precepts of Chriſt there are Counſels of perfection, which are at a mans choyce to doe or not to doe: for whatſoever is to the glory of God, wee are bound to doe. We acknowledge then no ſuch evangelicall Counſels, as they imagine, Calvin.

Argum. 1. Matth. 5. 48. Our Saviour ſaith, Yee ſhall be perfect, as your heavenly father is perfect. Therefore all Counſels tending to perfection, are commandements. If there bee any thing whereby we may more neerely attaine unto perfection, that we are bound and commanded to doe: As if a man can better obtaine this perfection of godlineſſe, by living ſingle, if he have the gift, he ought to do it: for having not the gift, and yet preſuming, he burneth in luſt, and ſo is ſet further backe in the courſe of godlineſſe, Calvin. argument.

Math. 5.48.

Bellarmine diſtinguiſheth: There are (ſaith he) two kindes of perfection; a leſſe which conſiſteth in the full keeping of the law, which is neceſſary to ſalvation: ſuch a perfection is commanded, Matth. 5. There is a greater perfection, not ſimply neceſſarie to ſalvation, but to obtaine a more excellent degree of glory, in obſerving the counſels: and this our Saviour meaneth, when hee biddeth the young man to ſell all he had, to be perfect, Marke 10. 21. Bellarm. cap. 9. argum. 5.

Contra. Firſt, there can be no greater perfection, than in the abſolute fulfilling of the law: for the beſt perfection in this life is in love, 1 Iohn 4. 12. 16. 17. But love is the fulfilling of the law, Rom. 13. 10. Wherefore, that which hee calleth the leſſe perfection is the beſt, ſeeing it fulfilleth the law. Secondly, the perfection ſpoken of Matth. 5. 48. is the beſt perfection, to be perfect as God is perfect: for what greater perfection can there be, than to be perfect according to the example of God? Thirdly, that thing, to the which Chriſt exhorteth the young man, to ſell all he had to give to the poore, is not ſo great a point of perfection, as this, whereof Chriſt ſpeaketh, that we ſhould love our enemies, and ſo be perfect as God is perfect: for a man may give all his goods to the poore, and yet bee without love, 1 Cor. 13. 3. but he cannot love his enemies, unleſſe hee have love: wherefore this point of perfection ſeemeth to be greater than the other, and ſo Bellarmine hath loſt a good diſtinction. Wherefore, this remaineth a ſtrong place, notwithſtanding all his cavils, that exhortation to perfection containeth not only a counſell, but a precept alſo and commandement.

1 Iohn 4.12.16.
Rom. 13. 10.
1 Cor. 13. 3.

Argum. 2. We are bound to love God with all our heart, with all our ſoule, with all our ſtrength: Therefore whatſoever thing there is, whereby wee may expreſſe the love of God, wee are bound by commandement to doe it; it is not left to our owne will: for not to love God more than thou doeſt, if it be in thy power, it is a grievous ſin, Martyris argument.

Bellarmine anſwereth thus: Qui Deum diligit ſuper omnia, etiamſi eum non tam ardenter amet, quàm forte poſſet, vel non faciat pro eo omnia, quæ poſſet; ille habet Deum pro ſummo bono, cap. 13. Hee that loveth God above all things, although he love him not ſo entirely, as perhaps hee may, neither doth all things for his ſake that lie in his power: yet for all this, he eſteemeth of God as his chiefe good, &c. I pray you ſee, what contradictorie ſpeeches theſe bee: The Jeſuite ſaith, a man may love God perfectly and above all, and yet not love him ſo much as hee is able, that is, imperfectly: ſo a man, by his Monkiſh divinity, may love God above all, and yet not love him above all: for if he did, he would refuſe to doe nothing for Gods love that is in his power.

Luke 17. 10. Argum. 3. Luke 17. 10. When you have done all thoſe things which are commanded you, ſay, Wee are unprofitable ſervants, and did nothing but that which was our dutie to do: Ergo, we are bound to doe all things that are to bee done, and we cannot doe that which we ought, much leſſe more than we ought to doe, Martyris argument.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, Chriſt ſaith, when you have done all which I commanded you, not which I counſelled you.

Anſw. As though the argument followeth not ſtrongly: you cannot doe the leſſe, that is, keep my commandements, therefore you cannot doe the more, that is, ſpeaking now (as the Jeſuite doth) the Counſels of perfection, which are more than the precepts. It is a precept of neceſſitie to diſpenſe our goods to the uſe of the poore; it is a counſell of perfection, as they ſay, to give all away to the poore: But if a man cannot performe the firſt, that is, keeping his goods to uſe them aright, much leſſe is he able with a reſolute minde to give them all away.

Secondly, he anſwereth: Chriſt biddeth them to ſay ſo, as ſhewing their humility, not that they were indeed unprofitable ſervants. A poore ſhift, as though Chriſt envied the good of his ſervants, or would obſcure their well-doing, and doth not rather advance it to the uttermoſt, and make the moſt of the ſerviceable works of his children, as we ſee, Math. 25. 34. And Chriſt being a faithfull Prophet, would not ſurely deceive his Diſciples, and tell them one thing, and himſelfe know and thinke another. Some anſwered in Bernards time to this place, as the Jeſuite now doth: Hoc (inquies) propter humilitatem Chiſtus monuit dicendum eſſe: Chriſt only would have us thus to ſpeake, namely, that we are unprofitable ſervants, to ſhew our humilitie. He anſwereth: Plane propter humilitatem, ſed nunquid contra veritatem: You ſay true, for humility, but not againſt the verity, de triplici cuſtod. ſerm. So likewiſe was it decreed, Concil. Milevitan. can. 6. Placuit, quod ait S. Iohannes, ſi dixerimus, quod peccatum non habemus, nos ipſos ſeducimus, &c. quiſquis ſic accipiendum putat, ut dicat propter humanitatem non oportere dici nos non habere peccatum, non quia veritas eſt, anathema ſit: Whereas S. Iohn ſaith, If we ſay we have no ſinne, we deceive our ſelves, &c. Whoſoever thinketh it is ſo to be underſtood, that for humanity ſake it becommeth us not to ſay that we have no ſin, not becauſe the truth is ſo indeed, let him be accurſed, &c. But theſe Frier-like miſts and ſmoake of Locuſts, are not able to dimme the cleere light of this Scripture, which ſheweth, that when wee have done all we can doe, wee come farre ſhort of our dutie.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine, the better to perſwade that there are certaine Evangelicall counſels beſide precepts, ſetteth downe certaine differences betweene them, cap. 7. which differences if they ſhall appeare to be none, then precepts and counſels ſhall be all one.

1 His firſt difference is, in reſpect of the matter, precepts (ſaith he) are more eaſily kept; but counſels more hardly and with greater difficultie.

Contra. It is an harder matter to love our enemies, than for a man to give all his goods to the poore: and therefore the love of Chriſt is ſet forth to be the moſt excellent kinde of love, becauſe he died for his enemies, Rom. 5. 8. But the firſt is a precept of perfection, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, Math. 5. 48. the other a counſell of perfection, Math. 19. 21. confeſſed alſo by Bellarmine: Ergo, a precept is more difficult than a counſell.

2 The ſecond difference in reſpect of the ſubject: a precept is generall, preſcribed to all; a counſell is particular, belonging only to ſome, Bellarm. ibid.

1 Cor. 6. 7. Contra. They confeſſe that ſingle life appertaineth to counſell, as the Apoſtle ſaith, he giveth counſell concerning virgins, 1 Cor. 7. 25. but this is generall, verſ. 7. I would that all men were as I am, that is, ſingle. Againe, to marrie to avoid fornication is an indulgence or counſell, 1 Cor. 7. 6. yet generall, verſ. 2. To avoid fornication, let every man have his wife: ſo theſe counſels are generall, that every man having the gift of virginity ſhould uſe the ſame; and every one not having it, ſhould uſe the remedie.

3 A third difference, a counſell not obſerved deſerveth no puniſhment, as a precept doth, being obſerved it hath a greater reward.

Contra. Firſt, to marrie rather than burne, is an Apoſtolicall indulgence or counſell, 1 Cor. 7. 6. but to burne rather in luſt than to marrie, is ſinne, and deſerveth puniſhment: Ergo. Secondly, to feed the

Math. 19. 21. poore with all a mans goods is a counſell, Math. 19. 21. but this counſell may be obſerved, and yet

1 Cor. 13. 3. no reward follow, 1 Cor. 13. 3. If a man give all to the poore, and have no love, it profiteth nothing. Wherefore ſeeing the Jeſuite can make no ſound difference betweene precepts and counſels, we muſt needs conclude that they are all one.

4 Auguſtine, though ſometime he ſeeme to make ſome difference betweene a precept and a counſell: Præceptum eſt, ſaith he, cui non obedire, peccatum eſt: Conſilium, quo ſi uti nolueris, minus boni adipiſceris, non mali aliquid perpetrabis: de Virginit. cap. 15. A precept is that, which not to obey, is ſinne: A counſell is that, which if thou wilt not follow, thou doeſt not commit any evill, yet thou haſt the leſſe good, &c. Though hee ſeeme in words, I ſay, to make difference, yet his meaning is this, That a precept is of things neceſſary, as to follow vertue, to eſchue vice: A counſell is of things indifferent, as to uſe or not to uſe, as to eat or not to eat fleſh. But yet the occaſion may ſo ſerve, that even this counſell is neceſſarie: for we ought not to eat fleſh to offend our brother: Multa facienda ſunt non jubente lege, ſed libera charitate: Many things are to be done (ſaith he) not by force of any law, but by the rule of charitie: that is, we have no particular law, but the generall rule of charitie. A counſell then is ſeene in things indifferent, which are alwayes lawfull, but not alway expedient: and it is nothing elſe but a particular application of the generall rule of charitie: Charitie wiſheth that nothing ſhould be done to offend our brethren, 1 *Cor.*10.32. The Scripture likewiſe giveth libertie to eat fleſh, there is no generall precept, or prohibition: yet the Apoſtle giveth counſell, that is, according to the rule of charitie ſaith, that although all things are cleane, Malum tamen eſt homini, qui per offenſionem manducat: yet it is evill to the man that eateth with offence, *Rom.*14.20 Here we ſee the tranſgreſſion of an Apoſtolicall counſell is ſinne. And though wee be not bound by any particular precept, at this time or that to abſtaine from fleſh, yet quæ facienda ſunt libera charitate, the things that are to be done in the dutie of love, doe as well binde us, as if we had a direct commandement: for love is the fulfilling of the commandements, yea it is one of the great commandements to love one another. Yet the counſell or libertie concerning indifferent things, remaineth in it owne nature free ſtill: as the Apoſtle counſelleth to eat, not asking any queſtion: in ſuch a caſe it is neither evill not to eat, nor good to eat; but if any man be preſent that may take offence by our eating, then is it evill to eat. So Auguſtine concludeth: Multa mihi videntur licere & non expedire, quæ per juſtitiam, quæ coram Deo eſt, permittuntur, ſed propter offenſionem hominum vitanda ſunt: Many things are lawfull, but not expedient becauſe of the offence of our brethren, leſt therby they ſhould be hindred from ſalvation, *De Adulter.conjug.lib.*1.*cap.*14.17 Thus we ſee Auguſtine doth nothing favor the popiſh diſtinction of precepts & counſels: for by his ſentence even counſels, that is, the libertie and freedome of things indifferent, are reſtrained and made neceſſarie in the externall uſe, by the rule of Charitie.

Rom.14.10.

That precepts, and counſels or monitions are confounded, and both taken for one, their owne Canons doe teſtifie, *Decret.p.cauſ.*28.*qu.*1.*c.*9. Quæ jubet Dominus, non eſt indignum, ſi eadem monet Apoſtolus: That which the Lord commandeth it is not unfit, if the Apoſtle doe moniſh the ſame. *Sext. decret.lib.*5.*tit.*12.*c.*5. Nonnulla conſilia ſub verbo præcepti: Many counſels are contained under the word precept. *Clement.in lib.*5.*tit.*11.*c.*1. *Nichol.*4. there it is determined, That the rules of Francis given to his diſciples that they ſhould goe barefoot, and not ride but in caſe of neceſſitie and ſuch like, are precepts: which notwithſtanding according to their definition are but counſels.

This truth the holy Martyrs have ſealed: John Huſſe. There are ſo many counſels and determinations of God in the Goſpell, as there bee lawfull and honeſt things joyned with precepts and commandements of God, binding us thereto under paine of deadly ſinne: for everie ſuch thing doth the Lord command us to fulfill in time and place, &c. Fox, pag.617. col.1. lin.21.

Pag.567.c.1. l.9.

Claudius Monerius French Martyr; No man can vow to God ſo much, but the Law requireth much more than he can vow. This holy Martyr died in this confeſſion, and was burned at Lyons, anno 1551. ex Iohanne Criſpin.lib.tert. Thus then it appeareth, that before the Lord there is no difference betweene his counſels and commandements, but that we are bound to keepe them both.

Yet that wee ſpeake more diſtinctly hereof, wee doe not take away all difference betweene precepts and counſels, neither yet doe we deny a difference of reward for the ſame.

The firſt we grant, allowing a threefold difference: 1 In the matter & ſubject: precepts are of things neceſſary, & in their nature good or evil, as are the ten moral commandements: counſels are in things indifferent in themſelves, as in taking, or not taking a wife, in abſtinence from fleſh: as Hierom ad Demetriad. prohibentur mala, præcipiuntur bona, permittuntur media, ſuadentur perfecta: evil things are forbidden, good things are commanded, indifferent things are permitted, & perfect things perſwaded, &c.

2 They differ in reſpect of the manner: precepts are generall for all perſons, times and places: counſels are applyed to particular perſons, times and occaſions: as to abſtaine from marriage, for ſuch as have the gift, and are thereunto called.

3 They are to be conſidered in reſpect of the commander: and ſo in regard of Gods juſtice, who requireth of us to be perfect as he is perfect, there is no difference betweene precepts and counſels, but everie one is commanded to enter into that profeſſion of life, which is neereſt to perfection: as Hierome in the ſame place ſaith: In cauſa juſtitiæ omnes unum debemus, virgo, vidua, nupta: In the cauſe of juſtice, we all owe the ſame dutie, the virgin, widdow, and married, but in regard of Gods mercifull indulgence, which beareth with our infirmities, ſome are called counſels, which they follow which moſt ſtrive againſt their infirmities, as true virginitie is more commendable in thoſe which have the gift, than in them which uſe the remedy becauſe of their infirmity: for the ſecond point, we alſo grant a difference of reward, but with a threefold limitation. 1 That cæteris parib. other things being alike, no doubt he ſhall have a greater reward which obeyeth the counſels, as Marie had choſen a better part, in leaving all worldly matters to heare Chriſt than her ſiſter Martha: but ſimply it is not a greater degree of perfection: as Abraham no doubt pleaſed God better in his rich married eſtate, than many doe in their ſingle life and povertie: ſuch therefore muſt compare themſelves with themſelves, that they pleaſe God better in the ſtricter kinde of life, if they have that gift, than they ſhould doe otherwiſe, but that is not alwayes true, if they compare themſelves with others.

2 Where ſuch counſels are embraced, the neceſſarie precepts muſt not be neglected: hee which obſerveth a precept, and proceedeth further to ſuch a counſell, as we ſpeake of, is to be preferred before one, that walketh in the precept only: but obedience to a Councell only, is not to be preferred before the obſervation of a precept: as a Miniſter which hath the gift of ſingle life, and preacheth not, is not therefore better than one that preacheth and is married: ſo Hierome in the ſame place, Non à lege ſolvitur, qui ſupra legem facere proponit; He is not freed from the law, who propoſeth ſomewhat to himſelfe above the law: Nullus magis illicita vitare debet, quàm qui reſpuit quæ licebant: No man ought more to ſhun things unlawfull, than he who refuſeth things lawfull.

Iſay 64.6.

3 Here muſt be laid aſide all opinion of perfection, & merit, of the one before God, and of the other with men: for neither by the obſervation of precepts nor counſels, is there any thing merited with God: for all our righteouſnes is as a ſtained clout: neither is a man more perfect than another becauſe he is ſingle or otherwiſe abſtemious: for his brother may exceed him in other more excellent graces.

We therfore both refuſe the error of the Apoſtolici, which made the obſervation of ſuch Counſels neceſſary, affirming, that none could be ſaved that lived not ſingle and in poverty as the Apoſtles did. Epiphan. hæreſ. 61. as alſo the fancie of Vigilantius & Iovinian, that gave no preeminence at all to marriage and virginitie, of the one before the other: we alſo reject the popiſh diſtinction, which make Counſels a ſtate of greater perfection and more meritorious: But we hold ſuch a difference, as is before expreſſed.

Cenſur Oriental. Eccleſ. c. 20.

And for further evidence herein. 1 Ieremie, Patriarke of Conſtantinople, ſpeaking of monaſticall profeſſion thus writeth, Cum omnia opera bona, ut dicitis, complectimini, cum hæc ipſa ejus generis ſint, &c. Seeing yee ſay, you embrace all good works, of the which kind theſe are, yee ought alſo to be ſtudious of theſe, &c. And in the ſame place he alleageth Baſil, who thus writeth: Aſcetica vita unum ſolum ſcopum habet, ſalutem animæ, &c. This contemplative life hath only one ſcope, the ſalvation of the ſoule: Omniaque ea tanquam Dei mandata, &c. ſervare, &c. and to obſerve all things which may help thereunto as the commandements of God, &c. Loe here the ſingle life of monaſticall perſons is counted among Gods commandements: it is then a commandement, not a counſell onely.

De humanitat. verb.

2 Of the Ægyptian and South Church, Athanaſius ſaith directly: Salvator noſter tantum valuit in hujuſmodi præceptis, &c. Our Saviour did ſo much prevaile in theſe precepts, that even children did profeſſe virginitie, which is above the Law, &c. this counſell of virginitie he calleth a precept.

Harm. ſect. 17. p. 535. Sect. 18. p. 562.

3 Confeſſ. of Saxony, artic. 20. Hypocrites doe imagine that ſuch works are a kinde of perfection, as Monks doe preferre their vowes full of vanitie before the civill and houſholders life, &c. Auſpurg. artic. 5. The Monks have taught that their life is a ſtate of perfection, becauſe they did obſerve not onely the commandements, but alſo the Counſels: this error is contrarie to the Goſpell, becauſe they have fained that they cannot onely ſatisfie the commandements, but doe ſomewhat more: whereupon aroſe that horrible error of the works of ſupererogation, &c.

Aquin. Opuſcul. 19.

4 Gulielmus de S. Amore, as he is cited by Aquinas, thus expoundeth that precept of our Saviour to the young man, If thou wilt be perfect ſell all; Ibi mandatam nobis eſſe paupertatem habitualem, &c. that there an habituall poverty is commanded, not that we ſhould actually waſte away all which we have, but when the confeſſion of the name of God, and the glorie of Chriſt ſo requireth, Tum omnia deſerere parati ſimus, Then we ſhould be ready to leave all, &c. This place which before is alleaged by the Romaniſts, to prove the perfection of Counſels, is here expounded to be a generall precept.

Lib. 2. de Monach. c. 2.

Yea, Bellarmine himſelfe determineth, that the ſtate of Biſhops is more perfect than of Monks: for theirs is a ſtate perfectionis adeptæ, of perfection attained unto; the other acquirendæ, of perfection to be attained unto. So then Biſhops not following theſe Counſels, of forſaking the world, and of perpetuall abſtinence, are more perfect than Monks that profeſſe both: thoſe then are not Counſels of perfection.

The third Queſtion, Concerning vowes in generall

THis queſtion hath three parts: Firſt, whether it be lawfull for Chriſtians to make vowes. Secondly, in what things lawfull vowes conſiſt. Thirdly, whether voluntarie vowes be any part of the worſhip and ſervice of God.

The firſt part, Whether vowes pertained only to the old Law, and are not now permitted unto Chriſtians.

The Papiſts.

91. Error.

THey hold it as lawfull and as free a thing for Chriſtians to binde themſelves by vowes unto God, as it was uſed and practiſed of the Jewes in the time of the Law.

Iſay 19.21. verſ. 19.18.

Argum. 1. Iſai. 19.21. They ſhall know the Lord in that day, and doe ſacrifice and oblation, and vow vowes unto God and performe them. This prophecie is concerning Chriſtians, which ſhould in the time of the Goſpell make vowes unto God, Bellarm. cap. 17.

Anſwer. The Prophet doth, by the externall ſervice of God uſed in the Church at that time, ſet forth the ſpiritual worſhip of God in the Church of Chriſt: for Jewiſh vowes ſhal be no more then in force, than their ſacrifices & oblations. Alſo verſ. 19. the Prophet ſaith, that an Altar ſhall be ſet up in Egypt: and verſ. 18. They ſhall ſpeake the language of Canaan: But theſe things were not literally, but myſtically performed, neither is it neceſſary the other ſhould.

Argum. 2. Pſalme 76. 11. Vow unto God and performe: Ergo, vowes now are lawfull, Bellarm. ibid. Pſalm. 76. 11.

Anſwer. It appeareth by the text, that it was a commandement unto the Jewes, and for that time: for it followeth, All yee that are round about him: that is, the Leviter & Prieſts that dwelt round about the temple. And bring preſents to him that ought to be feared. But now Chriſtians bring no ſuch externall preſents and gifts, therefore it cannot bee properly underſtood of them. This appeareth alſo by the beginning of the Pſalme, that this charge appertained to the Jewes: as verſ. 1. God is knowne in Iudea, and verſ. 2. in Salem is his tabernacle, &c. Therefore while the tabernacle continued in Salem, and God was worſhipped only in Judea, ſo long vowes were in force.

Argum. 3. Vowes did not take beginning from Moſes, for Iacob vowed, Geneſ. 28. therefore neither are they to ceaſe with Moſes. Bellarm. cap. 17.

Contra. Firſt, the Argument followeth not, for there were altars and ſacrifices before the law, yet they will not ſay, that they muſt remaine ſtill after the law of ceremonies determined. Secondly, ſuch a vow as Iacob made, is lawfull for Chriſtians to make ſtill; for he voweth that the Lord ſhall bee his God: the vow then of obedience, and of more ſtrict ſerving of God is commendable in Chriſtians. And as for the vow of tithes, Iacob maketh it, not as it were in it ſelfe a principall ſervice of God, but as a ſigne of the worſhip of God and obedience, which he vowed.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe not condemne all vowes, neither denie, but that a Chriſtian in ſome caſes may vow, as preſently it followeth to be ſhewed: but Jewiſh vowes are utterly unlawfull, ſuch as the vowes of the Nazarites were, Numb. 6. as to abſtaine from wine and ſtrong drinke, not to ſhave their haire, and ſuch like: if we place religion in ſuch vowes.

Argum. 1. Their vowes were ceremonious, and conſiſted in externall rites, which were ſhadowes and ſignifications of ſpirituall things: as not to cut their haire, not to touch any dead thing, to abſtaine from wine and ſtrong drinke. But all ſhadowes are now gone and aboliſhed: and ſuch externall uſages are unprofitable, as were thoſe precepts of the falſe Apoſtles, Touch not, taſte not, handle not: which all periſh with the uſing, and are the commandements of men, as S. Paul ſaith, Coloſſ. 2. 21. 22. Coloſſ. 2. 21. 22. Such precepts notwithſtanding, Monks and Friers at this day doe bind themſelves unto: for it is not lawfull for them to touch ſilver, nor to taſte fleſh, according to the ſtrict and ſuperſtitious rules of their patrons. The Apoſtles reaſon ſtandeth thus, religion conſiſteth not in any thing, that periſheth with the uſe: but vowes not to taſte, not to touch, not to handle, periſh in the uſe: Ergo, there is no religion in ſuch vowes.

Argum. 2. It was ordained in Moſes law, Levit. 27. 26. that no man ſhould vow unto the Lord the Levit. 27. 26. firſt-borne, for it was the Lords already. From whence this argument may be drawne, That which is the Lords alreadie, cannot be vowed unto him: but we are Chriſts, 1 Cor. 3. 23. and all that we have, 1 Cor. 3. 23. verſ. 21. Wherefore it is a ſuperfluous thing to vow any thing, which we have, as therein placing the ſervice of God; ſeeing already we are devoted to Gods ſervice. If it be here objected, that by the ſame reaſon neither was it lawfull for the Jewes to offer any thing at all, becauſe the earth is the Lords, and all things therein, Pſalm. 24. they ſhould offer unto God of his owne: I anſwer, that it is true, all the Pſal. 24. 1. earth was the Lords in right of the creation; but the firſt-borne were due in a ſecond right of their deliverance and redemption from Egypt: and ſo we in reſpect of our ſpirituall deliverance are bound to ſerve God all the dayes of our life, Luke 1. 74. And therefore it is no more in our power to vow or Luk. 1. 74. be vowed unto God, than it was lawfull for the Jewes to dedicate their firſt-borne.

Argum. 3. Saint Paul ſaith, He that is circumciſed is bound to keep the whole law, Galat. 5. 3. He Galath. 5. 3. that keepeth any one ceremonie of the law, doth make himſelfe a ſervant to the whole law: for if after the profeſſion of the Nazarites, they will vow not to drinke wine, not to ſhave their heads, hereby the better to pleaſe God; why are they not alſo purified, and bring an offering according to the law, as Paul did, who becauſe of the infirmity of the Jewes, was agreed with foure other men which had a vow, to be purified according to the law? But this S. Paul did being amongſt the Jewes, who cried out againſt him as a breaker of the law, leſt he ſhould bee ſcandalous unto them. Hence alſo wee reaſon thus; that which S. Paul did for that time to avoid offence, namely, to be purified with them that had a vow, is not now lawfull for the people of God to doe, as Act. 21. 25. We have determined con- Act. 21. 25. cerning the Gentiles, that they obſerve no ſuch thing: Ergo, it is not lawfull now after the manner of the Jewes to make a vow.

Auguſtine thus notably writeth concerning this matter: Sicut defuncta corpora neceſſariorum offi- Epiſt. 19. Hieronymo. ciis deducenda erant quodammodo ad ſepulchrum, non deſerenda continuo, vel ſicut canibus projicienda: The ceremonies of the law (ſaith hee) were not preſently to be caſt off, but as dead bodies muſt bee brought to the grave with ſome ſeemely pompe of their friends, and not to bee caſt unto dogges, &c. Thus he ſaith, that in the Apoſtles time all Jewiſh ceremonies were not in act aboliſhed, though they were already as dead carkaſſes, that is, by right deprived of life: yet they required ſome ſpace to bee honourably laid downe, and as it were buried. But whoſoever would now goe about to renew the Jewiſh ceremonies againe (ſaith hee) Tanquam ſopitos cineres eruens, non erit pius deductor vel bajulus corporis, ſed impius ſepulturæ violator: Hee ſhould as it were rake in dead mens aſhes, and not bee a ſeemely bringer of the body to the ground, but a wicked violator of Chriſtian buriall: Even ſo Auguſtine maketh it as wicked a part, to bring in uſe any Jewiſh rites, as to pull one, honeſtly buried, out of his grave.

Ibid.

There is a rule in the Civill law, Cod. lib. 7. tit. 6. leg. 1. Iuſtinian. Abſurdum eſt, ipſa origine rei ſublata, ejus imaginem relinqui: It is abſurd, the originall being removed, the image or reſemblance to remaine ſtill, &c. According to this rule, ſeeing that the Jewiſh ceremonies are ceaſed, it is not fit that Judaicall vowes ſhould have any place in the Church.

The Canon law alſo ſaith, Umbra legis evanuit, illuxit veritas Evangelii: The ſhadow of the law is vaniſhed, and the light of the Goſpell hath ſhined, decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 47. c. 1. Upon which ground Innocentius 3. decreeth, the law of Moſes, concerning the purifying of women, not to be in force: of the which nature alſo is the law of vowes.

To this agreeth the ordinarie gloſſe, de 4. Concil. Primitiva Eccleſia. Modus colendi Deum per externos ritus & ceremonias legis, quia hæc fuerunt umbra Chriſti tum venturi & myſteriorum ejus, ideo adveniente veritate Evangelica illicita facta ſunt, & evanuerunt: The manner of worſhipping God by externall rites and ceremonies of the law, becauſe theſe were a ſhadow of Chriſt to come and of his myſteries, the truth of the Goſpell being come are made unlawfull, and are vaniſhed away, &c. But vowes are a part of the externall and ceremonious worſhip of God. Ergo.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr, hath ſealed this truth: Vowes are againſt the ordinance of God: let them ſhew where theſe vowes in all the new Teſtament be ordained of God, eſpecially ſuch vowes of ſingle life and wilfull povertie, &c. Fox pag. 1250. col. 1. articul. 3.

Againſt theſe Judaicall and ſuperſtitious vowes and other rites. 1 Wee have the teſtimonie of the Greeke writers: Origen ſaith, Quod prius lex & prophetæ continebant in latitudine præceptorum duobus his ſermonib. breviatur, &c. That which before the law and the Prophets contained in multitude of precepts, is abbreviated in two words (the love of God, and our neighbour) as the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, the Lord ſhall make a ſhort word upon the earth: The multitude then of Judaicall and legall obſervations, is reduced all to charity. Damaſcene ſaith, the truth having appeared, the type and ſhadow is unprofitable. Againe, the Muſcovites, which follow the rites of the Greeke Church, to this day refuſe all Jewiſh rites; they profeſſe it is farre from them, Ut vel ſcintillam veteris & aboliti Judaiſmi obſervent, That they ſhould obſerve ſo much as one ſparkle of the old aboliſhed Judaiſme: and in deteſtation thereof, in all the Ruſſie Kingdomes, not one Jew is ſuffered to remaine, though hee would give many thouſand crownes. Thus wee ſee what opinion the Greeke Church hath of Jewiſh rites and obſervations.

Commentar. in Matth. 19.

Roderici Zamorenſ. part. lib. 2. c. 29.

The ſecond part, what things may lawfully bee vowed by Chriſtians, and whether Baptiſme bee properly a vow.

The Papiſts.

92. Error.

THey hold that the proper vowes of Chriſtians are voluntarie, not of ſuch things which Chriſtians are bound in dutie to doe, but of ſuch as they may leave undone, if they will; ſuch as are their Popiſh vowes of continencie, and voluntarie or rather wilfull povertie.

Deut. 23. 21.

Argum. 1. Deuteron. 23. When thou ſhalt vow a vow unto God, thou ſhalt not bee ſlacke to pay it; it ſhould bee ſinne unto thee: but when thou abſtaineſt from vowing, it ſhall bee no ſinne unto thee. By this the Jeſuite proveth, that the vowes of Chriſtians are voluntarie, and not of neceſſarie duties, for it were ſinne to leave any thing undone, that we are in dutie bound unto, cap. 19. And hereupon he inferreth, that the promiſe made in baptiſme is no vow, becauſe it is neceſſarie.

Anſw. Firſt, we denie not but that the Jewes had voluntary vowes, and might bind themſelves by vowe to performe many things, which being not vowed, it was no ſinne to leave undone: As the Nazarites vowes concerning abſtinence from wine and ſtrong drinke; which things other might lawfully uſe without ſinne, if they were not profeſſed Nazarites. But theſe ceremoniall lawes doe nothing appertaine to Chriſtians.

The ſame anſwer may ſerve to the like objection made out of the 27. of Leviticus, The firſt borne which pertaine to the Lord, no man may ſanctifie, &c. they are the Lords: whence is inferred, that thoſe things wherein we are alreadie bound, are not properly matter of vow, &c. For the Iſraelites had two kinde of vowes, ſome were legall and ceremoniall, which were of ſuch things as otherwiſe were not due: ſome were morall, whereby they did bind themſelves to the ſervice of God, as Deut. 26. 17. Thou haſt ſet up the Lord this day to be thy God; &c. And the Lord hath ſet thee up this day to be a precious people to himſelfe. And of this kinde is the vow of baptiſme.

Levit. 27. 26.

Doway Bible annot. upon that place.

Secondly, it may alſo bee underſtood of neceſſary vowes, which wee are bound unto of dutie, and then the ſenſe is this: If you abſtaine from vowing yee ſinne not, that is, not ſo hainouſly as after the vow made; as Pagans and Infidels do ſinne in tranſgreſſing Gods law: but a Chriſtian ſinneth more after publike profeſſion and promiſe made of obedience unto Gods commandements.

Thus our Saviour Chriſt ſaith of the Jewes: If I had not come, and ſpoken unto them, they ſhould have had no ſinne, Ioh. 15. verſ. 21. that is, in compariſon; their ſinne of ignorance ſhould have been none in reſpect of their ſinne, which they have now: ſo his ſin, that bindeth not himſelfe to the obedience of Gods commandements, is not like to his ſinne, that hath bound himſelfe, and yet tranſgreſſeth: but I rather inſiſt upon the former anſwer.

Ioh. 15. 21.

Argum. 2. The Jeſuite would thus alſo prove the promiſe made in baptiſme to bee no vow. The vowes of children uttered by their parents, are not ratified but by them, in whoſe name they were made, when they come to yeeres of diſcretion: but the promiſe made in baptiſme doth bind children, whether they will or not: Ergo, it is no vow.

Anſw. Firſt, if this reaſon prove any thing, it concerneth only the baptiſme of Infants, ſo that the promiſe made in the baptiſme of thoſe which are adulti, alreadie come to yeeres of diſcretion, ſhall be a vow, whatſoever Bellarmine ſaith to the contrary; for they even when they are baptized are able to give conſent unto the vow and promiſe then and there made. Secondly, it is untrue, that the vowes of the parents made in the name of their children, doe not abſolutely binde: for under the law even in ceremoniall vowes uttered by the parents, the children were bound: as 1 Sam. 1. 11. Anna voweth to God, that a raſor ſhall not come upon her ſonnes head; which vow was accordingly kept in her ſonne: Ierem. 35. 6. Ionadab enjoyned his ſonnes, that neither they nor their ſeede for ever, ſhould drinke any wine, or ſtrong drinke; and they obeyed without any gainſaying or reſiſtance. Thirdly, concerning neceſſary duties, the children are bound to keep their parents vowes and covenant made with God: as Ieſua made a promiſe for himſelfe and his, I and my houſe will ſerve the Lord, Ioſua 24. 15. And if in civill matters the parents may binde their children abſolutely to the covenant, which they make, as Ionathan and David made a covenant for them and their ſeed, 1 Samuel 20. 42. much more this ſpirituall covenant bindeth, being grounded upon the ordinance and commandement of God: notwithſtanding all that hath been ſaid, the promiſe made in baptiſme ſhall bee a vow ſtill.

Ierem. 35. 6.

1 Sam. 20. 42.

Argum. 3. It is both unprofitable and ſuperfluous for a man to vow to doe that, to the which hee is bound alreadie; but in baptiſme wee promiſe obedience unto God, which wee are bound to doe by the law: Ergo, it is ſuperfluous to ſeeke to tie our ſelves with new bonds, and conſequently it ſhould be a ſuperfluous vow: Bellarm. cap. 19. argum. 5.

Anſw. Firſt, if this reaſon prove any thing, it ſeemeth to conclude, that it is ſuperfluous for any promiſe to bee made in baptiſme, as well as a vow, ſeeing wee are already bound to ſerve God by the law of Creation. Secondly, neither is it ſuperfluous to vow, more ſtrictly to doe that, which wee are bound to doe; for a double bond bindeth more ſtrongly than one, and as the wiſe man ſaith, a threefold cord cannot be broken, Eccleſiaſt. 4. So Iacob vowed that the Lord ſhould be his God, Gen. 28. which notwithſtanding was covenanted before in his circumciſion. Thirdly, there is a common bond, which bindeth all men, namely the law of Creation; but as God hath his peculiar people, ſo is there a peculiar bond to tie them unto God, namely, their deliverance by Chriſt, which is profeſſed in baptiſme: as before the commandements, God doth move his people to obedience, not becauſe hee created them, but for that he brought them out of the houſe of bondage. Fourthly, if two bonds are ſuperfluous, wherefore then doth the Lord by two immutable things, his word and his oath confirme his promiſes to us, Hebr. 6. 18. let him ſay alſo that one of them is ſuperfluous.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold that to vow is not a thing ſimply forbidden Chriſtians: but our vowes are limited and reſtrained: for they are either ſuch, as directly or immediatly are referred to the worſhip of God, whereby wee binde our ſelves more ſtraitly to ſerve him: and ſuch vowes are only of ſuch things as are commanded, and neceſſarily to be done: and in this ſenſe there is but one common vow of all Chriſtians, and that is our ſolemne promiſe in baptiſme, which the Papiſts deny properly to bee a vow, Bellarm. cap. 19. There is another kind of vowes, that directly concerneth not the worſhip of God, which may bee of things not commanded, of the which wee will intreat in the next ſection. Now we are to prove, that baptiſme is the only proper vow of Chriſtians, which directly toucheth the ſervice and worſhip of God.

Galath. 5.3.

Argum. 1. Circumciſion was a generall vow of the Jewes, for thereby they bound themſelves to keep the whole law, Galath. 5. 3. Ergo, Baptiſme is the vow of Chriſtians, which commeth in the place of circumciſion. And againe, it appeareth by this, that becauſe Chriſtians tranſgreſſing, doe deſerve greater puniſhment, than Jewes or Gentiles, that they are more ſtreightly obliged and bound by their covenant unto God than the other: and not only, as the Jeſuite ſaith, becauſe they have taſted more of the goodneſſe of God, and ſo are more unthankfull; for there are two parts of the covenant betweene God and us: The Lord ſaith, Thou art my people, and ſo inricheth them with knowledge, and every good thing: The people ſay, Thou art my God, Hoſh. 2. 23. And thus as the Lord doth covenant with them, ſo they doe bind themſelves unto God: The breach of which covenant, is that which ſtirreth up principally the anger of God againſt us.

Rom. 6.13.

Argum. 2. A vow is that, whereby any thing is given unto God; as Anna, 1 Sam. 1. 11. gave her ſon unto God, which the Scripture calleth a vow: but in baptiſme we are given unto God: Rom. 6. 13. Give your ſelves unto God, ſeeing you are alive from the dead: namely, by the power of Chriſts reſurrection repreſented in baptiſme: as the Apoſtle ſheweth, verſ. 4. Ergo, in baptiſme wee doe vow our ſelves unto God.

Judg. 11. 36.
Nehem. 10. 9.

Argum. 3. An oath bindeth as well as a vow, if not more, before God; (this Bellarmine confeſſeth, cap. 16. argum. 3.) for a vow is but a ſolemne promiſe, as Iepthah his vow is called a promiſe, Iudg. 11. 36. but an oath is more than a promiſe: but by oath we may bind our ſelves to the performance of thoſe things, which notwithſtanding are neceſſarily enjoyned us, as Pſal. 119. 106. I have ſworne to keep thy righteous judgements: and Nehem. 10. 9. the people bind themſelves by an oath to obſerve Gods commandements: Ergo, alſo theſe things are incident to our vowes. Auguſtine alſo upon the 75. Pſalme writeth thus: Vovete & reddite Domino Deo veſtro omnes communiter: Quid debemus vovere? credere in illum, ſperare ab illo vitam æternam, bene vivere ſecundum communem [illegible]: Make your vowes, and pay them unto God generally all together; What muſt we vow? to beleeve in him, to hope for eternall life, to live honeſtly, not to ſteale, not to commit adulterie, &c. Theſe then are the common and generall duties of Chriſtians: no other than we promiſed and vowed in baptiſme.

Concil. Colonienſ. part. 7. It was decreed, that the Godfathers ſhould be growne in yeeres, not children: Ne infans infantem offerret, aut ſponſorem pro alio ſe Deo conſtitueret, qui quod promittit, non intelligat: Leſt that one child ſhould offer or preſent another, or undertake for another before God, not underſtanding what hee promiſeth, &c. From hence we reaſon thus: A vow is nothing elſe, but religioſa promiſſio Deo facta, a religious promiſe made unto God, as Bellarmine himſelfe defineth it, cap. 14. But in baptiſme there is religioſa promiſſio & ſponſio, a religious promiſe and troth-giving made unto God, as this Councell ſheweth: Ergo.

Their owne Authors alſo are againſt them, that the things commanded of God may properly bee vowed: as Dominicus a Soto lib. 7. de juſtitia qu. 1. art. 3. Alphonſus a caſtro, lib. 1. de leg. pænal. cap. 10.

1 Tim. 5.12.

The Maſter alſo of the Sentences confeſſeth, that the common vow of Chriſtians is made in baptiſme, namely to renounce the devill: and in the ſame place, he thus expoundeth that place 1 Tim. 5. They have broken their firſt faith; which Bellarmine expoundeth of vowes, cap. 17. argum. 3. that is, ſaith he, votum, vel fidem, quam in baptiſmo profeſſi ſunt; Their vow or faith, which they profeſſed in baptiſme.

That vowes may be of neceſſary duties, ſuch as we promiſed in baptiſme, we want not teſtimonie from other Churches.

Baptiſme bindeth to obedience unto God, as children are bound to their parents.

3 Confeſſion of Auſpurg, artic. 6. They taught that the Monks profeſſion was better than baptiſme, that the Monks life did merit more than the life of Magiſtrates, of Paſtors, which in the obedience of Gods commandement followed their calling, &c. Wittemberg, artic. 26. Certaine men are not afraid to make this kinde of vowing (that is, of ſingle life, povertie, obedience) equall with baptiſme.

But what elſe are thoſe vowes than of obedience to Gods commandements, which were vowed in baptiſme?

Ex vita Hierom. tom. 1.

The third part, concerning voluntarie vowes, whether they be any part of the worſhip of God.

The Papiſts.

ALL voluntarie vowes (ſay they) made by Chriſtians, though not commanded of God, as not to eat fleſh, not to drinke ſtrong drinke, or to live unmarried, doe concerne the worſhip of God, and thereby men are made more acceptable unto him, Bellarm. cap. 16.

93. Error.

Argum. 1. Iacob vowed to pay tithes, Gen. 28. David to build a Temple unto God, Pſal. 131.2. But neither of theſe two were commanded them, and yet they were properly referred to the ſervice of God, Bellarm. cap. 16. The ſame places alſo are urged in the Doway Bible lately ſet forth.

Annot. in Levit. 26. verſ. 26.

Anſw. Firſt, we deny not, as we have ſaid, but that in the Law and before, there might be ſuch voluntarie vowes: yet it followeth not, that there ſhould be any ſuch now. Secondly, both thoſe duties were neceſſarie, and commanded in generall, though not in particular. As firſt, Iacob profeſſeth that the Lord ſhould be his God, verſ. 21. No man can deny, but this was neceſſarie, and a commandement. Then ſeeing the Lord is his God, it is alſo neceſſarie that hee ſhould acknowledge him by ſome externall worſhip, as by appointing the Lord an houſe in that place, and bringing oblations unto his altars: theſe are but particular duties that doe follow that generall commandement.

Secondly, David did vow that which he was bound to doe being King of Iſrael, namely, to have a care of the Temple of God: for thus he ſaith to Nathan the Prophet, I dwell in an houſe of Cedar trees; but the Arke of God remaineth within the curtains, 2 Sam. 7.2. This belonged to the King of dutie, as it was generally commanded all Iſrael, Hagg. 1.4. but that David was diſcharged of this care, by the eſpeciall warrant of God by the Prophet.

Hagg. 1.4.

Thirdly, neither ſimply to build a Temple is a part of religious worſhip: for Herod the Great built the Temple of Jeruſalem in moſt glorious manner: but as it is referred to the true worſhip of God, it is gratefull and acceptable.

Argum. 2. Heb. 13.16. To doe good and to diſtribute forget not, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed. Intelligitur (ſaith Bellarmine) de eleemoſyna non præcepta: which is underſtood of almes not commanded: And if God bee pleaſed with everie vertuous act, yea done without a vow, in things not commanded; much more where a vow is.

Anſ. Firſt, it is a moſt groſſe and abſurd ſaying, that there can be any vertuous act not commanded in Scripture: the Apoſtle ſpeaketh contrarie, 2 Tim. 3.17. that the man of God by the Scriptures is made perfect to all good works: Ergo, all good works are preſcribed in Scripture. Secondly, it is alſo untrue, that there are almeſ-deeds not commanded, ſeeing that in this verie place it is an expreſſe charge and commandement of the Apoſtle, To doe good and to diſtribute.

2 Tim. 3.17.

Argum. 3. To keepe promiſe or faith given unto God, is properly to ſerve God; a vow is a promiſe made unto God: Ergo. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. By a vow or promiſe made unto God of that which is not lawfull, is no worſhipping of God, but rather a diſhonouring of him, as may appeare in the vow of Iepthe, of the which S. Ambroſe thus writeth: Melius fuit nihil tale promittere, quam promiſſum parricidio ſolvere: It had been better never to have vowed or promiſed any ſuch thing, than with parricide to performe his promiſe, lib. 1. de offic. c. 50. Then our Doway tranſlators are much deceived in their gloſſe, that Iepthe ſinned not in performing his vow, (in ſacrificing his daughter, as they ſuppoſe) but rather pacified God thereby: for both the example of Abraham ſheweth the contrarie, whoſe hand God ſtayed from ſacrificing his ſonne, and yet hee was commanded by the Lord to doe it: and as well may they ſay, that Herod ſinned not in putting Iohn to death, becauſe he had ſworne to doe it.

Annot. in 12. Iudg.

Argum. 4. An oath even in a thing not commanded is the worſhip of God, as to ſweare not to drinke wine: and ſo conſequently a vow alſo: Bellarm. ibid. c. 16. argum. 3.

Anſw. The conſequence or dependance of this argument I willingly yeeld unto, having urged it before againſt the Suite himſelfe (I would ſay Jeſuite;) for an oath and a vow may be well compared together: but an oath, ſuch as the Jeſuite ſpeaketh of, is not acceptable to God: Firſt, becauſe an oath is appointed to make an end of ſtrife betweene men, Heb. 6.16. not to determine matters betweene God and us; men ſweare by God, not ſo properly to God. Secondly, neither is it pleaſing to God, to binde thoſe things with an oath abſolutely, which are not in our owne power, as not to drinke wine, ſeeing his infirmitie may cauſe him to drinke it, as Saint Paul counſelled Tim. 1.5.

Heb. 6.16.
1 Tim. 5.23.

Thirdly, yet an oath in theſe externall matters, doth not verily or properly belong to the worſhip of God, though in ſome ſort may be referred unto it, as now followeth to be ſhewed.

The Proteſtants.

WE grant that there are other kinds of vowes than before we ſpake of, which doe not directly concerne the worſhip of God, neither are of things commanded us, nor yet is God thereby the better pleaſed: but they ſerve only as helps, to make us more fit unto Chriſtian duties: As a man that ſeeth he is by nature given to drunkenneſſe, doth vow that he will take no ſtrong drinke, leſt hee ſhould offend that way: Another purpoſeth to faſt, thereby to tame his fleſh, and the more Iob 31.1. fervently to pray; as Iob made a covenant with his eyes not to looke upon a maid, 31.1. But theſe things of themſelves, by the outward act, are not the more acceptable unto God, neither is God by eating or not eating, or looking or not looking, the better worſhipped, as theſe things are conſidered in themſelves. Wherefore by the word of God wee condemne all voluntarie and ſuperſtitious vowes of men, invented to ſerve God by, as vowes of chaſtitie, of going in pilgrimage, offering to Images, and ſuch like.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul condemneth all voluntarie worſhip of God which is invented by man, as unprofitable, though it have a ſhew of wiſdome in humbleneſſe of minde, and not ſparing the body, Coloſſ.2.23. Coloſſ.2.23. As ſuch are the ordinances of the world in worſhipping of Angels, and in abſtinence, Touch not, taſte not, handle not. But ſuch are all popiſh vowes, a voluntarie ſervice of God, even in the ſame things which the Apoſtle taketh exception againſt: for they make vowes to Angels, to Saints, vowes to keepe dayes holy, and to faſt in them: Ergo, they are unlawfull.

Argum. 2. Rom. 14. 23. Whatſoever is not of faith, is ſinne, that is, not grounded upon knowledge out of the word: Ergo, all voluntarie vowes made to ſerve God by, are to bee abandoned, becauſe they have no warrant out of Gods word. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the place is not ſo to bee underſtood, but rather, by faith, is meant the conſcience of man, and ſo whatſoever is done againſt the conſcience is ſinne.

Anſw. By faith, is not underſtood every conſcience, but the aſſurance of a right conſcience, which muſt needs be builded upon the word: for verſ. 22. S. Paul ſaith, If thou haſt faith, have it with God: This cannot be ſpoken of a corrupt conſcience which is not able to abide Gods triall, but a right conſcience eſtabliſhed out of the word.

Thus Bernard expoundeth this place: De fide vera non falſa puto dixiſſe Apoſtolum, omne, quod non ex fide, peccatum, quia fides falſa, fides non eſt: I thinke the Apoſtle ſpake of a true, not a falſe faith, ſaying, what is not of faith is ſinne; for a falſe faith is no faith: Lib. de diſpenſation.

Argum. 3. To mortifie the body, and to be renewed in the minde, is the reaſonable, that is, the true and proper ſervice of God; but the mortifying of the fleſh and change of the minde conſiſteth not in meat or drinke, or any ſuch externall thing: Ergo, therein ſtandeth not the true ſervice of God: And ſo the Apoſtle alſo evidently ſaith, Meat maketh us not acceptable unto God, for neither if wee eat
1 Cor.8.8. have we the more, or if we eat not have we the leſſe, &c. 1 *Cor.*8.8. The Apoſtle reaſoneth thus: that which being uſed bringeth no reward, not uſed procureth no loſſe, doth not make us acceptable to God: for the neglecting or not uſing of thoſe things, wherein Gods ſervice ſtandeth is damnable: but the not uſing of meats and drinks and ſuch like is not damnable: Ergo, therein ſtandeth not Gods ſervice.

Argum. 4. Let us heare Auguſtines judgement: Sunt multi qui vovent, &c. There are many that vow, one a cloake, another oyle, another a wax candle, another that he will drinke no wine, another that he will faſt, another that he will eat no fleſh. This is not the beſt kinde of vowing: God neither careth for thy comely apparrell, nor for thine oyle, nor for thy faſting: but offer that unto him which he hath redeemed, that is, thy ſoule, De tempor. ſer. 7. Wee ſee by this what account Auguſtine maketh of ſuperſtitious voluntarie vowes, made with an intent to pleaſe God thereby.

Concil. Arauſicanæ. 2. can. 11. Nemo quicquam Deo voverit, niſi ab ipſo acceperit, ſicut legitur, quæ
1 Chro.29.14. de manu tua accepimus, damus tibi. 1 *Paralippom.*29.14. Let no man vow unto God any thing, unleſſe he have received it, as we read, Theſe things which we have received at thy hand, we give unto thee: Therefore no man can make a vow of chaſtitie unto God, nor of any other gift not in his owne power.

See alſo the rules of your owne lawes: Decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 7. c. 2. Innocent. Quod non eſt ſanctorum patrum decreto ſancitum, ſuperſtitioſis non eſt adinventionibus præſumendum: That which is not eſtabliſhed by the decree of the holy Fathers, muſt not by ſuperſtitious inventions be preſumed, &c. If that be ſuperſtition which is not decreed by the Fathers, how much more that which is not warranted by Scripture: And as it followeth in the ſame place; Nonnunquam intelligitur prohibitum, quod non invenitur conceſſum: That we underſtand to be prohibited, which is found not to bee granted, &c. Wherefore by this rule all voluntarie vowes of things not commanded or granted in Scripture, are held to be prohibited.

Iames Baineham holy Martyr: The vowes of chaſtitie and all goodneſſe are given of God, by his Pag.937.a.50. abundant grace, which no man of himſelfe can keepe, but it muſt be given him of God: Fox, pag. 1028. col. 1.

And for further evidence, firſt, Ieremie Patriarke of Conſtantinople alleageth thus out of Baſil, that the contemplative life hath no other ſcope, but the ſalvation of the ſoule: And hee addeth further of his owne: In qua quidem rerum omnium repudiatione, illud ſummum eſt, ut pravas cupiditates primo deponamus: In which refuſing of all things, that is the chiefe, to lay aſide all evill deſires, &c. Monaſticall vowes then are not acceptable of themſelves, but as they help unto mortification, and to further the health of the ſoule.

Cenſur. Oriental. Eccl. c. 20.

2 It was the ſaying of Zaga Zabo a Biſhop of Æthiopia, as he is cited before, that meat doth not commend us to God, according to that ſaying of S. Paul, Neither if we eat, have we the more, or if we eat not have we the leſſe, and therefore we ſhould looke for higher matters, our heavenly food, &c. Theſe things of themſelves then are not acceptable to God.

Harm. ſect. 16. p. 488.

4 Polidor Virgil telleth us, one of their owne Hiſtorians, that in the time of Paulus, Antonius, Baſilius, this kinde of monaſticall life was free and ſimple, nec illis ceremoniis obſtrictum, &c. nor tied to theſe ceremonies, which Monks now adayes obſerve.

De invention. rer. lib. 7. c. 1.

The fourth queſtion, concerning Monaſticall vowes in particular.

THere are three kinds of vowes which belong unto Monkery: the firſt is the vow of voluntary poverty: the ſecond, the vow of obedience unto the Monaſticall preſidents and governours: the third is the vow of continencie. Of theſe three in order.

The firſt part, concerning the vow of voluntary poverty.

The Papiſts.

THey ſay it is an acceptable ſervice unto God, for a man to give all hee hath to the poore, and by vow to conſecrate and addict himſelfe to voluntary poverty.

94. Error.

Argum. 1. Matth. 18. 21. Chriſt ſaith, if thou wilt bee perfect, goe and ſell all thou haſt, and give it to the poore, and come and follow mee. This is properly to follow Chriſt, to lacke proprietie and live in common: and thus the Apoſtles followed Chriſt, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Matth. 18. 21.

Anſw. Firſt, this is a precept not generall to all, but given to this one man to diſcover his hypocriſie, and vaine confidence that he had in himſelfe, as though hee had kept the law, which hee came farre ſhort of. Secondly, the Apoſtles themſelves had proprietie: Peter had a houſe: Iohn had to provide for the Virgin Marie, whom Chriſt commended unto him: Matthew made a feaſt of his owne goods, Fulke ibid. See before error 90. in the end, how this place is interpreted by Gulielmus de S. Amore, alleaged alſo by Thomas, not of an actuall but habituall forſaking of all, required of every Chriſtian, when occaſion ſerveth, to ſet forth the honour of Chriſt.

Argum. 2. Acts 2. 44. They had all things common: and Acts 5. Ananias and Sapphira, after their profeſſion of common life, detaining ſome part proper to themſelves, were reproved and judged of the Apoſtles: Ergo, it is acceptable to God to live in common: Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. cap. 20.

Acts 2. 44.

Anſw. Firſt, that communitie uſed then amongſt the brethren, ought alwayes to be among Chriſtians, no man to count that his owne, which the neceſſitie of his brother requireth to bee beſtowed upon him. Thus alſo witneſſeth Urbanus in his Decretall, Cauſ. 12. qu. 1. c. 9. Scimus vos non ignorare, &c. We know you are not ignorant that hitherto a common life hath flouriſhed amongſt all Chriſtians, and yet by Gods grace doth flouriſh, &c. Neither was every man then bound to give up the proprietie of their goods: for they diſtributed to every man as they had need, Act. 4. 35. But if they had given up all the proprietie of their goods, then all ſhould have needed alike: And Peter ſaith not the contrarie, but that Ananias might have kept the proprietie of his goods, if he had not made publike profeſſion to the contrarie, Act. 5. 4.

2 Your owne law giveth another reaſon of that community among the Apoſtles, ibid. c. 15. Futuram eccleſiam, &c. The Apoſtles did foreſee that the Church ſhould bee amongſt the Gentils, and therefore they would not have any poſſeſſions in Judea, but tooke the price only for the reliefe of the poore.

3 Concerning Ananias, we doe not reade that he made any vow to give his goods to the Church: nay the contrary appeareth, in that S. Peter ſaith, While it remained with thee, appertained it not to thee? But if his vow were paſt before, the goods, though yet not ſold, could not appertaine unto him. Againe, the principall and chiefe cauſe, why Peter proceeded againſt him, was his lying and hypocriſie, not for breaking his vow: for it cannot bee proved that he promiſed all, but that hee affirmed that he brought all, whereas he withdrew part.

Argum.

Matth. 5. 3. Argum. 3. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit, Matth. 5. 3. that is, ſuch as willingly make themſelves poore: for ſo did our Saviour Chriſt, who both in action and affection was poore, and did as he taught. And Luke 6. 24. Luke 6. 24. There is a woe denounced to the rich in this world: So that by the contrary the bleſſing is upon the poore, Bellarm. cap. 20.

Anſw. Firſt, it is evident, that Chriſt ſpeaketh not of outward povertie, but of the humilitie of the minde: firſt, becauſe it is ſo expreſſed, bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit. Secondly, the Prophet David in Pſal. 26. 16. the ſame ſenſe ſaith, I am poore, Pſalm. 26. 16. yet was hee King, and abounded in riches. Thirdly, Matth. 11. 5. Matth. 11. 5. The poore receive the Goſpell: yet were they not all poore in ſubſtance that received Chriſt, as Nicodemus, Ioſeph of Arimathea, Zacheus. Now to anſwer likewiſe to his proofes: Firſt, where Chriſt ſaith, woe unto the rich, he meaneth not all rich men, but ſuch as truſted in their riches: Marke 10. 24. for ſuch only are excluded the kingdome of heaven, Marke 10. 24. Secondly, it is untrue that Chriſt did profeſſe voluntary povertie, as your owne Extravagant hath decreed, that it is an hereſie ſo to affirme: for Chriſt had both money, and a bagge for the almes of the poore, Ioann. 22. tit. 14. c. 5.

The Proteſtants.

VOluntarie, or rather wilfull povertie, for a man having no urgent cauſe, to leave all he hath, and bequeath himſelfe to a poore and needie life, only for opinion of greater merit, and hope thereby better to pleaſe God, is neither a thing acceptable nor commendable before God, nor any where commanded in the Scriptures.

1 Tim. 6. 17. Argum. 1. 1 Timoth. 6. 17. S. Paul giving counſell to rich men, biddeth them not to caſt away their riches: but charge them (ſaith he) that they be not high minded, nor put their truſt in uncertaine riches. Surely it had been a more compendious way to wiſh them at once to leave their riches, ſo they ſhould not be in danger, either of pride, or vaine confidence: but the Apoſtle ſaith no ſuch thing. Againe, God giveth us abundantly all things to enjoy: riches are the gift of God, we ought not to be wearie of Gods bleſſing. And as Iob ſaith, The Lord giveth, the Lord taketh: therefore a man ought not make himſelfe poore, becauſe hee made not himſelfe rich, but to wait upon God.

Further it followeth, verſ. 18. that they doe good, and be rich in good works: hee that can uſe riches well, may bee rich in good works: but hee that is poore, wanteth occaſion and meanes to doe good, as the rich man indued with grace may: wherefore hee is an enemie to the glory of God, that changeth his rich eſtate, wherein he may more glorifie God, for a poore.

Againe, if it were ſo acceptable a thing to God, and ſo meritorious to live in povertie, what made Prov. 30. 8. the Prophet to pray againſt it? Give me not povertie nor riches, but feed me with food convenient, Prov. 30. verſ. 8.

Argum. 2. What better argument can we have againſt them, than their owne practice? for, though in words they much commend voluntarie povertie, yet it is a rare thing to find it amongſt them: for not one among a thouſand of them, if they have lands, doe give them to the poore, but to their owne kinsfolkes, or elſe to the Abbeyes, where they know they ſhall be wealthily maintained. The Pope alſo is good to many, and granteth them capacities to poſſeſſe temporall goods, contrary to their former vow.

Prov. 31. 8. 9. Argum. 3. The Wiſeman prayeth unto God, Give me not povertie, leſt I be poore, and ſteale, and take the name of God in vaine, Prov. 31. 8. 9. From this place two arguments may bee drawne: That which may lawfully be prayed againſt, is not willingly to be deſired; poverty may be prayed againſt; therefore it is not to bee purpoſely ſought. Againe, no man is willingly to runne into temptation; but povertie is a temptation to ſteale, and to take Gods name in vaine: Ergo, &c.

Auguſtine ſaith, Divitiæ ſeculares ſi deſint, non per opera mala quærantur in mundo: Si autem adſunt, per opera bona ſerventur in cœlo: Epiſt. 1. Poſteriorum. If ſecular riches be wanting, let not a man ſeeke to get them by evill doing in the world; but if he have them, labour by well-doing, to ſtore them up in heaven, &c. He counſelleth not men to caſt away their riches: It was the hereſie of the Pelagians to perſwade rich men to caſt away their goods, Auguſt. epiſtol. 106. and of the Manichee likewiſe. Auguſt. cont. Fauſtum. lib. 5. cap. 10. For they promiſed the kingdome of heaven to none but to those that caſt away their riches, and ſo conſequently they perſwaded to caſt them away: the caviller Retect. p. 147. might have ſpared his labour here. See this cavill further anſwered elſewhere.

Concil. Cabilonenſ. ſub Carol. cap. 6. Imputatur quibuſdam fratribus, &c. Certaine brethren are charged, that for covetouſnes they perſwade men, that renouncing the world, they ſhould give their ſubſtance to the Church, which practice ſhould bee rooted out of all minds: for the Paſtor ſhould ſeeke the ſalvation of mens ſoules, not earthly commoditie: becauſe Chriſtians muſt not bee compelled to give their ſubſtance, &c. But I pray you, if it were a thing ſo meritorious and healthfull for the ſoule to give all away, why ſhould not men be perſwaded and allured thereunto.

Let us ſee the Imperiall conſtitutions: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. leg. 11. Valentinian. By this law it is made lawfull for women profeſſed (who are now called Nuns) to make their wils and teſtaments, and to leave to what uſes they thought good. Likewiſe, tit. 6. leg. 42. the ſonne, though a profeſſed Monk, may ſucceed his father in his inheritance, Iuſtinian. It ſhould ſeeme then, that in thoſe dayes the vow of voluntary poverty was not practiſed amongſt thoſe ancient Monks.

Their owne Canons alſo do helpe us in this matter: Decret. p. 1. diſtinct. 30. c. 16. Divites, &c. We doe not reject rich men having good works. Againe, Cauſ.12.qu.1.c.25. Sine peccato poſſideant ſua, &c. They that are profeſſed, may without ſinne poſſeſſe their owne, Cauſ.16.qu.1.c.68. In pauperibus, &c. We muſt not in the poore ſo much conſider their povertie, as their religion: Ergo, povertie of it ſelfe by your owne law is not meritorious.

And yet more evidently, whereas the order of S. Francis was bound to voluntarie povertie, it being not lawfull for them to touch any money, nor yet to have propertie or dominion in any thing, but in the ſimple uſe onely, as may appeare by the conſtitution of Pope *Nicholas, ſext. decr. lib.*5. *tit.*12 *c.*3. Afterward commeth Iohn 22. who determineth the contrarie, ſhewing that in rebus conſumptilibus, in things which conſume in the uſe, as meat, drinke, apparrell, the uſe could not be ſevered from the propertie: for then the uſe may be ſevered from the propertie, when there ariſeth ſome profit by the uſe, (ſalva rei ſubſtantia) the ſubſtance being preſerved, but in uſing of meat and drinke, the ſubſtance alſo is conſumed: And ſo hee concludeth, that the ſaid order had not onely the uſe, but the propertie alſo in the ſaid things; and ſo conſequently it may be inferred, that where a propertie remained, there could be no reſolute povertie, *Extrav. tit.*14. *c.*5.

The ſaid Iohn 22. condemned them for heretikes, who affirmed that Chriſt and his Apoſtles had nothing proper, *Extrav. tit.*14. *c.*5. If neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles entred into this rule of perfection, nor did betake themſelves to voluntarie povertie, ſhall any man now ſtrive to be more perfect than they?

Iohn Lambert (holy Martyr) ſheweth what voluntarie povertie is required of Chriſtians, and how that precept of our Saviour, Goe and ſell all that thou haſt, &c. may be fulfilled, for he hath ſold (ſaith he) all that ever he had, that can finde in his heart to depart from it, when God ſhall pleaſe, or charitie ſo requireth: Voluntas reputatur pro facto, the will is accepted for the deed, &c. Fox, pag. 1110. col. 1.

Pa.10. 14. 1.20.

As touching this point, of voluntarie forſaking of riches. 1 Ieremie the Patriarke giveth a rule, that it is in vaine, if it be not divini amoris & æternæ fœlicitatis conſequendæ cauſa: For the love of God, and to obtaine everlaſting felicitie: and to that end he alleageth that ſaying of S. Paul, Though I feed the poore with all my goods, &c. and have not love, it profiteth me nothing: but they which doe ſuch things of a ſuperſtitious minde, to merit thereby, ſhew not therein their love to God, or to their brethren, but to themſelves.

Cap. 20. Cenſur. Oriental.

2 It was the ſaying of Antony an ancient Monk of Ægypt: Nec universo orbi renuntiantes, dignum aliquid habitaculis poſſumus compenſare cœleſtib. Though we ſhould renounce the whole world, we cannot doe any thing worthy of the heavenly habitations, &c. the Patriarke of Æthiopia is alwayes a Monke of Antonies order: to whom the Emperour granteth the third part of his revenewes to beſtow in charitable uſes: and when he dieth, the Emperour taketh all his goods into his hands, &c. It ſeemeth then that the Monks of that order profeſſe not voluntarie povertie.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg, c.21. It is to no better purpoſe to vow povertie, for either thou art poore by condition or eſtate, and then the croſſe that God hath laid upon thee, thou muſt beare patiently, &c. or elſe thou doeſt poſſeſſe ſubſtance, and voweſt, by forſaking of thy ſubſtance, to lead a poore life, and get thy living by begging, and ſo to merit eternall life: this vow is firſt repugnant to the love of thy neighbour, which requireth no further to be troubleſome to thy neighbour than neceſſitie requireth: ſecondly, it is contrarie to faith in Chriſt, becauſe that hee alone is the merit of eternall life: if thou forſake thy ſubſtance to give it to a common uſe, it is not to follow after povertie, but to provide a more certaine and bountifull kinde of life for thy ſelfe.

Harm. ſect. 18. P. 574.

4 Rabadineira the Jeſuite in the life of Ignatius Loyola their founder, ſaith, that he provided that they of his order ſhould have ſufficient proviſion for their ſuſtentation: for his ſaying was in ſumma mendicitate ſapientia ſtudium conſiſtere non poſſe: That in beggerly povertie the ſtudie of wiſdome could not conſiſt: So it ſeemeth this new upſtart order of Friers miſlike the vow of beggerly and extreme povertie: yet they boaſt much of their Generall Francis Borgias, who of a Duke became a Jeſuite, who to ſhew his humilitie when new breeches were offered unto him, would rather weare his old, that were patched and torne: But ſuch baſe ſordiditie is diſliked of Melchior Canus, who giveth this cenſure of that fable of S. Francis, that he would put lice upon himſelfe againe that fell off: I know, ſaith he, Paupertatem placuiſſe, &c. non ſordes, that povertie was pleaſing to that holy man, but not ſordiditie and baſeneſſe.

The ſecond part, Concerning the vow of obedience.

The Papiſts.

THey that doe enter into the monkiſh profeſſion, doe vow in all things to become obedient to their Governour, and to follow his rules and injunctions: as the Franciſcans follow S. Francis rule, who in ſtead of a girdle put a cord about him, went bare-foot, in winter ſeaſon covered his fleſh with ice and ſnow. It is acceptable and gratefull ſervice, ſay they, unto God, to be thus obedient to their Fathers and Governours.

95. Error;

Fox, pag. 259.

1 Ierem. 35. The ſonnes of Ionadab are commended for being obedient to their father, who enjoyned them to drinke no wine, nor to ſow their fields, nor build houſes, but dwell in tents: Thus they obeyed their father in things not commanded of God: Ergo, ſo ought religious Monks to doe, *Bellarm. cap.*21.

Anſw. Firſt, you cannot ſhew that your monkiſh Abbots have ſuch authoritie over their Monks, as the father hath over his children: for *Coloſſ.*3. and in many other places, children are commanded to be obedient to their parents: but the other have neither authoritie nor calling out of the word. Alſo S. Paul ſaith, *Coloſſ.*3. Sonnes obey your parents in all things: wherefore Ionadabs children did no more than was commanded. Bellarmine anſwereth, that children are bound onely to obey their parents while they are little ones, and not afterward: as the Apoſtle ſaith, that the heire as long as he is a childe, differeth nothing from a ſervant, *Galath.*4.1.

Contra. Firſt, a childe while he is young is more in ſubjection than afterward: for he is then kept in awe as a ſervant; but when he commeth to yeeres of diſcretion, he is ſtill held as a ſonne: and this to be the meaning of the Apoſtle appeareth by the application of this compariſon; that even ſo we as ſervants, were kept under the bondage of the rudiments of the world, and ceremonies of the Law, but by the redemption of Chriſt have received the adoption of ſonnes. Secondly, and that ſonnes, even when they come to mens eſtate, muſt be obedient to their parents, it appeareth by the ſonnes of Eli, 1 *Sam.*2. who is both puniſhed for not chaſtiſing his ſonnes, and they likewiſe for not hearing their father. We ſee then what goodly ſtuffe this Popiſh doctrine is, that teacheth children to caſt off the yoke of obedience to their parents.

Secondly, Ionadab enjoyned nothing contrarie to the Law of the Nazarites, *Numb.*6. And if you ſay, that it was not the cuſtome of the Nazarites to dwell in tents; you ſhall finde that the Rechabites did not ſo ſtraightly obſerve this as the other, namely not to drinke wine: for *Ierem.*35. *verſ.*11. they came up for feare of the Chaldeans that were in the land, and dwelt at Jeruſalem: they diſpenſed with the voluntarie injunction of their father, for dwelling in their tents, but kept the other vow of abſtaining from wine ſtill, becauſe it was according to the Law. Wherefore this example maketh not for monkiſh obedience, ſeeing they are enjoyned things not commanded by God, nay contrarie to his commandements. Ierem.35.11.

Matth.16.24. Argum. 2. Our Saviour ſaith, *He that will follow me, muſt deny himſelfe, Matth.*16. but this deniall conſiſteth in the vow of obedience made to another: for then a man doth deny himſelfe, when hee is bound by vow to obey; and not ſometime to obey, ſometime not to obey at his pleaſure, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, then by this reaſon none can be followers of Chriſt, unleſſe they will be Monks: for the words of our Saviour are generall of all that will follow him. Secondly, to be a follower of Chriſt, and a follower of men, are contrarie: for the Apoſtle ſaith, *If I ſhould pleaſe men, I were no more the ſervant of Chriſt, Galath.*1.10. Wherefore they which addict themſelves by their ſuperſtitious obedience to pleaſe men, are not the ſervants of Chriſt, but of men. Gal.1.10.

Argum. 3. Our Doway tranſlators upon that place, *Gen.*3.17. Of the tree eat thou not: give this note, that any other law in things otherwiſe indifferent proceeding from lawfull ſuperiours, bindeth the ſubjects in conſcience: and in the margen this, true obedience is blinde and prompt.

Anſwer. 1. There is great difference between the Law of God, and the precepts of men: the one

James 4.12. bindeth in conſcience, not the other, for there is one Law-giver which is able to ſave and deſtroy. It

Act.5.29. is therefore great preſumption to match theſe together. 2 True obedience is indeed prompt, but not blinde: it examineth the precept given in charge, whether it be lawfull or not, as the Apoſtle did, that choſe rather to obey God than man.

The Proteſtants.

NO obedience to any ruler, either ſpirituall or temporall, is to be yeelded unto, but for the Lords ſake, and in ſuch matters wherein we have the warrant of Gods word for our obedience.

Coloſſ.3.23. 1 *Coloſſ.*3.23. Servants be obedient to your maſters, and whatſoever you doe, doe it heartily as to the Lord. But if any thing be enjoyned us which is not warranted by the word of God, we cannot with a Coloſſ.2.18. good conſcience obey as before the Lord. Againe, S. Paul ſaith, *Coloſſ.*2.18. Let no man at his pleaſure beare rule over you, or beguile you: or as the Rhemiſts tranſlate, ſeduce you wilfully: Ergo, no man muſt impoſe rules of life beſide the Goſpell, for this were to rule over men at their pleaſure.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, Cum homo conſtet anima & corpore, &c. Seeing a man doth conſiſt both of body and ſoule; in regard of that part which the affaires of this life concerne, wee ought to be ſubject to the higher powers: but in reſpect of that part whereby wee beleeve, and are called to the kingdome of God, we muſt be obedient to none, Auguſt. in 13. ad Rom. Therefore no man may impoſe any new religion upon us, which altogether toucheth the conſcience.

Argum. 3. Saint Paul commandeth obedience to the civill authoritie that beareth the ſword, Rom.13.1.4. *Rom.*13. but obedience cannot bee yeelded to the Prince, if another thing bee commanded by the monkiſh governour, to whom they are tied by the vow of obedience: as there is a Canon of a ſuperſtitious Councell, *Triburienſ. c.*9. Si Epiſcopus placitum, &c. If the Biſhop doe canonically decree a Synod, and the civill Judge at the ſame time enjoyne alſo a law-day, his law-day muſt give place to the other; Ergo, to vow obedience to any which may hinder obedience to the civill Magiſtrate, is contrarie to S. Pauls rule.

1 Cor.7.23. Argum. 4. Saint Paul alſo ſaith, 1 *Cor.*7.23. Yee are bought with a price, be not the ſervants of men but they which vow Monkiſh obedience in things not preſcribed in the word, make themſelves ſervants of men. Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle forbiddeth us to be ſervants unto men for mens cauſe, but it is lawfull to ſerve men for Gods cauſe.

Contra. Firſt, to ſerve men for Gods cauſe, or in the name of God, is not to be ſervants unto men, but unto God: and therefore in this caſe they are not the ſervants of men, but of Chriſt; as Saint Paul exhorteth ſervants to be obedient to their maſters, as the ſervants of Chriſt, Epheſ. 6.6. Secondly, they doe not ſerve men for Gods cauſe, which are obedient unto them in things not commanded by God, nor warranted by his word: as Monks that doe vow obedience even in ſuperſtitious fancies, and meere human inventions: So that this place of the Apoſtle is very ſtrong againſt them.

Epheſ.6.6.

We have in this caſe plentifull teſtimonie from both lawes: firſt, Cod.lib.3.tit.13.leg.7. Anaſtaſius the Emperour hath this conſtitution, That he which is entred into any profeſſion in a college, ſhould be obedient to the governour thereof, ſo that notwithſtanding hee yeeld obedience alſo to the Preſident or Magiſtrate.

To this agreeth the Canon law: Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 11. quaeſt.3.c.91. Eutychianus Pope thus decreeth, Si quis Epiſcopus ſive Abbas, &c. If a Biſhop or an Abbot command a Prieſt or a Monk to ſay Maſſe for an heretike, he muſt not be obeyed: Ergo, the vow of obedience may be broken.

Further, the vow of obedience, which they urge ſo ſtrictly, is not obſerved amongſt themſelves: as in the order of the Franciſcans, who by the rule of S. Francis ſhould have but one coate, they ought to labour with their owne hands, they ſhould make no gloſſes upon S. Francis rule: yet in all theſe things they are now diſpenſed with, Sext decret.lib.5. tit. 12.c.3. Againe, they are forbidden by their rule to handle any money by themſelves, or others, to have the execution of teſtaments, or granaries, or cellers, or vineyards; yet now all theſe things are permitted them, Clement.lib.5.tit.11.c.1. So that they themſelves are the cheefe tranſgreſſors of their vowes of obedience.

See alſo Concil.Senonenſ. decret.morum.30. Ex nunc juramenta, &c, From henceforth we diſanull and forbid the oaths which are accuſtomed to be made in the entrance to certaine fratries and religious houſes, for the obſerving of their ſtatutes, that no ſuch oathes ſhould hereafter be made, or exacted, &c. This counſell, we ſee, hath decreed againſt the oath of obedience, which novices were wont to make in their entrance.

Iohn Huſſe holy Martyr: Paulus Phariſaeus propter meliorem ſectam Chriſti, ſuam reliquit ſectam, & ob hoc clauſtrales cujuſcunque ſecta fuerint, debent exire, & induere ſectam Chriſti: Paul the Phariſie, for the better ſect of Chriſt, did leave his owne ſect, and therefore all that are profeſſed in cloyſters ſhould leave their ſects, and come forth to profeſſe the ſect of Chriſt, ex Concil. Conſtantienſ. ſeſ.15. Ergo, the vow of ſuperſtitious obedience bindeth not.

Concerning obedience to be yeelded to ſuperiours. 1 Ieremie Patriarke thus writeth, alleaging that place of S. Paul, If an Angell from heaven ſhould preach otherwiſe, &c. If any man, though never ſo excellent, ſhould command us any thing which God forbiddeth, or the contrarie, Tanquam peſtem fugiendum eſſe: We muſt ſhune him as a peſtilent fellow.

Gal.1.8.
Cenſur.Orient.Eccleſ. p.21.

2 Zaga Zabo confeſſeth, that among them, neither their Patriarke nor any Biſhop by himſelfe, or in a Synod can make any lawes, Quibus ad mortale peccatum obligari quis poſſit &c. To the obedience whereof, any is bound under paine of mortall ſinne.

3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia. c. 15. We are made free from all bond of conſcience to any human traditions, that wee be not tyed in ſuch ſort, or rather more ſtrictly, than to the commandements of God. Wittemberg, c.21. As for obedience, it is either referred to God, and then it is not an arbitrarie vow, but of neceſſitie, of which obedience it is ſaid, Obedience is better than ſacrifice &c. or it is referred to man, and then men of their owne accord, are to performe their duties to their ſuperiours, as ſubjects to Magiſtrats, children to parents, &c. but yet with this condition, that wee doe alwayes obey God rather than man.

Harm.ſect.18. p.574.

4 The Jeſuites commend their Generall Franciſcus Borgius for his great humilitie, in ſubjecting himſelfe to the Cookes demand, in ſweeping the Kitchen, and ſcumming of pots, and doing ſuch other baſe ſervices: And yet their Preacher Ferus ſaith, that the Apoſtles, Nec propter pias quaſdam cauſas, &c. Would not omit the preaching of the word, no not for certaine holy offices, &c. May not now one ſay of ſuch hypocrites, that play the cookes and ſcullions in this baſe manner, as Plato ſaid of Diogenes, that delighted in a baſe and ſordid kind of life, that he was Socrates out of his wits, ſo they are Papiſts out of their wits.

Schott.Jeſuit. de vit.Borg. lib.4.c.3.
Commentar. in Act.6.4.

The third part, concerning the Vow of continencie or chaſtitie, and whether it be lawſull to marrie after ſuch a vow made.

The Papiſts.

THe vow of chaſte and continent life is commendable and meritorious, they ſay, in all that doe take it upon them, and after the vow made, they are ſure to receive that high gift of continencie, if they duly labour for it, Rhemiſt. annot. 1. Corinth. 7. verſ. 7. But whoſoever marrieth after the vow made, ſinneth damnably, and turneth back after Sathan, Rhemiſt. annot. 1. Tim. 5. ſect. 12.

96.Error.

Matth.19.12. Argum. 1. Matth. 19. 12. Some have made themſelves chaſte, or as the Rhemiſts doe very homely tranſlate it, have gelded themſelves, for the kingdome of heaven: This proveth the vowes of chaſtitie to be both lawfull and meritorious, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſwer. This is meant onely of thoſe that have the gift of continencie, who, if they be ſure they have received it, may vow and purpoſe ſingle life: but without ſuch aſſurance no man can vow continencie lawfully: Neither can every man receive this gift that will, for Chriſt ſaith, verſ. 11. All men cannot receive this thing, ſave they to whom it is given: Secondly, as for meriting heaven, it commeth neither by being married or unmarried, but it is the free gift of GOD through Chriſt, Rom.6.13. Rom. 6. 23.

1 Tim.5.12. Argum. 2. 1. Tim. 5. 12. Having damnation becauſe they have caſt away their firſt faith: that is, the vow of continencie, which they made to Chriſt: it cannot be meant of the firſt faith in baptiſme, for that is not loſt by marriage, Rhemiſt. And againe, verſ. 15. They are turned backe after Sathan we may here learne, for thoſe to marrie which are profeſſed, is to turne backe after Sathan, Rhemiſt. in eum locum.

Anſw. Firſt, S. Paul ſpeaketh not here of widowes alreadie choſen, but to be choſen: and he would not have younger widowes to be choſen, becauſe they would wax wanton and marrie: and therefore it is not like, that by the firſt faith here is meant the vow of chaſtitie, ſeeing there is no cauſe that theſe younger widowes ſhould make any vow, being excluded by the Apoſtle from Church ſervices. Secondly, verſ. 14. S. Paul himſelfe councelleth the younger widowes to marrie, therefore it is not like they were votaries. Thirdly, by the firſt faith is underſtood the Chriſtian faith, which the younger widowes waxing wanton, and laſcivious, not caring to match with Infidels, were in danger to breake, as the Apoſtle telleth them of ſome that had done ſo alreadie, and were turned backe after Sathan. Fourthly, we ſay not that the faith of baptiſme is broken by all marriage, but with joyning with Infidels. Fifthly, it appeareth what breach of faith Paul meaneth, when he ſaith, They wax wanton, and idle, and are buſie bodies, goe from houſe to houſe, and ſpeake things uncomely, verſ. 13. which is a ſliding backe from the Chriſtian faith, when our life jarreth with our profeſſion; not a breach of any vow of continencie. Laſtly, your Maſter of ſentences ſo expoundeth it of that faith, quam in Baptiſmo profeſſa ſunt, which they profeſſed in Baptiſme, lib. 4. diſtinct. 38. b.

Argum. 3. We muſt vow unto God, that which is the beſt and moſt perfect ſtate of life; but virginitie is more excellent than marriage: therefore we ought to vow virginitie unto God: and it is better and more acceptable to God to doe it with a vow, than without. Bellarm. cap. 28.

Anſwer. Firſt, wee grant, that the beſt things ought to be given unto God, ſo that it be in our power to performe them, otherwiſe it is but a tempting of God: ſuch was the vow of Iephthe, that promiſed unawares that unto God which by the law hee could not performe, namely his daughter: ſo they which vow ſingle life, promiſe a thing which is not in their power. Secondly, concerning virginitie, though in it ſelfe it be preferred before marriage, yet in them that have not that gift, marriage is better: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, It is better to marrie, than burne, that is, to live a conſtrained ſingle life in luſt and concupiſcence. Thirdly, to the proofe of the propoſition, that it is better to doe any dutie with a vow, than without, becauſe it ſheweth greater charitie and love to God, and it better defendeth againſt the tentation of Sathan, when a man is bound, &c. 1 Cor.13.4. We anſwere: Firſt, love is alwaies joyned with humilitie, For love doth not boaſt it ſelfe. 1 Corinth. 13. 4. but hee that voweth, boaſteth and preſumeth of his owne ſtrength. Ergo, to vow a thing not in our power, ſheweth not greater charitie. Secondly, for a man to be bound to keepe a vow above his ſtrength, doth give greater advantage to Sathans tentation; that while they labour to keepe their vow, they are tempted to ſome greater evill; as fornication, or ſuch like: for now Sathan encompaſſeth a man on both ſides; that being weake, hee muſt break his vow and and marrie, or keeping his vow muſt burne in luſt. And this witneſſeth Gregorie, as it is in their owne decrees, 1. part. diſtinct. 13. c. 2. Nervi teſticulorum Leviathan perplexi ſunt, &c. Leviathans ſtones are wrapped in together, that is, his ſuggeſtions are folded and linked together: and he putteth this very caſe of vowes, when a man is tempted and aſſaulted on both ſides.

The Proteſtants.

OUr ſentence then appeareth to be this: that the vow of continencie cannot lawfully be made of all, neither is indifferently to be required of them, ſeeing all are not indued with that gift. And that it is better even for vowed perſons, having raſhly preſumed beyond their ſtrength, to marrie, rather than to burne.

1 Cor.7.2. Argum. 1. The Scripture every where commandeth ſuch to uſe the benefit of marriage, that have not the gift to live ſingle, 1 Cor. 7. 2. For avoyding of fornication let every man have his wife: and verſ. 9. If they cannot abſtaine, let them marrie. Wherefore they tranſgreſſe the commandement of God, and preſume raſhly, that having not this gift, doe vow virginitie.

Bellarmin. Anſwer. Firſt, Saint Paul wiſheth men to marrie, not for every temptation of luſt, but when they are readie to fall into externall works of uncleanneſſe, as into fornication: and therefore he ſaith, For avoyding of fornication let every one have his wife : for S. Paul felt the prick of the fleſh, that is, the luſt of concupiſcence, and was buffeted of it, yet married not for all that, *cap.*30. *Rhemiſt. annot.*1 *Cor.*7.*ſect.*8.

Anſwer. Firſt, we ſay not that for every light temptation which by reſiſting may be overcome in thoſe that have the gift of continencie, a man is to deſire marriage, but when he is continually inflamed with luſt, ſo that the will doth conſent : though he be not yet ſo overcome, that hee fall in outward uncleanneſſe : and this is the Apoſtles meaning when he ſath, It is better to marrie than to burne, that is, with inward luſt when his minde is diſquieted : And ſuch a man as doth burne with ſecret concupiſcence, ſtill wraſtling with that fire, and not being able to quench it, if he refuſe to vſe the lawfull remedie of marriage, is in danger alſo to fall into outward fornication.

2 Concerning Pauls example : Firſt, the place is not ſo to be underſtood of the luſt of concupiſcence : for it is not like, that the Apoſtle being kept under with hunger, cold, impriſonment, ſhould be ſo greatly tempted that way. But either it may be underſtood of the particular temptation to pride and vaine glorie, as he himſelfe expoundeth it, *verſ.*7. Leſt I ſhould be exalted out of meaſure through the abundance of revelations : or elſe generally S. Paul underſtandeth by the fleſh the whole maſſe of corruption, and whatſoever was in him that reſiſted the ſpirit : In this ſenſe he crieth out, *Rom.*7. Who ſhall deliver me from this body of death! Calvin. Rom.7.24.

3 Though we yeeld that S. Paul was tempted of his concupiſcence, yet he overcame and ſubdued it, obtaining from God, after ſome ſtriving grace and power to quench the ſecret fire : And ſo we denie not, but that men ought by faſting and prayer to labour for that precious gift. But if they feele the fire to burne within them ſtill, then are they to uſe the remedy preſcribed by S. Paul, that is, to marrie.

Secondly, ſaith Bellarmine, S. Paul giveth libertie of marriage onely to thoſe which were free and had not vowed continencie, *cap.*30.

Anſw. Firſt the Apoſtles words are generall : Let every man have his wife. Yea ſay the Rhemiſts, he ſpeaketh of thoſe that were married before their converſion, that they might ſtill uſe and keepe their wives. Yea but S. Paul ſpeaketh of all unmarried, in the verſe next before, it is good not to touch a woman : I trow he meaneth not, it is good for a man that is married not to touch his wife. Secondly, it is a generall libertie, which he granteth to all, *verſ.*9. If they cannot containe, let them marrie : but many votaries cannot containe, as it may appeare by the unchaſte lives of your Monkiſh rabble, therefore having the diſeaſe, they may uſe the remedie, that is, marrie.

The teſtimonie of antiquitie in this caſe is moſt plentifull, to ſhew that raſh vowes and oaths, ſuch as the vow of chaſtitie is in him that hath not power to keep it, may ſafely be broken, Concil. Toletan. 8. *cap.*2. Tolerabilius eſt ſtulta promiſſionis vota rejicere, quam per inutilium promiſſionum cuſtodiam, exhorrendam criminum implere menſuram : It is more tolerable, to reject raſh and fooliſh vowes & promiſes, than by keeping unprofitable promiſes, to fall into horrible ſinnes, &c. As the Monkiſh votaries did, who for that they wanted lawfull matrimonie, gave themſelves to unnaturall luſts. *Concil. Tribuvienſ. cap.*21. ex Beda : Si forte nos incaute juvare contigerit, quod ſcilicet obſervatum pejorem vergat in exitum, liberè illud mutandum noverimus ſalubriori conſilio : If it chance that wee ſweare raſhly, which oath being obſerved will have a worſe end, upon more holeſome adviſe we may freely change it, &c. If an oath may be changed, much more a vow, for an oath is greater.

The civill law thus ſaith : *Cod. lib.*5. *tit.*4. *leg.*23. authentic. Illicita rei juramentum, &c. An oath of an unlawfull thing is not to be kept, as if one ſweare to continue in the profeſſion of ſtage playes, &c. By the ſame reaſon alſo, whether it be a vow or an oath, that one taketh not to marrie, if he live incontinently, it ought not to binde him.

*Cod. lib.*5. *tit.*35. *leg.*2. Valentinian. Theodoſ. A mother could not be admitted to the tuition of her child, unleſſe ſhe ſhould ſweare not to marrie againe : notwithſtanding ſuch oath, ſhe is permitted by this law to marrie againe : in optione nulla cogatur; No woman ought to be enforced to her choice, &c. So then after an oath made to continue a widow, which is as much as a vow, yet by the Civill law marriage is lawfull.

*Cod. lib.*6. *tit.*40. *leg.*2 : Iuſtinian. Whereas the law was, that a man dying and leaving a legacie to his wife upon condition ſhe ſhould remaine a widow, the woman could not have the legacie, unleſſe ſhe would ſweare not to marrie, but for procreation of children : By this conſtitution it was lawfull for the woman to enjoy her husbands gift, and without any ſuch oath to marrie againe. So this conſtitution alloweth not any oath to be taken againſt marriage : but a vow and an oath are of the ſame nature.

*Cod. lib.*9. tit. 8. *leg.*2. A man ſwearing that he would never forgive his ſervant, but keepe him in continuall bonds, is not tied by this oath; Alexander, no more is a man bound that voweth to keep his body in the perpetuall bonds of luſt, and burning without marriage.

Let us take a view of their owne Canons : Lateranenſ. ſub Alexandro 3. part. 5. *cap.*2. *cap.*10. this caſe is put : A certaine woman promiſed marriage to a man being abſent, but afterward hearing more of his inhuman nature : Votum continentiæ promiſit : She vowed and made promiſe of continencie : it is thus determined : Tutius eſſe ducimus, ut præfata mulier, poſt fidem & votum ſimplex oblatum matrimonium contrahat, quam fornicationis reatum incurrat : Wee judge it more ſafe, that the ſaid woman, after her ſimple vow and faith thus given and made, to marrie rather, than to fall into fornication, &c. But it will be heere anſwered, that this woman made but a ſimple or ſingle vowe; nec veſtem, nec locum mutavit, ſhe changed neither place nor garment: Marke then what followeth, Lateranenſ. part. 47. cap. 8. Pope Adriane decreeth thus: Si quis timore mortis habitum religionis aſſumpſerit & clauſtrum intraverit, licitè poterit ad ſeculum redire: If any man for feare of death doth take the habit of religion, & goe into a clauſter, he may lawfully returne to his ſecular eſtate, &c. Here is both a change of place and habit, and yet libertie given to diſſolve the vowe. If it be againe anſwered, that it was done of feare: ſo I ſay, that as this is one infirmitie, ſo there be many beſide; and if this infirmitie may breake a vow, why may not alſo other infirmities, as of incontinencie, and ſuch other? Now whereas they thinke a ſimple vow may be broken, which conſiſteth onely in the purpoſe or promiſe of the votarie, but a vow ratified, by changing of place, habit, and profeſſion, cannot bee broken, this alſo is but an idle ſhift: for a vow uttered onely before God, though there be no ſuch outward teſtification, doth binde in conſcience, as if it were done in the preſence of many: Iacobs vow, Geneſ. 28. was but a ſingle vow, uttered onely in the hearing of God: and of ſuch vowes ſpeaketh the Preacher, When thou haſt vowed a vow to God, &c. And herein their owne law helpeth us; decret. Greg. lib. 4. tit. 7. c. 6. Celeſtin. 3. Votum ſimplex, &c. A ſimple vow doth no leſſe binde before God than a ſolemne: And againe, ſext. decretal. lib. 3 tit. 15. c. 1. Bonif. 8. Voti ſolemnitas, &c. A ſolemne vow was found out onely by the conſtitution of the Church. &c. Wherefore if marriage be lawfull after a ſimple vow, why not as well after a ſolemne? Eccleſ. 5. 3.

We have yet alſo more evident teſtimonie out of their law: decret. Greg. lib. 2. tit. 24. c. 3. Greg. Propoſitum non infringit, &c. He doth not breake his vow or promiſe, that changeth it into a better: wherefore he that changeth unchaſte ſingle life, with chaſte marriage, doth not breake his vow.

Bonif. 8. regu. juris. 6. Nemo poteſt ad impoſſibile ligari: No man can be bound to that is impoſſible, &c. but for him to live ſingle, that hath not the gift, is impoſſible: therefore hee cannot be bound unto it with vow or without. Againe, regul. 58. Iuramentum contra bonos mores non ligat: An oath againſt good manners bindeth not, &c. and ſo conſequently a vow: wherefore a vow to live without marriage in ſinfull luſt, bindeth not, being againſt good manners.

Other vowes may be altered and changed, as the vow of going in pilgrimage to Jeruſalem may be redeemed with almes, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 34. c. 1. It may be altered for the benefit of the Commonwealth, c. 5. for the neceſſitie of the Church, c. 7. becauſe of ſickneſſe or povertie, c. 8. Why then may not the vow of Continencie upon the like conſiderations be diſpenſed with; Sext. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 12. c. 1. A vow to be buried in a certaine place, may be altered. Bonif. 8. Why may not the like alteration in other vowes be admitted?

Here wanteth now nothing, but the ſeale of the Martyrs, D. Taylour holy Martyr ſheweth the unlawfulneſſe of ſuch oaths and vowes, whereby Prieſts and others are conſtrained to vow chaſtitie, and forſwear marriage by the like caſe: In Iuſtinian titulo de indicta viduitate, where it is thus written: That if one would bequeath to his wife in his teſtament a legacie under a condition, that ſhee ſhould never marrie againe, and take an oath of her for the accompliſhment of the ſame, yet ſhee may marrie againe if hee die, notwithſtanding the aforeſaid condition, and oath taken and made againſt marriage; and an oath is another manner of obligation made to God, than a Papiſticall vow made to man, Fox pag. 1522.

William Flower, who was firſt a profeſſed Monk, and afterward married, proteſteth, that therein he beleeveth hee did well, and according to Gods lawes, Fox pag. 1575. Raſh vowes then and inconſiderate, as of chaſtitie, ſingle life and ſuch like, may lawfully be diſſolved: but let us now proceed.

Argum. 2. Virginitie, and continent life is onely to bee required of thoſe which have the gift of continencie: But all have not that gift: Ergo, the vow of Virginitie is not indifferently to be made by any. That the gift of continencie cannot be had or obtained of all, neither reſteth in our free will, it is plaine by Scripture.

Matth. 19. 12. 1 Matth. 19. 12. He that is able to receive this gift, let him receive it: Ergo, all are not able to receive it.

Bellarmine. Firſt, though they are not able to receive it yet, yet they may if they will, and aske for it by prayer: for the text is, Some have made themſelves chaſte for the kingdome of God: whereby it appeareth that it is in the will of man, cap. 31. Anſwer. He ſpeaketh cleane contrarie to the text: for Chriſt ſaith, None receive it but to whom it is given; and the words are, qui capere poteſt, not, qui volit, he that can receive, not he that will receive. And they are ſaid to make themſelves chaſte, not becauſe it is in their owne choyce, but being enabled of God, and having received power over their will, they are ſaid to make themſelves chaſte, having received power by the ſpirit of God: So our Saviour ſaith, Come unto mee all ye that are laden, Matth. 11. and yet no man commeth to Chriſt, but his father firſt draweth him, Iohn. 6. 44. Wherefore it being a peculiar gift of God, all cannot have it, neither are ſure to obtaine it, though they aske it by prayer, becauſe wee have no promiſe to be heard. Matth. 11. Ioh. 6. 44.

Rhemiſt. When a man is bound to abſtaine by vow, or other neceſſarie occaſion, as impriſonment, baniſhment, ſickneſſe, no doubt if hee labour for the gift of continencie, hee may have it. Anſwer. They that binde themſelves to a raſh vow, have no promiſe to bee heard praying for continencie. Secondly, they that are driven unto any ſuch neceſſitie, as you ſpeake of, which they are not a cauſe of themſelves, neither can avoid, as in long and perpetuall ſickneſſe, it is certaine that God will give the gift being ſought by lawfull meanes: But as for baniſhment and impriſonment, they are not of ſuch neceſſitie, but that the husband is bound to follow the wife, and the wife her husband, Fulk. 1 *Cor.*7.6.

Neither are many of thoſe meanes commendable which were uſed in Monkerie: for ſome of them were ſuperſtitious and unlawfull, as they uſed Phyſicke and medicine to correct or ſlacke, and extinguiſh nature in them: Francis was wont to cover his bodie with yce and ſnow; others did whip themſelves: This was not to ſubdue and tame the bodie, but to deſtroy and kill the bodie, and make it unfit for other duties. The Scripture preſcribeth no other meanes but prayer and faſting, and labour in our vocation. Some of them againe uſed externall exerciſe of their bodie, as by faſting by lying hard, by watching, which in themſelves were not amiſſe: but they leave the chiefe and principall, which is the ſpirituall meanes: for the outward exerciſe of their fleſh without this, is little worth: *Coloſſ.*2.23.

Coloſſ.2.23.

Bellarmine. To beleeve is no leſſe the gift of God, than to live chaſte, yet we exhort all men to beleeve, and they doe vow and promiſe it in baptiſme: why may they not as well vow continencie, although it be a peculiar gift? *cap.*31.

Anſw. They are both indeede the gifts of God, but one is neceſſarie to ſalvation, namely, to beleeve, and is promiſed to all that will ſeeke for it: But the other gift is not neceſſarie, neither hath any ſuch promiſe.

Secondly, Saint Paul calleth this a proper gift: But if all men were capable of it, how could it be called a proper gift? One after this manner, another after that, ſaith the Apoſtle. But if every man might attaine to that one gift of continencie, they ſhould not all have their proper gift, but all one gift, and after the ſame manner. And though S. Paul ſhould meane, that to live chaſtly in wedlock be alſo a proper gift of God, as Bellarmine urgeth, and we denie not: yet it remaineth ſtill, that the other is a more ſingular and proper gift; and is not therefore commonly, and indifferently beſtowed upon all.

Thirdly, S. Paul ſaith, that a man may marrie his Virgin if need ſo require, 1 *Cor.*7.37. But if everie one labouring for the gift of continencie, might obtaine it, there ſhould then be no neceſſitie of marriage: which the Apoſtle here affirmeth. *Capitul. Graecar. Synod.*21. collect. à Martin. Bracarenſ. Epiſcop. and it is alleaged, *decret. part.*1. diſt. 55. cap. 9. Si quis ſanus non per diſciplinam religionis, et abſtinentiam, ſed per abſciſionem à Deo plaſmati corporis exiſtimans poſſe à ſe carnales concupiſcentias amputari: caſtraverit ſe, Clericus ne fiat: If any man being ſound and in health, doth caſtrate or geld himſelfe not by the diſcipline of religion, and abſtinence, but by mangling his bodie framed of God, thinking that it lieth in him to cut off carnall concupiſcence, let him not be a Clergie man, &c. Here their opinion is reproved that thinke every man hath power to be continent.

1 Cor.7.37.

Further, the decree of *Martin. Cauſ.*27. *quaeſt.*1. *c.*8. witneſſeth in theſe words ſpeaking of a certaine widdow, Si ſe continere non poterat, &c. If ſhe could not containe, ſhe was not forbid to marrie. And againe, *Cauſ.*32. *c.*11. Si poſt nuditatem, &c. If S. Paul after nakedneſſe, hunger, faſting, priſon, ſtripes, crieth out, O unhappie man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from this bodie of ſinne; doe you thinke your ſelfe ſecure? rectius fuerat hominum ſubiiſſe conjugium, &c. it had beene better to have entred into marriage with other men, than ſtriving to climb higher, to fall downe to hell, &c. We ſee by this decree of theirs, what an hard thing it is to attaine unto virginitie, and that every one cannot have it.

Maſter Tindall holie Martyr hath put to his ſeale: If we have infirmities, that draw us from the lawes of God, let us cure them with the remedies that God hath made; if thou burne, marrie: for God hath promiſed thee no chaſtitie, as long as thou maiſt uſe the remedie that he hath ordained: no more than he hath promiſed to ſlack thine hunger without meat: now to aske of God more than he hath promiſed, commeth of a falſe faith, &c. *Fox pag.*1251. *col.*1.

Laſtly, the Rhemiſts ſay, that the marriage of thoſe that have vowed, is the worſt ſort of incontinencie and fornication, 1 *Corinth.*7. *ſect.*8.

Auguſtine ſaith cleane contrarie: Non ipſae nuptiae talium damnandae judicantur, ſed damnatur propoſiti fraus, &c. The marriages of ſuch are not condemned, but the violating of their vow is condemned, not becauſe they afterward entred into the league of marriage, but becauſe they did breake the firſt faith of continencie. Auguſtine ſaith not that ſuch marriages are no marriages, but plaine adulterie and fornication: but maketh the marriage lawfull, and reproveth their raſhneſſe before in making, and their unſtedfaſtneſſe now in breaking their vowes.

Now concerning theſe two points, that it is lawfull to marrie after a vow made, where neceſſitie ſo requireth, and that it is not in every ones power to attaine to the gift of continencie, this further evidence we have.

1 Of the Greeke Church for the firſt, we have Theophylact in 1 Timoth. 5.12. upon theſe words, having damnation becauſe they have broken the firſt faith: ſaith he, Maluiſſem a pactionib. cum Chriſto initis non diſceſſiſſent, &c. I had rather they had not gone from their covenants made with Chriſt; but ſeeing they had rather marrie, & ipſe aſſentior, I alſo agree thereunto. Likewiſe Chryſoſtome upon the ſame place: They ought indeed to have kept their faith: quoniam illa non fiunt, melius

vowe; nec veſtem, nec locum mutavit, ſhe changed neither place nor garment: Marke then what followeth, Lateranenſ. part. 47. cap. 8. Pope Adriane decreeth thus: Si quis timore mortis habitum religionis aſſumpſerit & clauſtrum intraverit, licitè poterit ad ſeculum redire: If any man for feare of death doth take the habit of religion, & goe into a clauſter, he may lawfully returne to his ſecular eſtate, &c. Here is both a change of place and habit, and yet libertie given to diſſolve the vowe. If it be againe anſwered, that it was done of feare: ſo I ſay, that as this is one infirmitie, ſo there be many beſide; and if this infirmitie may breake a vow, why may not alſo other infirmities, as of incontinencie, and ſuch other? Now whereas they thinke a ſimple vow may be broken, which conſiſteth onely in the purpoſe or promiſe of the votarie, but a vow ratified, by changing of place, habit, and profeſſion, cannot bee broken, this alſo is but an idle ſhift: for a vow uttered onely before God, though there be no ſuch outward teſtification, doth binde in conſcience, as if it were done in the preſence of many: Iacobs vow, Geneſ. 28. was but a ſingle vow, uttered onely in the hearing of God: and of ſuch vowes ſpeaketh the Eccleſ.5.3. Preacher, When thou haſt vowed a vow to God, &c. And herein their owne law helpeth us; decret. Greg. lib.4.tit.7.c.6.Celeſtin.3.Votum ſimplex, &c. A ſimple vow doth no leſſe binde before God than a ſolemne: And againe, *ſext. decretal.lib.*3 *tit.*15.c. 1. Bonif. 8. Voti ſolemnitas, &c. A ſolemne vow was found out onely by the conſtitution of the Church. &c. Wherefore if marriage be lawfull after a ſimple vow, why not as well after a ſolemne?

We have yet alſo more evident teſtimonie out of their law: *decret.Greg.lib.*2.*tit.*24.*c.*3 Greg. Propoſitum non infringit, &c. He doth not breake his vow or promiſe, that changeth it into a better: wherefore he that changeth unchaſte ſingle life, with chaſte marriage, doth not breake his vow.

*Bonif.*8.*regu. iuris.*6. Nemo poteſt ad impoſſibile ligari: No man can be bound to that is impoſſible, &c. but for him to live ſingle, that hath not the gift, is impoſſible: therefore hee cannot be bound unto it with vow or without. Againe, regul. 58. Iuramentum contra bonos mores non ligat: An oath againſt good manners bindeth not, &c. and ſo conſequently a vow: wherefore a vow to live without marriage in ſinfull luſt, bindeth not, being againſt good manners.

Other vowes may be altered and changed, as the vow of going in pilgrimage to Jeruſalem may be redeemed with almes, *decret.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*34.*c.*1. It may be altered for the benefit of the Commonwealth, *c.*5. for the neceſſitie of the Church, *c.*7. becauſe of ſickneſſe or povertie, *c.*8. Why then may not the vow of Continencie upon the like conſiderations be diſpenſed with; Sext.decretal. lib. 3. tit. 12.*c.*1. A vow to be buried in a certaine place, may be altered. Bonif. 8. Why may not the like alteration in other vowes be admitted?

Here wanteth now nothing, but the ſeale of the Martyrs, D. Taylour holy Martyr ſheweth the unlawfulneſſe of ſuch oaths and vowes, whereby Prieſts and others are conſtrained to vow chaſtitie, and forſwear marriage by the like caſe: In Iuſtinian titulo de indicta viduitate, where it is thus written: That if one would bequeath to his wife in his teſtament a legacie under a condition, that ſhee ſhould never marrie againe, and take an oath of her for the accompliſhment of the ſame, yet ſhee may marrie againe if hee die, notwithſtanding the aforeſaid condition, and oath taken and made againſt marriage: and an oath is another manner of obligation made to God, than a Papiſticall vow made to man, *Fox pag.*1522.

William Flower, who was firſt a profeſſed Monk, and afterward married, proteſteth, that therein he beleeveth hee did well, and according to Gods lawes, Fox pag. 1575. Raſh vowes then and inconſiderate, as of chaſtitie, ſingle life and ſuch like, may lawfully be diſſolved: but let us now proceed.

*Argum.*2. Virginitie, and continent life is onely to bee required of thoſe which have the gift of continencie: But all have not that gift: Ergo, the vow of Virginitie is not indifferently to be made by any, That the gift of continencie cannot be had or obtained of all, neither reſteth in our free will, it is plaine by Scripture.

Math.19.12. 1 *Math.*19.12. He that is able to receive this gift, let him receive it: Ergo, all are not able to receive it.

Bellarmine. Firſt, though they are not able to receive it yet, yet they may if they will, and aske for it by prayer: for the text is, Some have made themſelves chaſte for the kingdome of God: whereby it appeareth that it is in the will of man, cap. 31. Anſwer. He ſpeaketh cleane contrarie to the text: for Chriſt ſaith, None receive it but to whom it is given; and the words are, qui capere poteſt, not, qui volit, he that can receive, not he that will receive. And they are ſaid to make themſelves chaſte, not becauſe it is in their owne choyce, but being enabled of God, and having received power over their will, they are ſaid to make themſelves chaſte, having received power by the ſpirit of God; So our Math.11. Saviour ſaith, Come unto mee all ye that are laden, Math. 11. and yet no man commeth to Chriſt, Ioh.6.44. but his father firſt draweth him, Iohn. 6.44. Wherefore it being a peculiar gift of God, all cannot have it, neither are ſure to obtaine it, though they aske it by prayer, becauſe wee have no promiſe to be heard.

Rhemiſt. When a man is bound to abſtaine by vow, or other neceſſarie occaſion, as impriſonment, baniſhment, ſickneſſe, no doubt if hee labour for the gift of continencie, hee may have it. Anſwer. They that binde themſelves to a raſh vow, have no promiſe to bee heard praying for continencie. Secondly, they that are driven unto any ſuch neceſſitie, as you ſpeake of, which they are not a cauſe of themſelves, neither can avoid, as in long and perpetuall ſickneſſe, it is certaine that God will give the gift being ſought by lawfull meanes: But as for baniſhment and impriſonment, they are not of ſuch neceſſitie, but that the husband is bound to follow the wife, and the wife her husband, Fulk. 1 *Cor.*7.6.

Neither are many of thoſe meanes commendable which were uſed in Monkerie: for ſome of them were ſuperſtitious and unlawfull, as they uſed Phyſicke and medicine to correct or ſlacke, and extinguiſh nature in them: Francis was wont to cover his bodie with yce and ſnow; others did whip themſelves: This was not to ſubdue and tame the bodie, but to deſtroy and kill the bodie, and make it unfit for other duties. The Scripture preſcribeth no other meanes but prayer and faſting, and labour in our vocation. Some of them againe uſed externall exerciſe of their bodie, as by faſting by lying hard, by watching, which in themſelves were not amiſſe: but they leave the chiefe and principall, which is the ſpirituall meanes: for the outward exerciſe of their fleſh without this, is little worth? *Coloſſ.*2.23.

Coloſſ.2.23.

Bellarmine. To beleeve is no leſſe the gift of God, than to live chaſte, yet we exhort all men to beleeve, and they doe vow and promiſe it in baptiſme: why may they not as well vow continencie, although it be a peculiar gift? *cap.*31.

Anſw. They are both indeede the gifts of God, but one is neceſſarie to ſalvation, namely, to beleeve, and is promiſed to all that will ſeeke for it: But the other gift is not neceſſarie, neither hath any ſuch promiſe.

Secondly, Saint Paul calleth this a proper gift: But if all men were capable of it, how could it be called a proper gift? One after this manner, another after that, ſaith the Apoſtle. But if every man might attaine to that one gift of continencie, they ſhould not all have their proper gift; but all one gift, and after the ſame manner. And though S. Paul ſhould meane, that to live chaſtly in wedlock be alſo a proper gift of God, as Bellarmine urgeth, and we denie not: yet it remaineth ſtill, that the other is a more ſingular and proper gift; and is not therefore commonly, and indifferently beſtowed upon all.

Thirdly, S. Paul ſaith, that a man may marrie his Virgin if need ſo require, 1 *Cor.*7.37. But if everie one labouring for the gift of continencie, might obtaine it, there ſhould then be no neceſſitie of marriage: which the Apoſtle here affirmeth. *Capitul.Graecar. Synod.*21. collect. à Martin. Bracarenſ. Epiſcop. and it is alleaged, *decret.part.*1. diſt. 55. cap. 9. Si quis ſanus non per diſciplinam religionis, et abſtinentia, ſed per abſciſionem à Deo plaſmati corporis exiſtimans poſſe à ſe carnales concupiſcentias amputari: caſtraverit ſe, Clericus ne fiat: If any man being ſound and in health, doth caſtrate or geld himſelfe not by the diſcipline of religion, and abſtinence, but by mangling his bodie framed of God, thinking that it lieth in him to cut off carnall concupiſcence, let him not be a Clergie man, &c. Here their opinion is reproved that thinke every man hath power to be continent.

Further, the decree of *Martin. Cauſ.*27.*quaeſt.*1.*c.*8. witneſſeth in theſe words ſpeaking of a certaine widdow, Si ſe continere non poterat, &c. If ſhe could not containe, ſhe was not forbid to marrie. And againe, *Cauſ.*32.*c.*11. Si poſt nuditatem, &c. If S. Paul after nakedneſſe, hunger, faſting, priſon, ſtripes, crieth out, O unhappie man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from this bodie of ſinne; doe you thinke your ſelfe ſecure? rectius fuerat hominum ſubiiſſe conjugium, &c. it had beene better to have entred into marriage with other men, than ſtriving to climb higher, to fall downe to hell, &c. We ſee by this decree of theirs, what an hard thing it is to attaine unto virginitie, and that every one cannot have it.

Maſter Tindall holie Martyr hath put to his ſeale: If we have infirmities, that draw us from the lawes of God, let us cure them with the remedies that God hath made; if thou burne, marrie: for God hath promiſed thee no chaſtitie, as long as thou maiſt uſe the remedie that he hath ordained: no more than he hath promiſed to ſlack thine hunger without meat: now to aske of God more than he hath promiſed, commeth of a falſe faith, &c. *Fox pag.*1251.*col.*1.

Pag.1139.[illegible]

Laſtly, the Rhemiſts ſay, that the marriage of thoſe that have vowed, is the worſt ſort of incontinencie and fornication, 1 *Corinth.*7.*ſect.*8.

Auguſtine ſaith cleane contrarie: Non ipſae nuptiae talium damnandae judicantur, ſed damnatur propoſiti fraus, &c. The marriages of ſuch are not condemned, but the violating of their vow is condemned, not becauſe they afterward entred into the league of marriage, but becauſe they did breake the firſt faith of continencie. Auguſtine ſaith not that ſuch marriages are no marriages, but plaine adulterie and fornication: but maketh the marriage lawfull, and reproveth their raſhneſſe before in making, and their unſtedfaſtneſſe now in breaking their vowes.

Now concerning theſe two points, that it is lawfull to marrie after a vow made, where neceſſitie ſo requireth, and that it is not in every ones power to attaine to the gift of continencie, this further evidence we have.

1 Of the Greeke Church for the firſt, we have Theophylact in 1 Timoth. 5.12. upon theſe words, having damnation becauſe they have broken the firſt faith: ſaith he, Maluiſſem a pactionib. cum Chriſto initis non diſceſſiſſent, &c. I had rather they had not gone from their covenants made with Chriſt; but ſeeing they had rather marrie, & ipſe aſſentior, I alſo agree thereunto. Likewiſe Chryſoſtome upon the ſame place: They ought indeed to have kept their faith: quoniam illa non fiunt, melius iſta fieri: but becauſe theſe things are not done, it is better the other ſhould. For the other point, Ieremie the Patriarke telleth us: Nos illis ſacerdotibus, qui in virginitate perſiſtere non poſſunt, &c. Wee give unto thoſe prieſts, which cannot continue virgins, &c. licence to take wives. And againe, Qui non poteſt virginitatis preferre certamina, uxorem accipiat: He that cannot endure the combat of virginitie, let him take a wife. Every man then that would, cannot attaine to virginitie.

Lib. 1. epiſt. 11. ad Pompon.
Lib. 2. de Monach. cap. 34.

2 The South Church: for the firſt, witneſſeth Cyprian, ſpeaking of thoſe virgins which had dedicated themſelves to Chriſt: Si perſeverare nolunt vel non poſſunt, &c. If they will not or cannot perſevere, it is better that they marrie, than to fall into the fire of luſt. Bellarmine will have Cyprian to ſpeake of ſuch as were to vow, that they ſhould take heed by the fall of others, that if they have no purpoſe to continue virgins, they ſhould not vow at all, but marrie. But their owne Pammelius upon the ſame epiſtle ſheweth, that Cyprian ſpeaketh de velatis virginibus, of vailed and profeſſed virgins: See before Auguſtine of the ſame judgement. For the other point, Zaga Zabo giveth this reaſon, why in the Æthiopike Church they allow marriage unto their Prieſts, becauſe as S. Paul ſaith, it is beter to marrie, than to burne: whereby it ſeemeth their opinion is, that every one hath not the gift of continencie, for then it were not neceſſarie they ſhould either marrie or burne, they might uſe the gift of continencie.

Harm. ſect. 18. pag. 561.
Ibid. ſect. 18.

3 For the firſt point, we have of the reformed Churches, the confeſſion of Auſpurg, artic. 6. Although the commandement of God touching wedlocke, doe free moſt men from vowes, yet there is another reaſon, &c. that maketh vowes fruſtrate, becauſe that all worſhip of God inſtituted without his commandement, and choſen to merit remiſſion of ſins, &c. is wicked. Saxonic artic. 21. Vowes which wrap men in a kind of life, wherein is the worſhip of Idols, are without doubt fruſtrate. Sweveland artic. 12. Becauſe all our juſtification doth conſiſt in faith in Chriſt, whereupon we have libertie given us in all externall things, we have permitted the bonds of Monkerie to be releaſed amongſt us.

Sect. 18. p. 540.

And for the other point: that contenencie is a peculiar gift given to ſome, and not to all; we have alſo the confeſſion of Helvetia, the latter, chap. 29. Let them ſerve the Lord in that calling, as long as they ſhall feele themſelves endued with that heavenly gift. Bohemia, chap. 19. They meane ſuch unmarried perſons as have this peculiar gift given to them, of God, &c. Sweveland, cap. 12. Let him know, that to renounce marriage, and to make himſelfe an Eunuch for the kingdome of heaven, &c. is a peculiar and ſpeciall gift of God. It followeth then, becauſe every one hath not this gift, every one cannot vow it.

4 Of the Roman Church: for the firſt point, their Jeſuite Maldonate confeſſeth, that Votum minoris boni relaxatur per votum majoris boni, &c. A vow of a leſſe good may be releaſed by a greater good: and ſo when a greater good is offered, then to keepe chaſtitie, the partie is not bound to his vow, &c. as he giveth inſtance of the King of Arragon, to whom the Pope gave licence to marrie a Nunne, for the publike peace of the kingdome, &c. why then may not as well the vow of continencie be diſpenſed withall, to avoid fornication? But here one of their Popiſh writers telleth us, perperam egiſſe Epiſcopum Romanum, that the Biſhop of Rome did very evill, in diſpenſing with this vow. But the Jeſuite Maldonate hath a more cleanly anſwer, that the Pope did not diſpenſe with a ſolemne vow, neither can he, but onely did declare by the rule of equitie, non teneri voto, &c. that he which had ſo vowed, was not tied to his vow: which in effect is the ſame. Panormitan their great Canoniſt ſaith that Sixtus, Paludanus, Cajetane, and all their ſchoole Canoniſts doe hold, that the marriage after a ſolemne vow is only made void by Eccleſiaſticall law: they have then no law of God againſt the ſetting free of ſuch vowes. Our Doway tranſlators alſo in the keeping of vowes except the caſe of neceſſitie: as they ſay Saul offended when he made that vow (that all the people ſhould faſt till night) in not excepting the caſe of neceſſitie: the neceſitie then of him, that cannot live chaſt, diſpenſeth with his vow: who then can endure ſuch groſſe ſpeeches of the Popiſh writers? that a Prieſt gravius peccat, doth ſin more grievouſly if he contract Matrimonie, than if he play the fornicator, &c. And one of our countrimen affirmeth as much: Minus peccat qui fornicatur; That he ſinneth not ſo much, which committeth fornication: and he giveth two reaſons thereof, one is, becauſe the fornicator may leave his concubine, and leade a chaſt life, ſo cannot a married man: and the other is, for that the fornicator doth not juſtifie his ſinne, as the other doth his marriage. But one anſwer may ſerve for both; for ſeeing marriage after a vow is not forbidden by divine law, but only Eccleſiaſticall, as their owne Canoniſts confeſſe, it is no ſinne, for ſinne is defined to be a tranſgreſſion of the law: that is, of the divine law, but fornication is ſinne by the law of God: then it followeth, that for a man once to commit fornication, is worſe than to live all his life in a married eſtate, wherein he may continue without ſinne, and juſtifie the ſame without any ſhame.

Caſſander lib. conſult. art. 23.
Laſicius in Theolog. Moſcov. cap. 15. ex Ioann. peregrin. in convin. ſermon.

For the other point, that continencie is not in every mans power: their Caſſander may bee a witneſſe of, who ſaith, Vix centeſimum invenias, qui ab omni commercio fœminarum abſtineat: You ſhall not finde the hundreth Prieſt, who doth abſtaine from all companie of women. A certaine German Biſhop is reported to have ſaid in a certaine banket, that in one yeere, delata ad ſe undecim millia ſacerdotum palam concubinariorum: there were brought unto him an eleven thouſand Prieſts, which openly kept concubines, &c. Let any indifferent man now judge, how eaſie and common a gift continencie was among the Popiſh prieſtly votaries.

The fifth queſtion, concerning Monaſticall perſons which doe enter into that profeſſion.

THere are foure ſorts of people which the Papiſts doe offer great wrong unto, in drawing them to the profeſſion of Monkerie: Firſt, unto the younger ſort, which have libertie to marrie. Secondly, to the children and ſonnes whom they make Monks without conſent of their parents. Thirdly, they ſay, married perſons, by mutuall conſent may betake themſelves to a Monks habit. Fourthly, if marriage be contracted, not conſummate or finiſhed, they may one leave another without conſent firſt had.

The firſt part, whether the younger ſort are to be admitted to profeſſe Monkerie.

The Papiſts.

IF they be come to the yeeres of diſcretion, they may, men or women at any age, take upon them the vow of Monkerie: Bellarm. cap. 35. 98. Error.

1 Matth. 19. 14. Suffer little children to come unto me: Ergo, young men and maides may become Monks, Bellarmine. Matth. 19. 14.

Anſw. Firſt, the text ſpeaketh of little children: but by your confeſſion, they muſt be of yeeres of diſcretion that ſhould enter into your profeſſion: ſo are not little children. Secondly, as though none could come to Chriſt, but through a Monks cowle: nay, I would they of all men did not goe furtheſt off from Chriſt. It followeth alſo in the text, Of ſuch is the kingdome of heaven: ſo by this reaſon, heaven gates ſhould be open only to Monks and Friers: and this is the right hereſie of the Pelagians, and Manichees, that promiſed the kingdome of God not to any, but thoſe that caſt away their riches.

Argum. 2. Iohn Baptiſt lived from a child in the wilderneſſe: Ergo, lawfull for young ones to profeſſe Monkerie.

Anſw. Firſt, Iohns example is extraordinarie, as his office and calling was ſingular, and therefore is no more to be imitated and followed in his ſolitarie life, than in his diet of Locuſts and wild honie: He ſprang alſo in his mothers wombe; ſo I thinke all Monks and Eremites doe not. Secondly, it is not certaine at what yeeres Iohn entred into the wilderneſſe: for hee was thirtie yeeres old when he came and preached in the wilderneſſe, as Matthew writeth, chap. 3. 1. Matth. 3. 1.

The Proteſtants.

THough we ſhould grant, that a Monaſticall life were in ſome perſons, and at ſometimes tolerable among Chriſtians; yet of all other the younger ſort, in whom luſt doth reigne, were moſt unfit; and not to be admitted unto that kinde of life.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul would have no widow to be choſen under 60. yeeres, 1 Timoth. 5. 9. and I will the younger to marrie, verſ. 16. Ergo, it is contrarie to S. Pauls rule, to ſuffer any ſuch to make vowes of continencie. 1 Tim. 5. 9.

Rhemiſ. anſwer: Firſt, it was but a rule for that time, when as yet there were no Monaſteries nor diſcipline, but young widowes wandred up and downe idlely.

Anſw. Firſt, the ſame cauſe that young women had to marrie then, they have now; and therefore the rule is generall. Secondly, as though the walles of Monaſteries were able to keepe in virginitie: no, it is notoriouſly knowne, that unchaſte life hath ſealed the walles of Nunneries, crept in at windowes, and found muſes in the ground.

2 Saint Paul (ſay they) counſelleth young widowes to marrie, not young virgins, which having not experience of luſt, are not ſo greatly tempted.

Anſ. How chaſte your cloyſter women have bin, and free from theſe tentations, the ſtories of former times make mention; and the examples of ſo many unchaſte milch-Nunnes, and filthie Monks and Friers, are a ſufficient proofe: Fulk. 1. Timoth. 5. ſect. 11. But all theſe ſhifts notwithſtanding, S. Pauls rule muſt ſtand, that no widowes muſt be admitted under 60. yeeres old.

Bellarmine alſo anſwereth, that the Apoſtles meaning is, that the younger women ſhould be refuſed, not from the vow of continencie, but not to be of the number of the widowes, which were maintained of the Church.

Contra. Firſt, this is flat oppoſite to the Apoſtle, who would have the younger women to marrie, verſ. 14. how then is it like they were votaries? therefore it is evident, that they are excluded from vow making, ſeeing they are counſelled by the Apoſtle to marrie.

To this he againe replieth, that where the Apoſtle ſaith, I would have the younger marrie, that it is not a precept, but a counſell.

Contra. Firſt, It is a charge and commandement which the Apoſtle giveth, that they ſhould marrie, in reſpect of their frailtie, becauſe divers were turned alreadie after Satan by their incontinencie, and gave occaſion to the adverſaries to ſpeake evill. Wherefore to avoid theſe things he not onely adviſeth, but willeth and chargeth, they ſhould marrie. Secondly, though it be but a counſell, yet it will follow, that the Apoſtle gave counſell to them to marrie, which had vowed ſingle life, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, that the younger women were not barred from vowing continencie.

Secondly, if the younger women are not admitted to be of the number of the almes-widowes for feare of incontinencie, they were as unfit to enter into any vow or profeſſion of ſingle life. And be it granted, that it might be a greater offence for publike widowes, then private votaries, to breake their vow; yet in the other the offence were great enough: and therefore the Apoſtles rule of their age ought to be obſerved in both.

Argum. 2. The Manichees tooke occaſion hereby to inſult againſt the Catholikes, becauſe they admitted ſo many virgins to the profeſſion of ſingle life: *Certatim ad hanc profeſſionem eas incitatis ſuaſionibus veſtris, ut jam pene major in eccleſiis omnibus virginum apud vos, quam mulierum numeroſitas habeatur: Auguſt.cont.Fauſtum.*30.4. Ye labour (ſaith the Manichees) to draw women of every hand to this profeſſion by your perſwaſions, that now in your Churches, the number of profeſſed virgins exceedeth the number of women, &c. And hereby the Manichees that extolled virginitie, and condemned marriage, were induced to thinke that the Catholike Biſhops alſo were of their opinion.

The Imperiall law enjoyneth, that no woman be admitted to be a Deaconeſſe of the Church under fiftie, or threeſcore yeeres, according to the precept of the Apoſtle: *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*6.*leg.*9. Theodoſ.

We have alſo for this point very evident teſtimonie of their owne law: Clemens epiſtol. 1. S. Peter is brought in ſpeaking thus: Ad Presbyteros fiant iſta, ante omnia ut pudicitiæ ſtudentes adoleſcentes nuptiis jungant quo calorem ferventis ætatis, conjugali lege præveniant: item juniores viduas nuptiis copulate: Theſe inſtructions concerne the Prieſts, firſt of all, as men carefull to preſerve chaſtitie, let them joyne young men in marriage, that the heat of burning youth may by the matrimoniall law be prevented: likewiſe let the younger virgins be coupled in marriage.

*Concil.ſub Sylveſtro,cap.*10. Ut vidua non niſi 72. annorum eligatur: nulla porro ſchemata monachorum oportet fieri niſi poſt 25. ætatis annum propter ſcandala, jam evacuato omni fervore diaboli, ut inveniat ſibi mundum vas ſpiritus ſanctus: That a widow be not choſen under 72. yeeres: let none take the habit of a Monke before he be 25. yeere old, to avoid offence, that the devilliſh heate of the fleſh being evacuate, the holy Ghoſt may finde a cleane veſſell.

*Concil. Agathenſ.can.*19. Sanctimoniales, quantumlibet mores earum probati ſint, ante annum ætatis quadrageſimum non velentur: Holy virgins, though their behaviour be never ſo much approved, let them not be vailed before the fortieth yeere of their age. This is alleaged in their owne decrees, *cauſ.*20.*qu.*1,*c.*13.

And many ſuch Canons and decrees might be alleaged, againſt the entring of the younger ſort into Monkiſh profeſſion.

And for further evidence: 1. The generall Greeke Chalcedon Counſell decreeth that a Deaconeſſe ſhould not be ordained under 40. yeeres, Can. 15.

De virgin. veland.

2 Tertullian of the South and Africane Church ſaith: Scio virginem in viduatu ab annis nondum viginti collocatam: I know a Virgin not yet twentie yeeres old made a widow of the Church: which he calleth miraculum, ne dixerim monſtrum, a wonder, that I ſay not a monſter, &c. He miſliketh that young women ſhould be deputed to the ſervice of the Church. At this day, in Æthiopia their Prieſts are not ordained till after thirtie yeeres of their age: as Zaga Zabo witneſſeth: it is like they obſerve no leſſe time for their Monks which are not allowed to marrie, as their Prieſts are.

3 Confeſſion of Auſpurge, artic.6. This rigor and ſeveritie miſliked many good men, when they ſaw young men and maides thruſt up into monaſteries, &c. and ſaw what an unhappie ſucceſſe this counſell had, what offences it bred, &c.

De ſtat. Eccleſ. pag.56.

4 As Clemangis a Doctor of Paris, that lived 200. yeeres agoe, thus ſetteth out for the inconvenience of cloyſtering ſuch young Nunnes: What are Nunneries now adaies, but the execrable brothel houſes of Venus, the harbours of young wanton men, where they ſatisfie their luſt, &c. that now the vailing of a Nunne is all one, as if you proſtituted her openly to be a whore. Thomas Aquinas ſaith it is inordinatum, an inordinate and diſordered thing that young women ſhould be made Abbeſſes, &c. and ſo is it alſo inconvenient for young girles to become Nunnes: for as Plutarcke well ſaith, Marriage is the ſureſt and ſafeſt bond of youth.

In 1.Tim.c.5.

δεσμὸν τῆς νεότητος ἀσφαλέστατον.

The ſecond part, whether children may enter into profeſſion of Monkerie without their parents conſent.

The Papiſts.

99 Error. If they be of ſufficient age, as the men of 14. yeeres at the leaſt, the women of 12. and their parents be not driven to any ſuch neceſſitie, that they need their childrens helpe, they may without parents conſent enter into Monkerie.

Geneſ. 12.1. Matth.10.37.

Argum. 1. God ſaid to Abraham, Get thee out of thy countrie, and from thy fathers houſe, Geneſ. 12. And Chriſt, *Matth.*10. Whoſoever loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthie thy of me: Ergo, Children may become Monks without their fathers leave: Bellarm.cap.36.

Anſw. Firſt, who would have thought that Abraham was a Monke, but that the Jeſuite ſaith it? Secondly, by the ſame reaſon a man may not leave his parents onely, but goe out of his countrey. Thirdly, Abraham was 75. yeeres old at that time, when hee went out of Haran, verſ.4. Ergo, wee will conclude that none ought to bee made Monks before thoſe yeeres. Fourthly, when God calleth any man to a monkiſh life, as Abraham had an eſpeciall calling of God, wee will give him good leave to goe.

Concerning the other ſaying of our Saviour, it maketh nothing for you. Firſt, Chriſt ſpeaketh of perſecution, when a man ought not for love of his friends to deny Chriſt: but I trow you will not grant, that your monkiſh life is perſecution: and yet it is after a ſort; for the Locuſts, which are none other but Monks and Friers, Apocal. 9. doe bite and ſting like ſerpents, that is, doe ſecretly wound mens conſciences. Secondly, a man may leave his parents, as Chriſt commandeth, though he dwell in the ſame houſe with them: that is, by ſetting his love and affection on heavenly things. Thirdly, doe all goe to Chriſt that come into your Monaſteries? nay, I would they went not from Chriſt: for they live after another rule than Chriſts: Francis your great founder erected a new Sect of Monkerie, and found out a new rule for them, which he called regulam Evangelicam, the rule of the Goſpell: as though Chriſts rule were not ſufficient.

Argum. 2. Here the conſtitution of Iuſtinian may be objected, Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.42. which is, that a ſonne, etiam invito patre, againſt his fathers will, may become a Monke. To the which I anſwer: firſt, this ſame conſtitution alſo decreeth, that a ſonne againſt his fathers will profeſſing monaſticall life, may ſucceed him in his teſtament, and to be his heire, nullo eis impedimento, &c. their ſanctimoniall converſation being no let unto them. If they will have this law ſtand in force for the one, why not alſo for the other? as it ſeemeth to make with them in one point, ſo in the other concerning voluntarie and profeſſed povertie of Monks, it maketh againſt them. Secondly, the Conſtitutions of Iuſtinian which were laſt inſerted into the Code, more than five hundred yeeres after Chriſt, doe ſomewhat ſavour of the ſuperſtition which began then to ſet in foot, and therefore are not of that authoritie which the more ancient Imperials have. Thirdly, this conſtitution is contrarie to other Imperiall lawes of greater antiquitie: as Alexander made a law, Cod. lib.8. tit.47. leg.3. That a father might chaſtiſe his ſonne if he offended him, and if he ſo continued, the Preſident at the appointment of his father ſhould more ſeverely puniſh him. This law permitteth not the ſonne to be diſobedient to his father without due correction: but to enter into a profeſſion to his diſlike, is diſobedience: Ergo, by the law not tolerable. Likewiſe, tit.49.leg.4. Pater invitus non cogitur, &c. The father againſt his will cannot be conſtrained, no not by the Princes letters, to ſet free or manumit his ſonne: but he is manumitted by entring into Monkerie againſt his fathers will. This then is contrarie to the law: and thus everie Abbot and Monk ſhall preſume to doe more than the Emperour himſelfe challengeth.

The Proteſtants.

CHildren ought not by the Law of God to make any vow of ſingle and continent life without the conſent and liking of their parents: Luther. Pet. Martyr, lib. de cælibat. & votis.

Argum. 1. By the Law of Moſes the father had power to diſallow the vowes which the daughter made being in his houſe, Numb.30.6. which Law was not ceremonious: for it was grounded upon Numb.30.6.
the morall law, which commanded all obedience and dutie of the children to the parents. And that it is not abrogate, it appeareth becauſe the ſame law is renued by S. Paul, 1 Corinth.7. verſ.36,37. 1 Cor.7.36,37.
where the Apoſtle referreth the whole matter of keeping a virgin, or placing of her in marriage to the will of the father; yet ſo, that he muſt have regard unto the neceſſitie, the eſtate and condition of his virgin. Both theſe places doe apertly prove, that neither the childe can be beſtowed in marriage, nor vowed to virginitie, without the conſent and determination of the parents.

Argum. 2. The father hath as great power over his ſonne, as the maſter over his ſervant: but the ſervant cannot take upon him the profeſſion of Monkerie without the conſent of his maſter: Ergo, &c.

The ſecond part of the reaſon is proved both by the Civill and Canon law: firſt, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 16. Honor. Theodoſ. Ruſticus, &c. A rurall ſervant being made a Clerke, is bound to ſerve his maſter by a ſufficient ſubſtitute. But more evidently it appeareth by the conſtitution of Anthemius, leg.34. Iubemus aſcriptitiorum, &c. We will that no ſervant make choice of a ſolitarie life without the conſent of his maſter: if hee doe, his maſter ſhall have the ſame power over him which hee hath over other ſervants.

See alſo for their owne law the decree of Gelaſius, That ſervants entring into Monaſteries without conſent of their maſters or patrons, ſhould be reſtored unto them, Decret.part.1.diſt.54.c.12.

Likewiſe, Concil.Chalced.can.4. Decrevimus, &c. Wee have decreed that no ſervant be received into a Monaſterie, without the knowledge and leave of his maſter.

The firſt part of the argument is denied by Bellarmine, that ſonnes to their parents are not in like ſubjection, as ſervants to their maſters; and therefore have more power of themſelves than ſervants have.

Contra. Though children are not in ſuch ſervile ſubjection, for there is one feare of children, another of ſervants; yet the father hath as great power over the perſons of their children being within age, as over ſervants: becauſe the law of nature which bindeth ſonnes, is ſtronger than the law of men, which maketh ſervants: and parents have greater power over their owne fleſh than over ſtrangers.

Let us heare what authoritie Auguſtine yeeldeth to the father over his children: *Agite vicem noſtram in domibus veſtris: Epiſcopus inde appellatus eſt quia ſuperintendit: unuſquiſque ergo in domo ſua, ſi caput eſt domus ſuæ, debet ad eum pertinere Epiſcopatus officium: de Sanct. Ser.*51. You (ſaith Auguſtine their Biſhop) muſt ſupply our ſtead in your houſes: a Biſhop or Superintendent is ſo called, becauſe he overſeeth: therefore everie houſholder being the head of his houſe, ought to play the Biſhop in his houſe, &c. The father then is a Biſhop over his children: ſhall any man then dare to take any out of his houſe, that is, his Biſhoprick, or any ſheepe out of his fold, without the Biſhop and Shepherds conſent?

The teſtimony alſo of their owne law in this caſe is verie cleere: Si puella in puerili ætate, &c. If a maiden in her childhood, or under yeeres, doth binde her ſelfe with an oath in her fathers houſe, without the knowledge of her father, if her father ſo ſoone as he heareth of it doth gainſay, her vow and oath is void: *Cauſ.*32. *qu.*2. *c.*14.

Likewiſe, *Bonif.*8. *ſext. decret. lib.*3. *tit.*12. *c.*4. Filius pro anima, &c. The ſonne can make choice of nothing concerning his ſoule, without conſent of his father, though he may chuſe ſepulture for his body.

Chalced. art.4.

See the conſent herein both of the Eaſt and Greeke, and of the Egyptian and South Church, in the 4. Canon of the Chalcedon Counſell before alleaged: where though Dioſcorus Patriarke of Alexandria were depoſed for favouring the hereſie of Eutyches, yet there were twelve other Egyptian Biſhops preſent, and gave conſent. See alſo of the Latine Church the decrees of Gratian before produced: See alſo in the former queſtion the judgement of the reformed Churches, againſt the thruſting of young maids and young men upon Monaſteries.

The third part, Whether married perſons may with mutuall conſent become Votaries.

The Papiſts.

100. Error.

WIth mutuall conſent the man and the wife may ſeparate themſelves, and vow and promiſe ſingle life for ever, ſo long as they both ſhall live, *Bellarm. cap.*37.

Argum. 1. Mary and Ioſeph were perfitly man and wife, yet by mutuall conſent they lived continently all their dayes: Ergo, it is lawfull for married couples to ſeparate themſelves for ever, both agreeing thereunto, Bellarm. cap. 37.

Matth.1.18.

Anſw. It appeareth by the Text, that there was no ſuch thing purpoſed by Ioſeph before hee was admoniſhed by the Angell in a dreame, but that as ſhe was already betrothed, ſo there was an intent on Ioſephs part, that they ſhould come together, *Matth.*1.18. but that in the meane time Mary was found with childe by the Holy Ghoſt: and ſo from that time Ioſeph being a juſt man never knew his wife: there was no ſuch purpoſe or vow before.

2 That this was an extraordinarie example, who ſeeth it not? When any man ſhall be admoniſhed by an Angell as Ioſeph was, and ſhall have the like cauſe as Ioſeph had to abſtaine, which ſhall never be, he may be bold to doe as Ioſeph did.

Argum. 2. I will not here conceale a certaine law of *Iuſtinian, Cod. lib.*1. *tit.*6. *leg.*42. whereby it is provided, that if the husband or wife, Religionis cauſa à conjugio receſſerit, &c. Doe for religion ſake depart from marriage, and chuſe ſolitarie life, the other ſhall have ſuch dower or gift, as if the partie ſo departed were dead.

Anſw. This law ſeemeth to allow of the departure of the married parties, even without conſent each of other, for it ſpeaketh of the departure of one of the parties only: and thus Bellarmine interpreteth this law, and refuteth it alſo, holding it to bee a great error, that either partie ſhould depart without mutuall conſent: wherefore ſince that this law is refuſed by them, I ſhall not need to refute it.

The Proteſtants.

THey that are once joyned together in marriage, and have made a covenant each to other before God, cannot ſeparate themſelves though they both conſent, there being no other cauſe, but a purpoſe of ſingle life for more holineſſe ſake.

1 Cor.7.5.

Argum. 1. It is flat contrarie to S. Pauls rule, 1 *Cor.*7.5. Defraud not your ſelves, except it be with conſent for a time, that you may give your ſelves to faſting and prayer, and againe come together, leſt Satan tempt you for your incontinencie. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith directly: they ſhould but ſeparate themſelves for a time. Secondly, we doe thus reaſon out of his words: There is no cauſe of ſeparation, but to be given to faſting and prayer; but this may be done by a ſeparation for a time: neither is it neceſſarie we ſhould alwayes be given to faſting and prayer, but upon ſpeciall occaſion: therefore perpetuall ſeparation is not needfull. Thirdly, they that are long ſeparated are ſubject to fall into tentation:

the ſame cauſe therefore that moved them firſt to marrie, for avoyding of incontinencie, ought to move them to come together againe: Therefore it is not good nor lawfull they ſhould ſeparate themſelves for ever.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle ſaying, This I ſpeake by way of indulgence or permiſſion, verſ.6. ſheweth that he would rather, they ſhould abſtaine altogether; yet in reſpect of their frailtie he permitteth that they come together againe: ſo then they that doe ſeparate themſelves at once for all, doe that which is beſt agreeable to the Apoſtles meaning, *cap.*30.

Contra. Firſt, it is untrue, that Saint Paul had rather the married ſhould be ſeparated altogether: for where he wiſheth that all men were as himſelfe, he ſpeaketh directly to the widowes, and unmarried, verſ. 8. and not to them which were married: and againe, hee ſhould be contrarie to himſelfe, verſ.24. Let every man, wherein he was called, abide: and it followeth verſ. 27. Art thou bound to a wife, ſeeke not to be looſed? wherefore they that are married ought to remaine in that eſtate which they are called unto. Secondly, this then, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh by way of indulgence, is not to be referred to their comming together againe, for the Apoſtle hath for that a direct commandement, *verſ.*10. I command, not I, but the Lord, let not the wife depart from her husband: and againe, *verſ.*5. Defraud not one another: which is a precept, as Bellarmine confeſſeth; but if they ſhould be ſeparated altogether, they ſhould one defraud another: wherefore this permiſſion belongeth to the ſecond verſe, where the Apoſtle to avoide fornication, granteth the remedie of marriage to every one, that hath not the other gift.

Verſ.5.10.

*Argum.*2. That which God hath coupled, no man ought to put aſunder: but they that are married have made a covenant to God, Pro. 2. 17. as well as to themſelves, and are joyned by Gods law together: Ergo, they cannot diſſolve their marriage by their owne power and will, the Lord having an intereſt therein.

Pro.2.17.

Bellarmine ſaith, that by this ſeparation marriage is not diſſolved. Anſwer. It is as much diſſolved, as by your law in caſes of divorce: for theſe are their words: For advoutrie one may diſmiſſe another, but neither partie can marrie againe for any cauſe during life, *Rhemiſt. Matth.*19.*ſect.*4. So ye allow onely a kinde of diſmiſſion in the caſe of adulterie, and ſo you doe in the vow of continencie: and thus you make this cauſe as forcible as the other, to breake off matrimoniall dutie, which is contrarie to the Goſpell.

Auguſtine thus writeth, Non licet excepta cauſa fornicationis conjugem à conjuge dirimi et nec ſterilem conjugem fas eſt relinquere, ut foecunda ducatur, de nupt. & concupiſcen. Lib. 1.*cap.*10. It is not lawfull for married couples, one to be ſeparate from another, unleſſe it be for fornication: nor to leave a barren wife to marrie a frutfull. Therefore if fornication onely be a juſt cauſe of finall ſeparation, there can be no other: If there were any other, it is moſt like it ſhould be for procreation of children: But neither for that cauſe is a man to leave his wife: Ergo, for no other.

Nicholaus 1. de matrimon. can. 7. Hi, qui matrimonium ſani contraxerunt, &c. They, which were ſound when they married, if afterward one of them chance to bee mad or franticke, or hath any other infirmitie: as if hee bee made blinde by his enemies, maymed in his body, or cut in his privie members, for none of theſe cauſes is their marriage to bee diſſolved, &c. But thoſe are greater lets and impediments to marriage, than marriage is or can bee to the exerciſe of religion: therefore not for any vow of continencie is marriage to bee diſſolved, or any ſeparation to bee admitted.

And yet we have clearer evidence out of their owne law, Decret.p. 2. cauſ. 33.*qu.*5.*c.*11. Vota abſtinentia, qua mulier, &c. The vowes of abſtinence, which the wife made by her husbands leave, if hee afterward forbid, ſhe is not bound to keepe. By this Canon it is not lawfull for the wife, no not with the husbands conſent to become a Votarie. Decret. Gregor. lib. 2. tit. 24.*c.*24. This caſe is put, a certaine man and his wife doe ſwear each to other, that they would never deſire one the others companie againe: afterward the man would have received his wife, ſhe refuſed, ſaying, ſhe would be a Saracene firſt, &c. Innocentius, 3. thus reſolveth the caſe, that if the man could not be perſwaded to live ſingle, the woman ſhould be enforced by excommunication to returne unto him, &c. If an oath then doe not hold as touching ſeparation of the husband and the wife by conſent, no more ſhall a vow binde.

Likewiſe decret. Greg. lib. 3. *tit.*32.*c.*1. Alexander 3. this caſe is propounded: the husband in the preſence of divers Prieſts and Monks, by the licence of his wife profeſſeth Monaſticall life: if his wife afterward ſuſpected not to live continently deſire her husband, Vt poteſt & debet de monaſterio revocari: The man may and ought to be fetched out of his monaſterie. Ergo, there can be no finall ſeparation in marriage, no not by conſent, by their owne Canon law.

It ſeemeth, that both in the Greeke and Æthiopicke Church there is no ſuch faſhion to ſeparate man and wife for the love of monaſticall life: for among the Muſcovites there is no Prieſt, whom they call Pope, cui non ſit Popadia, that hath not a Popadie, that is, a Presbiteſſe: and ſo is it alſo in the Æthiopike Church, who ſeeme ſo to underſtand literally theſe words of S. Paul, that a Biſhop may be unius uxoris vir, the husband of one wife, &c. He muſt then have his wife: which verball interpretation of S. Pauls words though we allow not, neither is it brought in to that end: yet it ſheweth, that this uſe is not heard of among them.

4 The teſtimonie of the Latine Church is before cited out of the decrees.

The fourth part, whether marriage contracted, not conſummate, may without conſent be broken for the vow of continencie.

The Papiſts.

101. Error.

THeir opinion is, that if the marriage be contracted onely and ratified, but not yet conſummate, by the parties comming together, it is lawull for either of them without the others conſent to vow chaſtitie, cap. 38. Bellarm.

His reaſon is, becauſe it is lawfull for a man to paſſe from a leſſe perfect ſtate of life to a more perfect, if it may be done without detriment, as this may be: for yet they have no children, and the partie may as well be married to another, Bellarm.

Anſwer. Firſt, a ſingle life is not alwaies the perfecter ſtate, nor to all, as it is not to them that have not the gift to containe, as it is moſt like he hath not, that is contracted, and hath made promiſe of marriage: for then all this needed not. Secondly, though there bee none of thoſe impediments named, yet there is a greater: namely, their faith and promiſe made each to other before God, which they ought not to violate. Thirdly, S. Paul ſaith, If thou be bound to a wife, ſeeke not to be looſed, 1 Cor. 7. 27. But they that are eſpouſed one to the other, are bound; unleſſe you will ſay, that the covenant made by them unto God, Pro. 2. 17. bindeth not.

1 Cor. 7. 27.

Argum. 2. There is a double bond in Matrimonie, a carnall and ſpirituall, as the carnall is diſſolved by the temporall death, ſo the ſpirituall is by the ſpirituall death; ſuch is the Monaſticall profeſſion, whereby a man dieth to the whole world, in renouncing his goods, Bellarm. cap. 38. ration. 2.

Anſwer. Firſt, if to renounce the goods of the world, be to die to the world, then your Clergie ſhould thus die unto the world, as well as your Monks; as your owne decree teſtifieth, Cauſ. 1. qu. 2. c. 6. Qui opibus ſuis, &c. They that can be maintained by their owne goods, if they live of the ſtipends of the Church, commit ſacrilege: wherefore your Orders are as able to diſſolve a contract of marriage, as Monkerie, which notwithſtanding you denie. Secondly, if to be a Monk, is to die to the world, then everie Monk ſhall be ſaved: for they that die with Chriſt ſhall alſo live with him, Rom. 6. 8. But I think they dare not ſay ſo of all Monks, ſeeing they denie not but that the Pope may be a reprobate: and yet Saint Peters chaire will as ſoone bring them to heaven, as a Monks coule. Thirdly, the ſpirituall death may bee even in marriage, unleſſe Bellarmine will ſay, that in marriage is no ſalvation (for where there is not dying with Chriſt, there is no living with him:) If a man then that is married, may die unto ſinne, then it is falſe, that the ſpirituall death doth diſſolve the ſpirituall bond of marriage.

Rom 6. 8.

The Proteſtants.

MAtrimonie whether ratified onely by lawfull contract or eſpouſals, or conſummate, ought not any way to be broken with conſent or without, for Monaſticall profeſſion.

Argum. 1. Our reaſon is, becauſe it is perfect marriage alreadie in ſubſtance and before God, which is ratified by contract onely and ſolemne vow and covenant made each to other: And being thus betrothed, the one giveth power of their bodie to the other, and now they are no more free. That this marriage is perfect before God, and in ſubſtance, it appeareth by the law of Moſes by the which a man defiling a maid betrothed, was to ſuffer death, as well as if he had committed uncleanneſſe with a woman alreadie married, Deuteron. 22. verſ. 22. 23. And Matth. 1. 18. Marie that was but betrothed to Ioſeph, is by the Angell called his wife, verſ. 20.

Deut. 22. 22.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that notwithſtanding the contract, the wife is not bound to yeeld the due debt of marriage to her husband, if it be a detriment to her ſpirituall good, as in this caſe it is, when ſhe entreth into Monaſticall profeſſion.

Contra. Firſt, this reaſon maketh as much for the diſſolution of marriage conſummate, as of the contract onely: for the temporall good of marriage alſo muſt yeeld to the ſpirituall good. Secondly, we denie that it tendeth to any ſpirituall good, for monſtaicall life to violate a contract made before God: firſt, becauſe the partie is not ſure to have the gift of continencie, having ſo lately contracted and agreed to uſe the remedie of marriage, feeling her owne weakneſſe: and ſo ſhe is more like to fall into a ſpirituall evill, to live in continuall burning and luſt of the fleſh, as many of their milch-Nunnes did. Secondly, becauſe no ſpirituall good is to be hoped for contrarie to Gods ordinance, which even upon the contract giveth the husband power over the wife, and maketh her bound unto him as long as ſhe liveth; 1 Cor. 7. 39. The wife is bound to the husband, as long as he liveth: but ſhe that is eſpouſed onely is a wife, as was ſhewed before in the example of Marie. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ. 27. Art thou bound to a wife? ſeeke not to be looſed: but he that is contracted onely, is bound: Ergo, hee ought upon no occaſion to ſeeke to be looſed.

1 Cor. 7. 39. 27.

Argum. 2. The vow of continencie made in the taking of orders, non eſt efficax, is not of force to diſſolve matrimonie before contracted, as Iohn 22. decreeth Extravag. tit. 6. c. 1. Ergo, neither monaſticall profeſſion.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the reaſon is not a like, becauſe marriage is repugnant to monaſticall life of it ſelfe ſimply: but to orders it is repugnant onely by the decree of the Church.

Contra. Firſt, wee take it then as granted, that by the word of God marriage is not repugnant to orders, but onely by the conſtitution of the Church. Secondly, Monaſticall life alſo is an human invention, as well as the ſingle life of the Clergie: for S. Paul knew no ſuch profeſſion, when he giveth every man leave, without exception, to have his wife, 1 Cor. 7.2. Thirdly, though wee ſhould grant that Monkerie bindeth more from marriage than Orders, yet the vow making bindeth as well in the one as the other: for to marrie contrarie to vow, is ſimply repugnant in their opinion: wherefore ſeeing that a vow after contract in Orders diſſolveth it not, neither ſhall a vow made in Monkerie.

1 Cor. 7.2.

Concerning the Civill law, it may appeare, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 42. that the law did puniſh ſuch, as being contracted, betooke themſelves to ſolitarie life: the man loſt all his tokens and gifts ſent to his ſpouſe, and ſhee was to render double the value of the tokens received: although this law is abrogated by Iuſtinian the laſt law-maker of the Emperours, whoſe times ſavoured of ſuperſtition.

Their owne law is alſo ſomewhat doubtfull: Decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 32. c. 14. Innocen. 3. though hee dare not ſwerve from the practice of his predeceſſors, yet delivereth this to be his judgement: Poteſt non inconſulte videri, &c. It may with good adviſement be thought, that matrimonie contracted by words of the preſent, in nullo caſu, &c. in no caſe ſhould be diſſolved as long as the parties live.

Likewiſe, lib. 4. tit. 1. c. 16. Alexander. 3. thus determineth, That if a man ſweare to be contracted to a woman within a certaine ſpace, and in the meane time have a purpoſe to live monaſtically, hee ſhould firſt, to ſave his oath, performe the contract, &c. If then the vow or promiſe of monaſticall life be not able to diſſolve a promiſe of a contract, much leſſe the contract it ſelfe, which is more than a promiſe of marriage.

The Maſter of Sentences alſo is of opinion, that a contract made, per verba de praſenti, by words uttered of the preſent, cannot without common conſent be broken, lib. 4. diſt. 27. I.

Eſpenceus alſo a reverent writer among the Papiſts holdeth, that marriage whether conſummate or contracted onely, ought not for any profeſſion of monaſticall life to be diſſolved, lib. 6. cap. 4. de continent.

Concil. Ancyran. can. 11. ſic Deſponſatas puellas, &c. We thinke it meet, that if a maid eſpouſed to one, be defiled of another, that ſhe ſhould be reſtored to whom ſhe was eſpouſed, although it be certaine, that ſhe hath loſt the flower of her Virginitie by the other, &c. But the looſing of her Virginitie is more forcible to diſſolve the contract, than the vow of chaſtitie, for it is able to diſſolve marriage conſummate, and ſo is not the other without mutuall conſent, as the Jeſuite affirmeth: therefore by this Canon, if the more forceable cauſe cannot breake the eſpouſals, much leſſe can the other not ſo forceable.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, Conjuges fidem ſibi pariter debent: Cui fidei tantum juris tribuit Apoſtolus, ut eam poteſtatem appellaret dicens, Mulier non habet poteſtatem ſui corporis ſed vir, &c. Married couples doe owe faith and troth one to the other: which mutuall troth the Apoſtle maketh ſuch account of, that he giveth it the name of power, ſaying: The woman hath not power of her owne bodie, but the man, and likewiſe the man, &c. Auguſtine ſaith, that by the very plighting of their troth each to other, they receive mutuall power and intereſt one of anothers body. But this troth was plighted before the conſummation of their marriage: Ergo, they had one intereſt in another then, and can doe nothing one without the conſent of the other.

De bon. conjugal. cap. 4.

Herein. 1 The cuſtome of the Muſcovites (though in many other things, they are very rude) which follow the Greeke Church, is to be preferred: for in their ſolemnizing of marriage, the Prieſt asketh the man: Nunquid agrotam, ſcabioſam et decrepitam derelinques? Wilt thou forſake thy wife being ſicke, ſcabbed or decrepit? and he likewiſe asketh the woman, An caco, curvo et decrepito marito fida erit comes? Whether ſhee will be a faithfull companion to her husband, though he be blinde, crooked and decrepit? and they both ſweare they will, &c. ſo it ſeemeth that theſe their eſpouſals hold inviolably firme.

De Ruſſor. relig. ad David. Chytreum.

2 In the Æthiopike Church, it ſeemeth they make no difference betweene the contract and ſolemnizing of marriage, for both are done at home, not in the Church: the one then holdeth as firme as the other.

Zaga Zabo in the ſame.

3 Likewiſe here the reformed Churches condemne utterly all ſuch vowes, to breake eſpouſals or otherwiſe: For he which voweth virginitie, doth either vow it as a worſhip of God, and then (becauſe it is not commanded in the word of God) it is a commandement of men, &c. or elſe he doth it to merit remiſſion of ſinnes, and then it is a wicked vow. Wittemberg. c. 26.

*Argum.*1. Iohn Baptiſt lived in the Deſart, fared courſely, and was barely apparelled, he ate Locuſts, (that is either the tops of certaine hearbs, or a kinde of ſmall beaſt, it was a courſe kinde of diet) and wilde honie, and wore a garment of Camels haire: he was a right paterne of true Eremites, Bellarm. cap. 39. *lib.*2. de Monach.

Anſwer. Firſt, Iohns life was not ſo auſtere, as they make it: for the place where he lived was not ſo ſolitarie, but that there were villages and houſes not farre off, as it may appeare by the peoples reſort unto him: his apparell was of Camels haire, and was ſomewhat courſe, yet no ſuch thing as ſack-cloth, or haire-cloth; for of the fineſt of the Camels haire Chamblets and Groggraines are made, that are had in price amongſt us: his diet alſo in eating Locuſts and wilde honey was uſuall in that Countrey; yet there is ſome queſtion, what thoſe Locuſts were, ſome thinke that they were the tops of certaine hearbs, which are called ἀκρίδες, as Zaga Zabo an Aethiopike Biſhop thinketh, that Iohn lived onely of hearbs: ſome that they were certaine Crab-fiſhes, which the fiſher-men caſt upon the ſhore out of Jordane, as uncleane meat, but it is not like that Iohn would eat any meat uncleane by the law: others reade ἀχράδες, which were a certaine kinde of wilde Peares: And Epiphanius ſaith, lib.cont. Ebionitas: that ſome Jewes would have it ἐγκρίδες, which ſignifieth certaine pleaſant confections made of honey: but it is moſt like, that they were a kinde of Locuſts, which ſome people uſed to feede of: as *Dioſcorides lib.*2.c. 44. ſaith that the people called Alphei, and Plinie, lib. 11, *c.*29. writeth that the Parthians did eat of Locuſts, And a certaine kind of Locuſts called Arbeh: of their multitude, is counted in the Leviticall law among the cleane meats. It was then a courſe foode, which Iohn lived of, though not ſo vile, as the Jeſuite imagineth. Secondly, wee denie not but Iohn lived an auſtere life, becauſe hee was a Preacher of repentance, and had a ſingular office to prepare men for the comming of Chriſt: Therefore his calling being extraordinarie, he cannot be an author of an ordinarie calling among Chriſtians. Thirdly, ſeeing Chriſt came eating and drinking, lived amongſt men, and was apparelled as others were, why ſhould Chriſtians rather chuſe to imitate the Baptiſt, who had no office, or miniſterie in the Goſpell, *Matth.*11.11. than our Saviour Chriſt, whoſe life and doctrine is for our imitation?

Fulk. Mat.3. ſect.

Matth.11.11.

Bellarmine replieth, notwithſtanding this which hath beene alleaged, that Iohn verely lived in the Deſart and ſolitarie wilderneſſe, where was no reſort, nor frequencie of people at all; which hee would prove by theſe two reaſons chiefly: firſt, becauſe it is ſaid, Luke 1.80. That hee dwelled in the wilderneſſe, till the time he ſhould ſhew himſelfe to Iſrael: but if he had beene in his fathers houſe, he could not have beene unknowne to Iſrael. Secondly, becauſe they aske if he were Elias: but if he had beene converſant in his fathers houſe, they would not have doubted, knowing whoſe ſonne hee was, *cap.*39.

Luk.1.80.

Anſwer. To the first reaſon I anſwer, that it foweth not, Iohn was not yet knowne to Iſrael; Ergo, he lived in the wilderneſſe: for our Saviour was not knowne to Iſrael, till he was 30. yeere olde, when he began to preach; yet lived he not in the wilderneſſe, but in his parents houſe, and was obedient unto them, *Luk.*2.51. Neither yet doe we ſay, that Iohn all that time lived in his fathers houſe; he might ſequeſter himſelfe to ſome more private or ſecret places, for meditation, though not altogether ſolitarie and unfrequented of none, but wilde beaſts. To the ſecond, our anſwer is, that they knew alſo whence Jeſus was, Iohn 7.27. yet they were doubtfull who hee ſhould bee, whether the Prophet, or the Chriſt, *verſ.*40.41. ſo concerning Iohn, though his parents were knowne, yet might they be doubtfull of his office. Againe, though he had lived in the very wilderneſſe from a child; yet his birth was ſo famous, bruted over all the Countrie of Judea, Luke 1.65. that his parentage could not be hid.

Luk.2.51.

Iohn 7.27.

Luk.1.65.

Luk.1.80. Now our contrarie reaſons, that Iohn lived not in ſuch a wilderneſſe, as where no reſort of people was, are theſe: Firſt, it is ſaid, that he was in the wilderneſſe, till he ſhewed himſelfe, &c. *Luk.*1.80. but it is not like, that ſtraight after his birth, being yet an infant, he was put forth into the wilderneſſe, unleſſe they will imagine, that he ſucked of ſome wild beaſt: wherefore by the wilderneſſe here muſt be vnderſtood the hilly and leſſe inhabited countrie of Judea, where Zacharie dwelt, verſ.39. and where Iohn alſo had his education. Secondly, Matth. 3. 1. Iohn is ſaid to have preached in the wilderneſſe of Judea: which addition ſheweth, that it was the leſſe frequented part of Judea, not ſimply a wilderneſſe, as Chriſt is ſaid to have beene led into the wilderneſſe, *Matth.*4.1. without any other addition. Thirdly, it is not like that Iohn would begin to preach where there was no people at all, but ſavage and wilde beaſts. Fourthly, Iohn preached and baptized in the wilderneſſe, and there was Jeſus baptized of him, and from thence was led into the wilderneſſe to bee tempted: ſo that Chriſt was led from Iohns wilderneſſe, to another wilderneſſe, which was the very Deſart, and not that, where Iohn preached. So then, our ſentence is this, that the wilderneſſe, where Iohn lived till he publikely ſhewed himſelfe, and where he preached, muſt of neceſſitie be taken for the leſſe peopled Countrie of Judea, which was ſo called in reſpect of the more popular and frequented places of Judea: yet we denie not, but that Iohn alſo did give himſelfe to a ſtrict and ſolitarie kinde of life, though he kept not in ſuch a Deſart, as they imagine, that he ſhould give occaſion to bee called an Eremite.

Math 3.1.

Matth 4.1.

The Proteſtants.

THat the ſolitarie life of Eremites, in flying the comfortable ſocietie of men, and their rigorous manner in the unnaturall chaſtiſing of their bodies, is contrarie to the rule of the Goſpell, thus we ſhew it.

Argum. 1. Heb. 10. 24. 25. Let us conſider one another, and provoke one another to good workes; not forſaking the aſſemblies of our ſelves together, as the manner of ſome is, but exhorting one another: Heere the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly againſt thoſe that ſhunne the ſocietie and companie of their brethren, becauſe they muſt needes faile in the duties of charitie, as in exhorting one another, and provoking to good works: theſe duties Eremites cannot performe, therefore their life is unlawfull: and *Matth.*24. it is a note of falſe Prophets and falſe Chriſts to live in the Deſarts. Againe, they that love ſolitarie places, doe offer themſelves to tentation, and fall into the ſnares of the devill, God ſaw it was not good for Adam, no not in Paradiſe, to live alone: but I thinke their Deſarts are farre unlike to Paradiſe: Chriſt to be tempted of the devill was led into the wilderneſſe: Therefore ſuch places are fit for Sathans working. The Preacher ſaith, Two are better than one, for if one overcome him, two ſhall ſtand againſt him, Eccle. 4. 12. We are better able being ayded by our brethren to reſiſt Satan, than being alone: We ought not then to tempt God, and not knowing our owne ſtrength, to goe forth into ſolitarie places, and as it were provoke Sathan to the Combat. See to this purpoſe, Conc. Oxonienſ. ſub Stephano: Quia ſerpens antiquus, &c. Becauſe the old Serpent, when hee found holy men ſolitarie, living without any mutuall comfort or conſolation, did ſo much the more eaſily invade and oppreſſe them, we with good deliberation have decreed, that Monks, regular Canons, Nunnes, ſhould ſleepe together in the ſame dorters.

Hebr. 10 24.

Matth. 24. 26.

Eccleſ. 4. 12.

Argum. 2. That cruell and inhuman kinde of chaſtiſing their bodies by faſting and other diſcipline utterly is unlawfull. The Monks, called Grandimontenſes, did were ſhirts of maile next their bodies, the Charter Monks haire cloth: the Monks Flagellants, went bare-foot in linnen ſhirts, leaving an open place in the back, where they did daily whip themſelves before the people till the blood followed. Moſes a certaine Abbot, did ſo afflict his bodie with faſting and watching, that for two or three daies together many times hee had no appetite at all to his meat, neither could ſleepe. Another Eremite (as Caſſianus writeth) did purpoſe with himſelfe not to eat meat, unleſſe hee had ſome gueſt or ſtranger with him, and ſo was conſtrained to abſtaine ſometime five daies together: two other Monaſticall brethren, travailing in the Deſart of Thebaide, did vow not to take any ſuſtenance, but ſuch as God ſhould ſend them; and as they went, a certaine wilde people, contrarie to their cuſtome, offered them meat, the one tooke it as ſent of God; the other refuſed it, becauſe he thought it to be ſent rather of man than of God, and ſo died.

Baſilius magnus, and Gregor. Nanzianzene, did ſo pluck downe themſelves by immoderate faſting; that when they were called to bee Biſhops, they were not able to ſuſtaine the labour thereof.

Where in all the Scriptures learned theſe men, thus to puniſh their bodies? This is not with S. Paul to ſubdue and bring under the fleſh: but to kill and deſtroy it; contrarie to that ſaying of Saint Paul, No man ever yet hated his owne fleſh, but loveth and cheriſheth it. See I pray you, how theſe men loved and cheriſhed their bodies?

Argum. 3. That Religion which conſiſteth in the afflicting and not ſparing of the bodie, hath but a ſhew of wiſdome, and is a voluntarie or will-worſhip, ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, *Coloſſ.*2.23. but ſuch is the religion of Heremites, which ſay, Touch not, taſte not, handle not, as it is in the ſame place, *verſ.*21. Ergo.

Coloſſ. 2. 23. 21.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that to afflict and humble the bodie is lawfull, ſo that it be not done ſuperſtitiouſly, and unprofitably, as S. Paul ſaith, I doe chaſtiſe my body, and bring it into ſubjection, 1 *Cor.*9. 27. *Bellarm. cap.*39.

1 Cor. 9. 27.

Contra. To humble the bodie by faſting for a time, that our prayer may be more fervent, as Saint Paul did, is a thing both commendable and commanded, and it is neither ſuperſtitious and unprofitable; table: but continuall and immoderate abſtinence from ſuch things as are lawfull, ſuch as Eremites are devoted unto, is not to keepe the bodie under, but to kill it; not to vanquiſh the affection, but to extinguiſh it; and is both ſuperſtitious and unprofitable: Firſt, it is ſuperſtitious, becauſe it is a will-worſhip according to the doctrine of men, Coloſſ.2.22. So the Lord ſaith, Zach.7.5. Did you faſt unto me? Eſay 58.3. When you faſt, you will ſeeke your owne will, and chap.1.12. Who required this of your hands? wherefore ſeeing this ſtrict uſage is but an human invention, I conclude it is meere ſuperſtition. Secondly, it is alſo unprofitable: for a man to redeeme his ſinne with the fruit of his body, Micah.6.7. and ſo likewiſe with the body it ſelfe, is not pleaſing unto God: but this doe Eremites, thinking by the puniſhment of their body to ſatisfie for their ſinnes. Ergo.

Coloſſ.2.22. Zach.7.5. Eſay.58.3. Micah.6.7.

Concerning the rigorous and hard uſage of Monks, the judgement of the Imperiall lawes is this, Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.8.authentic. it is decreed, that Prieſts, giving falſe witneſſe, Monaſteriis pro tormentis tradantur: Should be delivered to the Monaſteries to be tormented: So likewiſe, leg.14. authent. a ſeditious Biſhop is condemned to the Monaſterie, for his correction. What kinde of life then and profeſſion call you this, which is appointed for a torment and puniſhment to men?

As touching ſolitarie life alſo, the Canon law ſaith, Væ ſoli, Woe to him that is alone, Decret. Gregor.lib.3.tit.35.cap.2. The decree alſo of Clemens 5. in the Counſell of Vienna is extant, Ne Monachi ſinguli in ſingulis, &c. That Monks ſhould not live ſingly or ſolitarily by themſelves. And as for their ſtrict diet, and ſtarving of the body, faring courſely and lying hardly: your owne Canons have decreed, and deſcribed the Severiani to be heretickes, that refuſed to drinke wine: and they reckon up other hereſies, ſome that, Nudis pedibus ambulant: Walke barefoote: ſome refuſe to eat in the companie of men: Cauſ.24.qu.3.c.39. Such hereticks are their Monks and Heremites.

In Pſal.49.

Let us heare what Auguſtine ſaith, Tu deſeris res humanas & ſegregas te, ut nemo te videat: Cui proderis? tu ad hoc perveniſſes, ſi nemo tibi profuiſſet? An quia veloces pedes tibi videris habuiſſe ad tranſeundum, præciſurus es pontem? Thou leaveſt the care of human things, and ſeparateſt thy ſelfe that no man ſhould ſee thee: to whom doeſt thou good in ſo dooing? hadſt thou come to this perfection thy ſelfe if no man had done thee good? becauſe thou haſt quickly paſſed over, wilt thou cut off the bridge, that no man elſe ſhould paſſe? See then Auguſtine maketh the heremeticall life altogether unprofitable to men.

Cenſur.Oriental.Eccleſ. c.21. Ibid.

Here. 1. Ieremie the Patriarke delivereth the opinion of the Greeke Church, Quis non videt hominem animal ſociale eſſe, &c. Who ſeeth not, that man is a ſociable creature, not ſolitarie or wilde, and nothing to be more proper to his nature, Quam cum aliis vitam communem agere, Than to lead a life common with others: And touching their ſtrict and abſtemious life, he alleageth thus out of Baſil; Quare et ipſa ſibi abſtinentia cum ratione ſuſcipienda eſt: The abſtinence from meat is to be uſed with diſcretion: even Baſil himſelfe alloweth not an immoderate and unreaſonable abſtinence.

Vita Antonii

2 Antonie the firſt founder of monaſticall life among the Egiptians, whoſe order the Æthiopian Monks doe follow at this day: was himſelfe nothing ſo ſtrict, either in his ſolitarie life, or pinching abſtinence, as his followers imagine: for though in time of perſecution he fled into the Deſart, yet he had after recourſe unto Alexandria, encouraging and animating the Chriſtians to endure the torments with patience, which they were put unto for the Chriſtian faith. It is alſo reported of him that while he exerciſed himſelfe with ſome other of his brethren, in leaping and running for the health of his bodie, and was therefore found fault with by ſome paſſers by, as though it beſeemed not his gravitie: he perceiving it, cauſed one of them to bend his Crosbow, which he did, he bid him bend it ſtill, nay ſaith the other, for then it will breake: ſo ſaith Antonie, ſhould we deſtroy our bodies, Si nimium affligerimus, if we ſhould afflict them too much.

The ſecond part, concerning the habit and ſhaving of Monks.

The Papiſts.

103. Error.

BOth theſe ſuperſtitious cuſtomes for Monks to be knowne by their coules and ſhaven crownes, they receive and allow as commendable and fit for them to be knowne by. Beſide ſome ſhew of antiquitie, Scripture they have none: but their beſt reaſon is this: that as Senators and ſouldiers, Noble men and ruſtickes are knowne by their apparell; ſo it is meete that Monks ſhould be diſcerned from others by their habit, Bellarm. cap. 40. Our Rhemiſts uſe the ſame reaſon for ſhaven crownes, that it is a note of diſtinction betweene the Clergie and lay-men, annot. 1.*Pet.*5.*ſect.*2. And for prieſtlike garments, they alleage out of Apoc. 1.*verſ.*13. how Chriſt appeared to Iohn, veſted in a prieſtlike garment. Revel.1.13.

Anſw. Firſt, wee denie not, but that it is covenient for Miniſters to bee diſcerned from others even in their apparell : which may be done by the gravitie and modeſtie thereof in colour, in plainnes, not neceſſarie to bring in ſtrange and ridiculous faſhions of attire, ſuch as Monks cowles are : yet Miniſters are better diſcerned by other things, than their apparell, as they are deſcribed by S. Paul, 1 Tim. 3. But as for any ſuch diſtinction of Monks we allow not : for the very calling it ſelfe ought to be aboliſhed. As for ſhaven crownes and beards, they are but tokens of Baals prieſts, make the beſt of them you can.

2 Chriſt appeared in a long garment downe to the feet : which they tranſlate a prieſtlike garment, as though Chriſt were then going to Maſſe : The word is, podéres, which ſignifieth a long veſture, downe to the feet, which was one of the high Prieſts garments, and hereby is ſignified the Prieſthood of Chriſt : but what is this to the attire of Monks or Prieſts ? We deny not but long garments for their comelines are fit for Miniſters, according to the faſhion of the countrie, but not as neceſſarie, repreſenting more holineſſe : for in the Eaſt countries, ſhort garments were grave and comely enough : as the Prophets had their mantles: and S. Paul maketh mention of his clocke, 2 Tim. 4.13. 2 Tim.4.13.

Argum. 2. The ſpeciall habit of Monks doth binde them to live well, for being knowne from all other men by their habit, if they ſhould doe a miſſe they ſhould be rebuked of all : Bellar. cap. 40. ration. 2.

Anſw. Firſt, this is right Phariſaicall to doe well onely to avoid the rebuke of men, and to have their praiſe : as our Saviour ſaith, Matth. 23.5. All their workes they doe to be ſeene of men, for they make their Phylacteries broad, &c. Wherefore it is plaine hypocriſie rather for feare of men than of conſcience, not to do evill. Secondly, their habit ſerveth not as a ſtraiter bond to doe well, but as a pretenſed cloake of their evill doing : for by this meanes they practiſe knaverie without ſuſpition, masking under the colours of religion : by their Monks cowles they have entred into the preſence of Princes, and moſt treacherouſly murthered them, as in our memorie hath been practiſed in France. Matth.23.5.

The Proteſtants.

WE condemne both the habit and ſhaving of the Monks as ſuperſtitious, even as their whole life and profeſſion is.

Argum. 1. There is no one precept in the new Teſtament concerning formes and faſhions of apparell to be uſed by Clergie men, but only in generall termes, that they ſhould be modeſt and ſober, and grave in their behaviour. The Levites and Prieſts indeed in the law had rules and precepts ſet them, both for their veſtures in the temple, and their ordinarie apparell, Num. 15.59. that it ſhould be made with fringes in remembrance of the commandements. But who ſeeth not that ſuch ſignifications of apparell were Leviticall, and meerely ceremonious ? ſuch is the habit of Monks : for their cowles, ſaith the Jeſuite, ſignifie their innocencie, like unto children that are covered with vailes like unto cowles. But to place any religion or holineſſe in apparell, as they did, (for it was thought a great privilege to bee buried in a Monks cowle) is abominable ſuperſtition : for ſuch Monkiſh ſuperſtition our Saviour rebuked the Phariſies, Matth. 23.5. All their workes they doe, to bee ſeene of men : for they make their Phylacteries broad, and make long the fringes of their garments. If the Phariſies did abuſe to vaine-glorie and ſuperſtition, that kinde of apparell which the law commanded : there can bee no good uſe of Monkiſh habits, which the Goſpell neither commendeth nor commandeth. 1 Timoth.3.2. Numb.15.39. Matth.23.5.

As for ſhaven crownes : they were directly forbidden by the law of Moſes, not onely to round the tufts of their beard, as the Gentiles did, Levit. 19.27. but not to ſhave their beard, or make bald their head, Levit. 21.5. And then it was a ſigne of holineſſe not to cut the haire, as in the Nazarites it appeareth, Numb. 6. It was then the cuſtome of the heathen and of their Idolatrous prieſts to ſhave themſelves : How then dare the Papiſts make that a ſigne of holineſſe now, which was a ſigne of prophannes, and heathennes then ? And is their religion ſo beggarly, that they muſt needs borrow their ceremonies of the heathen ? Levit.19.27. Levit.21.5.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Levit. 21.5. the Prieſts were not ſimply forbidden to ſhave their heads, but not to doe it in the death of their friends.

Contra. Firſt, there is no ſuch addition in the text, but the words are generall, They ſhall not make bald parts upon their heads. Secondly, the prohibition in Ezechiel is generall, chap. 44. 20. They ſhall not ſhave their heads. Ezech.44.20.

Bellarmine replieth againe, that the ſhaving of their heads was not ſimply forbidden, as evill in it ſelfe; for the Nazarites according to the law did ſhave their heads, Numb. 6. and S. Paul alſo. Acts 21.24. But it was forbidden onely in reſpect of the Gentiles, among whom they dwelt, that they ſhould not be like them, Bellarm. cap. 40. Act.21.24.

Contra. Firſt, to ſhave the head as the Gentiles did, was ſimply forbidden, ſaving where the Lord himſelfe made an exception, as in the vow of the Nazarites : neither were they forbidden to doe ſo onely,

Deut.14.1.

Ezech.5.1.

Coloſſ.2.17.

only, becauſe the Gentiles did the like, but becauſe it was a ſuperſtitious uſe received of the Gentiles, and therefore not beſeeming Gods people: And therefore this reaſon is given, you are the children of the Lord, and an holy people to God, therefore you ſhall not make any baldnes, &c. Deuter. 14. 1. Secondly, the ſhaving of the Nazarites, was a ſpeciall exception, as likewiſe the ſuffering of their haire to grow long, which is ſimply forbidden, *Ezech.*44.20. yet for a time tolerated in the Nazarites: ſo alſo the Prophets ſhaving of himſelfe to be a ſigne to the people, *Ezech.*5.1. was extraordinary, and by the Lords direct commandement. So that if Monks can ſhew a ſpeciall toleration for their ſhaving, as the Nazarites had, they may doe as they did; but the profeſſion of the Nazarites is now ceaſed, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, where he ſaith, Touch not, taſte not, &c. which was the uſe of Nazarites, not to taſte wine, nor to touch any dead thing: that they were *but ſhadowes of things to come. Coloſſ.*2.17.

Fox.pag.154.

*Argum.*2. The great varietie of their habits, and fooliſh ſignifications of their ſhavings, doe ſhew what beginning they had. The Monks of Baſils order went in white; of Benets rule in blacke; the Ciſtercians had white rochets upon a blacke coate; the Grandimontenſes a coate of maile, with a blacke cloake upon; ſome ſtarred Monks; ſome Jeſuites with a white girdle, and a ruſſet cowle: ſome Celeſtines all in blew, both cloake, cowle and cap. The Franciſcans did weare ropes for girdles and treen ſhooes.

They render alſo divers reaſons of their ſhaven crownes: ſome ſay it reſembleth Chriſts crowne of thornes: ſome by ſhaving the haire, doe ſignifie the mortifying of the affections, as cutting off of things that are ſuperfluous: ſome by baring of the head, the ſimplicitie and plainnes of life: Bellarmine ſaith, it is a ſigne of repentance and converſion. Is not here good ſtuffe, thinke you? Such rites, ſuch ceremonies, ſuch ſignifications ſuch human traditions, I thinke, the Phariſies would have abhorred. For theſe are worſe than their waſhing of tables, braſen veſſels, pots, cups, and ſuch like: and yet our Saviour ſaith of them, that they did lay the commandement of God apart, to eſtabliſh their owne traditions, *Mark.*7.8.

1 Cor.11.14.

Laſtly, let Auguſtine ſpeake: concerning the habit of eccleſiaſticall perſons, thus he writeth: *Similiter laicis patet cœli palatium Dei mandata ſervantibus veluti clericis, &c. ſanctimoniali habitu præditis. De ſalutar. docum. cap.*38. The heavenly palace is as well open for Lay-men, keeping the commandements of God, as for Prieſts in their holy attire. What profiteth then, I pray you, to bee buried in a Monks cowle? Againe, Auguſtine found fault with certaine diſſolute Monks in that time, that ſuffered their haire to grow long; againſt whom he urgeth the ſaying of S. Paul, 1 *Cor.*11. 14. Doth not nature it ſelfe teach you, that it is a ſhame for a man to have long haire? And ſo he concludeth: Hoc quò pertinet, quæſo, tam aperte contra Apoſtoli præcepta comari? What meaning have you in this, to ſuffer your haire to grow, contrarie to the precept of the Apoſtle? But this precept did no more belong to Monks, than all other Chriſtians. Concerning the ſhaving of Monks, Auguſtine hath not one word at all, but of polling, and clipping the haire: he ſpeaketh only againſt certaine crinitos fratres, that nouriſhed their haire and ſuffered it to grow of length.

1 Cor.14.6.

Nay, our Rhemiſts love ſhaving ſo well, that they defend the ſhaving of Nunnes, and would prove it out of Hierome, who indeed ſpeaketh of the cutting off of their haire, not for any religion, but to avoid certaine little beaſts that bred betweene the ſkinne and the haire, (you know what beaſts they are) becauſe they uſed not the bathes, nor oyle, as other women did, Fulk. 2 *Theſſ.*3.*ſect.*2. But whatſoever Hierome ſaith, it is flat contrarie to S. Pauls rule, who ſaith, It is a ſhame for a woman to bee ſhorne or ſhaven, 1. *Cor.*14.6.

Concerning the habit of Monks, antiquitie thus ſpeaketh: *Si quis virorum putaverit ſancto propoſito, continentiæ, convenire, ut pallio utatur, tanquam ex eo juſtitiam habiturus, & judicet eos qui veſte communi utuntur, anathema ſit. Concil. Gangrenſ. cap.*12. If any man thinke that to weare a cloake, doth fit his profeſſion, as though thereby hee were more juſt, and doth condemne or deſpiſe thoſe which uſe a common veſture, let him bee accurſed, &c. But the Monks and Friers doe put holineſſe in their habit, as even now ſhall be ſeene. Ergo.

*Celeſtine Epiſt.*2.*cap.*1. Diſcernendi à plebe, vel cæteris ſumus doctrina, non veſte; converſatione non habitu; mentis puritate, non cultu. We are diſcerned from the people, by our doctrine, not our garments; by our converſation, not by our habit; the puritie of our minde, not by our apparell.

*Colonienſ. part.*2.*cap.*26. Ex veſte apud homines opinionem ſanctimoniæ prohibuit Chriſtus &c. Chriſt forbad, that men ſhould have opinion of holineſſe in garments: who firſt biddeth that to be cleanſed which is within, denouncing woe to the Phariſies, who to ſeeme juſt, made broad their phylacteries, but within were full of ravening, &c. But Friers and Monks did advance themſelves as more holie, by their habit. Likewiſe in the Canon law, *Cauſ.*33. *qu.*5.*c.*4. Expediret te potius candidis moribus, &c. It were better for you to obey your husband, with white and faire conditions, than in black raiment to reſiſt him.

The third part, of the Monks Canonicall houres.

The Papiſts.

THe 3.6.9.houres, they ſay, are conſecrated and devoted to prayer, which they call their Canonicall houres: at the 3. houre the holy Ghoſt deſcended: at the 6. houre Peter went up to the top of the houſe: and at the 9.houre Peter and Iohn went up to pray in the Temple, Act.*3.1. And Daniel uſed to pray thrice in the day, Dan.*6.10. *Ergo, thoſe times ought to be conſecrate to prayer, Rhemiſt. Act.*10.*ſect.*6.

104.Error.

Anſw. Firſt, we denie that it can be gathered by any of thoſe places, that theſe houres only ought to be ſet apart for prayer. Peter and Iohn went up at the ninth houre, which was the time of the evening ſacrifice, when the religious Jewes went up to pray. Secondly, Daniel prayed three times a day but at what houres the text ſpeaketh not: yet by this example, and by the other proofes alleaged, we doe gather, that at the 3. 6. 9. houre, that is, not preciſely at any of theſe times, but in the morning, when men riſe up to their labours, at noone before their repaſt, and at night when they go to reſt, it is meet and convenient that men ſhould make their prayers unto God, and at other times alſo when they finde themſelves fit. Thirdly, the popiſh ſervice hath nothing but the names of theſe houres: for they are all finiſhed in the forenoone, whereas the ſixth houre is at high noone, the ninth houre is the third houre before the Sunnes ſet: And this toleration, to diſpatch all in the fore noone, is agreeable to their owne ſuperſtitious decrees: Decret.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*41.*c.*1. *Presbyter mane, &c. The Prieſt in the morning muſt performe his ſervice, the firſt, the third, ſixth, ninth houre; and for the evening, &c. and all this may be done in the morning: for after theſe houres diſpatched, hee muſt goe forth faſting, ad rurale opus, to his field buſineſſe, &c. Thus we ſee how well they obſerve their houres themſelves.

The Proteſtants.

WE denie not, but that ſet times of publike prayer are commendable, as we have our forenoone, and afternoone ſervice: but at unſeaſonable houres, as at midnight, or the riſing of the Sunne, to call the people together, when they cannot conveniently be aſſembled, is but a ſuperſtitious cuſtome. Againe, it is profitable for men in the morning, noone, evening, though not preciſely at any ſet houres, to direct their prayers unto God, and to binde themſelves by a conſtant purpoſe thereunto: but ſo to ſtint mens prayers, as that they ought of neceſſitie to keepe their houres, as though their prayers were then more availeable, it hath no ground out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, Pray continually, 1 Theſſ.*5.17. *Ergo, it is lawfull to pray at all times, and one time as fit for prayer as another, if a man be prepared. Againe, the ſame Apoſtle ſaith, I will that the men every where lift up pure hands without wrath and doubting, 1 Timoth. 2.8. Out of theſe words we gather two arguments: Firſt, prayers are no more bound to times, than to places: a man may pray every where: Ergo, at every time. Secondly, a man ought not to pray, but when he is void of wrath, and is otherwiſe prepared: but it may be, that at the ſtinted houres, of the third, ſixth, ninth, a man may bee in wrath, and otherwiſe not fit: therefore he is not neceſſarily to be tied to thoſe houres.

1 Theſſ.5.27.

1 Timoth.2.8.

2 Auguſtine thus writeth: Cum quiſque orationem quærit, collocet membra ſicut ei occurrerit accommodata pro tempore poſiti corporis ad movendum animum. Cum autem non quæritur, ſed infertur appetitus orandi: hoc eſt, cum repentè aliquid venit in mentem, &c. quocumque modo invenerit hominem, non eſt utique differenda oratio, Lib.2.ad Simplician.quæſt.4. When any man deſireth to pray, let him diſpoſe his members as it falleth out, fitteſt for the time, in diſpoſing his bodie for the ſtirring up of his minde: but when as it commeth not of his deſire and ſeeking, but ſuddenly his affection is ſtirred up to pray, howſoever prayer findeth him, (that is, whether ſtanding or ſitting) he muſt not in any caſe deferre it and put it off to another time, &c. This then is Auguſtines mind, that a man ſhould pray ſo oft as he hath a diſpoſition thereunto, and not deferre his prayer, as they doe which bind themſelves to Canonicall houres.

Concil.Conſtantinop.6.cap.7. Singulis diebus qui amplius non poteſt, ſaltem duabus vicibus oret manè ſcilicet & veſpere, dicens ſymbolum, ſive orationem dominicam: Every day, he that cannot oftner, let him pray twice, that is, morning and evening, ſaying the Creede, and the Lords prayer, &c. It appeareth that in thoſe daies when this Counſell was held, which was about the yeere 670. men were not tied to their Canonicall houres.

Claudius Minerius holy Martyr: To houres and times prayers ought not to be tied, but whenſoever Gods ſpirit doth move us, or when any neceſſitie driveth us, we ought to pray. Fox pag.905. Pag.818.1.47.

But who could have ſaid better of this matter, than Winchester doth, if he had been conſtant in the truth? The obſerving (ſaith he) of daies, houres, number, time, place, if they be orderly and publikely commanded by the rulers, it is but to ſet the Church in an outward and publike order: but if a man inwardly and privately be addicted to the ſame, thinking his prayer otherwiſe not availeable, but by obſerving thereof, it is an error, Fox pag.1791.ex depoſition.D.Redman. I think no reaſonable man will refuſe to ſubſcribe to this ſentence.

In ancient time it ſeemeth, 1. That the Greeke Church obſerved no ſuch preciſe canonicall houres for bublike or private prayers: as Chryſoſtome ſaith, Singulis diebus fundi in eccleſia preces, That prayers were powred out daily in the Church: and he exhorteth ad matutinas & veſpertinas orationes; to morning and evening prayer only.

2 Cyprian of the Africane Church ſaith, Hora nulla a Chriſtianis excipitur; No houre is excepted to Chriſtians, &c. they muſt pray continually. Athanaſius of Alexandria, thus preſcribeth unto Monks: Orationibus ita frequenter inſtandum eſt ut vix eos aliquod tempus interpellat: You muſt bee ſo inſtant in prayer, that ſcarce any time muſt be intermitted: He ſetteth them no certaine preſcript houres.

4 Rodericus their Biſhop, ſpeaking of the Monks of former times, ſaith, that then non tot jejunia indicta, &c. non tot nocturna pariter & diurna officia, &c. There was not ſuch faſting enjoyned, nor ſo many ſervices to be ſaid by night and day, &c. See further of this point afterward, in the queſtions about prayer.

The fourth part, concerning the maintenance of Monks.

The Papiſts.

105.Error. THey neither denie that it is unlawfull for Monks to labour with their hands, where neceſſitie, bodily ſtrength, the order of the Church doth require them; neither doe they confeſſe, that it is neceſſarie for them to worke: and ſo are not aſhamed to maintaine their idle, ſlothfull, and Epicures life: Bellarm.cap.41.42.Rhemiſts, 2.Theſſal.3.ſect.2. But they may either live of the lands given to their houſes, or elſe by their religious begging, cap.44.

Argum.1. Monks are not now bound to worke, having wherewith to live beſide of lands given unto them, becauſe moſt of them are prieſts, and doe ſerve at the Altar, Rhemiſt.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, wee grant that Miniſters of the Goſpell labouring in the Word and Sacraments, ought to be maintained by the Goſpell: but ſuch are few or none of your Monks, who being fit for no other ſervice either in the Church or Common wealth, are thruſt into Monaſteries by their friends: they are idolatrous prieſts, and ſerve little better than at Baals Altar. If any of them be fit for the Miniſterie, as we denie not but ſome have come out of your Cloyſters, as Luther, Bucer, Peter Martyr, by whom the Church of God hath received much good: but they muſt come firſt out of your Dennes, and relinquiſh their Monkiſh life, and labour amongſt the people; ſo ſhall they be no more regular, but ſecular prieſts, as you terme them. Secondly, the lands which were beſtowed upon them, were firſt given upon an evill intent, that by their prayers they ſhould redeeme the ſoules of their founders, who moſt of them had committed ſome notable ſinne, and ſo pro remedio animarum, to helpe their ſoules, they built Monaſteries. So King Ethelſtane for killing his brother Edwin, built two Monaſteries, Middleton and Michelney for his ſoule, Fox pag. 152. King Offa for killing Ethelbert a good Prince, who came peaceably for the deſpouſage of Atheldred his daughter, being pricked in conſcience, gave the firſt Peter pence to Rome, pag. 114. Thoſe lands therefore being given firſt for ungodly purpoſes, and continued by them for idolatrous uſes, ought cleane to be taken from them, and to be beſtowed upon better uſes: neither is it lawfull for them in that ſort to enjoy them.

*Argum.*2. They prove the impudent begging of Friers, which they call religious begging, to be lawfull and commendable, by the example of Chriſt, who had not a place where to put his head, Luke 9. and of his Apoſtles, that were charged not to poſſeſſe gold or ſilver in their purſes, Matth. 10. Luke 9. *Bellarm cap.*45.

Anſw. Firſt, I pray you where ever did you read that Chriſt went a begging? he lived not of almes, but gave almes, and Iudas was the almes-man, though he played his part but evill. Augustine flatly denieth that you avouch: He ſaith that Chriſts bag was as Fiſcus regis, even as the Kings Exchequer: and that what was given him, was as due as tribute money to the Prince: But the King, I trow, is not a begger: Niſi putetis (ſaith he) quia dominus petebat & indigebat, cui ſerviebant angeli, qui de quinque panibus tot millia pavit: Unleſſe you think (ſaith he) that Chriſt begged and wanted, whom the Angels ſerved, and who fed with five loaves not a few thouſands, in Pſal. 146. Secondly, if the Apoſtles were beggers, then they lived of almes, but that is untrue: for Chriſt ſaith, The labourer is worthie of his hire: but the labourers wages is earned and deſerved, it is no almes.

Iohn the 23. defined them to be heretikes, that affirmed Chriſt and his Apoſtles to have had nothing proper of their owne. Then by this determination, Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts are found heretickes, in ſaying that Chriſt and his Apoſtles went a begging: unleſſe they will reverſe the ſentence of their holy father, which were alſo no leſſe than hereſie, &c. Thus are they intrapped on both ſides: let them unfold themſelves as they can.

Notwithſtanding all this, yet Bellarmine taketh upon him to prove that Chriſt was a begger: firſt, becauſe he had no houſe, nor poſſeſſions of his owne, nor any place where to reſt his head: but was entertained ſometime in one place, ſometime in another, and lived of the almes that faithfull women miniſtred unto him, *Bellarm. cap.*45.

Anſw. All this we grant, that Chriſt had no poſſeſſions here in earth, becauſe he ſaith, his kingdome was not of this world; and that he refuſed not the miniſterie of the faithfull: yet this proveth not, that he begged, or lived of almes. Firſt, the women are ſaid to miniſter to him of their ſubſtance, Luk. 8.3. which word of miniſtration ſheweth, that they acknowledged a ſervice in their goods unto Luke 8.3. Chriſt, whereas he that giveth almes, hath a dominion in that he giveth, and is a Lord thereof, rather than a ſervant. Secondly, almes are given to him that needeth: but Chriſt needeth not, that was able of five loaves to feed five thouſand.

Secondly, he alleageth that ſaying, *Pſal.*40.17. Ego mendicus, But I am poore, and a begger: which Pſal.40.17. words are underſtood of Chriſt: As the Apoſtle applieth thoſe words, *verſ.*7. in the beginning of the booke it is written of me, &c. to our Saviour Chriſt, *Heb.*9.7. Bellarm. ibid. Heb.9.7.

Anſw. Firſt, though ſome part of this Pſalme bee prophetically applied to Chriſt, yet the whole Pſalme is not, as that *verſ.*12. My ſinnes are more than the haires of my head; let him ſhew, if he can, Pſal.44.12. how it may be pronounced of Chriſt. Secondly, David in ſaying, I am a begger, had ſpoken contrarie to himſelfe, *Pſal.*37.25. where he confeſſeth, that he never ſaw in all his time, the ſeed of the righ- Pſal.37.25. teous to begge their bread. Thirdly, the word here uſed ſignifieth not a begger, but one that is needie, and ſo your owne vulgar tranſlation for mendicus, begger, noteth in the margent, egenus, needie. Fourthly, David ſpeaketh not of any want of ſubſtance, but that he needed Gods helpe to deliver him from his enemies: as it followeth in the ſame verſe, thou art my helper and deliverer, &c. So is Bellarmine anſwered.

Contra. Now I will inſert the reaſons of their owne law, as they ſtand in the Extravagant of Iohn 22. againſt thoſe that affirmed Chriſt to be a begger, and that he had no propertie or dominion in any thing, but the ſimple uſe thereof.

Firſt, Quis ſimplicem uſuarium: Who can call him a ſimple uſer of a thing without any right or propertie, that hath power to give it, &c. But Chriſt gave almes to the poore; for one of them alwaies carried the bagge: Ergo, he had right and propertie.

Secondly, In rebus conſumptibilibus, &c. In things that conſume and waſte, as meat and drinke, there can be no uſe without propertie: for then there may be an uſe ſevered from propertie, when the ſubſtance reſerved, there ariſeth ſome profit to the uſer: but this cannot be in meat and drinke, which conſume in the uſing, *Extravag. Ioann. tit.*14.*c.*3.

Thirdly, every uſe without a right unto the thing uſed, is unjuſt: for that is unjuſt, where there is no right; and ſo conſequently if Chriſt had no right in the things he uſed, the uſing ſhould be unjuſt, which were blaſphemie to affirme.

Fourthly, the contrarie may be proved out of Scripture, that Chriſt had both the uſe and propertie of the things which he uſed: for one alwaies carried the ſatchell or bagge of proviſion for themſelves, and of almes for the poore, *tit.*14.*c.*5. So upon theſe and other reaſons he concludeth them to be heretickes, that affirme Chriſt and his Apoſtles to have beene without any right or propertie in any thing, and ſo conſequently beggers.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt we ſay, that no idle perſons ought to be maintained in a Chriſtian Common-wealth, but they that have not any other neceſſarie calling, being not lame, defective in their members, or otherwiſe impotent, ſhould labour with their hands, and therefore Monks that are fit for no other ſervice in the Church, ought to labour and worke.

2 Theſſ.3.10. *Argum.*1. Saint Paul giveth a generall rule: He that will not worke, let him not eat, 2 *Theſſal.*3. verſ. 10. ſpeaking of thoſe that have no neceſſarie calling in the Church: Ergo, Monks muſt worke, or elſe by S. Pauls rule, not eat. The Rhemiſts anſwer, that this is but a naturall admonition or counſell. Nay, it is a precept and commandement, that all in their ſeverall places and callings ſhould labour, none live idly: for S. Paul ſaith not, this I counſelled you, but this I warned you of, or denounced unto you, and he called thoſe that followed not this rule, inordinate walkers.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that S. Paul giveth this precept to labour unto the ſecular ſort only, not to Monks, which, ſaith he, in the opinion of our adverſaries, were not as yet in the Church, *Bellarm.cap.*42.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle writeth to the whole Church of the Theſſalonians, 2.*epiſt.chap.*1.*verſ.*1. wherefore this precept alſo bindeth Monks, unleſſe you will ſay they are no members of the Church, as indeed they are not of the true Church. Secondly, if you will grant, that there were no Monks in Saint Pauls time, that you may finde out a colourable anſwer, then have they not their foundation out of the Scripture, as you beare us in hand: yet S. Pauls rule ſhall ſtill binde all that belong to the Church.

Bellarmine againe anſwereth, that Saint Paul doth not abſolutely command to worke, but only to avoid offence, and idleneſſe: ſo that they are not bound corporally to labour, which can by other meanes, than labouring corporally, avoid theſe dangers. Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle doth give an abſolute charge to all to worke, ſetting himſelfe for an example, who could have kept himſelfe from idleneſſe otherwiſe than by working, yet he laboured, verſ. 7.8. Secondly, if he command to worke, only to avoid idleneſſe and offence, then is the commandement abſolute, becauſe theſe inconveniences muſt needs enſue upon not working: as the Apoſtle ſaith, *verſ.*11. We have heard of ſome that walke inordinatly, and worke not at all: where the reaſon is given of their inordinate walking, even their not working: ſo that they muſt needs walk inordinatly, that worke not. Thirdly, they which have a lawfull vocation, beſide bodily working, are not bound to corporall labour: but ſo have not your loytering lubberly Friers, that neither preach, nor worke: neither can they keepe themſelves from idlenes and offences, by any other meanes, than by working, which they doe not.

*Argum.*2. Neither is it to be permitted, that Friers ſhould get their living by begging: for what are they elſe but valiant beggers? Firſt, there ought to bee no beggers in the Common-wealth: as Deut.15.11. *Deuter.*15. Though the Lord ſay, that they ſhould never be without poore or beggers, which ſhould want their helpe, *verſ.*11. yet, *verſ.*5. this charge is given, that by them, that is, their default, there ſhould not be a begger in Iſrael: they ſhould ſo provide for the poore, that they need not goe a begging. There are alſo poſitive lawes, to reſtraine the number of beggers, and therefore there is no reaſon, that by a number of idle vagrant perſons, belly-god Friers, that begging order ſhould be enlarged.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that *Deut.*15.4. there is no prohibition of beggers: for our Saviour Chriſt in all the Goſpell findeth not fault with the beggers, that then abounded; but it is a promiſe onely that they ſhould have ſuch plentie, if they kept Gods commandements, that they ſhould have no beggers, *cap.*46.*reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt, to ſuffer beggers is a thing diſpleaſing unto God and forbidden: becauſe begging proceedeth either from the hardneſſe of mens harts, and therefore wee are commanded not to turne Iſai.58.7. away our eyes from our owne fleſh, that is, from our poore brethren, *Iſai.*58.7. or elſe from idleneſſe, 1 Theſſ.4.12. and therefore men are commanded to worke, that they be not in want, 1 *Theſſ.*4.12. and both theſe, as hardnes of heart, and idleneſſe, are diſpleaſing to God and forbidden. Secondly, it is untrue, that in the Goſpell the rich are not rebuked for ſuffering beggers; as may appeare in the parable of the rich man, Luke 16. who is puniſhed for ſuffering Lazarus to lie crying at his gates: and it is Iobs commendation, that he ſuffered not the eyes of the widow to faile, *Iob.*31.16. that is, ſuffered not the poore to wait for their almes, or lie begging at his gates; but he eftſoone admitted them unto his table, as it followeth *verſ.*17. Iob 31.16.

Argum. 3. Seeing it cannot be choſen, but there muſt needs be ſome beggers; they ought not to be young ſturdie lubbers, that are able to worke as moſt of the Friers were; but ſuch as are deſcribed, Luke 14.21. *Luk.*14.21. where the King ſaith to his ſervants, Goe out quickly, and bring hither the poore, the maimed, the halt, the blinde: Ergo, ſuch luſtie fellowes ought to live by the ſweat of their browes, not to eat up the bread of the poore.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that in this place alleaged, *Luke.*14.21. all the poore are not underſtood, to be blinde, lame, impotent, &c. but it muſt be read with a diſtinction, Bring in the poore, and the maimed: ſo the poore are called, whether they are maimed or not: and S. *Paul, Act.*24.17. brought almes to the poore at Jeruſalem, yet were they not all blinde and lame, &c.

Contra. Firſt, we ſay not that almes are not to be given to any poore, but ſuch as are impotent, but that no poore ought to be ſuffered to live by asking and begging, but ſuch as are impotent, and unfit to labour. Secondly, the example of S. Pauls bringing almes to Jeruſalem is impertinent, ſeeing the queſtion is of beggers, not of all poore, And beſide, wee ſpeake of a ſetled ſtate in the Commonwealth, not of the daies of perſecution, when the brethren of neceſſitie muſt be relieved. Thirdly, that in the parable, impotent poore onely are underſtood, it may be gathered by the place from whence they were called, namely from the ſtreetes, high wayes and hedges: wherein thoſe daies none were ſuffered to ſtand and begge, but onely the impotent, as blinde, lame, and ſuch like.

Laſtly, in the Sermons, Ad fratres in eremo, which are aſcribed to Auguſtine, thus we reade: Eia fratres mei, &c. ſemper boni aliquid facite; quem tædet orare, vel pſallere non deſiſtat; quem tædet orare, vel pſallere, manibus laborare non differat. My brethren, &c. alwaies be ye doing of ſome good; if you be wearie of praying, ſing; if of ſinging, then labour with your hands. And in the ſame place, olde men onely of 80. yeeres olde are exempted from worke. And in another place Auguſtine ſheweth, that the Monks in his time did ſo plie their worke, Uſque adeo, ut etiam naves oneratas in ea loca mittant, quæ inopes incolunt: That they ſent ſhips laden with neceſſaries, unto thoſe places where the poore inhabited, *de morib. eccleſ. cap.*31. Ergo, in Auguſtines time Monks lived not by begging, but with labour of their hands.

Serm.16.

This alſo is further proved by the generall conſent of antiquitie: that Monks ſhould not meddle with any part of the Miniſterie, and therefore had no right to their maintenance. *Chalſedon. Concil. can.*4. Ut nullus monachorum tentet civilia aut eccleſiaſtica negotia inquietare: That no Monk under paine of excommunication meddle with civill or eccleſiaſticall buſineſſe. Leo epiſtol. 60. Nullus præter eos, qui ſunt domini ſacerdotes jus docendi & prædicandi audeat vendicare, ſive ſit monachus, ſive laicus, &c. Let no man, beſide the Miniſters of God, take upon them to teach, or preach, whether hee be a Monk, or a lay man, *Tarraconenſ. can.*11. Ut nullus monachorum miniſterium Eccleſiaſticum præſumat agere: That no Monk preſume to execute the Eccleſiaſticall Miniſterie.

Hereunto agree their owne Canons: Cauſ. 2. qu. 7. *c.*54. Pelag. Nec ſecularia, nec eccleſiaſtica negotia monachus, &c. That a Monk ſhould not entermeddle either with matters ſecular, or eccleſiaſticall. Cauſ. 7. qu. 1. *c.*45. Monachorum vita, &c. A Monks profeſſion is to be ſubject, not to teach, or beare rule. Likewiſe, Sext. decretal. lib. 5. tit. 2. c. 11. Clemens 4. Prædicatores quæſturios à prædicationis officio, &c. Begging Preaches muſt bee inhibited to preach, for it appertaineth onely to them to aske charitable reliefe, &c. Thus Monks in times paſt, were excluded from the office of the Clergie.

And as Monks could not become Clerks, ſo neither was it lawfull for Clerks to enter into Monkerie. *Concil. Cæſar auguſt. can.*6. Clericus, qui propter luxum, &c. ab officio ſuo ſponte diſceſſerit, ac velut obſervatorem legis ſe monachum videri maluerit, de eccleſia repellendus: A Clergie man, which of wantonneſſe doth leave his office, and chuſeth rather to be a Monk, that he may ſeeme an obſerver of the law, let him be expelled from the Church.

Secondly, as there is no affinitie betweene Monks and Clerks, for their office, ſo have they nothing to doe with Clerks maintenance. Monks ought to take no tithes, Lateranenſ. ſub Innocent. 3. cap. 16. Ne religioſi ſuſcipiant decimas de manu laicali: Religious men (meaning Monks) ought to receive no tithes of the lay ſort. Yet Monks are commanded to pay tithes: Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 13 *cap.*6 ſub Alexandro 3. Ex prædiis ruſticis traditis monachi decimas ſolvant: Monks muſt pay their tithes out of their farmes let out to husbandmen. And as for other maintenance by land, it is likewiſe forbidden, Lateranenſ. part. 27. cap. 1. Alexander 3. Monachi non debent villas aut eccleſias ad firmam tenere: Monks muſt not take villages or Churches to farme.

3 Monkiſh idle life is condemned, *Concil. Toletan.*7. can. 5. Illos quos in tali propoſito ignavia impulit, quoſque nulla vitæ dignitas ornat, ſed ignorantia fœdat, decernimus à cellulis ejici, &c. They which entred into this profeſſion for idleneſſe ſake, who are of no commendable life, but foulely ignorant, we would have them caſt out of their Cels.

4 Monks alſo and Friers are forbidden by the ancient Canons to live by begging, *Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. cap.*107. Ipſi pauperes, ſi ſe poſſunt ſuis artificiis & laboribus expedire, non præſumant, quod debet infirmus, & debilis accipere: The poore, that are able to helpe themſelves by their labour, muſt not take that, which is allotted for the weak and impotent. *Colonienſ. part.*11 cap. 3. In hoſpitalia, nullæ aliæ quàm miſerabiles perſonæ, quæ aut morbo debilitatæ, aut ætate impeditæ ſunt manibus laborare: Let none but miſerable poore perſons be received into hoſpitals, which are hindred by their ſickneſſe, impotencie, or age, from working with their hands. *Cap.*5. Sint mendicantibus validis non ſolum hoſpitalia clauſa, ſed & publice & oſtiatim mendicare interdictum ſit: * Not onely hoſpitals are to be ſhut up againſt valiant beggers, but we forbid ſuch to begge from houſe to houſe, &c. Therefore luſtie, ſturdie, lubberly Friers ought not to goe a begging, but to get their living with labour.

* That this is not meant only of common beggers, but of idle lubberly Friers: ſee Retect pa. 10. and the exception taken hereunto anſwered.

See alſo to this purpoſe their owne Canons: Cauſ. 16. *qu.*1. *c.*18. Pſendomonachi, &c. Monks that wander too and fro, are called falſe Monks, *Cauſ.*18. *qu.*2. *c.*10. Monachi in civitate vagantes, &c.

Monks wandring up and downe in Cities, doe but make a ſhew onely, they are not true Monks. Extravag. commun. lib. 3. tit. 8. c. 2. Ioann. 22. Monachi ad tranſmarina, &c. Monks going beyond the ſea, muſt be taken for Apoſtates, &c. Theſe Canons forbid the wandring and runnagate life of Monks.

5 Laſtly then, that there is no meanes left to Monks for their maintenance, but the labour of their hands, it is thus further ſhewed, Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. cap. 96. ex Hieronym. Facito aliquid operis, ut ſemper inveniat te diabolus occupatum : Be doing of ſome worke, that the devill may alwaies finde you occupied.

Concil. Carthag. 4. can. 51. Clericus quantum libet verbo Dei eruditus, artificio victum quarat : A Clergie man, though very well inſtructed in the word of God, may get his living by ſome artificiall worke, Can. 53. Omnes Clerici, qui ad operandum validi ſunt, artificiola & literas diſcant : All Clergie men, that are ſtrong to labour, let them together with letters learne ſome handicraft, &c. If Clerks in thoſe daies were inured to hand-labour, whoſe office was to teach ; how much more did it become the Monks, who had nothing to doe with Eccleſiaſticall functions?

Laſtly, Iohn Wickliffe condemned for this article with others, for ſaying, that Friers are bound to get their living by labour of their hands, and not by begging : and that whoſoever gave any almes to begging Friers, is accurſed, Fox pag. 435. articl. 22, 23.

Harm.69.in 21. c.Matth.

Now for further evidence. 1. In the Greeke Church the Monks of ancient time laboured with their hands, as Chryſoſtome witneſſeth, that the Monks having finiſhed their prayers, Exorto jam ſole ad opus ſe vertere, The Sonne being riſen doe goe to their worke : and the ſame is the uſe of the Greeke Monks to this day, as Ieremie their Patriarke exhorteth Monks to continue in watching and prayer, &c. in opere ipſo, and in their worke.

Cenſur.Orient.c.21.

Exhortat.ad Monach.

2 So Athanaſius preſcribeth to the Egiptian Monks : that they ſhould not goe forth of their houſe, but when, either Ratio religionis exegerit, aut operis exercendi cauſa, &c. Either ſome religious buſineſſe required, or to follow their worke for their living. And at this day, it is not lawfull for the Monks of Æthiopia, vicatim mendicare, to begge abroad in the Countrey, but they get their living with their hands : as Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Biſhop confeſſeth.

Damianus a Goes de morib.Æthiop. Harm.ſect.18. pag.574.

3 Wittemberg. confeſſ. c. 26. This vow (to get thy living by begging) is repugnant to the love of thy neighbour, which requireth, that by begging thou be not further troubleſome to any, than neceſſitie requireth.

Holydor lib. 7. de invention. c.3.

4 Polydor Virgil ſaith, I ſee no reaſon, why Monks Debeant ſemper in mendicando barere, &c. ſhould hang upon begging, when it is evident Chriſtum non mendicaſſe, that Chriſt begging not, neither did the Apoſtles, otioſos expectare, expect their maintenance from others being idle, &c. yea he ſheweth that Francis in his teſtament tooke this order, that his Monks ſhould get their living by the labour of their hands, Nec prius ad mendicandum aggredi, quam laboris pretium eſſet negatum, And not to betake themſelves to begging, untill they ſhould be denied the price for their worke.

Thus by Gods goodneſſe we have finiſhed this queſtion, and this whole controverſie : one other queſtion remaineth, whether the monaſticall life be meritorious or not, which wee have reſerved to another place, when wee ſhall come to the queſtion of virginitie in generall, and the privileges thereof.

THE SEVENTH GENERAL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE CIVILL MAGISTRATE.

MAny things, which Bellarmine in this Controverſie laboureth to prove, are agreed upon betweene us and our adverſaries, and therefore wee will ſpend no time in them.

1 We teach, as well as they, that there ought to be Magiſtrates, Princes and Governours amongſt Chriſtians, contrarie to that which the Anabaptiſts hold, that there ought to bee equalitie among Chriſtians. The holy Ghoſt, Iudge 17.6. and 19.1. maketh this the cauſe of all diſorder: At that time in Iſrael there was no King amongſt them, but every man did that which ſeemed good in his owne eyes. Judg.17.6.19.1

2 We doe hold, that even wicked Kings and Tyrants have power over the goods and lives of men, neither that it is lawfull to diſobey them, but in matters onely belonging to our conſcience, where it is better to obey God than men: Ierem. 27. 6. I have given, ſaith the Lord, all theſe lands to Nabuchadnezzar. Jerem.27.6.

3 Concerning the power of Princes, we grant, that they may make lawes and ordinances to governe the people by, *Pro.*8.15. that they may puniſh the offenders of their lawes, Rom. 13. They doe not beare the ſword for nought: That it is lawfull for Chriſtian Princes upon juſt occaſion, to wage battell, Luk. 3. 14. Iohn Baptiſt doth not condemne the calling of ſouldiers, but teacheth them to uſe it aright. Prov.8.15. Rom.13.4. Luk.3.14.

But here by the way we muſt a little ſalute the Jeſuite, who findeth great fault with Luther, for ſaying, That to fight againſt the Turks, is to repugne againſt God, viſiting our iniquities by them, Articul. 34. condem. in bulla Leonis. As though Luther ſhould thinke it unlawfull to wage battell with the Turke. Firſt, I will briefly declare, that Luther had no ſuch meaning; and then it ſhall appeare by whom the Turkiſh warres have beene moſt hindered.

As concerning the firſt, Luther doth not ſimply ſpeake againſt ſuch warres, but onely the abuſes among Chriſtians, in ſuch warlike enterpriſes: the firſt is, their malice and hatred againſt the Infidels, whom they ſeeke by no meanes to convert or winne unto the faith, but uſe altogether violent and bloodie meanes, whereas the other way ought firſt to be attempted, as M. Tindall ſaith; I am bound to love the Turke with all my might, &c. after the example that Chriſt loved mee, neither to ſpare goods, body or life to winne him to Chriſt, Fox pag. 1248.

The ſecond abuſe is their ſuperſtition towards the land of Judea, which they call the holy land, for the recovering whereof principally all thoſe great warres were taken in hand: whereas there are greater motives, as the propagation of the Goſpell, the redeeming of the libertie of Chriſtians: And therefore it is to be thought, that God in his great wiſedome hath given over thoſe places to the poſſeſſion of the Heathen, to let us know, that before God one place is not more holy than another.

A third fault is, for that Chriſtians ſeeing the mightie increaſe of the Turkiſh tyrannie, doe not enter into conſideration of themſelves, and repent them of their ſinnes, which are the cauſe why Chriſtians are ſcourged with the Turkiſh iron rods. The ſinnes of Chriſtians (ſo called) are very great, and doe farre exceed the manners of the Eaſt: As one thus writeth, Latini licet ad ea, quæ ſunt fidei, verius adhæreant Deo quàm Græci, tamen quoad mores multo pluribus fœditatibus & ſceleribus implicati ſunt: Though the Latines in things concerning faith doe more neerely cleave to God, than the Grecians, yet are they more polluted in their manners, Oper. tripartit. lib. 1. cap. 2. tom. 2. Concil. But as the truth is, the Latines are more corrupt both in life and manners: this is that therefore that Luther miſliketh in theſe warres, that men will not conſider, that they are chaſtiſed for their ſinnes, and ſo learne to amend their lives: and otherwiſe he thinketh not. Yea Bellarmine himſelfe alleageth Luthers owne words, whereby he ſheweth his great miſlike of thoſe Preachers, that crie out the Turke ought not to be reſiſted: Hic ſermo ſeditioſus eſt, &c. This ſaying is ſeditious and not to be ſuffered. Theſe are Luthers owne words in his booke, De Viſitation. Saxonica: howſoever the Jeſuite in other places wreſteth his meaning.

Now in the next place I will ſhew, how that not Luther, or any of his part, but the Pope and Popelings have beene the onely hinderers of the Chriſtians couragious enterpriſes againſt the Turke, and the greateſt cauſe of his riſing.

1 The firſt advantage which the Infidels had, was by the diviſion of the Chriſtian Empire, when as firſt Gregorie the 3. anno 742. began, and Leo the 3. finiſhed his device, in erecting a new Emperour in the Weſt about anno 800. and ſo weakned the power of the Emperour of Conſtantinople. And afterward they tooke upon them to excommunicate the Greeke Emperour at their pleaſure: as Clemens 5. dealt with Andronicus Paleologus, excommunicating him, and all the Greeke Church beſide, charging all Princes, Earles, Barons, &c. under paine of excommunication, to have no ſocietie or confederacie with him, Extrav. commun. lib. 5. tit. 10. c. 3. And by this meanes the Greeke Emperour being forſaken of all helpe, was unable to reſiſt the cruell Turke.

2 After that the Empire of the Eaſt was thus weakned, by little and little the Weſt Empire began to decay: for the Popes uſurped upon the Emperours, tooke upon them to depoſe them, to make them their vaſſals, to hold their ſtirrup, to kiſſe their feet, to receive their Crowne and dignitie at the Popes hands: And at the length Gregorie the 5. anno 1000. or thereabout, made a decree, that the Emperour ſhould be choſen from thenceforth by ſeven Prince Electors of Germanie: ſo the majeſtie of the Empire, which before deſcended by certaine inheritance, now began to depend upon uncertaine and corrupt election. And hereof it came to paſſe, that anno 1350. Carolus 4. that his ſonne might ſucceed him in the Empire, did lay to pledge unto the Prince-Electors the free Cities belonging to the Empire, which to this day were never redeemed: and thus alſo was the Weſt Empire weakened, and a way made for the Turke to invade Chriſtendome.

3 A third practice of the Pope in weakening the ſtate of Chriſtendome was, by his cruell taxes and impoſitions upon the Clergie and others, in levying ſometime the tenths, ſometime the firſt fruits, ſometime halfe the fruits of all Eccleſiaſticall promotions, as Innocentius the ſeventh did: And under the pretence and colour of the holy warres, gathering great ſummes of money, as in the Laterane Councell ſub Innocent. 3. in fine: the twentieth part of every ſpirituall living for the ſpace of three yeeres was allotted towards the expedition intended againſt the Infidels: and at divers other times the like exactions were required. And thus by the Popes Annates, Buls, Indulgences, yeeres of Jubile, firſt fruits, pall money, diſpenſations, Peter pence, and ſuch other devices, all Chriſtendome was robbed and ſpoiled, and left naked to the Turke.

4 Beſide theſe former practices, the Popes have dealt unfaithfully, and entred themſelves into league with the Infidels: Alexander the third anno 1160. perſwaded the Emperour Fredericke to goe in battell in his owne perſon againſt the Souldane, and ſo betrayed him into his enemies hand, ſending unto the Souldane the Emperours counterfeit taken by a skilfull Painter: Alexander the ſixth, tooke 200000. crownes of Bajazetes the great Turke to poyſon his brother Gemes, that was fled to him for ſuccour, and ſo he did: Eugenius the fourth, anno 1430. perſwaded Vladiſlaus King of Hungarie to breake the truce, and violate his faith given unto Amurathes the great Turke; whereupon the Turke in great Indignation joyned battell with him, wherein the King himſelfe and the moſt of his Armie were ſlaine: And by this occaſion the Turke entred into Chriſtendome, and to this day never could be driven out.

5 Laſtly, if the Pope were an enemie indeed to the Turke, and would have battell waged with him, he ſhould doe as his predeceſſor Innocentius the third did, Concil. Lateranenſ. who proclaiming warre againſt the Turke, Imperavit, pacem Chriſtianis ad quadriennium ſub pœna excommunicationis: Injoyned peace & truce to all Chriſtians for foure yeere under paine of excommunication. So ſhould the Pope cauſe the King of Spaine to leave off moleſting and troubling his neighbours: but now he is ſo farre from this, that the Pope is rather become the chiefe author of diſſention and ſtrife, and ſower of diſcord among Chriſtian Princes, exciting and ſtirring them up to warre one againſt another. Did not Marcellus the ſecond ſay, not long ſince, Expeditionem magis fieri debere in Lutheranos, quàm Turcas? That warre ſhould be made upon the Lutherans, rather than againſt the Turkes? But as the ſaying is, it is well that a curſt Cow hath ſhort hornes, for this Marcellus was but a Pope of 23. dayes. Alexander Farneſius Cardinall and chiefe Captaine under Paulus the third, againſt the Lutherans, ſaid, he would ſhed ſo much Lutheran bloud, as that his horſe might ſwim therein: ex actis Paul. 3.

Judge now (Chriſtian Reader) whether by this meanes the Pope hath not greatly decayed the ſtrength of Chriſtendome, in nouriſhing of domeſticall warres: and ſo comparing this with the other practices, you ſhall finde, not Luther nor Lutherans, as they are ſlandered; but the Pope and his Popelings, to have beene the chiefe hinderers of the Chriſtians warlike enterpriſes againſt the Turke: let us now goe forward.

The ſeverall queſtions, wherein we differ from our adverſaries, and they from the truth, concerning the office of the civill Magiſtrate, are theſe.

1 Concerning the authoritie of the Prince in Eccleſiaſticall matters, three parts of the queſtion. Firſt, whether he have power over perſons Eccleſiaſticall. Secondly, whether over their goods. Thirdly, whether in Eccleſiaſticall cauſes.

2 Whether the civill Magiſtrate may proſecute heretikes to death: and whether hee ought to be the judge of heretikes, with other like queſtions.

3 Whether the poſitive and civill lawes of Princes, doe binde their ſubjects, and obſige them ſimply in conſcience. This matter we have diſcuſſed before, Controverſie 4. queſt. 7. part. 1.

4 Whether the Pope ought or may excommunicate the Prince, or Emperour, or otherwiſe hath any temporall juriſdiction above him: this queſtion alſo is handled before, Controverſie 4. queſt. 8. part. 1.

The Firſt Queſtion, concerning the authoritie of the Prince in Eccleſiaſticall matters.

THis queſtion hath three parts. Firſt, whether hee have power over the perſons Eccleſiaſticall. Secondly, whether over their goods. Thirdly, whether the Prince bee chiefe in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall.

The Firſt part, concerning the authoritie of the civill Magiſtrate over Eccleſiaſticall perſons.

The Papiſts.

THe Clergie is not bound to keepe and obſerve the civill and poſitive lawes of Princes, if they be contrarie to the Canons of the Church: neither ought they for any cauſe to be cited before the civill Magiſtrate, or to be judged by him, Bellarm. de Clericis, cap. 28.

106. Error.

It is abſurd (ſaith the Jeſuite) that the ſheepe ſhould judge the ſhepheard, Bellarm. And the Apoſtle willeth all men to obey their Biſhops and overſeers, Heb. 13. 17. and to ſubmit themſelves unto them, from which rule neither Kings nor Emperours are exempted: Prelates muſt bee obeyed: Ergo, not obey, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Heb. 13. 17.

Anſw. Firſt, the obedience here required we acknowledge, that it ought to be yeelded by Kings and Emperours to thoſe that have the overſight of their ſoules: for the Prince is bound to receive and beleeve all true doctrine which is taught by the Paſtors and Biſhops of the Church, agreeable to the word of God, under paine of damnation: and the Paſtors are bound under the like paine to obey the Princes lawes, made according to the word of God. Secondly, the ſpirituall obedience of the civill Magiſtrate to the word of God, taught by the Paſtors of the Church, is no exemption of them from their civill obedience: for every ſoule is ſubject to the higher powers, Rom. 13. 1.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine in this place much urgeth the conſtitutions of certaine Councels, for the privilege of the Clergie: as Chalced. can. 9. Agathenſ. can. 32. concil. Carthag. 3. can. 9. Toletan. 3. can. 13.

Anſw. Theſe Canons doe not ſimply forbid Magiſtrates to have the cognizance of Clergie mens cauſes, or to convent them before them: but onely, that Clergie men upon every occaſion, ſhould not draw one another before the civill Magiſtrate, but be contented rather to be ordered by their B. as the words of the Canon of the Chalcedon are theſe, Si Clericus adverſus Clericum, &c. If a Clergie man have a matter againſt a Clergie man, he ſhould referre it to the B. &c. The Agathenſian ſaith, a Clergie man, without the licence of his Biſhop, ſhould not preſume to ſue to a ſecular Judge: ſo the Toletane, Ut Clerici Clericos, &c. that Clergie men ſhould not draw Clergie men before the ſecular Judge contemning the Biſhop, &c. Who ſeeth not, that here is no limitation of the civill authoritie, but a monition onely, that Clergie men in ſuch matters, as belonged to the cognizance of the Biſhop, ſhould be ordered by him rather with quietneſſe, than to run to forraine judgement upon every occaſion. And this we denie not, but it is practiſed in our Church, which notwithſtanding attributeth to the Prince the chiefe Soveraigntie over Eccleſiaſticall perſons.

The Proteſtants.

THat Eccleſiaſticall perſons are ſubject to temporall governours, and are to bee judged by their lawes, the Scriptures ſpeake plainly.

Argum. 1. Rom. 13. 1. Let every ſoule be ſubject to the higher powers: Ergo, Biſhops, yea the Pope himſelfe, if he have a ſoule. The like ſaith S. Peter. 1. 2. 13. Submite your ſelves to all manner of ordinance. Salomon removed Abiathar from the Prieſthood, and put in Sadock. Paul appealed, & ſubmitted himſelfe to Cæſar. Againe, if Prieſts offend and commit any grievous ſinne, as of murther, theft, who ſhall puniſh them? The civill Magiſtrate onely beareth the ſword. They muſt either grant, that Prieſts are no evill doers, which were too too groſſe, or if they be, that they are under the civill Magiſtrates power: for he is the Miniſter of God to take vengeance upon evill doers, Rom. 13. 4.

1 Pet. 2. 13.

Our doway men to the inſtance given of Salomon, make this anſwer: That Salomon by ſpeciall inſtinct diſplaced Abiathar, being not onely a King but a Prophet: and againe, ſay they, ſome ſecular Princes doe nominate ſpirituall ſuperiours, and inſtall them in their ſeats, yet their juriſdiction is not depending on the Prince, but the Prince to be directed by them, Numb. 27, 21. And further, they tell us in another place, that whereas it is ſaid, Judg. 4. 4. that Deborah judged Iſrael: being a Propheteſſe ſhe reſolved hard & obſcure things, but exerciſed no juriſdiction in any cauſes, for that belonged to the councell of Prieſts and of ſeventie ancients, where the high Prieſt was the chiefe Judge, Numb. 11. Deuter. 17.

Rom. 13. 4.
Marginall annotations upon the 2. of the third of the Kings.
Numb. 27. 21.
Marginall note upon the 4. of Judg. verſ. 4.

Contrà.1. True it is, that Salomon was both a Prophet and a King ; but the depoſing of Abiathar was an act of his kingly office, the writing of canonicall bookes of Scripture was an act of his Propheticall gift : if as a Prophet he depoſed him, and not as King, then as a Prophet alſo he might have put him to death, for he ſaid unto him, Thou art worthie to die, 1 King.2.26. for his conſpiracie with Adoniah: and if it had beene a Prophets part to doe it, why was not the matter referred to Nathan a profeſſed and knowne Prophet? Salomon then by his Kingly power depoſed Abiathar for conſpiracie. 2. Neither needed he any ſpeciall inſtinct thereunto, but Princely diſcretion in diſcerning of his offence: that as he cauſed Adoniah to die for his ambitious attempt, ſo Abiathar was by the ſame power diſplaced from the Prieſthood for his ſedition. 3. It is confeſſed, that Princes may nominate Princes, and inſtall them: and why not as well deveſt them as inveſt them, & foreſtall as well as inſtall them? their ſpirituall juriſdiction we confeſſe hath no dependance of the King, nor yet any other eſſentiall parts of their ſpirituall function: yet are they under the temporal obedience of the King. 4. Deborah alſo is ſaid to have judged Iſrael, as other of the Judges did: ſo Iair is ſaid to have judged Iſrael, chap.10.3. and Ibzatn, chap.12.8. and Elon. chap.12.11. by judging then is underſtood, governing, and deciding of controverſies ; as it is ſaid, All Iſrael came unto her for judgement. And this may appeare further, for that ſhe giveth direction for warre unto Barak, and was the chiefe that managed that buſineſſe : this was more than to reſolve obſcure doubts. There was an high Prieſt, and ſeventie ancients: but it ſeemeth they were careleſſe and negligent in their office, and therefore God raiſed up extraordinarie Judges. 5. And in that place objected, Numb. 27.21. Eleazars office was to aske counſell of God : ſo that direction was from the Prieſt, but the execution belonged to Ioſhua : and who denieth but that it belongeth to ſpirituall Paſtors, to inſtruct the Civill power by the word of God: yet their Civill authoritie is not thereby impaired.

In Auguſtines time, the controverſies betweene the Catholike and Donatiſt Biſhops, were committed to the judgement of the Emperour : Epiſtol.162. Ait quidam, ſaith he, non debuit Epiſcopus proconſulari judicio purgari : Quaſi verò ipſe ſibi hoc comparaverit, ac non Imperator ita quæri juſſerat, ad cujus curam, de qua rationem Deo redditurus eſt res illa maximè pertinebat : But, ſaith one, a Biſhop ought not to have beene purged before the Proconſull, or civill Magiſtrate : As though (ſaith Auguſtine) the Proconſull did of himſelfe intermeddle in this matter, and was not commanded rather of the Emperour ſo to doe : unto whoſe charge that matter principally appertained, and whereof he ſhall make account unto God. Ergo, by his ſentence, the cauſe of the Biſhop principally was to bee judged by the Emperour.

Agatho Biſhop of Rome writing to Conſtantinus the Emperour, calleth himſelfe, Imperii famulum; a ſervant or ſubject of his Empire: and againe, Pro obedientia, quam debuimus : he confeſſeth, he oweth obedience to him.

Pope Leo ſubmitted himſelfe to Lodovicus the Emperour, 2. queſt. 7. as it appeareth under theſe words : If wee have done any thing incompetently, or have not obſerved the path of equitie among ſubjects, we will amend the ſame, either by your owne judgment, or elſe by the advice and judgement of thoſe whom you ſhall appoint, &c. If the Popes therefore themſelves are not exempted from the ſecular power, I thinke inferiour Clerks are not.

Epiſtol. Leodienſ. cont. Paſchal.2. Omnis anima poteſtatibus ſublimioribus ſubditor : qui hoc omni animæ præcipit, quem à ſubjectione terrenæ poteſtatis excepit? Let every ſoule (ſaith S. Paul) be ſubject to the higher powers : he that enjoyneth this to every ſoule, whom hath he exempted from the ſubjection of the earthly power?

M. Bradford collecteth out of this place, that all men ought to be ſubject to the temporall power, Poteſtati, quæ gladium geſtat : to that power which beareth the ſword, which is the temporall power, Pag.1460.2.26. Fox pag. 1608.col.1.

B. Cranmer, holy Martyr : By the Scripture the King is chiefe, and no forraine perſon in his owne Pag.1701.2,10. realme above him : there is no ſubject, but to a King, I owe my fidelitie to the Crowne, &c. Fox 1874. col.2.

Now whereas Bellarmine maketh ſhew both of Imperiall and Pontificiall conſtitutions, as though he could out of them warrant his aſſertion ; I will briefly declare, what plentifull teſtimonies we have out of both.

Firſt, for the Civill law, whereas Bellarmine affirmeth, that the Magiſtrate can neither puniſh Clergie men, nor convent them before them : I will prove the contrarie, concerning both theſe points. Firſt, that the Civill power hath authoritie to cenſure and puniſh the Clergie offending, it is evident, Cod.lib.1.tit.4.leg.3. Martian. Si Clericus erit, &c. If a Clergie man ſhall ſeeme to diſpute or doubt of the faith, he ſhall be deprived. Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.14. Arcadius, a Biſhop offending againſt the Common-wealth, ſhall be exiled.

For the conventing of Clerkes, the law is as cleare, Cod.lib. 1.tit. 6.leg.24. Martian. Cum Clericis, &c. The Clergie men of Conſtnatinople may be convented before the Patriarke or Preſident of the Citie, Leg.31. Anthemius, Clerici extranei : Forraine Clerks, and not of the Citie of Conſtantinople, muſt be convented only before the Preſident of the Citie. Ibid. authentic. In civili crimine civilis præſit Iudex, &c. In civill offences the Civill Judge muſt beare ſway : And there criminall offences are interpreted to be murther, adultery, perjurie, &c. Likewiſe Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.34. Anthemius, Præſidali juriſdictioni, &c. To the Preſidents juriſdiction all of what degree ſoever are ſubject, Biſhops, Clerks, Monks, &c.

Now let us take a view of their owne law: Cauſ.11.qu.1.c.20.Gregorius; Paulinum Aquileienſ.&c. I pray, ſend under ſafe cuſtodie unto the Emperour, Paulinus Biſhop Aquileienſ. and the Biſhop of Millaine, &c. This Canon attributeth this power to the Imperiall crowne, to puniſh eccleſiaſticall perſons. Alſo cap.45. Si quis cum Clerico, &c. If a man have a ſuit with a Clerke concerning a money matter, if the Biſhop refuſe to heare, Tunc ad civilem judicem: Then it may bee lawfull to bring the matter before a civill Judge: Decret.Greg.lib.5.tit.39.c.23.Clemens 3. Clericus à Comite juſſus fuſtigari,&c. A certaine Clerke for making ſedition was commanded by an Earle to be beaten with a club, and thereof died, &c. The Pope himſelfe determineth this to be lawfully done. Thus wee ſee, how that in former time, Clerkes were ſubject, both by the law of God and man, to the civill juriſdiction.

Now then, as by the preaching of the Goſpell, Princes are reſtored to their Imperiall dignitie, and made Lords of all their ſubjects both ſpirituall and temporall, whereas they are but halfe rulers before: ſo Princes likewiſe have provided great immunities and privileges for the Preachers of the Goſpell, by whom their princely authoritie is revived: as Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.1. Conſtantinus made a law, that Clergie men, their miniſters and ſervants ſhould be free from all new exactions and impoſitions. Likewiſe Conſtantinus ibid.leg.2. exempteth Clergie men, their wives, children, ſervants, goods, from all militarie ſervices, from carriage, poſt-ſervice, and ſuch like. And Fredericke made an excellent conſtitution in the behalfe of the Clergie, and eſpecially ſuch as were Profeſſores ſacrarum legum,&c. Profeſſors of Scriptures, Ne à viliſſimis hominibus &c. That every vile perſon ſhould not be readie to offer or doe them wrong, or convent them at their pleaſures before every Judge, but only ſuch as are there named: and the reaſon of this conſtitution is rendred, Quia illorum ſcientia, &c. Becauſe the whole world is lightned with their knowledge: Et ad obediendum Deo & nobis,&c. And the ſubjects are taught by them to obey God, and us his Miniſters. Then it followeth, Dignum exiſtimavimus, ut quadam ſpeciali dilectione eos ab omni injuria defendamus: Wee have therefore thought it good, by our eſpeciall favour to defend them from all injurie: Conſtit. Frederici.Cod.lib.4. tit.13.leg.5. A worthie conſideration, that the Miniſters and preachers of the Goſpell, which teach the people obedience, and would have none exempted from their regall authoritie, ſhould themſelves be chiefly defended and protected by it. Agreeable to this Conſtitution, are the Imperiall lawes of this nation yet in force, which forbid that any hay, corne, beaſts, cattell, or any goods of Clergie men, ſhould be taken from them, by any colour of commiſſion, without their conſent: For we doe take (as the words of the law are) the ſaid Clergie men with their poſſeſſions, goods and chattels, into our eſpeciall protection and defence: Anno 14.Edward.3.cap.1.& anno 1. Richard.2.c.3. Thus Chriſtian Princes in token of thankfulneſſe to the Goſpell and the Miniſters thereof, have endued them with excellent privileges, if through the envie, and pragmaticall attempts of inferiour miniſters and officers they might be ſuffered to enjoy the ſame: But it is now farre otherwiſe, that the Goſpell with the Miniſters thereof are growne into ſuch contempt, that every vile perſon is readie to offer them wrong, and to moleſt them with injurious ſuits, and that with many they finde ſmall favour, neither are reſpected according to their calling; a ſmall reward for their labours in the Goſpell. And thus wee are made a ſcorne to our adverſaries, who laugh in their ſleeves, to ſee the Miniſters of the Goſpell, that have by their preaching enlarged the Civill authoritie, to receive no more favour from it, and in enlarging other mens libertie, to abridge their owne: which I ſpeake not, as complaining of the ſoveraigne and ſacred Princely Majeſtie, or the honourable Miniſters thereof; under whoſe comfortable ſhadow we live, and have libertie of conſcience; but of ſome inferiour officers, that have not that regard to the excellent calling and miniſterie of the Goſpell, which is fit of all Chriſtians to be acknowledged. But leaving this complaint I will proceed.

Juſt complaint againſt the injurious vexation of Miniſters and Preachers of the Goſpell.

This right and power over Eccleſiaſticall perſons, firſt, the Emperours of Conſtantinople did exerciſe over their Patriarkes: as Nazianzene could not leave his place there without licence of the Emperour: he went to Theodoſius to his Court, and craved remiſſionem laborum, to be eaſed of his labours, and with much adooe the Emperour gave him licence to depart. Conſtantinus the 6. depoſed Michael Patriarke of Conſtantinople.

2 The ſame was practiſed in the South Church: Athanaſius Patriarke of Alexandria thus writeth to Conſtantius the Emperour: entreating, ut cum epiſtolis tuis patriam ingreſſus, ita acceptis mandatis tuis diſcederem: That as I came into my countrey at your ſending, ſo I may depart by your commandement, &c. At this day the Æthiopian Emperour hath ſoveraigne command over the Patriarke, not ſuffering him to meddle in the temporall adminiſtration of the kingdome: and when the Patriarke dieth, what goods ſoever he hath, ad imperatorem devolvitur, it is devolved to the Emperour.

4 Their Biſhop Eſpencaus, doth acknowledge, that the Greeke Doctors, Chryſoſtome, Theophylact, Theodoret, and in the Latine Church, Gregorie the 11. Bernard, doe inſerre out of theſe words of S.Paul, Rom.13.1. Let every ſoule be ſubject to the higher power : that it is granted to the Emperour, non ſolum militibus, ſed ſacerdotibus dominari; not onely to have dominion over Souldiers, but Prieſts alſo. The ſecond part, whether the Prince have power over Eccleſiaſticall goods.

The Papiſts.

107.Error. THe goods of the Clergie both ſecular and Eccleſiaſticall, are and ought to bee exempted from paying tribute to Princes: yet they have not this libertie, ſay they, by the law of God, but by the grant of Princes themſelves: *Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.*13.ſect.5.Bellarmine de Clericis,cap.28.

Geneſ.47.22. Argum.1. Geneſ. 47.22. and 27. The lands of the Prieſts were exempted from paying tribute: Ergo,it ſeemeth that this cuſtome is grounded upon the law of nature,Bellarm.The ſame preſident is urged by the Doway tranſlators, who give this marginall note upon that place : The immunitie and care of Prieſts in the law of nature, yea among infidels.

Anſw. Firſt, the Hebrew word ſignifieth rather Preſidents, ſuch as were the Kings officers, not Prieſts, as Tremellius ſheweth : who were maintained by the Kings proviſion, being officers of his houſhold : for Geneſ.41.45. Ioſeph is ſaid to marrie the daughter of Potyphar Prince, not prieſt of On. The ſame word Cohen is there uſed : for it is not like that Ioſeph would match himſelfe with an idolatrous prieſts daughter. Secondly, be it granted, this was but a politike conſtitution for that countrie: other Princes are not bound to Pharao his law. Thirdly, they gaine nothing by this, but that it is an humane conſtitution.

Matth.17.25. Argum.2. Some of them doe thus reaſon out of our Saviour Chriſts words, Matth.17. when he ſaid thus to Peter,What thinkeſt thou Simon? of whom doe the Kings of the Nations receive tribute, of their owne, or of ſtrangers? Simon anſwered, of ſtrangers: the Lord ſaid, then are their children free. But Clergie men are the children of the kingdome : Ergo, they ought to be free : thus reaſoneth Marſilius de Padua, and the Rhemiſts Matth.17.ſect.8.

Anſ. To this argument Bellarmine anſwereth : firſt, by this reaſon all Chriſtians, as well as Clerks ſhould be exempted from tribute, becauſe they are all the ſonnes of God, being borne anew in Baptiſme. Secondly, Chriſt ſpeaketh only of himſelfe: that as Kings children are freed from tribute, ſo much more he, being the Sonne and Heire apparant of the King of kings, ſhould be exempted from all temporall tribute: thus one of them anſwereth another. Thirdly, to this anſwer may be added, that Chriſt ſtandeth not upon any ſuch privilege, as hee might juſtly alleage ; but notwithſtanding leſt he ſhould offend,yeeldeth to pay tribuite: therefore by the words of our Saviour,it is ſcandalous and offenſive for any to pleade privilege in denying of tribute to Princes.

The Proteſtants.

THat Princes have authoritie to puniſh eccleſiaſticall perſons offending in their goods ; either by diſplacing them,or by converting the Church poſſeſſions by them abuſed, to better uſes, we have ſhewed before, Contr. 5.queſt.6.part.1. And that their goods are liable to pay tribute, ſubſidie, tax, unto the Prince, thus now it is proved.

Matth.17.25. Rom.13.1. Argum. 1. Our Saviour Chriſt payed poll money, Matth.17.25. Rom. 13. Every ſoule ought to be ſubject to the higher powers, and there verſ.5. paying of tribute is made a part of ſubjection: the argument therefore thus followeth : Clergie men are ſubject to Princes, therefore they ought to pay tribute.

Argum.2. Ex conceſſis, we reaſon thus from their owne confeſſion : That which Princes gave to the Church, upon good cauſe they may take away : but this immunitie, not to pay tribute, was firſt granted,as they confeſſe,to the Church,by Kings and Princes : Ergo,they have the ſame right,having juſt occaſion, to take it from them againe. What Auguſtines judgement is,we have ſeene in the place before alleaged.

Concil.Lateranenſ.ſub.Leon. 10.ſeſſ. 11. there the ancient cuſtome and privilege of Parliament is approved : Quod habeant juriſdictionem in perſonas Eccleſiaſticas : that they have power and juriſdiction over Eccleſiaſticall perſons. And the whole Councell ratified it, ſaving only Iohannes Dominicus Epiſcop. Terdonenſ. But Parliaments have authoritie to levie taxes and ſubſidies upon Clergie men : ſo that conſequently herein alſo this Councell doth authorize Parliaments.

Fredericke the Emperour writeth well to Pope Adrian the 4. Ab iis, qui regalia noſtra tenent, cur homagium & regalia ſacramenta non exigimus, cum ille noſter & veſter inſtitutor ab homine rege nihil accipiens, tamen pro ſe & Petro cenſum Cæſari perſolvit, & exemplum vobis dedit, ut vos ita faciatis : Why ſhould we not require fealtie and other regall rights of thoſe, which doe hold and enjoy our regall dignities? he meaneth Biſhops,ſeeing that Chriſt the founder both of the Civill and Eccleſiaſticall ſtate, whereas he received nothing of any humane King ; yet for himſelfe and Peter paid tribute to Cæſar,and gave you an example ſo to doe.

This is agreeable to the Civill law, Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.3. Conſtantius : Clerici pro iis prædiis, &c. Clergie men, for ſuch poſſeſſions as they hold, muſt be urged to pay tribute.

Their owne Canons conſent: Decret.par.1.diſtinct.8.c.1. Noli dicere quid mihi & regi, &c. Say not, what hath the King to doe with me? for what haſt thou to doe with thy poſſeſſion, which thou enjoyeſt by the lawes of the King? Decret. par. 2. cauſ. 11. qu. 1. cap. 27. Si tributum petit imperator, non negamus: If the Emperour require tribute, we denie it not: for even the lands of the Church pay tribute, &c. But becauſe theſe Canons are but compiled by Gratian out of the fathers, as the firſt out of S. Auguſtine, the ſecond from S. Ambroſe; let us heare the decree and ſentence of their owne Biſhops of Rome: as Urbanus thus determineth, Cauſ.23.qu.8.c.22. Tributum in ore piſcis inventum eſt, &c. Tribute was found in the fiſhes mouth; for the Church of her externall things paieth tribute: but he was not bidden to give the whole fiſh, but only the peece in the fiſhes mouth: So the Church and the office of a Biſhop muſt not be yeelded to the Emperour; but that which is found in the mouth of the fiſh muſt be paied for the defence of peace, &c. Boniface 8. indeed decreed all ſuch lay officers to be excommunicate, that laid any taxes or impoſitions upon the Church, and all Clergie men paying any ſuch, to be ſubject to the ſame cenſure, ſext.decr. lib.3. tit. 23. cap.3. But this conſtitution is reverſed by Clemens 5. Clementin. lib.3. tit.17. and by Benedict.11. Extravag. commun. lib 3. tit 13. c.1. where two caſes are excepted, namely, of neceſſitie, and common utilitie, when it ſhall be lawfull for Clergie men to pay tax and ſubſidie to the Civill ſtate.

Doctor Taylor holy Martyr, alleageth out of Chryſoſtome, how that the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, and all men in every realme were ever, and ought to be ever, both touching body and goods, in ſubjection to the kingly authoritie, who hath the ſword in his hand, as Gods principall officer and governour in every realme, Fox pag.1523. col.1.

Herein we have the practice of other Churches profeſſing Chriſtianitie: 1 Chryſoſtome Patriarke of Conſtantinople ſaith, By common ſentence, Princes for their common care, à nobis ſuſtentari, &c. ought to be maintained by us, &c. He ſaith us, not excluding himſelfe: Serm. 23. in 13. ad Roman. The great Duke of Muſcovia, following the preſident of the Greeke Church, doth nominate and appoint the Patriarke of the Muſcovites.

4 See for the judgement of the Latine Church, their owne decrees and reſcripts of their Popes before alleaged.

So then it is evident, that the goods of Eccleſiaſticall perſons by common right are liable to ſuch taxations and charges, as the Civill power for the defence of the Common-wealth, and other neceſſarie ſupplie hath need of: yet herein both the liberality and bountie of Princes is to be commended, who have of their noble and honourable minde granted immunities unto ſome Eccleſiaſticall perſons and corporations: and their princely prudence and clemencie alſo ſhall never want due praiſe, not to impoſe more heavie burthens upon them which watch over mens ſoules, than upon other of their ſubjects: Neither in a Proteſtant Princes government, ſhall one need to feare, or have occaſion to complaine as a popiſh Biſhop doth of their government: Plus jam quovis laico vectigales ſumus, & merito quidem, quia plus quam laice vivimus: We are more taxed and laid at than lay men, and no marvell, becauſe we live like more than lay men.

Eſpenæus dig. eſſ. in 1. Tim. lib.2. cap.2.

The third part, concerning the Princes authoritie in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall.

The Papiſts.

THe Prince, they ſay, hath no authoritie to give voice deliberative or definitive in Councels concerning matters of religion, nor to make lawes Eccleſiaſticall concerning the ſame: onely they give them authoritie to execute the Eccleſiaſticall lawes made by the Church, Rhemiſt. 1 Cor.14.16. Bellarm. de Pontif. lib.1. cap.7.

108. Error.

*Argum.*1. Kings and Princes may in their owne perſons execute if they will, whatſoever their inferiour officers doe, as to heare and determine cauſes, as the Judges and other Magiſtrates doe: but the Prince cannot execute any Eccleſiaſticall function, as to preach, baptize; Ergo, he hath no authoritie in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall: for how can the Prince impart that to others, whereof he is himſelfe incapable, as to give Biſhops and Paſtors power to ordaine, to preach, and ſuch like? Bellarm. Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the authoritie of Civill Magiſtrates doth not give any thing to Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters, which appertaineth to their office, as to ordaine, preach, baptize: neither is the Prince to deale in theſe offices; yet may the Civill Magiſtrates command them to execute their charge and duties according to the word of God. Wherefore it followeth not, Princes cannot execute the paſtorall duties themſelves: Ergo, they ought not to ſee them executed. David, Salomon, Iehoſaphat, Ezechias, commanded the Prieſts to execute their office according to the law of God, though it was not lawfull for them, neither did they execute any thing proper to the Prieſts office in their own perſons; neither doth any Chriſtian Prince challenge any ſuch right in Eccleſiaſticall functions: wherefore it is an impudent ſlander of Bellarmine, which he giveth forth of our Queene, Iam re ipſa Calviniſtis in Anglia mulier quadam ſummus pontifex: And now (ſaith hee) in England the Calviniſts have a certaine woman for their chiefe Biſhop: De notis Eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 9.

It doth not follow, that the Prince might as well execute Eccleſiaſticall offices, as he may Civill in his owne perſon, if he have authoritie over both: no more than it followeth, that becauſe Eccleſiaſticall perſons doe teach both Civill Magiſtrates and Church officers their duties, and may in their one perſons execute the one, that is, ſpirituall duties, that they may as well intermeddle in the other: But theſe two offices of Civill and Eccleſiaſticall government are diſtinguiſhed, and muſt not be confounded. The Prince, though he have authoritie to command Eccleſiaſticall perſons; yet being a Civill Magiſtrate, is not to deale with the execution of ſpirituall duties. Biſhops and Paſtors likewiſe have a ſpirituall charge over Kings and Princes, to ſhew them their duties out of Gods word, yet becauſe they are perſons Eccleſiaſticall, they ought not to meddle with meere civill duties. The Prince hath the ſoveraigntie of externall government in all cauſes and over all perſons, yet not alike, for civill offices he may both command and execute; Eccleſiaſticall duties he commandeth only: Biſhops and Paſtors have alſo a ſpirituall charge over all, preſcribing out of Gods Word as well the dutie of Magiſtrates, as of Miniſters, but not alike; for the one they may fully execute, ſo may they not the other. The head in the naturall bodie reſembleth the Prince in the Common-wealth, in ſome ſenſe; the head giveth moving to the whole bodie and all the parts thereof; but to the principall parts in the head, the eyes, tongue, eares, it giveth beſide the facultie of moving, the ſenſe alſo of ſeeing, taſting, hearing: So in the Common-wealth, by the Princes authoritie all perſons are kept in order, and urged to looke to their charge, both civill officers and ſpirituall, as all the parts of the bodie receive moving from the head: but the civill officers receive power and authoritie beſide, and their verie offices of the King, as the parts in the head receive ſenſe from their fountaine: but Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters receive not their offices from the Prince, or any mortall man, but they have their calling according to the order of the Church of God.

Argum. 2. For the ſpace of three hundred yeeres the Church after Chriſt had no Chriſtian governours, but all Heathen and Idoll worſhippers, yet then the Church was eſtabliſhed, and prevailed: Ergo, Civill Magiſtrates ought not to deale in Eccleſiaſticall affaires: Bellarm. de laicis, cap. 17.

Anſw. 1. Even then alſo, the Heathen Emperours had authoritie in Church matters, and if they had commanded any thing agreeable to true religion, they ſhould have beene obeyed: as Cyrus in the law which he made for building the Temple, Ezra 1. Darius the Median, for worſhipping the true God. The Heathen Emperours then had the ſame power, but they knew not how to uſe it: Chriſtian Princes doe ſucceed them in the ſame office, but are better taught by the word of God how to exerciſe the ſword. Secondly, we denie not but that in the time of perſecution all things neceſſarie for the ſpirituall building thereof, may be had, without the Magiſtrate, as a vineyard may bring forth fruit without an hedge, but it cannot enjoy peace, nor be in a perfect eſtate, in reſpect of the externall government, but under good Magiſtrates; as the vineyard may ſoone be ſpoiled, the wild bore and the beaſts of the field may breake in upon it, having no hedge. The child being in the wombe, though it have as yet ſmall uſe of the head, but is fed by the navell, which is in ſtead of the mouth, hath in it ſelfe the lineaments and proportion of a humane bodie, yet it wanteth the perfect beautie, till it be borne and come forth, and the head receive his office: So may the Church have a being in perſecution, and the want of the civill head may be otherwiſe ſupplied, but it is not beautifull till the head be ſet up, and the ſword put into the Chriſtian Magiſtrates hand.

Argum. 3. Princes have no cure nor charge of ſoules: Ergo, they are not to meddle with Eccleſiaſticall lawes, Rhemiſt. annot. 1. Corinth. 14. ſect. 16.

Anſw. Parents have charge over the ſoules of their children, for they are charged to bring them up in the inſtruction and information of the Lord, Epheſ. 6. 4. Therefore Princes alſo have directly charge of the ſoules of their ſubjects according to their place and calling, by providing and making good Eccleſiaſticall lawes, and compelling them to the true ſervice of God: as the Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters in another kinde, and more properly are ſaid to have the cure of ſoules, in feeding and inſtructing the people.

Concil. Matiſconenſ. in fine. Guntramnus the King being preſent, ſaith thus to the Biſhops: Licet ſine veſtra admonitione, ad vos ſpecialiter prædicandi cauſa pertineat, &c. Although without our admonition or charge, the dutie of preaching doth eſpecially belong to you; nevertheleſſe, wee, to whom the higheſt King hath given authoritie to reigne, ſhall not eſcape his wrath, if we have no care of our ſubjects, that is, concerning their religion, &c. This godly King taketh himſelfe to be charged with the ſoules of his people. Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr alſo hath ſealed the ſame truth: Both the falſe teacher, and the corrupt governour ſhall be puniſhed for the death of their ſubject, whom they have falſely taught, and corruptly led, yea and his blood ſhall be required at his hands, Fox pag. 1774.

The

The Proteſtants.

THe civill Magiſtrate, by the word of God, hath power to make and coſtitute Eccleſiaſticall lawes, and to eſtabliſh true religion, and ſee that all perſons under their government doe faithfully execute their charge: To ſay therefore that the church officers are to deviſe lawes concerning religion, and the Prince only to execute them, is to make the Prince their ſervant, and doth derogate too much from the princely authoritie. Neither doe we give unto the Prince abſolute power to make Eccleſiaſticall lawes: for firſt, the Prince is not to preſcribe what lawes he liſteth to the Church, but ſuch as only may require the true worſhip of God. Secondly, that it is expedient and meet, according to the commendable cuſtome of this land, that the godly learned of the Clergie ſhould be conſulted withall, in eſtabliſhing of Eccleſiaſticall ordinances, unleſſe it be in ſuch a corrupt time, when the Church governours are enemies to religion: for then the Prince, not ſtaying upon their Judgement, ought to reforme religion according to the word of God, as we ſee it was lawfully and godly practiſed by King Henrie the 8. Thirdly, we doe make exception of all ſuch Eccleſiaſticall canons and ordinances, the making whereof doth properly belong to the office of Biſhops and governours of the Church: for our meaning is not, that it is not lawfull for Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters, to make Eccleſiaſticall decrees, which doe properly concerne their office, as concerning the cenſures of the Church; excommunication, ſuſpenſion, abſolving, binding, looſing, and ſuch like, which things are incident to their Paſtorall office: and yet we grant, that the Prince hath even in theſe caſes an overruling hand, to ſee that none abuſe their paſtorall office: But that any lawes ought to be made without the authoritie of the Prince, which the Prince is bound to execute, we utterly denie. And ſo wee conclude, that the civill Magiſtrate hath power over all perſons, and in all cauſes, both temporall and Eccleſiaſticall in ſuch manner as we have ſaid.

Fulk. Heb. 13.9.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul willeth, that prayers ſhould be made for Kings and Princes, that under them wee may leade a peaceable life, in all godlineſſe and honeſtie, 1 Tim. 2. 2. Ergo, it is their dutie as well to procure religion by their authoritie, as civill honeſtie. Againe, Hee beareth not the ſword for nought, Rom. 13. 4. He hath power to puniſh all evill doers: therefore alſo to correct evill Miniſters, and to make Eccleſiaſticall lawes: for otherwiſe he ſhould have no full power to correct the tranſgreſſors thereof.

1 Tim. 2. 2.

Rom. 13. 4.

Argum. 2. We read that Ioſua, David, Salomon, Ioſias, did deale in Eccleſiaſticall matters, which concerned religion and the worſhip of God. Bellarm. They did it by an extraordinarie authoritie, not as Kings, but as Prophets. Nay, it was an ordinarie power: for all the good Kings of Juda beſide, as Iehoſaphat, Hezekiah, and others, did take care of religion: and this was ſo properly annexed to the kingly office, that idolatrous Kings alſo tooke upon them to command falſe religion, as Ieroboam ſet up two golden Calves, and Ahaz king of Judah commanded Uriah the high Prieſt to make an Altar according to the paterne which he ſent from Damaſcus, 2 King. 16. 11. This power alſo was afterward exerciſed by Chriſtian Kings and Emperours: as Conſtantinus, Theodoſius, Martianus, made lawes for the Church. Iuſtinianus the Emperour decreed many things concerning Church affaires: as how excommunication ſhould be uſed, how Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould be ordained, concerning the order and manner of funerals: that the holy myſteries ſhould not be done in private houſes. Carolus magnus decreed that only the Canonicall bookes of Scripture ſhould be read in the Church: hee chargeth all Biſhops and Prieſts to preach the word. Lodovicus pius his ſonne, and Emperour after him, ordained that no entrie ſhould bee made into the Church by Symonie: that Biſhops ſhould bee choſen by the free election of the Clergie and the people. All theſe Emperours did lawfully, exerciſe their Princely authoritie in Eccleſiaſticall matters: Ergo, other Princes may doe the ſame ſtill.

2 King. 16. 11.

Fox pag. 7.

Now, whereas we object the example and practiſe of David, who appointed Levites to miniſter before the Arke: our Doway diſciples tell us, that this was by ſpeciall privilege and diſpenſation: but ordinarily all temporall Princes are to receive the law at the Prieſts hands: as Eleazar was appointed to conſult with the Lord for Ioſua: and that Ioſua was to goe out and in, that is, to leade and governe the people at Eleazars word.

2 Chron. 16. 4.

Annot. in Numb. 27. 21.

Contra. 1. David had no more ſpeciall privilege, than Aſa, Iehoſaphat, Hezekiah, and other godly Kings of Judah, who reformed religion, and managed Eccleſiaſticall cauſes: Iehoſaphat appointed both Civill Judges in temporall, and ſpirituall in Eccleſiaſticall cauſes, 2 Chron. 19. though the offices were diſtinguiſhed: as they note upon that place, yet both kinds were under the commandement and at the appointment of the King.

2 Eleazars office was to aske counſell of God, and to give direction to Ioſua, and according to his (that is Iehovah, not Eleazars) word, he ſhould goe in and out: So now ſpirituall Paſtors are to declare the will of God out of his word unto the Magiſtrate: they are not to preſcribe what they will themſelves: and the Prince is to obey Gods word: and all both Prieſt and people are to obey the Prince.

3 Auguſtine ſaith, Epiſtol. 50. Quis mente ſobrius, &c? Who in his right wits would ſay to the King, It pertaineth not to you, who in your kingdome is religious or ſacrilegious; to whom it cannot be ſaid, let it not pertaine unto you, who in your kingdome will be chaſt or unchaſt? And in another place, Ad fratres in erem. ſerm. 14. Tunc juſtitia dicitur gladius ex utraque parte acutus, quia hominis defendit corpus ab exterioribus injuriis, & animam à ſpiritualibus moleſtiis: Then juſtice is rightly called led a ſword with a double edge, becauſe it doth both defend the bodie from externall and corporall wrongs, and the ſoule from ſpirituall vexation, &c. That is, the ſword of the Magiſtrate ſerveth as well to prune the Church, and to cut off all errors and hereſies in religion, as to deſtroy the vices and corruptions in manners.

The conſent of antiquitie is on our ſide: Bonifacius ad Honorium Imperatorem: Angeretur plurib. Chriſtianiſſime princeps, mater eccleſia, niſi apud te ſuarum eſſet ſecura cauſarum: The Church your mother, moſt Chriſtian Prince, would be greatly grieved, if ſhe were not ſecure and confident in all her cauſes and matters, which reſt in your hand.

Leo epiſtol.7.ad Theodoſium: Vobis non ſolum regium, ſed ſacerdotalem animum ineſſe gaudemus, ſiquidem præter imperiales & publicas curas, piiſſimam ſollicitudinem Chriſtianæ religionis habetis: Wee doe rejoyce to ſee in you not only a kingly, but a prieſtly minde, in that beſide your imperiall cares, you are moſt godly carefull of religion.

*Concil. 6. Conſtantinop. Quid eſt præſertim Imperatori decibilius, &c. quàm præ omnibus pietate adornare ſubjectos, action.*18. What can be more comely, eſpecially for the Emperour, than to adorne his ſubjects with pietie?

*Arelatenſ. ſub Carolo. can.*26. Hæc Imperatori præſentanda decrevimus, poſcentes ejus clementiam, ut ſi quid hic minus eſt, ejus prudentia ſuppleatur; ſi quid ſecus, quàm ſe ratio habet, ejus judicio emendetur; ſi quid rationabiliter taxatum eſt, ejus adjutorio perficiatur: Theſe things which wee have decreed, we purpoſe to preſent to the Emperour, that if any thing be wanting, it may be by his prudence ſupplied; if any thing amiſſe, it may be by him amended; if any thing reaſonably enjoyned, it may be by his helpe perfited and confirmed. Doe not they now goe againſt all antiquitie, that ſay the Prince ought to have no voice in Councell, nor to make Eccleſiaſticall lawes: whereas theſe ancient Canons doe ſhew, that theſe things did principally belong to the Civill Magiſtrate?

We have alſo moſt evident teſtimonies out of the Civill and Canon law. Firſt, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 1. A law is made by the Emperours Gratianus, Valentinianus, Theodoſius, as touching the Catholike faith, and the right beleeving in the Trinitie. Leg. 3. Martianus ordaineth, that no man publikely ſhould diſpute of the faith received. *Tit.*6.*Leg.*26. Leo maketh a conſtitution againſt the placing, and carrying about of relikes, &c. It is evident then that theſe Chriſtian Emperours had to doe in the matters of faith.

Likewiſe for their owne Canons: *Decret. par.*1.*diſt.*96. Nicholaus thus writeth to Michael the Emperour: Ubi legiſtis, &c. Where have you read, that any of your predeceſſors were preſent in Synodes, but only where faith was entreated of, which is univerſall and common to all, as well the Laitie as the Clergie? &c. This Canon excludeth not the imperiall preſence and authoritie even in matters of faith.

*Cauſ.*16.*qu.*7.31. Regis auribus, &c. If the Metropolitane take away any thing dedicated to the Church, intimate it into the eares of the King.

*Cauſ.*23.*qu.*5.cap. 20. Cognoſcant reges ſeculi, &c. Let the Princes of the world know that they muſt render an account unto God for the Church, which they received to defend: Per terrenum Regnum ſæpe cæleſte regnum proficit: Oftentimes the heavenly kingdome is increaſed by the terrene and earthly kingdome. But more evidently, Can. 21. Leo: Res humana, &c. Humane ſtate cannot ſtand, unleſſe ſuch things, as belong to the divine faith, both the prieſtly and kingly authoritie defend. *c.*34. Injuria ſacramentorum, &c. The injurie done to the Sacraments of Chriſt, muſt be revenged of Kings, *c.*40. Rex debet adulteria punire: The King muſt puniſh adulterie, &c. Thus we ſee how that by the ſentence of their owne law, Princes ought to beare ſway even in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall.

This hath beene the practiſe firſt of the Greeke Emperours, to interpoſe themſelves and to inact lawes in Eccleſiaſticall matters: as the true Catholike faith is eſtabliſhed by the lawes of Theodoſius, and Valentinian: it appeareth in the Cod. tit. de ſumm. Trinitate: They forbid any to follow the wicked opinions of Porphyrius and Neſtorius: Cod. de epiſtol. leg. 14.

Liberat. c.16.

2 This alſo was the practiſe in the South Church: Zeno the Emperour reſtoreth Timotheus of Alexandria to his Biſhoprick: he commanded Petrus of Alexandria to receive into his communion Proterius. The Emperour of Æthiopia ſtileth himſelfe columnia fidei, the pillar of faith.

4 For the Latine Church, ſee the reſcripts of Bonifacius, and Leo unto the Emperours, before alleaged: the ſame Leo, in his 38. epiſtle to the Emperour, Martian and Pulcheria, giveth them thanks for rooting out the Neſtorian and Eutichian hereſie: and *epiſt.*75. he exhorteth Leo the Emperour to reforme the Sea of Alexandria.

An Appendix or fourth part of the queſtion, whether the Prince in any good ſenſe may be called the head of his kingdome, and conſequently of the Church in his kingdome.

The Papiſts.

THey doe appropriate this title, to be called head of the univerſall Church, to the Pope of Rome, moſt blaſphemouſly: for there can be no head of the univerſall bodie but Chriſt: But for Princes to be called the head, that is, chiefe governours of the Churches in their kingdomes, they doe abhorre it. Whereupon Bellarmin[illegible] ſo ſaucie as to check and controule King Henrie the 8. becauſe he was called the head of the Engliſh Church. Error. 109.

Argum. 1. The Heathen Emperours were not heads of the Church, being not ſo much as members thereof: therefore neither Chriſtian Magiſtrates, which do ſucceed them in that authoritie, Rhemiſ. annot. 1. Pet. 2. ſect. 6.

Anſ. The Argument followeth not: they were no true members of the Church, therefore could not be heads, that is, have the ſoveraintie of the externall government: for wicked Kings and Princes doe keepe their magiſtracie and government ſtill; who though they bee not true members of the Catholike Church, yet ought to be obeyed as Princes. 2 Though the metaphoricall name of head agreed not unto them, yet were they by Gods ordinance appointed to be heads and governours of his people and protectors of his Church, and ſhould have beene, if they had not abuſed their authoritie. 3 Chriſtian Princes, though they have the ſame authoritie which they had, yet now exerciſing the ſword according to Gods law, and being nurſes of the Church, may uſe and retaine thoſe princely titles indeed, to be called patrons and defenders of the Faith, and head, that is, chiefe governours and protectors of the Church: which by right had beene due unto the other, if they had uſed their authoritie as they ſhould.

Biſhop Cranmer, holy Martyr: Even Nero was Peters head, and the head of the Church, that is, in worldly reſpect of the temporall bodies of men, of whom the Church conſiſteth; for ſo he beheaded Peter, and the Apoſtles: And ſo the Turk too is head of the Church in Turkey, Fox. 1877.

Argum. 2. Chriſtian Princes are members of the Church: Ergò, not heads; for if they were heads, how could the Church ſtand without them, as it did in the time of perſecution?

Anſ. Firſt, as though the head is not a member and part of the bodie, though a principall one: ſo the Prince is a member of the Church, but a principall and chiefe member, not of the Inviſible Church, for ſo Chriſt is only head; but of a particular viſible Church. Secondly, we denie not but that the inviſible and ſpirituall Church may conſiſt without the Magiſtrate: but a viſible, flouriſhing, and well-governed Church cannot want a head or chiefe governour, that is, as a wall or hedge unto it.

The Proteſtants.

TO be head of the univerſall Church is proper only to Chriſt, and in that ſenſe is not communicable to any creature: for he is to his Church, as the head to the naturall bodie, giving unto it influence of grace, ſpirit and life: hee is therefore the only myſticall head of the univerſall Church: But in an other ſenſe the Prince may be ſaid to be the head and chiefe governour of his kingdome, and of that particular viſible Church, where he is King: We make him neither the myſticall head, which is only Chriſt (far be that blaſphemie from us) nor a miniſteriall head, as they make the Pope to bee as Chriſts Vicegerent in the Church; but a politicall head, to keep and preſerve the peace of the Church, and to ſee that every member doe his office and dutie. But this name we confeſſe is unproperly given to the Prince, neither were we the firſt inventors of it: for the Papiſts firſt gave it to Henry the 8. And there are other titles which doe ſufficiently expreſſe the office of the Prince, and may bee more ſafely uſed. If any man thinke it too high a name for any mortall man, and ſo not to be given to any, we will not greatly contend about it: But if any denie it to the Prince, as thereby to abridge him of his power in Eccleſiaſticall matters, we doe ſtand ſtifly for it; and are bold to affirme that with much better right is this title attributed to the civill Magiſtrate, than it was to the Pope: yea, and that it hath beene of old given in a modeſt and ſober ſenſe to Kings and Princes, and may with a favourable expoſition be ſtill: and Princes alſo may receive this honour and title at their ſubjects hands, with proteſtation of their Chriſtian meaning herin.

Argum. 1. This phraſe, for the King to be called the head, is not unuſuall in Scripture, 1 Samuel 15. 17. Saul is ſaid to be the head of the tribes. Pſal. 18. 43. David the head of the nations: Iſay 9. 15. The Prince or honourable man the head of the people: yea, Princes are called Gods, Pſal. 82. 1. which is a name of greater ſoveraintie, than to be called heads.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Princes doe rule over their ſubjects as men, not as Chriſtians; and Kings are ſet over the people, not as they are Chriſtians, but politick perſons: ſo the Prince is head of the kingdome, not of the Church, De pontif. Rom. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Anſw. Stephen Gardiner taketh away this cavill very ſufficiently, we will ſet one Papiſt againſt another: It is all one (ſaith hee) to call the Prince head of the Church of England, and head of the Realme of England; for if all Engliſhmen be his ſubjects, why are not they his ſubjects, as they are Chriſtians? If the wife or ſervant be ſubject to the maſter or huſband being infidels, doth their converſion, or name of Chriſtians make them leſſe ſubject, than they were before? Hæc ille. Againe, how farre is this, I pray you, from Anabaptiſtrie, to ſay, that ſubjects, onely as men, not as Chriſtians, are in ſubjection to Princes? for doth it not follow hereupon, that as Chriſtians they ought to have no ſuperiour or Magiſtrate?

Fox. pag. 1059.

Argum. 2. It is ſufficient for us, that this title more fitly and properly belongeth to every Prince in his owne kingdome, than to the Pope: for the Pope can in no wiſe bee head of the Church; hee is not the myſticall head, neither dare they ſay ſo; for Chriſt only is the head in that manner: neither can he be the Miniſteriall head of the univerſall Church; for the Catholike Church is a body myſticall, and muſt needs have a myſticall head: neither is the politicall head of any particular Church: for no Biſhop can be a pollliticall head; becauſe he that is the head [illegible] chiefe muſt have a coactive power, to bind his ſubjects to obedience: ſo hath not any Biſhop. The Prince only beareth the ſword, and enforceth obedience. Againe, in a far divers ſenſe is the Prince called the head, than the Pope was: for firſt the Pope challenged to be head of the univerſall Church; but the Prince is chiefe only in his owne kingdome. Secondly, the Pope would bee an abſolute head, to doe all upon earth that Chriſt did, yea, and more too, to bind and looſe at his pleaſure, to depoſe Kings, to diſpenſe with the word of God, to conſtitue and make lawes at his pleaſure: inſomuch that one of his clawback flatterers is not aſhamed to ſay of him, Chriſtus & Papa unum faciunt conſiſtorium, & excepto peccato, poteſt Papa, quaſi omnia facere, quæ poteſt Deus: Chriſt and the Pope make but one conſiſtorie, and keep but one court; and ſin only excepted, the Pope in a manner can do all things that God can do. But we doe limit the power of the Prince: Who is not to impoſe any lawes upon the Church, but ſuch as are agreeable to the word of God: neither doe wee make him a ſpirituall officer, as the Pope would bee, but a civill governour, who by poſitive lawes is to provide for the peace and welfare of the Church.

Panormitane.

1 Pet. 1. 13.

Laſtly, Saint Peter ſaith, Submit your ſelves to the King as the chiefe, ὡς ὑπερέχοντι or more excelling: what is this elſe, but as to the head? what is it to be chiefe but to be head? But wee will not much contend for the name, ſo they will grant us the thing: namely, that the Prince is a commander and ought to be obeied even in Eccleſiaſticall matters, as Auguſtine ſaith: Quicunq; legib. Imperatorum, quæ pro Dei veritate feruntur, obtemperare non vult, acquirit grande ſupplicium: He that will not obey the lawes of the Emperours made for the truth, doth procure unto himſelfe great puniſhment. Epiſtol. 50. As for the title, to bee called head, let them ceaſe to call their chiefe Biſhop ſo who hath no right unto it, and we will promiſe alſo to lay it downe, though in good ſenſe wee might uſe it, though the Pope had never laid claime thereunto.

Concil. Toletan. 8. Reccesſuinthus the King thus ſaith in his preface to the Councell: Regendorum membrorum cauſa, ſalus eſt capitis; & felicitas populorum non niſi manſuetudo eſt principum: the health of the head muſt be ſought, for the better regiment of the members; and the happineſſe of the people, is the lenitie of their Prince, &c. Here the Prince is called the head, the people the members.

Biſhop Cranmer holy Martyr: The King is the ſupreame head of all the people of England both Eccleſiaſticall and temporall, which are the viſible Church: but Chriſt onely is head of the Church, that is, of the faith and religion thereof, both of the whole univerſall Church, and of every member thereof, Fox. pag. 1881. col. 1. And otherwiſe we hold not.

P. 1707. 2. 10.

[illegible] ὁ βασιλεὺς num. 18. Tom 3. de rect. fide.

Now for further evidence: 1 The opinion of the Greeke Church is, that the Prince is the chiefe, and conſequently head of all: as Agapetus a Deacon of Conſtantinople thus writeth in his booke to Iuſtinian, that the Prince hath not in earth, any higher than himſelfe, and the King is Lord of all. Ieremie Patriarke ſaith: Subjectos eſſe nos oportet, &c. We ought to be ſubject to every power, &c. but ſubjection is to the head.

2 Cyrillus of Alexandria, thus writeth of the Magiſtrate: Vos eſtis ſummarum dignitatum fontes, & ſuper omnem eminentiam humanæ felicitatis principium & origo: You are the fountaines of the chiefeſt dignities, and above all eminent things, the beginning and originall of all humaine felicitie, &c. but the head is the fountaine and originall unto the bodie of theſe things: David Emperour of Æthiopia thus writeth to the Biſhop of Rome, Ego in regnis meis ſum columna fidei, &c. I in my Kingdome am the pillar of faith: what is this elſe, than to be the head?

Damianus a Goes.

Harm. ſect. 19. pag. 588.

3 French confeſſ. artic. 39. All men of what dignitie, ſtate or condition ſo ever they be, ought to bee ſubject to their lawfull magiſtrate, &c. and to obey him in all things: What is hee elſe but the head, to whom all other are ſubject.

Carerius de poteſtat. ſum. Pontif. lib. 2. c. 23. Sanderus lib. 2. de clavib. David c. 13.

4 The Romaniſts themſelves confeſſe, That Peter was not the Iudge of the heathen, Sed contra in omnib. cauſis civilib. non minus quam cæteri homines illis ſubjiciebatur: But contrariwiſe in all civill cauſes was no leſſe ſubject unto them, than others, &c. In all civill cauſes then the Emperour was Peters head, then was not Peter, nor conſequently the Pope in civill cauſes any way the Emperours head.

The ſecond queſtion, concerning the authoritie of the Princes in puniſhing Heretikes.

WE doe willingly grant, that obſtinate heretikes and perverters of the faith, if they perſiſt in their damnable opinions, and remaine incorrigible, may & ought to be cut off and puniſhed by death, to make others to feare: So Servetus at Geneva, and one Valentinus at Berne, both monſtrous heretikes, not amongſt the Papiſts, but by the Proteſtants were worthily put to death. In this therefore we and our adverſaries agree, that heretikes may be puniſhed by death by the civill Magiſtrate. If Luther, or any other have held any private opinion to the contrarie, let them anſwer for themſelves: but although we varie not in the principall, yet there are certaine circumſtances and acceſſaries greatly materiall, wherein they both diſſent from us and from the truth.

1 They would have the Magiſtrate onely to be their executioner, the judgement of hereſie, they ſay, belongeth to the Church: for they cited, examined, judged, degraded, condemned heretikes, and then gave them over to the ſecular power: this was the common practice of their Church. Bellarm. de pontif. lib. 5. cap. 7. Error. 110.

But we hold, that the hearing, judgement, ſentence, and condemnation of heretikes belongeth to the civill Magiſtrate, as well as the execution: becauſe theſe actions are proper to the civill ſword, which the Magiſtrate beareth, Rom. 13. and Deuteron. 17.5. The falſe Prophets and Idolaters were brought to the gates of the Citie, where the civill Magiſtrate was wont to ſit. Auguſtine is of the ſame minde, Cur in veneficos vigorem legum exerceri juſte fatentur, in hæreticos & ſchiſmaticos, &c. nolunt fateri? cont. epiſt. Parmen. l. 7. Why doe they grant, that the vigour of the law may juſtly bee executed upon witches, and not as well upon heretikes and ſchiſmatikes? &c. But the cauſes of witches are heard, judged and handled before the civill Magiſtrate: Ergo, alſo the cauſe of heretikes. Auguſtines reaſon is out of the 5. Galath. 20. The works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are adulterie, fornication, idolatrie, witchcraft, and hereſies are alſo reckoned up amongſt them: All theſe are works of the fleſh: Ergo, the Magiſtrate being appointed to puniſh evill doers, hath as full right to deale againſt them all, as ſome. Rom. 13.4. Deut. 17.5.

Concil. Chalcedon. action. 16. Quoties ſacerdotum ſententia quoſdam indignos ſacerdotio de ſacris ſedibus depoſuit, toties imperium ejuſdem ſententiæ & ordinationis cum ſacerdotum authoritate fuit: As often as any unworthie perſons by the ſentence of Miniſters were thruſt from their ſeats, ſo often the imperiall power did concurre with the authoritie of the Prieſts in the ſame ſentence, &c: the Emperour was joyned with Clergie men in the judgement of hereſie.

Thus teſtifieth M. Philpot holy Martyr, I ſeeke not to be mine owne Judge, but am content to bee judged by other, ſo that the order of judgement in matters of religion be kept, that was in the primitive Church; which is, firſt, that Gods will by his word was ſought, and thereunto both the ſpiritualtie and temporaltie was gathered together, and gave their conſents and judgements, &c. Fox. pag. 1807.

That the judgement of hereſie belongeth to the Civill power; it is evident by the Imperiall lawes: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 8. leg. 2. Gratian Valentinian. Hæreticorum vocabulo continentur. &c. They are to bee accounted heretikes that doe erre never ſo little from the Catholike faith. Tit. 12. leg. 11. Theodoſ. Certum eſt, &c. It is certaine, that whatſoever doth differ from the Chriſtian faith, is contrarie to the Chriſtian law, therefore Chriſtian lawes doe take knowledge of things varying from the faith. Decr. p. 2. cauſ. 23. qu. 8. c. 30. Ne Clerici, quod morte plectendum eſt, propria ſententia judicare præſumant: That Clergie men ſhould not give ſentence, where the puniſhment is by death. But hereſie is to be puniſhed by death; Ergo, Clergie men are not to give ſentence againſt heretikes.

But if it ſhall be anſwered, that they put none to death, but deliver them over to the ſecular power: this cannot excuſe them, but is flat contrarie to their owne Canon, Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. c. 23. Pernicioſè ſe decipiunt, &c. They doe pernitiouſly deceive themſelves, that thinke them onely to be manſlayers that kill with their hands, and not they by whoſe councell and encouragement men are killed, &c. The Jewes did not kill our Lord with their owne hands; for ſay they, it is not lawfull for us to put any to death: yet our Lords death is imputed unto them, becauſe with their tongue and voyce they killed him, crying out, that he ſhould be crucified: Qui ergo hominem tradidit, &c. Hee therefore that delivereth a man over, killeth him. Wherefore the Popiſh Phariſees, or Phariſaicall Papiſts, in that they deliver innocents over to be killed, are the killers themſelves.

Thus it is evident, by the auncient practice both of the Greeke and Latine Churches: that Chriſtian Princes have beene the chiefe in condemning and puniſhing of heretikes: which we ſo maintaine not, as though the Princes peremptorie will ſhould be a rule to diſcerne who were heretikes: as Baſilius the great Duke of Muſcovia doth arrogate that to himſelfe, who of his owne head-ſtrong minde defineth Rubius a Proteſtant Miniſter, and other Lutheranes to be heretikes: but that the Scriptures being propoſed, as a moſt certaine triall and touchſtone of hereſie, the Civill power ſhould beare the greateſt ſtroke both in examining and cenſuring heretikes according to that rule. Religion. Muſcovit. c. 14.

This was the practice both of the Greeke and South Church, as may appeare in the foure generall Councels, which were gathered together chiefly of the Eaſterne and Southerne Churches: where the Emperours were Preſidents and chiefe Judges of the heretikes there condemned: and this yet is more evident in the ſixth generall Synod, where was preſent the Patriarke of Alexandria, by his Vicegerent one Petrus a Presbiter: In the 18. action of that Synod, Conſtantinus the Emperour being preſent, ſubſcribed to the acts of that Councell, and their proceedings againſt divers Monothelites, whom the Emperour there doth anathematize, and declare to be heretikes by his publike edict.

Hann.Sect,18. pag.574. So the reformed Churches alſo doe hold: Auſpurg. Artic. 15. It belongeth not to the Biſhop only, but to godly Princes, and eſpecially to the Emperour to underſtand the Goſpell purely, to judge of opinions, &c.

See before Error.108. The Epiſtle of Leo unto Theodoſius, wherein hee rejoyceth that hee had not onely a Kingly but a Prieſtly minde, in taking care for religion. Likewiſe Leo. Epiſt. 38. to Martiane the Emperour, and Epiſt. 39. to Pulcheria, he giveth them thanks, for that by their carefull defending of the faith, they had deſtroyed the Neſtorian and Eutychian hereſie: and Epiſt. 66. hee craveth of Eudocia Auguſta, that ſhee ſhould ſee the hereſies, which ſprung up among the Monks to be rooted out, &c. but this could not be done without examination and triall of them.

Error.112. 2 We differ about the way and meanes to trie an heretike by: They affirme that he is an heretike onely that is ſo judged by a generall Councell, or the ſentence of the chiefe Paſtors of the Church: they would have an heretike tried by the conſtitutions and Canons of their Church, Annot. tit. 3 ſect. 2. Rhemiſt.

Wee ſay that an heretike is to be convicted by the Scriptures, and that hee that holdeth any opinion obſtinately againſt the manifeſt authoritie of Scripture, may bee judged an heretike without a generall Councell: So Auguſtine writeth, anſwering the Pelagians, who objected that they were condemned without a Synod. Ac ſi congregatione Synodi opus erat, ut aperta pernicies damnaretur, quaſi nulla hæreſis aliquando niſi Synodi congregatione damnata ſit. As though a Synod need to be congregate or called, to condemne ſuch open wickedneſſe, as if never any hereſie had beene condemned but in a Synod or Councell: Cont. 2. epiſtol. Pelag. lib. 4. cap. 12. This is that hereticall opinion, as they call it, which the Councell of Conſtance condemned in Iohn Huſſe, and him together with it, becauſe hee ſaid, That an heretike, whatſoever hee be, ought firſt to be inſtructed, and taught with Chriſtian love, and gentleneſſe by the holy Scriptures, and by reaſons drawne out of the ſame, before hee ſuffer corporall or bodily puniſhment: Fox. pag. 610. articul. 18. Which his ſaying is grounded upon that rule of the Goſpell, Math. 18. 15. That if wee ſee one offend, wee ſhould firſt tell him privately; then before two or three: laſtly, declare it to the Church: and if he will not heare the Church, that is, by Scripture convincing him; then continuing obſtinate, let him bee as a Publicane. This rule the Papiſts kept not in their bloudie perſecutions here in England: They put many hundreds to death, and were not able to convince any one of hereſie; but in diſputation were themſelves put to ſilence and made aſhamed: Their only forceable arguments were the fire and fagot.

Math. 18. 15.

That hereſie muſt bee tryed out by Scripture, wee have the judgement and practice of auncient times. Concil. Aquileienſ. contra Palladium Arrianum: Propoſita divina in medio Scriptura, præſens eſt Apoſtolus, omnes Scripturæ præſto ſunt, unde vis, aſtrue, ſi putas non eſſe filium Dei ſempiternum: The divine Scriptures are ſet forth in the middeſt, the Apoſtle is preſent, the Scriptures are at hand: fetch thy proofes, where thou wilt, if thou thinkeſt that Chriſt is not the Sonne of God.

Leo epiſtol. 44. Quia Evangelica, & Apoſtolica fides omnes expugnat errores, hanc regulam memente ſervandam: becauſe the faith or truth of the Goſpell and Apoſtles doth expugne all error, remember to keepe this rule.

M. Philpot putteth his ſeale to this truth: ſhewing how in the primitive Church after the judgement of Gods word declared, with the aſſent of the Biſhops and the people, heretikes were condemned, or abſolved, Fox p. 1806. examinat. 6. col. 1. Pag.1639.2.10.

Concerning the other point, that heretikes ought not raſhly to be condemned without ſufficient triall and examination, and evident convincing of them, thus it is ſhewed.

The Councell of Baſile for promiſing to the Bohemians free audience, and libertie to diſpute, was therefore reproved by ſome of the Popes accomplices: The Councell anſwereth thus, in one of their Epiſtles Synodals: Omnis ſchola Theologorum & canoniſtarum, affirmat eam diſputationem, &c. The whole ſchoole of Divines and canoniſts denieth not, but ſuch diſputation of faith to be lawfull, which is not the cauſe of tumult, of diſtruſt, or doubting in faith, but for inſtruction, and to open the truth, to convince heretikes, and confirme the Catholikes: for as Gregory ſaith, as unadviſed ſpeech bringeth into error, ſo undiſcreete ſilence leaveth them in error, which might be inſtructed. To this alſo agreeth the extravagant, lib. 5. tit. 8. c. 1. Ioann. 22. Nolentes ante credere, quam probare: We not willing to beleeve, before wee prove, have appointed inquiſition and ſearch to be made, &c. It is lawfull therefore to diſpute with heretikes: which Wincheſter denieth to Maſter Rogers holy Martyr, who complaineth; that it was not permitted him to trie out the truth by conference, and writing, Fox. pag. 1485.

Error.112. 3 Againe, they uſed unlawfull wayes and unjuſt, in ſifting and examining, by cruell torments the poore innocents brought before them, neither ſhewing accuſers nor witneſſes: Iohn Browne Martyr appearing before Warham and Fiſher, two bloodſuckers, was burned with hot coales, his bare feet being ſet upon them: *Fox.*pag.1292.Cutbert Symſons fingers were grated with an arrow, and he himſelfe piteouſly racked, to be made betray his innocent brethren, Fox. p.2032. Tomkins hand was burned by Bonner, till the ſinewes ſparkled againe, *Fox.*p.1533. And theſe were the witneſſes and accuſers that were brought againſt them.

Which practice of theirs is flat contrary to the ancient Canons: Calixtus the ſecond, Per ſcripturam nullus accuſare, vel accuſari poteſt, ſed propria voce, & praſente eo, quem accuſare voluerit, ſuam quiſque agat accuſationem: Let no man accuſe or bee accuſed by writing, but by his owne voyce, and in the preſence of him, who is accuſed, let the accuſation be made.

Fabians epiſtol. 2. Nullus praſumat accuſator ſimul eſſe & judex, vel teſtis, quoniam in omni judicio quatuor perſonas neceſſe eſt ſemper adeſſe: Iudices electos, accuſatores, defenſores, & teſtes: Let no man preſume to be an accuſer, and judge at the ſame time, or witneſſe: becauſe in every judgement there muſt be foure perſons, the Judges, accuſers, defenders, witneſſes.

Concil. Lateranenſ. ſub Innocentio. 3.cap. 8. Debet praſens eſſe is, contra quem facienda eſt inquiſitio, &c. Hee ought to bee preſent, againſt whom enquirie is to bee made, and the ſeverall points and articles, which are ſought into, muſt bee declared, that he may have power to defend himſelfe: And not onely the words of the accuſation, but the perſons alſo muſt bee publiſhed, that it may appeare, what, and by whom every thing is reported. It ſhall alſo bee lawfull for the partie accuſed, to take exceptions, and make replication: And all this would be done, leſt by ſuppreſſing names men ſhould take occaſion to defame others; and by cutting off of exceptions, they ſhould not be afraid to ſweare falſly, &c.

What clearer teſtimony can we have, againſt this Popiſh courſe and manner of proceeding in judgement, when as without witneſſes a man is condemned, whereas the law, as we ſee, alloweth the accuſed, to underſtand the articles whereof he is accuſed, that he may have time to anſwer, and to his accuſer, that if there be cauſe, he may take exception againſt him.

This was cleane contrarie to the law of Moſes: At the mouth of two or three witneſſes, ſhall hee that is worthy of death die, Deuteron. 17.6. Auguſtine ſaith, Quis judex accuſantis ſumat perſonam? &c. What Judge would take upon him to be an accuſer? Our Lord Chriſt knew Iudas to bee a thiefe (ſaith he:) yet becauſe he was not accuſed, hee did not caſt him off, &c. Hee counteth it a very unnaturall thing for the Judge to be an accuſer, and to proceede without witneſſes: which although in ſome criminall caſes is more tolerable, yet in the caſes of life and death ought in no wiſe to be uſed.

Queſt. ex utroque mix.102.

The ſame judgement alſo Auguſtine giveth of that cruell cuſtome of tormenting men, to convince them by their owne mouth, which was invented by the heathen, but never more cruelly practiſed than among the Papiſts, Hoc intolerabile eſt (ſaith he) & rigandum fontibus lacrymarum, cum propterea torqueat judex accuſatum, ne occidat neſciens innocentem; & fit per ignorantiam, ut & tortum & innocentem occidat, quem ne innocentem occideret, torſerat: How intollerable a thing is it and to bee much lamented, that while the Judge tormenteth the partie accuſed, leſt unwittingly he ſhould put an innocent man to death; it falleth out that he adjudgeth to death a man both innocent, and beſide tormented; whom, leſt he ſhould ſlay as an innocent, he before put to torment, &c. His meaning is, that when a man is put to the racke, or otherwiſe tortured, that hee might confeſſe the truth, and cleere himſelfe; it commeth to paſſe, that through extremity of the paine, he maketh himſelfe guilty, and ſo the innocent is both wrongfully tormented, and unjuſtly put to death. Which kind of forcing men by torture, though in ſome dangerous caſes, as of high treaſon, and ſuch like, where there is great perill in the concealing of the truth, and no other way to ſift it out, may be admitted: yet to uſe it as an ordinary courſe as the Papiſts did, and in cauſes of religion, it is too ſhamefull, and of all Chriſtians to be abhorred.

De civitat. Dei, lib.19.c.6.

Now, as touching theſe three points, to proceede without an accuſer, without witneſſe by the parties oath, and by torments, in matters and cauſes concerning the life of him that is accuſed, I will in order ſhew, how it agreeth, or diſagreeth both with the Civill and Canon law.

Concerning the neceſſity of an accuſer in matters of judgement, the Civill law hath thus determined: Cod. lib. 9. tit. 2. leg. 16. Libellus in criminali, &c. The libell in criminall cauſes muſt containe the name of the accuſer, the Judge, and of the partie accuſed. Arcadius, leg. 7. Honor. Quiſquis crimen intendit in judicium veniat, &c. Whoſoever doth object any crime, let him come himſelfe into open judgement, and declare the matter, and let him be under ſafe keeping, as well as the party accuſed, till the matter be examined. Againe, ibid. leg. 14. Arcad. Iudex in publicis criminibus non debet uti emendicatis ſuffragiis decretorum, &c. The Judge in publicke crimes, muſt not be ruled by the reports of the acts or decrees, but ſeeke out the truth of the matter. This law chargeth Judges not to be carried, no not by the complaints or informations of the Notaries and Officers of the Court, without due proofe.

Hereunto their owne decrees give conſent: Cauſ. 2.*qu.*1.*c.*10. Nicholaus: Reſtituendus, qui nec confeſſus, nec convictus: Hee muſt be reſtored, that is neither confeſſed, nor detected. Cap. 7. Gregor. Si non alii teſtes, alii accuſatores, &c. judicium non ordinabiliter factum: If that there be not ſome witneſſes, ſome accuſers, the judgement is not orderly. Likewiſe, Cauſ. 30.*qu.*5.*c.*11. Eleuther. preſcribeth this forme of judgement; That the judge ſhould give licence to each party, the one to object, the other to anſwer, ut actio ambarum partium illuminata ſit pleniter, that both parties action may bee fully cleered, and inlightened, &c. But this cannot be, whereas there is but one party. Wherefore both the lawes agree in this, that an accuſer muſt be in every lawfull judgement produced: Yet there is as a certaine caſe excepted, wherein an accuſer is not needfull: as Cod. lib. 9. tit. 2. leg. 7. Gordian. Niſi in notorio judex procedit per viam accuſationis; Vnleſſe the matter be notorious, the Judge muſt proceede by way of accuſation. So alſo ſaith the Canon law: Decret. 6. reg. lib. 3. tit. 2. c. 8. Innocent. 3. In notoriis nec teſtis, &c. In a nototious matter, neither witneſſe, or accuſer is neceſſary. And what is to be counted notorious, or manifeſt, is further ſhewed, ibid. lib. 5. tit. 40. c. 24. Innocent. 3. That is a manifeſt crime which is knowne, per confeſſionem, probationem, rei evidentiam, by confeſſion, or due proofe, or the evidence of the thing it ſelfe, &c. If then in caſes onely notoriouſly knowne an accuſer is not neceſſary, but in all other caſes, he muſt bee produced: then have the Papiſts beene moſt injurious to many convented before them for hereſie (as they call it) and other crimes, who were not ſuſpected, much leſſe detected thereof, and ſo farre from being notorious heretikes; and yet they proceeded againſt them, as they called it ex officio, ſhewing no accuſer at all.

I cannot here omit that notable place of S. Ambroſe to this purpoſe, Epiſtol. 66. where he reproveth one Syagrius the Biſhop of Verona: Quod Virginem, quam nullus argueret, &c. For that he drew a certaine Virgin into great hazard and danger of guiltineſſe, without any accuſer: where did he learne any ſuch forme of judgement? if he aske the lawes, they require an accuſer; if he referre it to the Church, there in the mouth of two or three witneſſes every word is eſtabliſhed, &c. If Syagrius for proceeding againſt a Virgin for incontinency without an accuſer, were much blamed by S. Ambroſe, what would he have ſaid, if hee had ſeene this practice uſuall in the Popiſh Prelacy, even in the caſes of hereſie, to which belong the ſentence of death.

Now concerning the ſecond point, whether a man may be urged to accuſe himſelfe upon his oath, eſpecially in capitall cauſes, the judgement of the law is, that, except in certaine caſes, none ſhould bee enforced to teſtifie againſt themſelves. Firſt, Cod. lib. 4. tit. 20. leg. 6. Diocleſian. Nemo contra ſe cogitur teſtes producere: No man is compelled to produce witneſſes againſt himſelfe: but he that by his oath maketh himſelfe guilty, witneſſeth againſt himſelfe. So likewiſe in the Canon law, Cauſ. 35. qu. 6. c. 4. Vrbanus. Si negaverint, ſibi ipſis relinquendi: If inceſt cannot be proved neither by oath of witneſſes, nor by confeſſion, the party muſt be charged by their baptiſme, their faith, &c. to confeſſe the truth: but if they deny, they muſt be left to themſelves, &c. This Canon preſcribeth no oath, but an earneſt obteſtation to be miniſtred unto the ſuſpected party.

But yet certaine caſes there are aſſigned in the law, wherein the party accuſed may be brought to his oath: as firſt, Propter inopiam probationum: If the proofe do otherwiſe faile: Cod. lib. 4 tit. 1. leg. 3. Diocleſ. So that all other proofes muſt be uſed before the party be driven to his oath: that as the law is for torments, and tortures, that they muſt be miniſtred in the firſt place, but other arguments muſt firſt be uſed: Cod. lib. 9. tit. 41. leg. 8. Diocleſ. ſo likewiſe the oath of the party muſt not be enforced, but other evidences and preſumptions firſt are to be produced.

Secondly, there muſt by the law a party be given, and an accuſer ſeth forth, where the other party is urged to his oath: the reaſon is this, becauſe the guilty party hath three things put to his choiſe by the law: Reus debet jurare, ſolvere, vel referre juramentum: Hee may either ſweare, or bee content to bee condemned, or referre the oath to his accuſer: that is, urge him firſt to ſweare, Cod. lib. 4. tit. 1. leg. 9. Diocleſian, The reaſon is given, ibid. leg. 12. Iuſtinian: Non debet reſpuere in perſona ſua, quod placuit in perſona adverſarii: He muſt not refuſe to do that in his owne perſon, which he was pleaſed with in his adverſary, &c. So then where the guilty party was urged to ſweare, the accuſer alſo was by his oath to juſtifie his accuſation. And this referring or rebounding of an oath is allowed by their law, decret. Gre. lib. 2. tit. 24. c. 36. Greg. 9. Quod in judicio a parte parti defertur, &c. An oath in judgement between party and party may be referred.

Thirdly, where it is agreed by the parties themſelves, that the matter ſhall be decided by the oath of a party, in that caſe ſuch oath by the law is allowed: as when there ariſeth a queſtion, whether one be right heire; if they, whom it concerneth, be content to put it to his oath, it ſhall ſtand, Cod. lib. 4. tit. 1. leg. 6.

Fourtly, the parties oath by the Civill law was uſed for the moſt part in civill cauſes, as in queſtions of debt, in matters of truſt, and ſuch like; where an apparent injury did ſeeme to be offered, or intended by the party ſworne, to the other party by whom he is impleaded: as Cod. lib. 4. tit. 1. leg. 5. The pupil or ward might put his tutor or guardian to his oath, concerning ſuch things as were committed to his truſt. Ibid. leg. 9. In an action of debt, the debter might be put to his oath: he muſt either ſweare or pay. Ibid. leg. 10. In actione depoſiti, &c. In an action of a thing committed to ones truſt the party might be required to take his oath. In theſe and the like caſes civill, where the truth is concealed to another mans loſſe and hinderance, the oath of the party ſued or impleaded, might be demanded: but in caſes criminall, where the offence redoundeth to the hurt and dammage of the party, rather than to the reliefe of another, it is thought hard to preſſe him with an oath againſt himſelfe; yet in ſome criminall caſes it is allowed, as now followeth to be ſhewed.

Fiftly, then in ſuch criminall caſes, as where the offence is publike, and the puniſhment extendeth not to death, where other proofe faileth, the party may be charged with an oath; as by a new law it is conſtituted in the Code, that if a Judge doe receive a bribe in a cauſe criminall, if it cannot be proved againſt him, hee ſhall be put to his oath: which if hee refuſe, hee is held as guilty, and forfeit all his goods, and be ſent into exile, Cod.lib.7.tit.49. leg.1. authentic. So then in theſe caſes rehearſed, where a party is given, and all other proofes beſide firſt uſed, and in Civill matters to relieve others from a wrong, and ſomtime in criminall, where the offence is publike, and not unto death, it is lawfull to preſſe the defendant with an oath: But in the judgement of hereſie, and other crimes objected, the Popiſh tyranny proceeded without any regard had of the premiſes; preſſing the poore innocents with their owne oath in cauſes criminall unto the execution of death, giving no party, nor ſtanding much upon other evidence: wherefore their proceedings were contrary to law herein.

The third point followeth to be diſcuſſed, of inquiſition to be made by torments; where I will out of the law briefly declare theſe three points: firſt, in what caſes tortures are to be uſed: ſecondly in what manner: thirdly, what perſons are privileged and exempted from tortures. For the firſt, though that bondſlaves might be put to torture, upon divers occaſions, as if they were fugitives, Col.lib.6.tit.1.leg.4. to know the right heire to their maſter, Cod.lib.9.tit.41.leg.9. and whether it be a forged wil or nor; ibid.leg.10. Yea, Servus poteſt de ſuo facto torqueri, A ſlave may be examined by torture of his owne act in imbeaſelling of his maſters goods, ibid.leg. 15. Diocleſ. Though I ſay bondſlaves were upon ſundry occaſions ſubject to tortures: yet others but onely in grave and waighty matters, were put to torture; as in a caſe of treaſon againſt the Prince, Cod.lib.9.tit.8.leg.3. Falſifiers of coyne might be examined by torment, lib.9.tit.24.leg.1. A woman ſuſpected for poiſonning her husband may be tortured. lib.9.tit.41.leg.3. They that are accuſed of witchcraft alſo may bee put to the rake, tit.18.leg.7, Where the woman is ſuſpected of adultery, the ſervants may be enforced by torture, tit.9.leg.3. Likewiſe in the murther of the husband or the wife, the ſervants may likewiſe bee urged, tit.16.leg.19. In theſe and the like waighty and urgent cauſes, the queſtion by torments hath beene allowed: But the practiſes of Papiſts, in tormenting of men and women, to wreſt from them their faith and conſcience, being perſons of honeſt and innocent life, not guilty of treaſon, murther, witchcraft, or ſuch like, was never heard of in times paſt, but is moſt cruell, and contrary to law.

Secondly, as touching the manner to bee uſed in inflicting of torments, there are certaine rules ſet downe in the Law. Firſt, Cod.lib. 9.tit.2.leg.13. Accuſatus non debet torqueri, &c. The guilty partie muſt not be tortured, unleſſe the accuſer do bind himſelfe to endure the like, if he prove not his accuſation. So then by this law, where torments are miniſtred, an accuſer ſhould be produced. Secondly, Cod. lib. 9. tit.22.leg.17. Non incipiendum à tormentis, &c. The Judge muſt not begin with torments, but be induced by other arguments to doe it. Thirdly, lib.9. tit. 2. leg.17. Honor. Qui torquetur non debet interrogari de sociis: He that is tortured, muſt not be urged to bewray his fellowes. And in their owne law it is thus decreed: Cauſ. 5. qu.5.c.4. Nec illi credendi, &c. They muſt not be beleeved that of themſelves doe appeach others, but let the religious tormentor fetch out the truth by putting him to paine, &c. Thus wee ſee what moderation the law would have obſerved in tormenting. But the popiſh tormentors contrary to theſe rules have applied torments, without any accuſer, having no other evidence to induce them; and only to this end, to cauſe them one to betray an other. See the ſtory of Anne askew, apud Foxum.

In the third place, let us ſee what perſons are exempted from torments by the law. Firſt, lib.9.tit.41. leg.7 Diocleſ. The ſervant muſt not be tormented againſt his maſter; nor yet ſouldiers, ibid.leg.8. Diocl. nor Noblemen, leg. 11. nor innocents, leg. 17. Honor. Clergie men muſt confeſſe the truth, citra injuriam quaſtionis, without torture, Cod. lib. 1.tit. 8. Theodoſ. But the Romiſh tormentors in their crueltie have violated all good lawes; tormenting not only ſervants to confeſſe againſt their maſters, but Pag.1810.
children againſt their parents, as Tyrrell burned Roſe Allins hand with a candle till the ſinewes burſt, Fox p. 2006. They have not ſpared moſt cruelly to handle noblemen, much more ſouldiers: See the ſtory of Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle Lord Cobham, apud Foxum. They have vexed with their torments juſt and innocent men: as Thomas Tomkins a godly and devout man, well reported of all his neigh- Pag 1394.
bours, had his hand ſo ſcorched with a candle by Bonner, that the water ſparkled out of the ſinewes, Pag.1120.1.
Fox pag.1534. Laſtly, they have exerciſed with torments Miniſters and Deacons of the Church: as Adam Damlip at Calice, Fox pag. 1229. And Cuthbert Simſon a Deacon of the congregation, was thrice Pag. 1843.2.52.
racked in one day, ſtood three houres in an iron engine, had his fingers grated with an arrow, and all to betray the congregation: See the ſtory, pag. 2031. Thus it is evident how cruelly, contrary to the ancient Imperiall lawes, thoſe cruell perſecutors have tormented the poore profeſſors of the Goſpell: yea and contrary to their owne lawes; Cauſ. 23. qu. 5.c. 1. Scelerum confeſſionem non extendente equuleo, non ſulcantibus ungulis, non urentibus flammis: The confeſſion of faults muſt not be wreſted out, by ſtretching out upon the racke, or ſlitting or grating with engines, ſcorching with flames, &c. And thus in every of theſe points in proceeding againſt Chriſtians without witneſſe, or accuſing, in tyrannizing againſt them unto death even by their owne oath, in vexing of them with unſpeakable torments, they have tranſgreſſed and violated both divine and humane lawes. But now I will proceed to the reſt.

In the fourth place: Where have they learned ſo hotly and fiercely to purſue ſimple men and women to death, for none or very ſmall offences, which they notwithſtanding falſely called hereſie? Was it hereſie for Iames Brewſter to heare one Sweeting to reade many good things out of a certaine booke? or for the ſame Sweeting, when as the ſaid Iames ſhould ſay, Now the Son of the living God helpe us, to anſwer: Now almighty God ſo do? yet for theſe hereſies were they both condemned and burnt in Smithfield. Anno 1511.Fox.pag.818.

One Thomas Sanpaulinus Martyr,becauſe he rebuked a man for ſwearing,was thereupon ſuſpected to be a Lutheran,examined,condemned and burned at Paris,anno 1551. p.904.Many ſuch like examples might bee produced of holy Martyrs, which for theſe and ſuch other great hereſies were put to death. And as the offences were very ſmall, as we ſee, ſo their manner of proceeding was moſt cruell, void of all humanity. They ſpared not woman with child. We have not forgotten that famous example of their cruelty,which ſhall be ever remembred to their perpetuall ſhame and infamy: How they burned three ſimple women in the Iſle of Garnſey,anno 1556.which had ſubmitted themſelves to their mercy, one of the three was great with child,which braſt out of her womb in the midſt of the fire,and was throwne in againe,pag. 1944. They had no compaſſion of the tender age of children. In the town of Byrbroke,while Rich.Chapman did penance in the Church,being enjoyned to kneele barefoot,and bare legged all the ſermon while upon the cold ſteps of the Church; a little boy for giving him his hat to kneele upon,was had into the Veſtry and piteouſly ſcourged,p.1047.Cruell Bonner burned Richard Mekins a childe of fifteene yeeres, for ſpeaking againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, who notwithſtanding at the ſtake was taught to ſpeake much good of the Biſhop of London,and ſo did, p.1202. Iohn Fettie his childe being of eight yeeres old,for ſaying to one of the Biſhops Chaplens, that he had Balaams marke, was ſcourged ſo cruelly, that within 14.daies he died. Nay, ſuch was their cruelty, they condemned to death men that were beſtraught of their wits: as Collins and Conbridge were burned being both franticke: See their ſtory,pag. 1131.

Tit.3.10.

Where is now that lenity and compaſſion,which ought to be in the Miniſters of the Goſpell? Such cruelty was not heard of,no not amongſt the heathen. Yea they breake their own law:which ſuffereth a man once to abjure his hereſie,but if afterward he be detected he dieth without mercy:*Fox an.*1511. William Carder and Agnes Grebil were condemned,though they ſubmitted themſelves and promiſed to be conformable to their religion,pag.1277. Yet this law of theirs is moſt unjuſt,and contrary to the Goſpell, which ſaith, that if thy brother ſinne againſt thee ſeven times in a day, and ſeven times in a day turne againe,and ſay,It repenteth me,thou ſhalt forgive him, Luk.17.4. Yet theſe men will forgive but once,and not that neither. But S.Paul ſaith, An heretike after once or twice admonition reject. Bellarmine his beſt anſwer is by denying the text,ſaying,that it was not ſo read in former times: but thus after once admonition.*De laicis cap.*22.

This Popiſh rigor is much contrary to the ancient lenity, that was uſed in former times. *African. Conc.can.*33.it was decreed,*Vt cum Donatiſtis leniter & pacifice ageretur, Ne forte, ſicut dicit Apoſtolus, nobis in manſuetudine corripientibus diverſa ſentientes,det Deus illis pœnitentiam,&c.*2 Tim.2.That the Donatiſt ſhould be gently and peaceably handled, if perhaps, as the Apoſtle ſaith, while we with all gentlenes correct thoſe that are otherwiſe minded,God may give them repentance.

*Leo epiſt.*13. Sedis Apoſtolica moderatio hanc temperantiam obſervat,ut ſeverius agat cum obduratis, & veniam cupiat præſtare correctis: This Apoſtolike Sea hath alwaies kept this moderation, to deale more ſeverely with the obdurate and obſtinate,and to ſhew mercy to the corrigible,&c.This moderation is now quite baniſhed from this Sea,as in theſe former examples is to be ſeene. There was more clemency uſed in *Aug.*time: for then Biſhops did not provoke the Magiſtrate to execute whom they had condemned,but did entreate the Magiſtrate to ſhew compaſſion unto Heretikes,not ſtraightwaies to puniſh them with death: Ne ſic vitam iſtam finiant (ſaith Aug.) per ſupplicium,ut ea finita non poſſint finire ſupplicium: Leſt they ſhould ſo end this life by puniſhment, that the life being ended, they ſhould never end their puniſhment: *Epiſt.*54.And in another place: *Sic eorum peccata compeſce,ut ſint, quos pœniteat peccaſſe.Epiſt.*159. So reſtraine their ſinnes,that they may yet remaine to repent them of their ſinnes,&c.In thoſe daies therefore,men were not by and by puniſhed with death to prevent their repentance, as in time of popery, but their repentance was expected, to deliver them from the ſentence of death.

Certaine notes touching the Spaniſh Inquiſition.

NOw in the laſt place I will briefly ſhew how their cruell proceeding againſt the profeſſors of the Goſpell, and chiefly in their Spaniſh Inquiſition, as it is called, is contrary to their owne Canons. Firſt, to extort faith by ſtripes and torments, is termed in their law, Nova & inaudita prædicatio, A new and ſtrange learning, *diſt.*45. *Gregor. c.*1. yet uſed altogether by them in their Inquſition.

Secondly, their uſe hath been to intreate for offenders to the ſecular power, Ut citra mortis periculum ſententia moderetur, That the ſentence might bee moderated without the perill or puniſhment of death, decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 40. c. 27. Innocent. 3. And againe, Sext. decret. lib. 5. tit. 11 c. 1. Innocent. 4. Medicinalis ſit excommunicatio non mortalis : Excommunication ſhould be medicinall, not mortall, &c. But their excommunicatiōs were unto death : for whom they did for hereſie (as they falſely called it) excommunicate, the ſecular power did execute to death. Thirdly, their Inquiſition is made in ſecret, the Martyrs were privily condemned, and never publikely produced, till they were brought forth to execution contrarie to the decree of Innocent. 3. decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 29. c. 24. Ne eccleſiaſticum judicium fiat in tenebris quia juxta teſtimonium veritatis, Qui male agit, odit, lucem : That eccleſiaſticall judgement ſhould not be done in the darke, or in corners : for according to the teſtimonie of the truth it ſelfe, Hee that doth evill, hateth the light, &c. So then it is manifeſt, that their doings were evill, ſeeing they ſought into corners. Fourthly, they in their phariſaicall proceedings ſuppreſſe the names of the accuſers and witneſſes, though there be no danger at all feared in the publiſhing of them : contrarie to the decree of Bonif. 8. ſext. decr. lib. 5. tit. 2. c. 20. Ceſſante periculo, publicanda, &c. Where there is no danger, the names both of the accuſer and the witneſſes muſt be publiſhed. Fifthly, divers conſtitutions have beene made concerning the perſon, qualitie, and condition of accuſers : as Cod. lib. 9. tit. 1. leg. 12. A woman is not admitted to be an accuſer. Likewiſe in their decrees : Cauſ. 2. qu. 1. c. 14. One brother is not to accuſe another. Cod. lib. 9. tit. 1. leg. 13. nor hee that is nouriſhed, his patrone or nouriſher. Ibid. leg. 17. nor the ſervant his maſter, leg. 20. No infamous perſon can be received to be an accuſer, ibid. leg. 15. And in their owne law, Cauſ. 2. qu. 7. c. 13. Yet notwithſtanding they contrarie to theſe ancient proviſions, have admitted women to accuſe their husbands, children their parentrs, ſervants their maſters ; yea infamous, adulterous and perjured perſons have not been refuſed. I need not give an inſtance here in particular, their cruell practiſes are full every where of ſuch examples. Sixthly, concerning the uſage of ſuch as were impriſoned for religion, the Popes owne decree is this : Clemen. lib. 5. tit. 3. c. 1. Ut fideliter & abſq; diminutione, &c. That ſuch things as are offered to the priſoners by their friends, ſhould faithfully & without diminution be miniſtred unto them, &c. But their practice was contrarie : ſee the ſtorie of Robert Samuel, who was allowed but three mouthfuls of bread, and three ſpoonfuls of water by the day, till his bodie was ſo dried up, that hee could make no urine at all, which hee oft deſired to drinke, Fox pag. 1704.

Thus much of this queſtion, as likewiſe of the whole controverſie : and thus farre alſo concerning ſuch controverſies, as are moved about the Church militant here upon earth ; which we have hitherto proſecuted by the Lords gracious aſſiſtance : In the next place we are to deale in thoſe controverſies, which concerne the other part of the Church triumphant in heaven.

Here follow the Controverſies concerning the Church Triumphant,

THey are two in number: The firſt is as touching the condition, office, and miniſterie of Angels: The ſecond of and concerning the Saints departed.

The eighth Controverſie concerning Angels.

THis Controverſie containeth three queſtions. Firſt, of the Hierarchie and degrees of Angels. Secondly, of their miniſterie and office. Thirdly, of the worſhip and invocation of Angels,

The firſt Queſtion, Concerning the celeſtiall Hierarchie, or degrees of Angels.

THis queſtion hath likewiſe two parts: Firſt, how many degrees there bee of Angels. Secondly, whether Michael be the Prince of Angels.

The firſt part, Of the divers orders and degrees of Angels.

The Papiſts.

1. Error. THey doe boldly affirme, that there are nine orders of Angels: and thoſe that doe doubt of it, they charge with infidelitie and blaſphemy. There are firſt Principalities, then Poteſtates: Thirdly, Powers: Fourthly, Dominations, *Epheſ.*1.21. Fifthly, there are Thrones, *Coloſſ.*1.16. unto theſe adde foure other, Cherubim, Seraphim, Angels, Archangels: ſo have we nine in all, Rhem. annot. Epheſ. 1. *ſect.*4.

Clictov in lib. 2. c.3. Damaſcen. de Orthodox. fid.

All theſe nine orders, they herein following Dionyſius conceit doe diſtinguiſh out three ranks: the firſt containeth Seraphim, Cherubim, and Thrones: the ſecond Powers, Dominions, and Vertues: the third Angels, Archangels, Principalities. The firſt three they call aſſiſting ſpirits, or attendants, which alwayes are in Gods preſence: the other are miniſtring ſpirits, which receive their direction from the ſuperiour three orders. Thus Clictoveus following Damaſcene, and Damaſcene Dionyſius.

The Proteſtants.

AS of the diverſitie of names we gather, that there are divers orders, as Hierome ſaith, Sine cauſâ diverſitas eſt nominum, ubi non eſt diverſitas meritorum: There is reaſon to have diverſitie of names, where there is no diverſitie of merit, &c. that is, vertue: So to enquire of them more ſubtilly, to define their number, and appoint their degrees: it is a point not only of fooliſh curioſitie, but alſo of ungodly and dangerous raſhneſſe, Fulk, ibid.

Argum. 1. That the Scripture alloweth no ſuch difference or diſtinction of orders or degrees amongſt the Angels it may thus appeare: firſt, Epheſ. 6.12. the Apoſtle giveth two of the names of theſe orders to evill angels, namely, Principalities, and Poteſtates: from which place I reaſon thus: If theſe be names of orders and degrees, then they may bee found amongſt the evill angels as well as amongſt the good: and if ſome of theſe degrees are amongſt the evill angels, then why not the reſt alſo? and ſo we ſhall have Seraphim and Cherubim amongſt the evill and reprobate angels, which were blaſphemy to affirme. Indeed Origen ſeemeth to be of that opinion, Ego arbitror quod omnia eorundem nominum ſunt apud Diabolum, &c. I thinke all theſe names of angels to be with the Devill, as they are with God: *Hom.*17. in Matth. But let this goe among other of his Paradoxes.

Epheſ.6.12.

Againe, they that hold thoſe nine orders of Angels, doe make Cherubim, Seraphim, and Thrones, the three higheſt: ſaying further, that Superiora agmina ab intimis nunquam recedunt: The ſuperiour orders doe never depart from the preſence of God, and that the Angels of the inferiour orders are ſent in embaſſage from God: *Mag. lib.*2. *diſtinct.*10.a. But contrarie to this aſſertion, Eſay 6. wee read that the Seraphims alſo are ſent upon Gods meſſage: and ſo wee conclude, that Seraphims are not of the higheſt and ſuperiour order.

Eſay 6.6.

Further, Michael and Gabriel are ſpirits of the higheſt nature and office, as appeareth by their names: the firſt ſignifying one that is equall to God; the other, the ſtrength of God: and yet they are called Angels. Wherefore thoſe orders are confounded in Scripture, and no ſuch preciſe difference amongſt the Angels can there be found: and the Apoſtle ſaith, They are all miniſtring ſpirits, Heb. 1. adminiſtratorii ſpiritus: therefore not commanding ſpirits one over another.

Heb.1.14.

Luk.1.14. And Gabriel ſaith: I am Gabriel that ſtood in the preſence of God, and am ſent to ſpeake unto thee: therefore the ſame Angels are both attendants and miniſtring ſpirits.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quid inter ſe diſtent quatuor illa vocabula, (throni, dominationes, principatus, poteſtates) dicant qui poſſunt ſi tamen poſſunt probare quod dicunt, ego me iſta ignorare confiteor: What difference there is betweene theſe foure words, Thrones, Dominations, Principalities, Powers, let them tell us that be able, ſo they can prove that they tell us: for my part, I confeſſe I know it not, *Auguſt. Enchirid. cap.*58. With Auguſtine therefore we confeſſe, that as it appeareth by theſe ſeverall names, there are diſtinct orders of Angels: ſo how many there be, and how they are diſtinguiſhed, the Scripture hath not revealed unto us: and it were curioſitie for us to enquire: for we ſhall then know, when we ſhall be like unto the Angels.

Irenæus lib.2. c.55. And before Auguſtine Irenæus thus delivered his opinion, they doe delirare doat, which take upon them to ſhew, Numerum Angelorum, ordinem Archangelorum, thronorum ſacramenta, diverſitates dominationum, &c. The number of the Angels, order of the Aarchangels, myſterie of the Thrones, the diverſitie of Dominions, Principalities, Powers, Vertues, &c.

Lib.3. de Theolog. The ſame is the judgement of other Chriſtian Churches. 1 Of the Greeke Church Gregorie Nazianzene writing of the nature of the angels, ſaith of them in generall, Divinæ ſunt voluntatis miniſtra, &c. Hæ obeunt omnia omnib. & ubique cum miniſterii ſtudio, &c. præſentes: They are miniſters of the divine will, thoſe doe goe about all buſineſſe for all men, and are everie where preſent with a deſire to miniſter, &c. Damaſcen. lib. 2. de fid. Orthod. c.3. Yea Damaſcene himſelfe ſaith: They are converſant in heaven, and have one office to praiſe God, and to miniſter unto his will: Their office then is not diſtinguiſhed in ſuch ſort, as is before alleaged.

Maxim. lib. 3. de creation. c.16. 2 Of the South Church we have Maximus the Ægyptian Philoſopher, who ſaith, Omnis angelica natura in duo diviſa eſt, in ſanctas & ſceleſtas, &c. All the angelicall nature is divided into two, the holy and wicked angels, &c. Athanaſ. lib. de commun. eſſent. patris, filii, & ſpirit. Athanaſius ſaith of the angels in generall, Conditos eſſe in obſequium laudemque Dei, & hominum miniſteria: That they were created for obedience unto and praiſe of God, and the miniſterie of men, &c. Anton. ep. 12. Antonius ſaith, the Angels differ in this, that ſome are called Archangels, Powers, Dominions, Cherubim, becauſe they kept the will of the Creator: Alii vocantur Diaboli, Dæmones, &c. Other are called Devils, Spirits, Satan, &c. for their wicked inventions, &c.

Harm. ſect.3. pag.56,58. 3 French Confeſſ. artic. 2. The Angels preſerved by the meere grace of God, are miniſters for his glorie, and for the ſalvation of the Elect. Belgia, art.2. He made the Angels, that they might be his Miniſters, and attend upon the Elect. They neither diſtinguiſh their orders nor their offices.

Comment. in Heb.1. numer. 94. 4 Ribera a Jeſuite ſheweth how Gregorie would not reſt upon the authoritie of Dionyſius in this matter: And whereas ſome thinke that he received it of Paul, Non taciturus authorem in re tam obſcura: He would not have concealed his author in ſo obſcure a matter, &c.

Then to conclude this point: In the angels there are foure things to be conſidered: 1 Their ſtation, place or order. 2 Their degree of illumination. 3 Their nature and ſubſtance. 4 Their office and miniſterie. Damaſcene confeſſeth, that they differ in the two firſt φωτισμῷ ϗ τάξει, in their divers illumination and ſtation: which may bee yeelded unto: that as the ſtarres differ in place and light one from another, the like difference may be among the angels: for there is no doubt, but that the celeſtiall Hierarchie is conſtituted in a moſt heavenly order: and like as there ſhall bee ſuch difference among the Saints, even in diverſitie of manſion, Iohn 14.2. John 14.2. So the like may bee affirmed among the angels. In generall we acknowledge diverſitie of degrees and powers among the angels, but to diſtinguiſh and range them into their diſtinct orders, it is a point of needleſſe curioſitie. In the other two, in nature and their worke, or miniſterie they differ not. Damaſcene affirmeth the one, that they have all ἐν ἔργῳ, one and the ſame worke to praiſe God, and miniſter unto his will. But hee doubteth whether they differ in Eſſence, or not. But Clictovæus is bold to affirme, that the angels doe differ ſpecie in kinde one from another, and that there is but one angell of one kinde: and his reaſon is, becauſe an angell propius accedit ad unitatem, quam homo, doth come neerer unto unitie than man: but this reaſon is againſt his opinion, for if there be many kindes and ſpecies of angels, and but one of men; Haymo ſuper 103. Pſal. the angels ſhall be further from the nature of unitie than men. But herein the opinion of Haymo is to be preferred, who ſpeaking of ſpirits ſaith, they are greater ſome than others, Non ſubſtantia ſed poteſtate, not in ſubſtance, but in power.

Chriſtians ſhould ſtay themſelves in theſe curious and ſubtile queſtions, and not exceed the bounds and limits of Scripture. The heretikes called Ophiani, as Celſus objecteth againſt the Chriſtians, had the like phantaſticall conceit of the ſpirits: The firſt they named Michael in ſhape like unto a Lion: The ſecond Suriel like an Oxe: The third Raphael like a Draggon: The fourth Gabriel like an Eagle: The fifth Thauthabaoth like a Beare: The ſixth Erathaoth like a Dog: The ſeventh Thaphaoth Lib.6. adverſ. Celſum. like an Aſſe. Origen anſwereth Celſus, that theſe monſtrous fancies are not de prompta ex Chriſtiana doctrina, ſed prorſus aliena: are not taken out of Chriſtian learning, but are altogether contrarie to it. Let Chriſtians then take heed of ſuch curious ſpeculations.

The ſecond part, VVhether Michael be the Prince of Angels.

The Papiſts.

THey ſay, that in Heaven beſide God himſelfe, there is another commander and captaine of the Angels, even Michael the Prince of the Angels: which place the Devill had in the beginning before his fall. For as the Scripture ſaith, the Devill and his angels, meaning that all evill angels are ſubject unto him; ſo by Michael and his angels, we underſtand all good angels, that are likewiſe ſubject to him, Apocal. 12.7. Rhemiſt. Bellarm. de pontif. lib. 1, cap. 9. 2. Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, Michael in that place ſignifieth Chriſt, who is Lord of the angels: for the angels cannot be ſaid to be any other Michaels Angels, but onely the Angels of God and Chriſt, Fulk. ibid. This is alſo proved by the text, *v.*10. Now is come ſalvation, the kingdome of our God, and the power of his Chriſt, for the accuſer of the brethren is caſt out. Here he is called Chriſt, which before is named Michael. Auguſtine alſo expoundeth it, Michaelem intellige Chriſtũ: By Michael underſtand Chriſt: *Hom.*9. in Apoc.

Secondly, it followeth not that as there is a chiefe and captaine of the evill angels, ſo amongſt the good there ſhould be a chiefe Angell above the reſt beſide Chriſt: for it is ſufficient that there is one Lord and Prince of the Angels, even Chriſt. Againe, neither is it proved out of Scripture, that amongſt the devils there is one captaine and great devill to whom the reſt were ſubjects: for whereas the Phariſies objected, that Chriſt caſt out devils through Beelzebub the Prince of the devils, Mark. 3. if either the Phariſies did then ſo meane, or any ſhall now gather upon their words, that there is a great Mark.3.23. maſter devill that ruleth and commandeth the reſt, it was in them but a phariſaicall dreame, and in the other a popiſh collection. Wee deny not, but that there may be degrees in power and angelicall gifts, both among the good and bad angels, as there ſhall bee degrees in glorie among the Saints: yet the Saints ſhall not bee Princes one over the other, no more are the Angels now. Thirdly, marke the anſwer of our Saviour in that place, If Satan caſt out Satan, Marke 3. Here Satan is made a common name to all evill ſpirits. But Apocal. 12. where mention is made of the Devill and his angels, the text ſaith, *The great dragon, the old ſerpent, called the devill and Sathanas, verſ.*9. Here the name Sathanas Revel.12.9. is given to the Prince of the Devils: ſo there is not one Sathanas, but many. And where our Saviour calleth the Devill the Prince of the world, *Ioh.*14. S. Paul calleth them all principalities and powers, John 14.30. worldly governours, and princes of the darkneſſe of this world, *Epheſ.*6.12. ſo there is not one prince Epheſ.6.12. of the devils, but they are all princes. Thus Auguſtine expoundeth that place: Draco pugnavit & angeli ejus: id eſt, diabolus & homines voluntati ejus obtemperantes: The dragon fought and his angels, that is, wicked men obeying his will, *Apocalypſ. Hom.*9. So by Auguſtines ſentence the devils are not ſubjects to the great Devill, but they are all princes and commanders of wicked men.

Argum. If Michael be the Prince of the Angels, then it muſt needs be granted, that he is of the higheſt order of Angels, which are Seraphim and Cherubim: for ſo theſe Angell-makers doe place them: Theſe three, Seraphim, Cherubim, Thrones, make the higheſt ranke: Dominations, Principalities, Potentates the middle order: Powers, Archangels, Angels the loweſt region, *Mag. lib.*2. *diſtinct.*9.a. But Michael being an Archangell is in the loweſt order, and therefore cannot be the chiefe and commander of the reſt.

Further, the Apoſtle ſaith, They are all λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα, miniſtring ſpirits, *Hebr.*1.14. Ergo, not Heb.1.14. commanding ſpirits one over another.

Now for further evidence. 1 Even Damaſcene, who maketh nine orders of Angels, yet maketh not De fid Orthodox. lib.2.c.3. one Angell commander of the reſt: but ſaith that the Angels, οἱ ὑπερέχοντες, which are ſuperiour, doe communicate their knowledge unto thoſe which are under them, &c. he maketh not one ſuperiour to all the reſt, but one order ſuperiour to another.

2 Origen, who was before produced as of the Greeke and Eaſt Church, becauſe hee was ordained a Presbyter of Cœſarea by Theoctiſtus the Biſhop there, is rather a witneſſe for the doctrine of the South Church, being borne in Ægypt, and brought up at Alexandria, where he was the governour of the famous ſchoole there: he hath this notable teſtimony of this point now in queſtion: Quis alius Homil.6. in Ioſua. eſt princeps militiæ virtutis Domini, niſi Dominus noſter Ieſus Chriſtus, &c. Who elſe is the Prince of the army of the ſtrength of God, but our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; for all the hoaſt of heaven, whether Angels, Archangels, Vertues, Dominions, Principalities, Powers, all theſe were made by him, Et ſub ipſo principe militant, And they warre under him, &c. Wee cannot have a more evident teſtimony, that there is no other Prince and Captaine of the Angels but Chriſt.

3 See the confeſſion of the reformed Churches in the former queſtion, which make all the Angels indifferently miniſtring ſpirits for the elect ſake: and if they all are miniſtring ſpirits, then is there not a ſoveraigne commander among them.

4 Gregorie is of the ſame opinion with Damaſcene: Quod Angeli à ſuperiorum Angelorum poteſtatib. diſpenſentur: That Angels are diſpoſed of by the power of ſuperiour Angels: hee maketh not one Angell Prince of all the reſt, but one order ſuperiour to another.

The ſecond Queſtion, Of the miniſterie and function of Angels.

THis queſtion hath two parts: firſt, of the externall miniſterie of Angels, in the protection and defence of the Church. Secondly, of their ſpirituall office about the prayers of Gods ſervants.

The firſt Part, Concerning the defence and protection of Angels.

The Papiſts.

3. Error. Dan.10.21. MIchael (ſay they) is the protector and keeper of the whole Church of Chriſt, *Dan.*10.21. And as earthly kingdomes have their ſpeciall Angels for their protectors, ſo alſo have particular Churches, *Dan.*10. Rhemiſt. annot. 1. *Apoc. ſect.*9.

Exod.14.19. Our Doway Divines doe prove the ſpeciall deputation of Angels to ſome countrey by that place, *Exod.*14.19. how the Angell of God that went before the camp of Iſrael removed behinde: Annot. upon that place.

Anſw. 1. That Angell was Chriſt, who is the perpetuall protector of his Church: for the Lord ſaith of that Angell, *Exod.*23.22. my name is in him. 2 And though it be admitted that he was a created Angell, yet that he had the ſpeciall charge of Iſrael alone, that place proveth not.

The Proteſtants.

THe whole Church hath Chriſt himſelfe, who is the true Michael, for her protector and defender: And ſo is that place in Daniel to be underſtood. Auguſtine alſo by Michael underſtandeth Chriſt: the name alſo ſignifieth as much: Michael, that is, one like unto God: ſee more of this before, Controv.4. queſt.1. The Scripture ſaith, All power is given to Chriſt, and hee is with his Church to the end of the world, *Matth.*28.18,20. He therefore is the chiefe patron and protector of his Church. Math.28.18.

Secondly, it cannot be proved out of Scripture, that kingdomes have their ſpeciall Angels protectors, for *Dan.*10. the Princes of the Perſians and Grecians were not Angels, but earthly Princes: for Angels do not reſiſt Chriſt and his Angels defenders of the Church, as the Prince of Perſia did, *verſ.*13. Fulk. ibid. but all the Angels of Heaven are ready to ſerve the Lord at his pleaſure, for the defence of his Church, without any limitation of place, *Zachar.*1.10. Theſe are they whom the Lord hath ſent, to goe thorow the world. The Angels execute their meſſage, not in ſeverall countries, but in the whole world. Zach.1.10.

The Papiſts.

4. Error. Gen.48.16. Acts 12.11. Math.18.10. EVerie one hath from his nativitie an Angell for his cuſtody and patronage againſt the wicked, before the face of God, *Geneſ.*48.16. Iacob ſaith, The Angell that hath kept me from my youth up: *Act.*12.15. It is his angell, *Rhemiſt. ibid. Matth.*18.10. Their Angels behold the face of my Father: Ergo, everie man hath his proper Angell: So alſo the Doway tranſlators, *Geneſ.*48.16.

Gen.48.16. Gen.31.13. Gen.32.1. Anſw. 1. Iacob by the Angell underſtandeth Chriſt, to whom it is proper to bleſſe Gods children: the Angell bleſſe thy children, ſaith he, *Geneſ.*48.16. This Angell appeared unto him in Bethel, and is called the God of Bethel, *Geneſ.*31.13. with this Angell Iacob wreſtled, 32. which was God, as it appeareth by the name of Iacob, hee is called Iſrael, becauſe he had prevailed with God, and the place is called Peniel, I have ſeene God face to face: Other proper Angell Iacob had none, for all the Angels of God were appointed for his defence, *Geneſ.*32.1. Hee met an hoſt of Gods Angels, and accordingly called the place Mahanaim.

2 Neither of the other places prove that men have proper Angels, *Matth.*18. The children of God are ſaid to have their Angels: not theirs, as everie man his proper Angell, but theirs in common, becauſe they were deputed for their defence: Acts 12. Peter at that time was delivered by one Angell, but it followeth not, that therefore he was his proper Angell from his nativitie, for Peter himſelfe ſaith the Lord hath ſent his Angell, not my Angell: and they might ſpeake ex communni conceptione, out of a common opinion, as Maſter Calvin ſaith, *Inſtitut. lib.*1.*c.*14.7. as they had the like conceit, that if any had ſeene an Angell, he ſhould die, *Iudg.*6.22. and 13.12.

The Proteſtants.

WE nothing doubt of the protection of Gods Angels: but that everie one hath a proper Angell appointed for his protection from his nativitie, out of Scripture it is not proved.

Exod.23.20. 1 Sometime one Angell hath the charge of a multitude, as the Angell that ſmote the firſt borne of Ægypt, but preſerved the Iſraelites, whoſe doore poſts were ſtricken with the bloud of the Paſchall Lamb, Exod. 12. ſo one Angell was appointed to deliver the Apoſtles that were ſhut up in priſon: Acts 5.14.

Gen.23.1. Pſal.91.11. 2 Sometime many Angels are ready for the defence of one man: *Gen.*32.1. an hoſt of Angels met *Iacob, Pſal.*91.11. Hee ſhall give his Angels charge over thee, to keepe thee in all thy wayes: Ergo, everie man hath not his particular proper Angell.

3 Luke 16.22. The poore man is ſaid, being dead, to be carried not by one Angel, but by the Angels, into the boſome of Abraham. But if he had one Angell appointed to be the preſident of his life from his nativity, it had beene alſo part of that Angels charge, to have convayed his ſoule into heaven. So Auguſtine writeth: *Si bene vixerimus, ubi à carnis vinculo anima liberata fuerit, mox in occurſum noſtrum Angelorum chorus occurret. De ſalutaribus, document. cap.*40. If we lived well here, when as the ſoule is gone from the body, the holy company of the Angels are ready to meet us: he ſaith not one Angell, but the whole chore or company.

Laſtly, they that hold, that every man hath a good Angell appointed for his cuſtody at his nativitie, doe alſo affirme, that every wicked man hath alſo an evill Angell waiting upon him. But this cannot be, for ſeeing it is confeſſed that the good Angels are more in number than the bad, *Magiſt. lib.*2. *diſt.*11. b. but wicked men doe contrariwiſe exceed the good in number, it muſt needs follow, that there is not for every evill man an evill Angell, or elſe that there are more good Angels, than for every man one: the Maſter of the Sentences anſwereth, that one Angell may ſerve divers men ſucceſſively, for men die, but the Angels die not, and ſo notwithſtanding every man ſhall have his Angell.

Anſw. 1. Yet the objection is not anſwered, for in every age the good men are feweſt, and the evill men moſt, and not onely in reſpect of the whole age of the world, and yet the good Angels are more than the bad. 2 To admit this diſtinction, yet ſeeing the number of good men is ſomtime more, ſometime leſſe, as toward the end of the world, when faith ſhall faile, but the number of Angels is alwayes the ſame, it cannot be that every man ſhould have his Angell, and every Angell his particular charge of ſome one man.

There remaineth here no more to be anſwered, than, that every Angell hath not a particular charge of ſome one of the elect, though every one of the elect hath his particular Angell: but this ſhould make a difference in the miniſtery and diſpenſation of the Angels, whereas the Apoſtle ſaith of them all equally, Are they not all miniſtring ſpirits ſent forth to miniſter for their ſake, that ſhall bee heires of ſalvation.

Heb.1.14.

Now further: 1 Chryſoſtome of the Greek Church thus ſaith, Ad tutelam noſtram conſtituit exercitus Angelorum, ut eorum præſentia dæmonum confringatur audatia: God appointeth for our cuſtody armies of Angels, that by their preſence, the inſolence of the devils may be ſuppreſſed. Hence may be gathered this argument, that ſeeing not one evill ſpirit, but many doe aſſault men: as Mary had ſeven devills caſt out of her, Luke 8. 2. and another was poſſeſſed with a legion of devils, *Mark.*5. 9. we are to think that God hath ſet as ſtrong a guard of good Angels to defend, as there is of evill to offend: and therefore it is probable, that more than one Angell are appointed for the cuſtody of the faithfull.

Hom. de aſcenſion. Domini.

2 Origen, who ſeemeth moſt to favour this opinion of the ſingular cuſtody of Angels, yet is doubtfull when the Angels ſhould receive this particular charge: ſome think (ſaith he) that every one of thoſe which are foreknowne of God as ſoone as he is borne, doth accipere Angelum præpoſitum, receive the Angell ſet over him: Others think it is, cum fuerint per regenerationem renati, when they are borne againe by regeneration: in tempore enim infidelitatis eſt homo ſub Angelis Satanæ: for in the time of unbeleefe man is under the Angels of Satan. Here then is a great difficulty: for if at the birth the Angell is given, then the Angels know who are elected, for they are protectors onely of the elect: but the Apoſtle ſaith, the Lord knoweth who are his: the Angels know it not: if onely at the time of their converſion: then the elect ſhall be without the protection of Angels ſometime, untill they goe out of the world, as the theefe was converted upon the croſſe.

Tract.5. in Mat.

2 Timoth. 2. 19.

Yea Origen himſelfe ſometime leaveth that conceit of the particular deputation of Angels: Vbicunque ſunt timentes Deum, ibi ſunt caſtra Angelorum, &c. Whereſoever are men fearing God, there are armies of Angels, as Iacob called a certain place, the houſe of God, ſo the Angels pitched their tents about Eliſeus, ſo Chriſt could have obtained of his father legions of Angels, &c.

Tract.35. in Matth.

3 Confeſſion of Belgia, *artic.*12. He made the Angels all good by nature, that they might be his miniſters, and might alſo attend upon the elect, &c. They in generall hold the Angels to be miniſters for the elect ſake, and not otherwiſe. And ſo Calvin reſolveth well, hoc pro certo habendum, &c. This is to be held for a certainty, that not onely one Angell hath care for every one of us, but that all of them with a common conſent doe watch over our ſalvation.

Lib.1. Inſtit. cap.14. ſect.7.

4 Haymo, whom the Romaniſts doe challenge for theirs, ſaith, An unuſquiſque homo habet Angelũ, non eſt certum nobis: Whether every one of us have his Angell, it is not knowne certainly to us, &c. And indeed there are here divers uncertainties: for the Romaniſts hold that every one hath an Angell given him for his protection, as the Rhemiſts before alleaged, and ſo our Doway men, *Gen.*18. *v.*16. and before them Clichtoveus: Cuique hominum ſigillatim deſignatus eſt Angelus; To every man ſeverally is aſſigned his Angell. But Origen ſaith, that they only receive their Angels, qui præcogniti à Deo, which are foreknowne of God. The Rhemiſts will have this charge of the Angels to begin from the nativity: but Origen ſaith, tutores dati ſunt converſis, they are given as tutors unto thoſe that are converted, &c. Wherefore leaving ſuch curious points, it is more ſafe to hold, that not onely one, but many Angels are appointed for the defence of the faithfull.

The

The ſecond part, What office the Angels have about our prayers.

The Papiſts.

Hæreſ.5. Revel.8.2. THeir opinion is, that the Angels doe offer up our prayers unto God. And they would prove it by that place, *Apoc.*8.2. An angell ſtood by the altar with a golden cenſer, and much incenſe was given unto him to offer with the prayers of the Saints, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſw. Auguſtine upon this place ſaith, that this angell is Chriſt: Thuribulum aureum eſt corpus ejus ſanctum, the golden cenſer is his body, ex quo Deus odorem ſuavitatis accepit, out of the which God ſmelt a ſweet ſavour, Homil. in Apocalyp.6. And in another place hee ſaith, Vt altare ſanctificat dona, ſic Chriſtus preces noſtras, as the altar ſanctifieth the gift, ſo Chriſt doth our prayers, *qu. in Evangel.*34. Firſt therefore this place is underſtood of Chriſt, not of any angell.

2 If this place might be underſtood of angels, that they have ſome miniſterie about our prayers, it maketh nothing notwithſtanding for popiſh invocation of angels: for the angell here commendeth not the prayers of Saints by his merit, but by the much incenſe given unto him, to adde to the prayers of the Saints to make them acceptable, which is the ſweet ſmell and ſavour of the precious death and merits of Chriſt, Fulk in hunc locum. Auguſtine indeed ſometime aſcribeth ſuch an office unto the angels to carrie up our prayers to heaven, as their charge is to carrie up our ſoules: not as mediators or interceſſors, but as the Lords meſſengers and agents here upon earth, to report unto him our affaires: Dicuntur Angeli preces noſtras, & vota Deo offerre, non quia Deum doceant, quia omnia antequam fiant, &c. novit, ſed quia ſuper his ejus voluntatem conſulunt: The angels are ſaid to offer up our prayers and vowes unto God, not to informe or inſtruct the Lord, but onely to conſult and know his pleaſure: *tom.9. de diligendo Deo, cap.*3. *& in Pſal.*74. for the angels have two offices, the one to execute the commandement of God in the world, and to attend upon him to receive their charge, Matth. 18.10. the other to returne unto God as faithfull meſſengers the ſucceſſe of their buſineſſe in the world, *Zach.*1.10. Now whether the angels be appointed of God to report unto him our ſayings and doings, as other affaires of our life, the Scripture no where evidently ſheweth. Neither, if it were granted, would it any thing help their popiſh invocation of angels.

Matth.18.10. Fulk Zach.1.10.

Rhemiſts alleage *Tob.*12.12. to prove the offering of our prayers by angels.

Anſw. It is neither Canonicall Scripture, nor agreeable unto it: *Fulk annot. Coloſſ.2. ſect.*3.

Our Doway tranſlators upon that place, Exod. 19.9. Moſes had told the words of the people to the Lord, thus inferre: So Angels and Saints offer our prayers and other good works to God, &c.

Anſw. 1. It followeth not, becauſe Moſes now living reported unto God the words of the people; that the Saints departed doe it that heare us not: or the angels to whom we finde no ſuch thing given in charge, as here was unto Moſes. 2 And yet, though it be granted, as it may be without inconvenience, that angels report unto God our prayers as other our works, not as mediators, but as meſſengers, yet this will make nothing for invocation, as ſhall be afterward ſeene.

The Proteſtants.

THe Scripture alwayes maketh Chriſt our onely Mediatour, neither Angels nor Saints, by whom our prayers and all other ſpirituall ſacrifices are offered unto God.

Heb.13.15. 1 Peter 5. 1 *Hebr.*13.15. Let us by him offer the ſacrifice of praiſe alwayes to God: 1 *Pet.*2.5. You are an holy Prieſthood, to offer up ſpirituall ſacrifices acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt: Ergo, Chriſt Jeſus is our onely Mediatour.

Galath.3.19. Lib.3. de Trinitat. c.11. 1 Tim.2. 2 Galath. 3.19. The Law was ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator: Ergo, the angels are one office, and the Mediator another. Auguſtine ſaith, Quòd non aliquem ex Angelis dicit Mediatorem, ſed ipſum Dominum noſtrum Ieſum Chriſtum in quantum homo fieri dignatus eſt, habes alio loco: Vnum (inquit) Deus, & unus Mediator Dei & hominum, homo Chriſtus Ieſus: That the Apoſtle calleth not any of the Angels, but only Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Mediator, in that he vouchſafed to be made man, we have in another place: There is one God (ſaith he) and one Mediator of God and man, the man Ieſus Chriſt.

Now, whereas theſe three things are queſtioned concerning the miniſterie of angels about our prayers: firſt, whether they preſent our pravers to God: ſecondly, whether they pray for us: thirdly, whether they are to be prayed unto. The laſt is ſimply denied, as afterward followeth to bee ſhewed.

Lib. de ſpiritual. luctamin. For the two firſt: 1 Of the Greeke Church, Ephrem ſaith, Angelos piorum orationibus cum gaudio occurrere, illiſque ineffabilem lætitiam eſſe ſanctorum orationes puriſſimas Deo afferre. That the angels doe meet with the prayers of the godly, and that it is a great joy unto them to bring their pure prayers unto God, &c. They doe afferre, bring them as meſſengers, not offerre, offer or preſent them as Mediators.

In 19.c. Matth. Theophylact ſaith, forte pro nobis orant, perhaps they doe pray for us, &c. hee affirmeth it not certainly.

Luke 2.14. They pray for us in generall, as wiſhing well unto the elect, as their fellow ſervants: as in their heavenly ſong they wiſh peace in the earth, and good will unto men: but in particular that they offer up our requeſts, we have no warrant in Scripture.

2 Auguſtine of the African Church ſheweth, how the angels carrie up our prayers, as is before alleaged, to conſult or know his pleaſure about them. Origen of the Church of Alexandria granteth, that the Angels aſcend, ut hominum vota & preces perferant.&c. to carry up mens prayers and deſires: but they doe it not as Mediators: as he a little after ſaith, Vota & preces omnes & gratiarum actiones, ad Deum ſunt per Angelum tranſmittenda, qui per pontificem, vivens verbum, & Deum, Angelis eſt præfectus cæteris: id vero verbum ſummus deprecaturi: All our prayers, vowes, and thankſgivings muſt be ſent unto God by that Angell, which by the high Prieſt, by the living word, and God, is ſet over the reſt of the Angels: to this word will we pray, &c. He maketh Chriſt the word, the chiefe of the Angels, the onely Mediator of our prayers.

Lib.5.cont. Celſum, in initio.

3 Confeſſion of Wittemberg, chap. 23. We confeſſe, that the Saints in heaven doe after their certaine manner pray for us before God, as the Angels alſo are joyfull for us, and all the creatures doe after a certaine heavenly manner grone for our ſalvation: but as the worſhip or invocation of creatures is not to be inſtituted upon their groanings, ſo upon the prayer of the Saints in heaven we may not allow the adoration of Saints, &c. They grant a generall deſire and care in the Angels and Saints, no particular mediation about our prayers.

Harm.ſect.145.

4 And in this ſenſe ſaith Albinus of the Latine Church: that the Angels ad inſtar avium verba noſtra perferunt, like unto birds doe carry up our words. And againe, hee would not have one promiſe that which he cannot performe, non enim in ventum dicta tranſeunt, ſed à præſenti Angelo ſtatim perferuntur ad Dominum: for our words are not uttered in the wind, but they are preſently carried by the Angell, that is preſent, unto God, &c. The Angels then ſo report our prayers and good words, as they doe raſh and idle words, that is, as meſſengers, not as Mediators.

In 10.cap. Eccleſ.
In 5.cap Eccleſ.

An Appendix or third Part of this Queſtion, VVhether Angels or Saints know our hearts.

The Papiſts.

THe Angels and other celeſtiall ſpirits doe know our hearts and inward repentance: And betweene the Angels and the bleſſed ſoules of Saints, there is no difference in this caſe, the one being as highly exalted, and neere God, as the other, in whom and by whom onely they ſee and know our affaires: Luke 15. 10. There is joy in heaven, in the preſence of the Angels over one ſinner that repenteth: Ergo, they know our repentance, Rhemiſt. Luk. 15. ſect. 2.

Hæreſ.6.
Luke 15.10.

Anſw. 1. Our hearts and inward repentance are not knowne to the Angels, but by the fruits, and the true effects thereof.

2 Although the elect, after the reſurrection ſhall be like in glory to the Angels, yet it followeth not, that they ſhall be like in all things, much leſſe that their ſoules now in heaven, be in all things like unto the Angels, whoſe preſence and miniſtery God uſeth in the preſervation of his choſen.

3 That all things done in the world may be ſeene in God, as in a glaſſe, is but a profane ſpeculation, and the device of an idle braine, Fulk. ibid.

Argum. 2. Abraham had knowledge of things in earth, which were not in his time, as that they had Moſes and the Prophets books, which he never ſaw, Luk. 16. verſ. 29. Rhemiſt.

Anſw. Firſt, in this narration many things are ſpoken parabolically, out of the which we muſt not ground any doctrine not taught elſewhere in Scripture: for you may as well ſay, that ſoules have fingers and tongues, and that elementall water will quench hell fire, as that Abraham knew what books were written after his death.

Secondly, albeit that the doctrine of the Church comprehended in the Scriptures, might be revealed to Abraham after his death, yet it followeth not, that he knew all things, as you affirme the Saints doe, by beholding the majeſtie of God.

The Saints therefore in heaven know ſo much as the Lord thinketh good to reveale unto them, they know not all things.

The Proteſtants.

WE deny not, but that as Prophets and holy men in this life, may know many ſecret things revealed unto them by the Spirit of God, as Peter found out the ſecret fraud of Ananias and Saphira: Eliſeus being abſent found out Gehezi his corruption: yea, hee could tell what was done in the King of Syria his chamber, ſo the Lord may reveale unto the Saints in heaven at his pleaſure, ſome things done upon earth. But that they received any ſuch gift of God, to know all things done upon earth, it is a great untruth, and cleane contrary to the Scriptures.

Firſt, Salomon ſaith in his prayer unto God: Heare thou in heaven in thy dwelling place, and give unto every man according to his wayes, as thou knoweſt his heart: for thou onely knoweſt the hearts of all the children of men, 1 King. 8. 29. Out of this place we thus reaſon: He onely knoweth the heart, that is the judge of all men, and a rewarder of them according to their wayes: But the Lord only is judge: Ergo. Againe, the words themſelves be plaine, that God only knoweth the heart: ſo that what knowledge of ſecrets the Saints have, it is by revelation, not by ſearching the heart.

1 King.8.29.

Againe, S. Paul ſaith, No man knoweth the things of man ſave the ſpirit of man which is in him: ſo the things of God knoweth no man, but the ſpirit of God, 1 Cor. 1. 11. The Rhemiſts anſwer, that no man knoweth the ſecrets of the heart naturally, but by extraordinary gift he may, as the Prophets did.

1 Cor.1.11.

Anſw. No man ever had or can have a generall gift to know the heart, but when God ſeeth it good to reveale it; for otherwiſe the compariſon holdeth not. The Spirit of God only knoweth the things of God: which alſo is given to men to know, but not by receiving any gift to ſerch and looke into the nature and heart as it were of God (for then ſhould they know all the ſecrets of God, which never any did:) but onely by revelation of the Spirit, which openeth Gods ſecrets unto them, ſo farre as it is convenient and needfull.

Even after the ſame manner the Spirit of God may reveale the ſecrets of the heart of man, not by giving them a generall gift themſelves to looke into the heart, as into a glaſſe, but by revealing ſuch things, when the Lord ſeeth it expedient.

Neither had the Prophets an inherent gift and dwelling in them, to know ſecrets, but the word of God was inſpired into them at times, as they had need, as we ſee in Nathan, 2 Sam. 7. 3, 4. in Eliſha 2 King. 2. 15. in Iſaiah, 2 King. 20. 4. And though Paul was taken up into heaven, and ſaw many ſecrets, yet he knew not all: for thus he ſaith of himſelfe, If I knew all ſecrets, 1 Cor. 13. 2. Ergo, no man ever received this gift, to ſearch the heart: but it is proper unto God, who will not give his honour to another.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, Neſcire mortuos quid hic agatur dum hic agitur: That the dead know not what is done here, while it is in doing. But they underſtand either by relation of thoſe that depart this world, or elſe by the Angels; Non quidem omnia, ſed quæ ſinuntur indicare, &c. ſicut Propheta, &c. nec hic omnia cognoſcebant, ſed quæ illis eſſe revelanda Dei providentia iudicarat, de cura pro mort. c. 15. Neither do they know all things, but what God ſuffereth to be knowne; as neither did the Prophets know all things while they lived, but what God in his divine providence thought good to reveale unto them. I note out of this ſaying of Auguſtine three things.

Firſt, what great uncertainty of opinion here is: How the dead ſhould come by the knowledge of humane affaires, the Papiſts thinke they have it by Gods gift: otherwhile they ſay, they ſee all things in God, as in a cleare glaſſe. Auguſtine ſaith, they know them by the Angels, or by men newly departed this life: ſo that it appeareth to be but a meere conceit and imagination, that they have any ſuch knowledge, whereof there is no ſurer ground. Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith, they know not things preſently done, but afterward, contrary to the Papiſts. Thirdly, they know not all things, as the Prophets alſo did not, but what the Lord revealeth unto them: wherein alſo he is contrary to our Adverſaries.

The holy Martyrs have ſealed this truth: that God onely is the knower of the hearts, and that hee hath not given this honour to any other.

But Angels and Saints were not from the beginning, neither are they every where: Ergo, they know not our thoughts.

Epheſ.3.10.

And further: 1 Chryſoſtome thinketh, that the Angels were ignorant of many things concerning the myſtery of the Goſpell, which they learned by the preaching of Iohn: for thus he ſaith, He uttereth no humane thing, but ſpeaketh out of the hid treaſure of the Spirit: quæ neque Angeli, priuſquam hic diceret, noverunt, which no not the Angels knew, before he ſpake them, &c. And to that purpoſe he alleageth that place, Epheſ. 3. 10. That unto principalities and powers may be knowne by the Church the manifold wiſdome of God: whereupon he thus inferreth; Idcirco non parum honoris conſequimur quod nobiſcum Angeli diſcant, quæ neſcimus: Wherefore it is no ſmall honour unto us, that the Angels together with us doe learne the things which they know not.

Hom.8.in Gen.

2 Origen ſaith, Deo ſoli cognitum eſt propoſitum mentis, Angelis vero non: To God onely is knowne the purpoſe of the heart, not unto Angels.

Super Pſal, 23.

3 Haymo of the Latine Church ſaith: Certum eſt quoſdam Angelos ignoraſſe aſcenſionem Chriſti donec viderent: It is certaine that ſome Angels were ignorant of the aſcenſion of Chriſt, untill they ſaw it, &c.

Annot. in 1 Sam.16.7.

If the Angels then were ignorant of many things belonging to the myſtery of mans redemption: how is it like to be true, that they, or the glorified Saints ſhould know our cogitations by ſeeing God, in whom all things appeare? as our Doway Divines note: for how could they be ignorant, if all things are to be ſeene in God, of thoſe more neceſſary things, which concerned mans ſalvation?

4 Confeſſion of Auſpurge, artic. 21. This cuſtome aſcribeth unto the dead an omnipotencie, in that the Saints ſhould ſee the motions of the heart: The ſame reaſon alſo may be given for the Angels not knowing of our thoughts.

The third Queſtion, Concerning the worſhip of Angels, firſt in generall, then in particular, of invocation.

The Papiſts.

THey ſay that the divine honour and adoration due unto God alone, is not to be given to Angels: But there is a religious reverence, honour and adoration, which is not to bee denied to Angels and Saints, Rhem. annot. Apocalyp. 19. ſect. 4. Hæreſ.7.

Argum. 1. Ioſua fell downe before the Angell and worſhipped, Ioſ. 5. Rhemiſt. ſo alſo they of Doway in their annot. there. Ioſ.5.14.

Anſw. He worſhipped not an Angell, but the Lord Chriſt himſelfe the Captaine of the Lords armie: for it was a divine worſhip: He is bid to put off his ſhooes, as Moſes was, when God appeared out of the fierie buſh, *Exod.*3. But a divine worſhip (by your owne confeſſion) is due onely to God, *Fulk, annot. Coloſſ.*2.3. And thus Origen expoundeth this viſion: *Homil.*6. in Ioſ. Ioſua non adoraſſet, niſi agnoviſſet Deum, &c. Ioſua would not have adored him, if he had not knowne him to be God, for who elſe is the Prince of the armie of the power of God, but our Lord Ieſus Chriſt?

Argum. 2. 1 *Timoth.*2.21. I charge thee before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and his elect Angels, that thou obſerve theſe things: Ergo, Angels may be adored and reverenced, Rhemiſt. 1 Tim.2.21.

Anſw. Saint Paul maketh here the Angels witneſſes of his weightie charge: ſo Moſes calleth heaven and earth to witneſſe, *Deut.*30.19. may we therefore conclude, that he yeelded any religious worſhip to heaven and earth? Deut.30.19.

Our Doway men doe object the example of *Balaam, Numb.*22.31. how Balaam adored the Angell: He adored him, neither with divine honour as God, nor civill, as a mortall man, but with a religious honour leſſe than the divine, and more than civill: Annot. upon that place. Numb.22.31.

Anſwer. 1. It is but a weake argument that is taken from the example of a ſuperſtitious man, a falſe Prophet, and Sorcerer, that was accuſtomed to proſtrate himſelfe unto his ſpirits, whom hee invocated: 2 But it may bee better anſwered, that this was no religious adoration, but an exceeding great reverence, which hee yeeldeth to the Angell, ſuch as was that which Nathan gave unto David, he bowed himſelfe upon his face to the ground: where the ſame word in the Hebrew Shacah is uſed, which the Septuagint expreſſe by the word προσκυνέω, which ſignifieth as well civill as religious adoration. 1 King.1.23.

The Proteſtants.

AS for due reverence, which is of love, not of any ſervice, there is no queſtion, but wee ought to yeeld it unto the Angels. But all religious ſervice or worſhip is due onely to God, and whoſoever man or Angell, requireth, or receiveth any religious worſhip or ſervice, uſurpeth that which is due unto God, *Fulk, Apocal.*19. *ſect.*4.

Argum. 1. *Apocal.*19.10. and 22.9. Iohn fell downe to worſhip the Angell: but the Angell ſuffered him not: See thou doe it not, (ſaith hee) for I am thy fellow ſervant, and of thy brethren, worſhip God: Ergo, Angels are not to be adored with any religious worſhip. Revel.19.10. 22.9.

Rhemiſt. Firſt, he forbiddeth him onely to worſhip him with divine adoration.

Anſw. The words are generall: hee ſaith not, worſhip God with this kinde of ſervice; but worſhip God: and the word here uſed, προσκύνησον, properly ſignifieth in falling downe to worſhip: by which word alſo *Act.*10.25. Cornelius manner of worſhipping Peter is expreſſed: upon which place the Rhemiſts doe note, that everie falling downe to worſhip is not divine, or proper onely to God, and that Peter did refuſe it for humilitie ſake: the Angell then in this place refuſeth that falling downe or worſhipping, which they ſay was given to Peter, and is not onely due to God; and ſo doth Peter in the other place, not for humilitie, but alleaging he was a man, and therefore of pietie, becauſe he would not have God robbed of his honour. Act.10.25.

Rhemiſt. Secondly, you ſay that Iohn ſo worthy an Apoſtle was not ignorant of that point, that Angels were not to bee worſhipped as God: wee may reply alſo, that if Iohn had knowne that this other kinde of ſervice was unlawfull, he would not have done it.

Anſw. Iohn ſinned not of ignorance, but of forgetfulneſſe, in this extaſie of his minde, while hee beheld the glorie of the Angell, as likewiſe through his frailneſſe and forgetfulneſſe hee committeth the like againe, *cap.*22. which Iohn would not have done, being once before admoniſhed, had he not preſently forgotten himſelfe. But the other error of worſhipping the creature for the Creator, was too groſſe an error for the Apoſtle.

Rhemiſt. Thirdly, hee was deceived in the perſon, taking the Angell for Chriſt, and therefore was not culpable at all in this fact, in giving divine honour to the Angell, for hee ſinned onely materially not formally.

Anſw. Firſt, Iohn was not ignorant that he was an Angell, and not Chriſt; for he ſaith, he was one of the ſeven Angels that had the ſeven vials. Secondly, though hee ſinned of ignorance, yet was it a ſinne: for the Prophet, which beleeved the old Prophet, ſinned grievouſly, as it appeared by his puniſhment, though hee did it ignorantly, 1 *King.*13. Wherefore it is a groſſe error of your Schoolemen that ſay, a man ſinneth not, if hee worſhip the Devill in ſhape of an Angell ignorantly.

Rhemiſt. Fourthly, the Angell would not receive this worſhip at Iohns hand, whom he knew to be in great favour with God, and greater than ſome Angell.

Anſw. Firſt, though hereafter the children of God ſhall bee made equall to the Angels in glorie, yet in this mortall life they muſt needs be inferiour, ſeeing Chriſt himſelfe, in reſpect of his paſſion, was inferiour to the Angels, Heb.2.9. Secondly, the Angell would not have taken this homage at any other mans hands beſide Iohns: for he giveth a reaſon that he is not onely his fellow ſervant, but alſo of his brethren. So for all their ſhifts and cavils, we ſtrongly conclude by this example, that no relious honour ought to be given to Angels.

Seeing then none of theſe anſwers will ſerve their turne, Ioannes Baſilius the great peremptorie Duke of Muſcovia ſhall help them with another, that propter humilitatem factum, it was done for humilitie ſake, that the Angell refuſed to bee worſhipped, as Chriſt for the ſame cauſe, when hee was transfigured forbade his Apoſtles to tell it abroad, till he was riſen againe: Theolog. Muſco.c.13.

Anſwer. 1. The Angell refuſeth to be worſhipped, as not due unto him, as appeareth by his reaſon, worſhip thou God, &c. I am thy fellow ſervant, he did not refuſe it then for humilitie, but of dutie, becauſe it belonged unto God. 2 The other prohibition of Chriſts is not like: let them ſhew where Chirſt for humilitie ſake refuſed to bee worſhipped, as hee was of many in the dayes of his fleſh, and they ſhall ſay ſomewhat.

Lib.6. in Cant. Canticorum.

Here I will not conceale that private opinion of Beda, who writeth to this effect, that after the Angels perceived that their God and Lord ſo loved mankinde, as that hee became man for them, Hinc eſt, quod ante incarnationem ejus, adorari ſe ab omnib. patienter ferrent, &c. Hereof it is, that before the incarnation of Chriſt they endured to bee adored of men, but the Angell forbiddeth Iohn going about to worſhip him: But if adoration had beene due unto them before, it ſhould not have beene denied them after the comming of Chriſt, by whom the angelicall order was eſtabliſhed and confirmed, not any way impaired: as the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt by the bloud of his croſſe hath ſet at peace the things in heaven and in earth: but let us proceed to ſee the judgement of more ancient times.

Coloſſ.1.20.

Honoramus Angelos, charitate non ſervitute (ſaith Auguſtine) nec eis templa conſtruimus: Wee honour Angels with the dutie of love, not of ſervice, neither doe we build temples unto them. And a little before, Quod ergo colit ſummus Angelus, id colendum etiam eſt ab homine ultimo. That therefore which is worſhipped of the higheſt Angell, the man of loweſt degree ought alſo to worſhip, De vera religion. cap.55. Ergo, no worſhip due to Angels, but all unto God.

Adrian. 1. Epiſt. ad Conſtantin. Imperator. Qualis eſt iſte adorationis honor? profecto non alius, quam is, quo nos peccatores quoſque invicem proſequimur, ſalutantes nos inter nos per honorationem & dilectionem: What manner of worſhip is this (he meaneth the reverence to bee given to Angels and Saints) ſurely no other than that which we ſinners amongſt our ſelves doe give to one another, by a mutuall ſalutation of honour and love. The argument out of theſe words may be framed thus: No other worſhip is due to Angels and Saints, but that which we give one to another: but that is no religious worſhip: Ergo, Your owne decrees alſo doe reckon the heretikes called Angelici in the number, becauſe they worſhip Angels: decret. p.2. cauſ.24. qu.3. c.39. wherefore it is hereſie even by your owne law to worſhip Angels.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr ſheweth out of Auguſtine, that wee ſhould worſhip no men departed, be they never ſo good or holy, no nor yet no Angell, ne honour the ſame, but onely the imitation of them, following their good acts in our living: the Angels refuſe all honour, ſaving that which is called honor charitatis, that is to be loved, &c. Fox p.1108. reſponſ. ad articul.14.

And further. 1 Theodoret thus writeth upon theſe words of Saint Paul, Coloſſians 2.18. Let no man ſeduce you, &c. by the worſhipping of Angels: that they which defended the Law, ad Angelos colendos inducebant, did induce men to worſhip Angels, &c. and therefore the Synod of Laodicea lege prohibuit, ne precarentur Angelos, did forbid by a Law that they ſhould not pray to Angels, &c.

Lib. 8. contra Celſum in principio.

2 Origen is verie earneſt in this point againſt the adoration of Angels, writing againſt Celſus, who objected thus: Qui diis plurimis ſerviat, &c. Hee that ſerveth many Gods, doth a thing acceptable unto the great God, for honour cannot be given unto any, Cui non ſit ab illo permiſſum, To whom hee hath not permitted the ſame, &c. Hereunto Origen maketh this anſwer, that as the Lacedemonian Orators refuſed to adore the Perſian King, Vnum Dominum veriti, Lycurgi legem, worſhipping but one Lord, Lycurgus law, &c. Sic eorum qui pro Chriſto legantur, Chriſtus eſt Dominus, ſo Chriſt is their Lord, who are his Embaſſadors, &c. And againe, Vndenam tu id patefeceris permiſiſſe Deum, ut honorib. iſti augeantur? Where can you ſhew that God hath permitted that theſe ſhould bee honoured?

And further, he ſaith, Vnus nobis eſt placandus Deus, &c. There is but one God to be appeaſed and pacified of us, if hee will have any beſide God to be appeaſed, let him know that as the ſhaddow followeth the body: ſo he which pacifieth the higheſt God, & ejus amicos Angelos propitios habet, hath alſo the Angels his friends favourable.

Zaga Zabo the Æthiopian Biſhop profeſſeth thus: The Prophets, Apoſtles, Martyrs, Confeſſors, Cum ſanctiſſimis Dei Angelis veneror & honoro, pariq; modo omnes illorum ſectatores amplector & oſculor; Together with the holy Angels I worſhip and honour, and in like manner I embrace and kiſſe all their followers, &c. Hee giveth no other worſhip unto Angels and Saints, than to their imitators and followers here in earth. Damianus a Goes.

3 Helvetia, latter confeſſion, c.5. We teach men to adore the true God alone, according to the commandement of our Lord, Thou ſhalt adore the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerve. Harm.ſect.2. Matth.4.10.

4 See before for the Latine Church, the teſtimonie of Adriane, and of the decrees.

The ſecond part, of the Invocation of Angels.

The Papiſts.

THey hold, that it is lawfull to direct our prayers unto Angels, and that they can helpe and heare us. Rhemiſt. Coloſſ.2.ſect.3. Hæreſ.8.

Angels are deputed for our protection (which is nothing but advocation.) *Dan.*10.13. *Matth.*18.10. Rhemiſt. annot. 1 *Iohn.*2.*ſect.*5. Dan.10.13. Matth.18.10.

Anſwer. Firſt, the argument followeth not: for the Angels at the appointment of God, may ſerve for our protection and defence, though they bee not advocates for us, to obtaine remiſſion of our ſinnes. Secondly, the places alleaged prove no ſuch advocation of Angels, but onely defence and protection. *Dan.*10.13. The Angell was readie at the firſt prayers of Daniel, but he was letted a while. This proveth, that Angels may know our prayers when it pleaſeth God, and bee miniſters of his helpe unto us, which wee denie not: not that they are our advocates. And concerning the other place in Matthew our Saviour onely ſaith, That their Angels doe behold the face of his father; that is, to know his pleaſure, and what ſervice God will command them for the good of his Church: this text maketh nothing for the advocation of Angels. So then theſe two Scriptures doe ſet forth two offices of the Angels: the one their deſcending from heaven, Dan. 10.13. the other their aſcending to heaven, Matth. 18.10. Like as Iacob ſaw the Angels deſcending and aſcending upon the ladder, Geneſ. 28. which ſignifieth their miniſteriall protection of us, not an Imperiall advocation: unleſſe they will ſay, that the Angels alſo are Chriſts advocates, for upon him they are ſaid to aſcend and deſcend, Iohn 1.51. And further, what is ſignified by the aſcending and deſcending of the Angels, Bernard hath very well expreſſed in this ſentence: Aſcenſio & deſcenſio via Angelorum, &c. Aſcending and deſcending is the way of the Angels: They aſcend for themſelves, and deſcend for us; they aſcend for contemplation, they deſcend unto us for compaſſion; they aſcend to behold his face, deſcend at his becke: in Pſalm. 90. Serm. 11. Wherefore they aſcend to know Gods pleaſure, they deſcend to doe Gods pleaſure, this ſheweth their ſervice and miniſterie, not their advocation or majeſtie: the argument then followeth not at all, they are our protectors, Ergo, our advocates. Iohn.1.51.

And whereas the Rhemiſts in the ſame place would prove the advocation of Angels by the Collect uſed in our Church upon S. Michaels day, which is this: That they which doe thee alwaies ſervice in heaven, may by thy appointment ſuccour and defend us in earth: Who ſeeth not, what beggerly ſhifts they are driven to uſe, ſeeing that this prayer maketh nothing at all for the advocation or invocation of Angels, but onely their protection and preſervation.

Argum. 2. *Apoc.*8. *verſ.*3. I ſaw another Angell, that came and ſtood before the Altar having a golden cenſer, and much odors were given unto him, to offer with the prayers of the Saints upon the golden Altar, &c. From this place the Rhemiſts conclude that Angels doe offer our prayers to God, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſwer. Firſt, though the Angels ſhould report unto God our praiers, as the reſt of our affaires, which they ſee done (which miniſterie of theirs notwithſtanding in preſenting of our prayers, hath no direct warrant out of Scripture) yet it followeth not that we ſhould invocate them, for the Saints in earth doe invocate God for us, yet are not to bee invocated by us. Secondly, if in this place wee ſhould underſtand any of the Angels to bee the preferrer of our prayers, yet they doe it not by their owne merit, but by the merit and ſweet ſavour of the death of Chriſt, which are the ſweet odours added to the prayers of the Saints: Thirdly, this place is better expounded of Chriſt himſelfe, who is the Angell that offereth up our prayers, as S. Auguſtine in his Commentarie upon this text.

*Argum.*3. Our Doway diſputers prove the protection and invocation of Angels out of that place, *Gen.*48.16. The Angell, &c.

Anſwer. See before Error 4. where it is anſwered, that this Angell was Chriſt, with whom Iacob wreſtled, *Gen.*32.

The Proteſtants.

THat Angels are not to be worſhipped, nor invocated, as mediators, interceſſors, or advocates, the Scripture ſpeaketh evidently.

Argum. 1. Coloſſ. 2.18. Let no man beguile you in the humbleneſſe and worſhipping of Angels: Ergo, Is is not lawfull to pray unto them, or to worſhip them. Coloſſ.2.18.

Rhemiſt. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh here againſt the wicked doctrine of Simon Magus, that affirmed that the Angels both ill and good, were mediators for us unto God ; and againſt the ſuperſtition of the Jewes, that worſhipped the Angels by whom the law was given.

Anſw. The Apoſtle condemneth both theſe ſuperſtitions, as likewiſe the popiſh invocation of Coloſſ.2.23. Angels : becauſe all will-worſhip is forbidden, which is not after the preſcript of Gods word, Coloſſ. 2.23. Out of which place we reaſon thus, all will-worſhip is forbidden : but all worſhip of Angels is a will-worſhip, Ergo, all worſhip of Angels is forbidden: that which the Apoſtle calleth, *verſ.*18. θρησκείαν, the worſhip of Angels, *verſ.*23. he termeth ἐθελοθρησκείαν, will-worſhip, which is invented by man, and not warranted by the word.

And that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh againſt the adoration even of good Angels, Theodoret upon that place ſheweth, making mention of their Oratories, dedicated unto S. Michael, which were to be ſeene unto that day : and their opinion was, Per Angelos divinam benevolentiam conciliari, That the divine favour muſt be obtained by Angels.

*Argum.*2. If any man ſinne (ſaith the Apoſtle) wee have an advocate with the Father Jeſus Chriſt Iohn 2.2. the juſt, he is the propitiation for our ſinnes, Iohn 2.2. Ergo, Chriſt onely is our advocate.

Rhemiſt. Chriſt is our advocate in the higheſt degree, becauſe by himſelfe, and his owne merits, without the aſſiſtance of any other, hee obtaineth pardon for us. The other, as Angels and Saints, are as ſecondarie interceſſors, that obtaine not any thing by their owne merits, but onely through Chriſt.

Anſw. Firſt, he onely and properly is an advocate that can plead the juſtice of his Clients cauſe, which every one that prayeth for us cannot doe : for though the Angels and Saints departed ſhould pray for us (which we know not by the Scriptures) as our brethren upon earth doe, yet ſhould they not be mediators and advocates, but petitioners and intreaters for us.

Secondly, we gather many ſtrong arguments out of this place, for the ſole ſufficient advocation of Chriſt. Firſt, the ſonne is the beſt and onely ſufficient advocate with the father ; therefore where wee Heb.4.16. may have free and bold acceſſe to the Sonne, Heb. 4.16. what need have we of the ſervants helpe? Secondly, he is the onely advocate that is juſt and righteous before God : ſo onely is Chriſt, the An- Iob.4.18. gels are imperfect in his ſight, Iob 4.18. Ergo. Thirdly, he muſt be our advocate that is alſo the propitiation for our ſinnes : Ergo, onely Chriſt.

Auguſtine ſaith, Angelos quos nos colimus dicitis, &c. utinam illos coleretis, facile ab illis diſceretis, illos non colere : But yee will ſay yee worſhip not images but Angels as we call them : I would you did truly worſhip and reverence them : for you ſhould ſoone learne of the Angels, not to worſhip the Angels, In Pſal. 96. And Bernard alſo thus writeth upon theſe words of the Apoſtle, Heb. 1. are they not all miniſtring ſpirits ? Plane miniſtri noſtri, non Domini noſtri : They are our miniſters, not our Maſters or Lords : *In Pſal.*90.ſerm. 11. If not our Lords, then not to be worſhipped.

*Synod. Moguntin. cap.*45. Sancti &c. Velut corporis Chriſti nobiliſſima membra, eo ſocietatis & dilectionis cultu à nobis honorari debent, quo in hac vita à nobis ſancti homines coli poſſunt : Saints, which have happily ended this life, as the moſt noble members of Chriſts body, muſt be honoured with the worſhip of love and brotherly fellowſhip, as holy men in this life may be honoured, &c. But wee doe not make our prayers unto men, though never ſo holy upon earth : Ergo, neither ought we to pray to Angels or Saints in heaven.

We will adde the ſeale of the holy Confeſſors and Martyrs : Certaine godly Chriſtians were perſecuted in the dioceſſe of Lincolne, for denying to pray to Saints, ſaying ; What need wee goe to the feet, when we may goe to the head ? anno 1521. *Fox, pag.*826.*col.*2.

Claudius Monerius, who ſuffered for the truth at Lions, anno 1551. being asked whether Saints were not to be invocated, anſwered, They cannot pray without faith, and therefore it is in vaine to Pag.826.1.20. call unto them, pag.905. *col.*1. The reaſon ſtandeth thus ; It is in vaine to pray to them that cannot pray for us (ſeeing by our adverſaries confeſſion, Saints onely helpe us by their prayer, and mediation to God, not by any helpfull power in themſelves) but neither the Angels nor Saints can pray for us, becauſe they have no faith (which gift is now with them ceaſed) and without faith no prayer is acceptable : Ergo, it is needleſſe to pray to them.

Francis Rebeuies martyred at Paris, anno 1558. thus reaſoneth againſt invocation of Angels and 1 Iohn 5.14. Pa 842.1.2. Saints : Saint Iohn ſaith, 1 Epiſt. 5. verſ. 14. This is the truſt wee have in him, that if wee demand any thing after his will, hee will heare us : we muſt doe and pray therefore according to Gods will, not after our owne : But it is not Gods will that wee ſhould pray unto any ſuch, either Angell or Saint : for no ſuch commandement is given in his word, where his will onely is to be ſeene. Ergo.

1 Further, it ſeemeth not to have beene the uſe of the Greeke Church in Damaſcenes time to invocate Angels : for he ſaith, Let us proceed to handle ſome few things delivered out of the Scrip- Damaſcen. lib.1.de fid.c.3. πολυτρόπως κινεῖσθαι. tures, ἐπικαλεσάμενοι, having called upon the Father, Saints, and holy Ghoſt : Hee calleth upon no other: and afterward he ſeemeth to give a reaſon thereof, becauſe even the Angels are ſubject to alteration and change, and divers waies to be moved.

2 Origene, long before him more plainely delivereth his opinion : the divine wiſedome will not Lib.5.cont. Celſum. Paulo poſt initium. permit, Ut alteri cuipiam quis audeat ſupplicare niſi ei, qui ad omnia ſufficit, & cunctis præſidet rebus per eum qui nobis ſalutis fuit, et Dei filius eſt et verbum : That wee ſhould pray to any other, than to him, which is ſufficient for all things, and ruleth all, by him, who is our ſalvation, even the Sonne of God and the word, &c. And a little after: we will ſhew, Non eſſe Iudaicæ conſuetudinis cœlum colere, vel qui in eo ſunt Angelos, ſed quorundam Iudaicos ritus prævaricantium: That it is not the Jewes cuſtome to worſhip the heaven, or the Angels therein, but of certaine tranſgreſſing the Jewiſh rights, &c. And in another place: Deo omnib. præſidenti per unigenitum filium ſupplices vota offerimus, &c. quando quidem noſtrorum ſit ille delictorum propitiatio, ut tanquam pontifex, &c. circa Deum igitur omnis noſtra fides: Wee humbly offer our prayers to God the ruler of all by his onely begotten Sonne, &c. Seeing hee is the propitiation of our ſinnes, that as our high Prieſt hee may offer up our prayers: therefore all our faith is to ward God, &c. His reaſons are theſe: becauſe Chriſt is the propitiation for our ſinnes, our onely high Prieſt, and God is the object onely of our faith, prayer being a worke of faith, muſt onely be directed toward him. The ſame author bringeth to light the groſſe fancies of the heretikes called Ophiani, that made ſeven Angles as the Porters and keepers of ſeven gates, whom they called Oraus, Elabion, Aſtaphaus, Sabaoth, Iabo, Ialdabaoth, Iadim: And they pray to every of them, Tu interceſſor adeſto, You (the keeper of ſuch a gate) be my interceſſour, but theſe things he ſaith, were à Chriſtiana doctrina aliena, contrarie to Chriſtian doctrine, &c. Behold then this ſuperſtitious invocation of Angels came from the Ophiane heretikes.

4 Whereas the Rhemiſts, as before is ſhewed, doe urge that place, Apocal. 8. 3. How much odours were given to the Angell, to offer with the prayers of the Saints. Viega a Jeſuite, ſaith the Angell, is interpreted to be Chriſt, and the Incenſe is the prayers of the Elect: Nam per Chriſtum Mediatorem omnia munera noſtra Deo patri mittimus, For through Chriſt our Mediator wee ſend all our gifts to God the father.

The firſt Queſtion of Limbus Patrum, where the Patriarks were imagined to be.

The Papiſts.

THey have deviſed and imagined in their wandring conceit foure infernall and ſubterreſtriall places, Hell, Purgatorie, Limbus infantium, where children remaine dying without Baptiſme, and Limbus Patrum, where the Fathers were before Chriſts comming. Theſe places they diſtinguiſh three waies: Firſt, by the ſituation: Hell is loweſt, Purgatorie is next, Limbus infantium in the third place, Limbus Patrum uppermoſt. Secondly, they differ in meaſure of puniſhment, ſome of them have pœnam damni, and pœnam ſenſus, a double puniſhment, both of loſſe, in that they are excluded heaven, and of paine alſo, as Hell, and Purgatorie: the other two Limbi, are but dungeons of darkneſſe onely, where they ſuffer no other ſmart or paine, but are onely abſent from God. Thirdly, they differ in time and continuance, ſay they, Hell and the dungeon of children ſhall abide for ever: but Purgatorie and the dungeon of the fathers are temporall: the one, that is, Limbus Patrum, is many yeeres agoe diſſolved: and Purgatorie alſo ſhall ceaſe, ſay they, at the comming of Chriſt, Bellarm. de Purgat. lib. 2. cap. 6.

Hæreſ. 9.

This then is their opinion, that the Patriarks and Prophets before Chriſts comming were not in heaven, but were kept in an infernall place of darkneſſe, yet without paine, and were delivered by Chriſts deſcending into hell, Bellarm. de Chriſti anima, lib. 4. cap. 11. Rhemiſt. Heb. 9. 8.

Argum. 1. Heb. 11. 40. God providing a better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not be perfect: That is, (ſay the Rhemiſts) the Fathers of the law could not be admitted to the joyes of heaven, till the Apoſtles and other of the new law, were aſſociate with them, and a way made into heaven by the death and aſcenſion of Chriſt, Rhemiſt. ibid. the ſame place is urged by the Doway Tranſlaters, in their annotations upon Geneſis, cap.7.pag.31.

Anſ. Firſt, by this reaſon the Patriarks could not enter into heaven before the death of the Apoſtles, if there were no entrance found, unleſſe they were aſſociate with them. Secondly, if the way were not opened before Chriſts aſcenſion, then the Patriarks could not aſcend before, where were they then all thoſe 40. daies? for they were delivered out of Limbus Patrum before Chriſts reſurrection, Thirdly, there is therefore no ſuch meaning of this place: but it is to bee underſtood of the reſurrection, when as all the elect ſhall be conſummate together, and enter bodie and ſoule into heaven. Fulk.

Thus doth Bernard expound this place, Acceperunt jam ſinguli ſtolas, ſed non veſtientur duplicibus donec veſtiamur & nos, Deo melius aliquid providente pro nobis, ut non ſine nobis conſummarentur: All of them that are departed, (he meaneth the Saints) have received their ſtoles or ſingle garments, but they ſhall not be cloathed with double, untill we alſo be apparelled, God providing better things for us: that is, in the reſurrection we ſhall all receive this double rayment, we ſhall be profited in bodie and ſoule.

After the ſame manner doth this Father expound that place, Apocal.6.9. how the ſoules cried under the Altar: A laboribus requieſcunt, qui in Domino moriuntur; ſed non requieſcunt interim à clamore, ſub throno Dei clamant animæ occiſorum, quia nihil etſi habent, quod moleſtet, nondum habent totum tamen, quod delectet: In die Palmar. ſerm. 3. They reſt from their labour that die in the Lord: but they reſt not from crying: The ſoules of the ſlaine crie under the throne of God, because though they have nothing that doth moleſt them, yet they have not all that may delight them, &c. Neither of theſe places then can be underſtood of the Patriarks in Limbo: for they could not be without ſome moleſtation in that dungeon of darkeneſſe.

In ſolennitat. Sanct.Ser.5.

Biſhop Ridley agreeth with Bernard in the expoſition of the former place: God did provide better for us, that they without us, &c. They tarrie now for us undoubtedly, longing for the day: but they are commanded yet to have patience, untill the number of their fellow ſervants be fulfilled: Fox page 1784. He underſtandeth the glorious conſummation of the Saints in the reſurrection.

Zach.9.11.

Argum.2. Zacharie 9.11. I have looſed thy priſoners out of the pit, where there is no water: That is, out of Limbus Patrum, Bellarm.de Chriſti anima.lib.4.cap.11.

De civitat.Dei lib.18.cap.35.

Anſw. Auguſtine giveth a cleane contrarie ſenſe of the place, by the pit without water he underſtandeth, Humanæ miſeriæ ſiccam profunditatem & ſterilem, ubi non ſunt flumina juſtitiæ, ſed iniquitatis lutum: The drie and barren dungeon of human miſerie, where there are no ſprings of juſtice, but the puddle and mire of iniquitie: That is, the Prophet ſpeaketh of the deliverance of the people from their cruell and unjuſt bondage and captivitie.

1 Pet.3.19.

Argum.3. 1 Pet. 3. 19. In the which ſpirit he alſo went and preached unto the ſpirits that were in priſon, which ſometime had been diſobedient in the daies of Noah. This place proveth evidently (ſaith Bellarmine) that Chriſt deſcended in ſoule into hell: and delivered the fathers from thence, De Chriſti anima. lib.4.13.

Anſw. The place can have no ſuch meaning: Firſt, by the ſpirit here the human ſoule of Chriſt cannot be underſtood but his divine power: For Chriſt went and preached in that ſpirit, by the which he was quickned, as the text is: but he was not quickned or reſtored to life by his human ſoule, but by his divine power his ſoule was joyned againe to his bodie. Auguſtine alſo giveth another reaſon, why he cannot be ſaid to be quickned or made a live in ſpirit, that is, in his ſoule: for then hee muſt have died before in ſoule. But, Mors animæ peccatum eſt, à quo ille immunis fuit: But the death of the ſoule is ſinne, from the which Chriſt was free.

Bellarmine ſaith, that by the ſpirit not Chriſts divinity, but his ſoule muſt be underſtood, becauſe it cannot bee ſaid properly of his divine nature, that it went or came to a place, as it may be ſaid of his ſoule: Bellarm. ibid.

Iohn 3.13.

Contra. 1 If the Jeſuite will ſtand ſo much upon proper ſpeaking, neither can the ſoule be ſaid properly to goe, or come, which betoken an action and geſture of the bodie. 2 But to ſpeake according to the phraſe of Scripture, he cannot bee ignorant, how that the Scripture ſpeaking to our capacitie, doth aſcribe ſuch human actions unto God: as the ſpirit is ſaid to move upon the waters, Gen. 1. 1. God is ſaid to walke in Paradiſe, Geneſ.3. 3 Yet more uſually in the Goſpell the actions of the humanitie are ſometimes attributed to the Godhead of Chriſt, becauſe of the neere uniting and conjunction of them in one perſon: as Iohn 3. 13. Chriſt is ſaid to deſcend from heaven, which was his Godhead onely, for his fleſh as yet had not aſcended. 4 This phraſe is neither ſtrange nor unuſuall, to ſay that Chriſt went in ſpirit, or the ſpirit of Chriſt went, ſeeing Noah went in the ſpirit of Chriſt: that is, attributed to the worker, which was done by the inſtrument: as whatſoever the Prophets did in times paſt, the Lord is ſaid to doe it, &c.

2 Sam. 8.2.

Againe Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is not unuſuall in Scripture, to ſay that is quickned which died not, as 2. Samuel 8. 2. David is ſaid to meaſure Moab with two coards, one to kill them by, another to quicken them: and Acts 7.19. Pharao is ſaid to caſt out their infants, ne viviſicarentur, that they ſhould not bee quickened; that is, remaine alive: ſo in this place the ſpirit, that is, the ſoule of Chriſt is ſaid to bee quickened, becauſe it remained alive, and could not bee killed.

Contra. Firſt, the ſame word is not read in the places alleaged, which Saint Peter uſeth here: in the firſt place, the word is ζωγρέω, as the Septuagint tranſlate, which ſignifieth, to raiſe or reſtore to life: in the other place the word is ζωογονέω, which betokeneth to grow up or proſper, as plants doe; but the word uſed by Saint Peter is derived from the word ζωοποιέω, which is to make alive, and the right Latine thereof is vivifico, I doe receive, and I am received, which is more than to reſtore one to the hope of life, as David did the Moabites, which otherwiſe were as dead men, or to remaine alive, which Pharao would not ſuffer the infants to doe. Secondly, the examples are not alike, for they are ſaid to be revived, becauſe they might die, though they died no; but the ſoule cannot die: wherefore unleſſe he can ſhew out of Scripture, that ſome thing is ſaid to be revived or quickned, that neither doth nor can die, he ſaith nothing; but neither hath hee, nor yet can produce any ſuch example out of Scripture.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh only of thoſe which were incredulous and diſobedient, not of the faithfull, ſuch as the Patriarks were and Prophets. Yea (ſaith Bellarmine) they might be unbeleevers at the firſt, but after repented before they dyed.

Anſwer. 1. Neither doe we thinke, that all periſhed everlaſtingly that died in the waters, as namely Infants, which were not capable of Noahs preaching, and ſo were not diſobedient to it: but for the reſt, ſo many as were diſobedient, were deprived of life and ſalvation, as S. Peter ſaith: God ſpared not the old world. 2 Nether is it like that any called incredulous or diſobedient repented before they died: for then they ſhould not have beene numbred among incredulous perſons: God doth diſcern every man according to that ſtate wherein hee endeth his life, and the Lord findeth him, His tranſgreſſions that hee hath done ſhall not be mentioned. 3 And if any had a kinde of repentance, it was not in truth, as Chryſoſtome ſaith of the rich man: Tormenta cogunt agere pœnitentiam non mentis affectus: Torments made them repent, not the affection of their minde. 4 They then which were incredulous and died in the waters, periſhed in their ſinne, as Auguſtine ſaith: ii modo qui non crediderunt Evangelio, &c. They which have not beleeved the Goſpell now, are like unto them which beleeved not then, while the Arke was preparing: and they which now beleeve and are baptized, are like to thoſe which then were ſaved in the Arke, &c.

2 Pet.2.5.

Ezech.18.22.

Hom.de Lazar.in Luc.16.

Epiſt.99.

Thirdly, the text ſaith not, he went and delivered, but went & preached: for Auguſtine calleth it an abſurd thing to thinke, that the Goſpell was preached to them that were dead, which in their life time were incredulous: for if the Goſpell bee preached in hell (ſaith he) it would follow that it is not neceſſarie it ſhould be preached here in the world, if men when they are dead, may heare it, and be converted. And againe, it would enſue (ſaith he) that there ſhould be a Church in hell: for where the word is preached, there is a Church. Wherefore he concludeth, that it muſt needs be underſtood of Noah his preaching in the ſpirit and power of Chriſt: Arca fabricatio, prædicatio quadā fuit: The building of the Arke was a kinde of preaching. Epiſtol.99. So alſo Beza well expoundeth that place. 1 Pet.4.6. The Goſpell was preached to the dead, Intelligimus eos, qui tum quidem, cum illis prædicaretur Evangelium, vivi erant, nunc vero cum iſtud dicitur mortui, &c. We underſtand thoſe which then were alive, when the Goſpell was preached, but now, when this was ſpoken, were dead: annot. in hunc locum. And theſe two reaſons he giveth of this interpretation. 1 Becauſe in the ſame ſenſe, in the verſe beforegoing the Lord is ſaid, to be readie to judge both the quicke and the dead, which are now dead, but then ſhall be alive, as thoſe are ſaid to be dead, which ſometime were alive. 2 The preaching which they imagine is not to their bodies, for they are ſenſeleſſe, but to their ſoules, which are alive and not dead. 3 Hereunto may the third reaſon be added, becauſe the Apoſtle ſheweth the end of this preaching to be the mortification of the fleſh, as it followeth, That they might be judged according to men in the fleſh, but might live according to God in the ſpirit: but this mortification of the fleſh, and ſanctification of the ſpirit, cannot be wrought when men are dead.

Bellarmine underſtandeth, by judging in the fleſh, their outward periſhing in the water, which was as their condemnation in mans judgement, yet they ſhould live in the ſpirit, their ſoules ſhould bee ſaved.

Lib.4.de Chriſt.ani. c.13.dico p terta,

Contra. 1. But when the fleſh and ſpirit are oppoſed in Scripture, the one ſignifieth the corrupt nature of man, which muſt be mortified; the other the regenerate part, which is quickened and ſanctified. And ſo the two parts of our regeneration are here ſignified, as it may be explained by the like place. 1 Corinth. 5.5. That hee be delivered to Sathan for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Ieſus. Thus Beza, and before him Beda interpret this place: So great deſire (ſaith Beda here) hath God to mortifie us in the fleſh, and to quicken us in the ſpirit, that hee commanded to preach the word of faith to them alſo which have beene wrapped in great crimes, and are worthie to be named among the dead. Where although by the dead he underſtand thoſe which were dead in ſinne, yet he will have this preaching made to men while they lived, to teach them mortification, and therein agreeth with Beza and us.

Fourthly, the text is not, that were in priſon, but doth better beare this ſenſe, that are: The words in the originall are theſe: τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασι, ſpiritibus in carcere, to the ſpirits in priſon: the participle here to be ſupplied in the Greeke οὖσι, in Latine exiſtentibus, is properly of the preſent tenſe, and ſignifieth being: and common uſe of ſpeech will give it rather to be underſtood of the preſent time, than of the time paſt: as if I ſhould ſay, the man in the houſe, or in the priſon, who would not thinke that I meane one now being in the houſe, rather than one that was in the houſe and now is not? So the Apoſtles meaning is this, that they which were incredulous & diſobedient in time paſt, when Noah in the ſpirit of Chriſt, or Chriſt by his ſpirit in Noah preached to the world, were then deſtroyed in the flood, and now for their incredulitie are puniſhed in the priſon of hell. And thus Auguſtine in every point underſtandeth this text, of Noah his preaching to the olde world in the ſpirit of Chriſt, ſaving that by the priſon he underſtandeth their mortall bodies, while they lived. Bellarmine taketh paines at large to confute Auguſtines expoſition, becauſe it commeth neere unto ours: ſo well theſe men agree with antiquitie, whereof notwithſtanding they make great boaſt. And not onely Auguſtine ſo underſtands this place of Peter, but Beda alſo joyneth with him: He which in our time comming in the fleſh, preached the way of life to the world, even he himſelfe alſo came before the flood, and preached unto them, which then were unbeleevers, and lived carnally: for even by his holy ſpirit was in it Noe, &c.

Argum. 4. I will for a ſupply to the Romaniſts weake arguments, adde our Doway traſlators reaſons for their ſuppoſed Limbus.

Gen.37.35.

1 Iacob ſaith, I will deſcend unto my ſonne into hell mourning, Geneſ. 37. 35. Iacob meant not the grave, for he ſuppoſed his ſonne to be devoured by the wilde beaſt, and not buried in a grave, &c. annot. upon that place.

Numb.35.25.

2 He that fled to the Citie of refuge, was to tarie there, untill the high Prieſt, &c. doe die: Numb. 35.25. Miſtically this ſignified, that the way to true life was not opened before Chriſts death.

John 24.30.

3 Ioſua is ſaid to be buried, Iohn 24.30. but not to bee mourned for, as was Aaron and Moſes: that is, in the law was deſcent to hell, called Limbus, in the Goſpell is paſſage to Paradiſe: annotat. ibid.

Pſal.16.

4 David expreſly ſignifieth an higher place called Hell, ſaying, Pſalme 16. in the perſon of Chriſt to his father: Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in hell, from whence Chriſt delivered the holy Patriarks, &c. reſting without ſenſible paine, and brought them to heaven, whither none before him could: annot. p.7.

5 I am the onely childe of my parents, I may bring their olde age with ſorrow to hell, ſaith young *Tobie, chap.*6.15. that is, ſay our Doway Commentors, into the place where good ſoules reſted, none having acceſſe then into heaven: annot. ibid.

Job 17.13.

6 Iob 17.13. Hell is my houſe, and in darkneſſe have I made my bed, &c. This place alſo they underſtand of Limbus, the higheſt place of hell. *p.*203.

Hebr.9.8.

7 Heaven was not open to any Saint before Chriſts paſſion: Heb. 9. 8. annot. Levit. 16. *verſ.*2. in the margent.

Gen.42.38.

Anſwer. 1 Iacob meaneth the grave, for ſo the word Sheol alſo ſignifieth: as he ſaith Geneſ. 42. verſ. 38. Yee ſhall bring my hoarie haires with ſorrow to the grave, not to hell, as they tranſlate: for hell is no place for hoarie haires: To helpe out here, they give this ſenſe, mine hoarie haires, that is, Mine olde age, or me an olde man: but hell is the place onely of ſoules, which are neither young nor olde: and we muſt make Iacobs words true, that his hoarie haire went to that place indeed: but to hell no bodies yet goe. The reſt is a meere cavill, for though Iacob ſuppoſed his ſonne to be devoured of wilde beaſts, yet he knew he was corrupted: And what is the grave elſe but the place of corruption? as Iob ſaith, I ſhall make the grave my houſe: And then he addeth: I ſhall ſay to corruption, thou art my father: Neither was Iacob ſure his owne body ſhould be buried: but hee knew it ſhould fall to corruption.

Job 17.13.

2 Such deviſed Allegories prove not: and the true myſticall ſenſe is, that as the partie that had offended was ſet at libertie after the high Prieſts death: ſo by the death of Chriſt our true high Prieſt, we have deliverance from our ſinnes.

3 Neither is mention made in the ſame place, verſ. 33. that they mourned for Eleazar, whoſe death and buriall is there expreſſed: therefore by the omitting to ſpeake of mourning for Ioſua, no ſuch thing is inſinuated: and thinke you then, that Moſes, whom the Iſraelites mourned for, went to hell to a place of darkneſſe? Whence came he then, when he appeared in ſuch ſhining brightneſſe and great glorie with Chriſt in mount Tabor? was he ſuddenly drawne out of that darke dungeon, and by and by plunged there againe? What groſſe and abſurd conceites are theſe of thoſe bleſſed Saints? is it to be thought, that he whoſe face ſhined while hee lived like the Sunne, was as darke as pitch in his ſoule, when he was dead?

4 Saint Peter knew Davids minde better, than ſuch giddie Gloſſe-makers: he ſaith, verſ. 31. That David ſpake of Chriſts reſurrection, which is out of the grave, not from hell: And verſ. 24. He looſed the ſorrowes of hell, as their vulgar tranſlation readeth. The hell that Chriſt went to, hee looſed the ſorrowes of by their owne Text: but in this hell, they ſay, there is no ſenſible paine, and therefore no ſorrow to be looſed.

5 They muſt bring better Scripture, than Tobies booke, to prove a point of beleefe, as they make this to be: yet the place may receive the ſame anſwer, which was made to the firſt: ſoules have no olde age, that goe to hell, but bodies.

6 There was corruption, and wormes in the hell, that Iob went unto: I ſhall ſay to corruption (ſaith he)

he) thou art my father, and to the wormes, ye are my mother and ſiſters: wormes are in the grave, not in hell. How blind are thoſe Doway deviſers, that they can ſee nothing?

7 The words of the Apoſtle are theſe: Whereby the holy Ghoſt thus ſignified, that the way to the holieſt of all was not yet opened, while as yet the firſt Tabernacle was ſtanding, &c. The meaning of the Apoſtle is, that by force and vertue of the ſacrifices offered under the law, the Tabernacle yet ſtanding, the way to heaven was not opened: but by the blood of Chriſt, which hath made a way unto all beleevers into the kingdome of heaven, ſince the world began: and this appeareth to be the meaning by the words following, which only ſtood in meats and drinks, and divers waſhings & carnall rites: the compariſon is not then of the times, but of the things: a way was opened them, but not by the things then in uſe, which were not able to purge the conſcience. And yet it is true alſo comparatively, in reſpect of the times, that the way was not opened for actuall entrance into perfect glorie both in body and ſoule, untill Chriſt came, who was the firſt that in body and ſoule tooke poſſeſſion of perfect glorie in heaven.

The Proteſtants.

THat the holy Patriarkes, Fathers and Prophets died in the ſame faith before the comming of Chriſt, which all true Chriſtians doe not hold, and were preſently received into the joyes of heaven, and not kept in any infernall place or dungeon of darkneſſe: thus it is proved.

*Argum.*1. They had all faith, and beleeved in Chriſt: yea, the ſame faith that is now preached; as it is defined by the Apoſtle, *Heb.*11.1. They alſo by this faith obtained remiſſion of ſinnes, Roman 4.7. Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, as it is alleaged out of the Pſalme: Ergo, they were bleſſed: but out of the kingdome of God there was no bleſſedneſſe to be found: therefore they alſo went to heaven.

Your owne Maſter of ſentenſes alſo here witneſſeth with us: Eadem fides ſalvatoris, qua nos ſalvat ſalvos juſtos faciebat antiquos, &c. The ſame faith, which ſaveth us, did alſo ſave the ancient righteous, the great with the ſmall. For as we beleeve that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, ſo they, that he was to come: as we beleeve that he died and roſe againe, ſo they, that he ſhould die and riſe againe. And Gregorie compareth both, to thoſe that went before, and followed Chriſt riding to Jeruſalem, crying Oſanna, &c. lib.3. diſtinct.25.a. From this place we may further reaſon thus: The ſame faith hath the ſame effects and fruits; the Patriarkes had the ſame faith with us: Ergo, they were ſaved and went to heaven, as all beleevers now doe. Againe, they that went before Chriſt entred into Jeruſalem, as well as they that followed: wherefore the forerunners of Chriſt, that beleeved in him, by the ſame faith entred into heaven.

*Argum.*2. If the heavens were not opened before Chriſts aſcenſion, as the Rhemiſts affirme: then none went to heaven before Chriſt aſcended. But that is falſe: Henoch and Elias by their own confeſſion were taken up into Paradiſe: ſo was the ſoule of the theefe upon the Croſſe. But Paradiſe is in heaven, yea the third and higheſt heaven, as S. Paul calleth it, 2 *Cor.*12.4. And ſo Auguſtine expoundeth that place, Voluit Deus Apoſtolo demonſtrare vitam, in quo poſt hanc vitam vivendum eſt in æternum: The Lord would ſhew unto the Apoſtle that life, wherein, after this life, we ſhall live and remaine for ever: *De Gen. lib.*12.28. Theſe three therefore went to Paradiſe, which is no infernall or place of darkneſſe, but a celeſtiall habitation of joy, light and felicitie. They were not then in Limbo Patrum, in the dungeon of the Fathers. Wherefore wee conclude, there was acceſſe to heaven before the aſcention of Chriſt. 2 Cor.12.4.

*Argum.*3. Beſide, out of Scripture many ſtrong arguments may be gathered, to prove that the Fathers and Patriarkes were in heaven, a place of joy, not in the imagined Limbus, a dungeon of darkneſſe, before the comming of Chriſt.

Firſt, Every one that beleeveth, hath everlaſting life, Iohn 5.24. Abraham beleeved, Rom.4.3, Ergo, Abraham had and was in everlaſting life: Ergo, not in Limbus, which is a place of paine, as they confeſſe: but in everlaſting life is no paine. Iohn 5.24. Rom.4.3.

Secondly, the ſoules of the faithfull before Chriſt were in celeſtiall Jeruſalem, for they are the congregation of the firſt borne, whoſe names are written in heaven, *Heb.*12.23. they were the firſt borne unto Chriſt in the world: Ergo, their names were written in heaven. Heb.12.23.

Thirdly, where the holy Angels were, there alſo were the ſoules of the ancient faithfull, *Heb.*12.22. The companie of the Angels and the congregation of the firſt borne, belong all to one place; ſo alſo Lazarus ſoule was carried by the Angels: but the Angels are in no other place but heaven. Ergo. Heb.12.22.

Further, as out of theſe words, I am the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob, our Saviour proveth the reſurrection, becauſe he is not God of the dead but of the living; ſo by the ſame reaſon wee may conclude they were in heaven: for if it be inglorious for God to be named of the dead, even ſo alſo it is to call himſelfe by them, that are in paine, in darkneſſe, abſent from God, as all they are which are imagined to be in Limbo: Ergo.

*Argum.*4. The Fathers and Patriarkes, before Chriſts comming, were in Abrahams boſome: but that was no infernall place or priſon, ſuch as they imagine Limbus Patrum to be. Auguſtine proveth that it could not be membrum, or pars infernorum, a member or part of Hell, or any infernall place, as the Jeſuites hold: Firſt, the text ſaith, there is magnum chaos, a great gulfe, a great diſtance betweene, Luke 16.26. and *verſ.*23. The rich man ſaw Abraham afarre off: wherefore it is not like, that both Luke 16.26.

thoſe places ſhould be infernall. Secondly, Abrahams boſome was quietis habitatio, & fœlicitatis ſinus, a place of reſt and bliſſe: but ſo is not any infernall place where there is horror, and darkneſſe. Thirdly, the place where the rich man was, is called Hell, or infernall: there is no ſuch thing ſaid of Lazarus, that he was in any lower place; but above in ſome high and farre diſtant place: for the rich man is ſaid to lift up his eies. Auguſtine then concludeth: Ne ipſos quidem inferos uſpiam Scripturarum locis in bono appellatos reperire potui, Epiſtol.99. I doe not finde that this word infernall, is taken any where in the Scriptures in the good part. And therefore the boſome of Abraham, being a place of reſt, ſaith he, cannot be any infernall place. One of your owne writers maketh Abrahams boſome to be the ſame place, where the Saints now are in happineſſe and joy, and Jeſus Chriſt himſelfe: Intrepidè pergamus ad redemptorem noſtrum, &c. Let us therefore goe without feare to our Redeemer Jeſus, to the aſſembly of the Saints, &c. and to the boſome of Abraham with Lazarus. Eſpenc. in 2 Timoth.cap.4.p.167.d.

Concil.Aquiſgranenſ.lib.3.cap.3. Confuſiones duas eſſe legimus, unam temporalem, per quam omnis peccator pœnitendo peccaſſe confunditur: alteram aeternalem, & ſine fine manſuram, quam hi, qui a ſiniſtris ſunt, audituri ſunt, quibus dicetur, ite maledicti, &c. We read of two confuſions, one temporall, by the which a ſinner in repenting for his ſinne is confounded or aſhamed: another eternall, to endure without end, which they that are on the left hand ſhall heare, to whom it ſhall be ſaid, Goe ye curſed, &c. If then according to the ſentence of this Councell there bee two confuſions or abaſhments, one temporall in this life, another eternall afterward: then was there never any ſuch Limbus Patrum, a dungeon of darkneſſe, for the Fathers: unleſſe they will ſay, that when the Fathers were thruſt into ſuch a darke dungeon or priſon, it was no confuſion or abaſhment unto them.

And becauſe our adverſaries doe here accumulate and heape up many teſtimonies of the Fathers, whom we confeſſe for the moſt part of them, eſpecially the latter ſort of them, to have beene in this errour; yet that it may appeare, that the truth is yet more ancient, I will alleage the ſentence of a moſt ancient Father, namely Origen, upon theſe words of Iob, Naked ſhall I returne, &c. Nudus ibo illuc, &c. I ſhall returne naked thither; whither? even where Adam and the reſt of my Elders are gone, where the tabernacles of the righteous are, the reſt of the faithfull, the conſolation of the godly: where is Abrahams boſome, the company of Angels, the kingdome of Chriſt, life and light, and glory, and ſight of God: Orig.in 1.cap. Iob. But where elſe are all theſe to be found, but in heaven, for in Limbus is neither light, nor comfort, nor Angell, nor Chriſt, nor the glory of God to be ſeene? What cleerer evidence of antiquity can be required?

See this truth ſealed by the bloud of Martyrs: Richardus Feurus who ſuffered for the truth at Lyons, anno 1554. being asked where the old Fathers were before the death of Chriſt, anſwered: They were in life eternall, which they looked for, being promiſed before to Adam, Abraham, and the Patriarks in the ſeed to come: Fox pag.913.

Pag.833.a.40.

The ſincere judgement of Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr we have ſeene before.

Now for further evidence herein: 1. Chryſoſtome upon thoſe words of the rich man, Luke 16.24. Father Abraham have mercie on me, &c. thus writeth: Sanctus quidem Abraham, ſanctus & beatus eſt, & omnes in iſtius ſinum, ire feſtinemus, &c. Abraham is holy, holy and bleſſed is Abraham, let us make haſte to goe into his boſome: but whoſoever is either in hell, or in the kingdome of heaven, I cannot tell whether he can ſhew pitie, &c. Here Chryſoſtome, though he thinke that Abraham yet is not in the perfect ſtate of bleſſedneſſe in the kingdome of God, which ſhall not bee till the reſurrection: yet he taketh Abrahams boſome to be the receptacle of the ſoules of the faithfull ſtill. Contrary to the opinion of the Romaniſts, who think that their Limbus had an end at the death of Chriſt.

Homil.de Divite in Luc.16.

Nilus ſaith, that by the boſome of Abraham our Lord did underſtand that high ſtate in the bleſſed reſt of the godly: and by hell everlaſting damnation and puniſhment, he left no middle place betweene thoſe, &c. If the boſome of Abraham be the higheſt place of bleſſed reſt, then can it not be any part of hell.

Lib. de Purgatorio. [illegible]

2 Tertullian of the Africane and South Church ſaith, Eam regionem ſinum Abrahae dico, & non cœleſtem, ſublimiorem tamen inferis, interim, refrigerium animabus juſtorum donec conſummatio rerum reſurrectionem omnium &c. That place (of the ſoules departed) I ſay is the boſome of Abraham, not in heaven, yet higher than hell, a refreſhing to the ſoules of the juſt, until the conſummation of all things at the reſurrection, &c. Though he thinketh, that the ſoules departed have not their perfect conſummation in heaven, yet he differeth in two points from the Romaniſts, that the boſome of Abraham is no part of hell, and that it is the receptacle of the ſoules of the juſt untill the reſurrection. Origens opinion we have ſeene before.

Lib.4. contr. Marcion.

3 Latter Confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 12. The Fathers had the Goſpell in the writing of the Prophets, by which they attained ſalvation in Chriſt through faith. They beleeve the Fathers were ſaved in Chriſt, then they went not to hell.

Harm.ſect.7. pag.113.

4 Divers of the Romaniſts themſelves reject thoſe places of the Scriptures, by the which commonly they prove their Limbus: as Salmeron ſaith of that place Zach. 9. 11. Hæc verba non ad Limbum ſpectare videntur, &c. Theſe words ſeeme not to belong unto Limbus, becauſe this is ſaid to be a place without water: but the Patriarks wanted not the water of refreſhing, &c. Likewiſe concerning that place of the boſome of Abraham, Luke 16. Maldonato the Jeſuite ſaith, Valde ſuſpicor

Comment.in 1 Cor.15. diſput.26.

Maldonat. in eum locum.

per ſinum Abrahæ ſummum cœlum deſignari, I doe greatly ſuſpect, that by the boſome of Abraham, the higheſt heaven is aſſigned, &c. and that place Hebr. 11.40. Ribera another Jeſuite thus interpreteth, Apoſtolus loquitur de conſummata beatitudine corporis et animæ in die extremi judicii : The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the perfect bleſſedneſſe of body and ſoule in the day of the laſt judgement, &c.

Riber.in eum locum.

Thus theſe patrones of Limbus doe croſſe themſelves in their owne erroneous conceits : but it will be here objected, that the corrupt opinion of the ancient writers is, that the fathers were not in heaven before the aſcenſion of Chriſt, as Bellarmine to that purpoſe citeth 14. fathers, but he nameth them onely, he produceth not their teſtimonies.

Lib.4. de Chriſt.anim. c.11.

To this wee anſwer. 1 That all the fathers concurre not with them, as hath beene ſufficiently ſhewed before, as Chryſoſtome, Origene, Tertullian, Auguſtine. 2 Concerning the reſt, they might have this meaning, that the fathers of the law, had not ſuch fulneſſe of joy before, as at the comming of Chriſt. And this wee denie not, but that thoſe bleſſed ſpirits might have ſome occaſion of joy, as Calvine ſaith: I willingly confeſſe, Chriſtum ipſis illuxiſſe virtute ſui ſpiritus, &c. That Chriſt did ſhine upon them by the vertue of his ſpirit, that they might know that the grace which they onely taſted of in hope, was then exhibited to the world, &c. Even as the Angels alſo rejoyced in the contemplation of this miſterie, as Saint Peter ſaith, Which things the Angels deſire to behold. 3 But if the fathers opinion be, that their ſoules were not at all in heaven, but kept out till Chriſts comming thither. Herein, we crave but that libertie, which the Papiſts themſelves uſe in rejecting the fathers current opinions, in other like points : as Sixtus Sanenſis confeſſeth, that all theſe fathers, Papias, Apollinarius, Tertullian, Victorinus, Lactantius, Severus, Iuſtinus Martyr, doe hold, that the ſoules ſhall reigne in the earth a thouſand yeeres before the cumming of Chriſt. Likewiſe Stapleton ſaith, that all theſe fathers, Clemens B. of Rome, Origene, Tertullian, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophil. Ambroſ. Bernard, doe thinke, that the ſoules of the righteous doe not enjoy the ſight and preſence of God, till the day of judgement : and yet they refuſe them herein, and upon good reaſon : And ſo may we in this their conceit touching the fathers of the old law.

An appendix or appertinance of this queſtion, concerning the apparition of Samuel.

The Papiſts.

THey hold opinion, that it was the very ſoule of Samuel that appeared at the witches houſe at Endor unto Saul : and uſe it as an argument, to prove that the ſoules of the Patriarks were not in heaven, but in ſome infernall place, before Chriſts comming, becauſe Samuel aſcended out of the earth, Bellarm. de Chriſt. anim. lib.4.11.

10. Error.

Argum. 1. Becauſe he that appeared to Saul, is called Samuel in the text. Auguſtine anſwereth : that the images of things are called by the names of the things themſelves : as Geneſ. 41. Pharao ſaid, hee ſaw eares of corne, and fat and leane kine in his dreame, when they were but the images of ſuch things : So the devill becauſe he appeared in the ſhape of Samuel, Samuel himſelfe is ſaid to bee ſeene : Ad Simplicianum lib.2.quæſt.3.

1 Sam.28.v.11. to verſ.16.

And againe, Hiſtoricus mentem Saulis & habitum Samuelis deſcripſit, & quæ dicta & viſa ſunt expriment, &c. The Hiſtorian did deſcribe the minde of Saul, and habit of Samuel, expreſſing what was ſaid and done, omitting to ſay, whether they were true or falſe, &c. The text ſaith, that Saul underſtood it was Samuel, not that it was Samuel, Sed male intellexit, but he underſtood amiſſe, and ſo received a reward of his error.

Argum. 2. *Eccleſiaſtic.*46. It is ſet downe as a commendation of Samuel, that he propheſied being dead : Ergo, it was Samuel indeed, Bellarm. de Purgat. lib.2.cap.6.

Eccleſ.46.20.

Auguſtine anſwereth, that this booke was not received into the Canon of the Scriptures : It is not Canonicall, *De cura pro mortuis. cap.*15.

*Argum.*3. He telleth Saul things to come, as how the next day he ſhould be overcome, and ſlaine. But the devill knoweth not things to come, Bellarm. ibid.

Auguſtine anſwereth, Facile eſt & non incongruum : It is an eaſie matter with God, and not unlikely, that ſome things ſhould be revealed to evill ſpirits, for the greater puniſhment of the wicked : for otherwiſe wee might marvell ; Quomodo dæmones agnoverint Chriſtum, quem Iudæi non agnoſcebant : How the devils knew Chriſt, whom the Jewes did not acknowledge : Ad Simplician. lib.2. quæſt.3.

Further, he ſaith, it was no great matter to fore-ſee the death of Samuel a little before : Cum ſigna quædam ſoleant apparere morituris, &c. When as ſome ſignes uſe to appeare to men themſelves, that are forſaken of God, Quanto magis diabolo, How much more unto the devill? &c.

The Proteſtants.

THat it was not the ſoule of Samuel which appeared, who was now at reſt ; but the devill in the likeneſſe of Samuel, who alſo can transforme himſelfe into an Angell of light : Auguſtine proveth by theſe foure arguments.

Argum. 1. Becauſe the Witch or Pythoniſt uſed enchantments, unto the which the ſoule of ſo holy a Prophet was not ſubject, *Dæmoniacis incantationibus uti videtur. De mirabilibus ſcriptur. 2. cap.*11.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that Samuel prevented her inchantment, and came up voluntarily.

Anſw. The text is contrarie, verſ. 11. for the woman firſt asked Saul, whom ſhe ſhould bring up; that is, by her charmes and inchantations: and he ſaid, bring me up Samuel.

Argum. 2. Quomodo Saul, &c. How could Saul obtaine to here a Prophet ſpeake from the dead, whom God vouchſafed not to anſwer by Prophets alive? The text is, that God gave him no anſwer neither by Prophets, nor by dreames: therefore I have called for thee, verſ. 15. Ergo, it was not Samuel, for then God ſhould have given him anſwer by Prophets.

Argum. 3. If it had been Samuel, he would not have told a lie unto Saul, ſaying, to morrow thou ſhalt be with me: Magno quippe intervallo ſeparari bonos à malis legimus: For wee read that the good are ſeparated from the bad by a great diſtance after this life, as it appeareth in the ſtorie of Dives and Lazarus. Auguſt. ad Simplician. lib. 2. qu. 3.

Bellarm. He ſaith as much, as you ſhall be dead: noting the generall condition, not the particular ſtate of the dead: and he ſaith further, Thou and thy ſonnes ſhall be with me to morrow, but Ionathan being a righteous man, went not to the ſame place that Saul did: wherefore, ye ſhall be with me, is as much to ſay, Ye ſhall be dead.

2 Sam.12,23. Luk.23.43. Anſw. This phraſe in Scripture importeth, and implieth alſo the particular ſtate of thoſe that are departed, as 2 Sam. 12.23. David ſaith of his childe, I ſhall goe to him, he ſhall not come to me: And Luke 23.43. Chriſt ſaith, This day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe: In both places it ſignifieth to be in reſt and joy, in the ſame place, where they are, with whom they are ſaid, they ſhall be: Ergo, it ſhould be ſo taken here. Neither is it neceſſarie to underſtand Ionathan in this ſpeech, ſeeing that hee ſaith not all his ſonnes: and there were two other of his ſonnes beſide Ionathan ſlaine, namely, Abinadab, and Malchiſhuah, 1 Sam. 31.2.6. So that the ſpeech is true, thou and thy ſonnes, though Ionathan be excluded. 1 Sam.31.2.6.

Argum. 4. If it had been Samuel: Utique vir juſtus non permiſiſſet ſe adorari: The juſt man would not have ſuffered himſelfe to be adored and worſhipped: as the divell doth take it at Sauls hands, to be worſhipped of him. For the text ſaith, he enclined his face toward the ground, and bowed himſelfe, or worſhipped. Auguſt. quæſt. ex veteri teſtam. 27.

Bellarmine ſaith, that he did give no other worſhip unto him, than was due unto the ſoule of Samuel, ſo great a Prophet.

Acts.10.25. Apocal.22.9. Anſw. Cornelius did no otherwiſe worſhip Peter, than by falling downe as Saul here doth, nor Iohn the Angell, Apocal. 22. yet neither of them are permitted to doe it: Wherefore, if this had been true Samuel, he would not have arrogated more to himſelfe, than either Peter, or the Angell. Wherefore as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Hoc nititur, ut adoretur, quaſi Deus, He goeth about to be worſhipped as God, and therefore it was ſurely Satan, not Samuel. Thoſe foure effectuall reaſons of S. Auguſtine are confirmed by their owne decrees, Cauſ. 26. qu. 5. c. 14. howſoever Bellarmine at his pleaſure rejecteth both the one and the other.

Concion.1. de Lazaro, 1 Chryſoſtome thus delivereth his opinion touching the apparitions of the dead: Quid eſt, quod dæmones dicunt, Monachi illius ſum anima, &c. What is it then, that the devils ſay, I am the ſoule of ſuch a Monk? truely I therefore beleeve it not, becauſe the devils ſay it, decipiunt enim auditores, for they deceive their hearers, &c. And ſo alſo the devill was a deceiver in this apparition of Samuel.

Lib. de anima. 2 Tertullian ſaith of this matter: Abſit ut animam cujuſlibet ſancti, nedum Prophetæ à dæmonio credamus extractam, &c. Farre be it from us to thinke, that the ſoule of any Saint, much leſſe of a Prophet, can be fetcht up by the devill, being taught, that Satan can transforme himſelfe into an Angell of light, much more in hominem lucis, into a man of light.

Harm.ſect.16. pag.484. 3 Latter Confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 25. Now that which is recorded of the ſpirits or ſoules of the dead ſometime appearing to them that are alive, &c. wee count thoſe apparitions among the deluſions and deceits of the devill, &c.

4 See before for the Latine Church the decree of Gratian, collected by Rabanus, out of Auguſtine, Iſidore and others: cited before, Cauſ. 26. qu. 5. c. 14.

The ſecond queſtion, concerning Purgatorie.

The queſtion hath three parts: firſt, whether there be any Purgatorie for ſoules to be purged and cleanſed in after this life. Secondly, of other circumſtances and matters that doe belong thereunto. Thirdly, of prayer for the dead.

The firſt part, whether There be any Purgatorie after this life.

The Papiſts.

Hæreſ.11. There is (they ſay) a certaine infernall place in the earth, called Purgatorie, in the which, as in a priſon houſe, the ſoules which were not fully purged in this life, are there cleanſed and purged by fire, before they can be received into heaven: Bellarm. de Purgat. lib.1. c.1. lib.2. c.6. Rhemiſt. Mat. 12. ſect.6.

Argum. 1. Zachar. 9. 11. Thou haſt looſed thy priſoners out of the pit where was no water, Pſal. 66.12. We went through fire and water. Theſe and ſuch like places the Jeſuite underſtandeth of Purgatorie, Lib.1. de Purgator. cap.3.

Zachar 9.11. Pſal.66.12.

Anſw. Firſt, the Jeſuite brought this place before, to prove that there was Limbus Patrum, and now hee maketh it ſerve for Purgatorie: thus they can make the Scripture to ſpeake what they liſt themſelves. But Purgatorie and Limbus Patrum, are two divers, yea and contrary things: for the Limbus was onely for thoſe that lived before Chriſt; Purgatorie began ſince: the Limbus was void of paine and puniſhment; ſo is not Purgatory: wherefore if the Lake or pit in Zacharie ſignifie Purgatory, it maketh nothing for Limbus: and if it ſerve for Limbus, then they miſſe of a place for Purgatory. But indeed it ſignifieth no ſuch thing: but is taken only in that place for the affliction and miſery of this life, and ſpecially ſuch as the Jewes ſuſtained in the captivity of Jeruſalem, as wee ſhewed out of Auguſtine. And ſo doth he alſo expound ſuch and the like places out of the Pſalmes, as Pſal. 86.13. Thou haſt delivered my ſoule from the loweſt grave. Quid (ſaith he) eſt lacus infimus, niſi profundiſſima miſeria, qua non ſit profundior? What elſe (ſaith he) is the loweſt pit or grave, but the loweſt degree of miſerie, than the which there can be no greater?

Pſal.86.13.

Argum. 2. Matth. 12.32. Blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit ſhall not bee forgiven, neither in this world nor the world to come: Ergo, ſome ſinnes ſhall be forgiven in the next world; and therefore there is a Purgatorie, for in hell there is no forgiveneſſe: Bellarm. loc.1. ex novo teſtamento.

Matth.12.32.

Anſw. Firſt, by the world to come, is underſtood the world ſucceeding this, and ſo it anſwereth to the world preſent: as Marke 10.30. They ſhall at this preſent receive an hundred fold, and in the world to come life everlaſting. Wherefore Purgatory being imagined to be now preſent, it cannot be taken to belong to the world to come: ſo alſo muſt we underſtand that place, that Chriſt is exalted above every name, that is named in the world, or the world to come: that is, in the world which ſhall bee after this, I thinke they will not by the world to come, in this place, inferre Purgatorie; nor yet, where the Apoſtle ſaith, The powers of the world to come.

Mark.10.30. Epheſ.1.21. Hebr.6.5.

Secondly, it followeth not, ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall not be remitted in the next world, Ergo, other ſins ſhall: no more than it followeth, that where Chriſt ſaith, I will not drinke henceforth of the fruit of this vine, untill I drinke it with you in my fathers kingdome, Mat. 26. 29. that therefore hee did drinke of other things, becauſe he did not drinke of the Vine, &c. And whereas Bellarmine would juſtifie this argument, by that example, where Chriſt ſaith, My kingdome is not of this world, and Pilate inferreth thereupon, Art thou a King then? where an affirmative is concluded out of the negative; the reaſon is not alike, unleſſe he will reaſon as Pilate did: Thy kingdome is not of this world: Ergo, thou haſt a kingdome: ſo blaſphemie ſhall not be forgiven in the next world: Ergo, there ſhall be blaſphemie then. Thus he might conclude truly, for in hell there ſhall be blaſphemie.

Mat.26.29. John 18.37.

Thirdly, S. Marke doth beſt expound S. Matthew, He that blaſphemeth ſhall never be forgiven: ſo that to be forgiven neither in this world, nor the next, is never to be forgiven, Bellarm. But Marke is rather to be expounded by Matthew. Anſw, yea, let Matthew expound himſelfe: for verſe 31. hee ſaith, Blaſphemie ſhall not be forgiven, that is, at all: and then he addeth in the verſe following, neither in this world, nor the world to come: ſo that not to be forgiven in this world, or the next, is not to be forgiven at all.

Mark 3.29. Mat.12.31.

Fourthly, that there is no remiſſion of ſinne after this life, the Scripture is evident: Hee that beleeveth is not condemned, but hee that beleeveth not, is condemned alreadie. Upon which place the Rhemiſts give this note, That he that beleeveth, ſhall not be condemned either at the houre of death, or day of judgement: from which place I reaſon thus, Every man either dyeth in faith, or without faith: if he die in incredulity, he is condemned, and there is afterward no hope; if in faith, hee is freed from condemnation, and entred into life, and ſo conſequently delivered from his ſinnes: therefore in this life wee onely obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes, becauſe faith is onely of this life, whereby our ſinnes are remitted. Ambroſe alſo ſaith, Qui hic non acceperit remiſſionem peccatorum, illic non erit: Hee that receiveth not here remiſſion of ſinnes, ſhall not bee there, that is, in heaven, de bono mort. cap.2.

John.3.18.

Argum. 3. Luke 8.55. Her ſpirit came againe and ſhee roſe: Chriſt raiſed the Rulers daughter to life; This evidently ſheweth that there is a third place beſide Heaven and Hell: for the ſoules that are there cannot returne againe, Rhemiſt.

Luk.8.55.

Anſw. Surely, a goodly argument, the ſpirits of Lazarus and of the Maid returned: Ergo, there is a third place: and why may you not thinke, that their ſoules were, whereas the ſoules of other righteous are? And why may not the Lord bring at his pleaſure, if it pleaſeth him, the ſoules at reſt, into their bodies againe? And this further may be thus ſhewed: after the reſurrection of Chriſt, the bodies of many that were dead, appeared out of their graves, Matth. 27.53. If Chriſt then by his power be able to call the body out of his place, which is the grave, even ſo the ſoule alſo. Againe, S. Paul ſaith, Hee was taken up into the third heaven, whether in his bodie or not, hee knoweth not, but in his ſpirit and ſoule, he was ſure he was there: therefore it is poſſible with God, to call the ſoules from heaven unto the body, the more to manifeſt his glory. Further I aske, where the ſoule of Dorcas was after her departure: I thinke they will not ſay in Purgatorie, ſhe being a woman full of good workes and almes while ſhe lived: if ſhe were then in heaven, and Peter called her ſoule into her bodie againe, ſhall the Maſter be able to doe leſſe than the diſciple? Saint Gregorie alſo reporteth, lib.1.dialog.c.9. how S. Fortunatus raiſed againe one Marcellus an holy man, which was carried by the Angels into a bleſſed place: this ſtorie is received by Bellarmine, who alſo granteth that holy men may returne from other places than Purgatorie, lib.2.de purg.c. 8. Wherefore this example of Lazarus concludeth not.

Argum. 4. Of all other they moſt inſult, and beare themſelves bold upon that place of S. Paul, 1 *Corinth.*3. which being rightly underſtood, doth not helpe them any thing at all: *verſ.*13. The fire
1 Cor.3.13.15. ſhall trie every mans worke: *verſ.*15. If any mans worke burne, he ſhall ſuffer loſſe, but he ſhall be ſafe himſelfe, yet as it were through the fire. Bellarm. & Rhemiſt. by fire here underſtand the flames of Purgatorie; by wood, ſtubble, ſtraw, veniall ſinnes, which muſt be purged by that fire, Rhemiſt. 1 *Cor.*3.*ſect.*3.

Anſw. First, by the precious matter here, as of gold, ſilver, are not the workes of charitie underſtood, but the preaching of ſound doctrine: by ſtraw, and ſtubble, and wood, and other combuſtible matter, the affectation of eloquence, and corrupt teaching of the truth, yet holding the foundation; not veniall ſinnes, as the Rhemiſts affirme: and this Bellarmine alſo granteth. And ſo S. Ambroſe expoundeth, Opus quod ardere dicitur, mala doctrina eſt, &c. The worke that ſhall burne is evill doctrine, &c. in 3.1.ad Corinth. Doth then their Purgatorie fire diſcerne betweene ſound and corrupt doctrine? but that they imagine to be a puniſhing and purging fire, not a trying and diſcerning fire, as this is, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

Secondly, fire is here taken allegorically, as the reſt of the words are, of gold, ſilver, ſtubble: neither can it be taken for their Purgatorie fire; becauſe it trieth the workes only, not the perſons, and all muſt be tried by this fire, as well thoſe that build gold and ſilver, as the other: but all ſhall not paſſe through Purgatorie, by their owne confeſſion. They are driven to this ſhift, to grant, that *verſ.*13. the fire is taken in one ſenſe, namely, for the ſentence and judgement of God, and *verſ.*15. in another, that is, for the flames of Purgatorie. But who ſeeth not how abſurd a thing this is, that in an allegorie the ſame word, and in the ſame place, ſhould be ſo diverſly taken? It is apparant then that this is the meaning, that the day, that is, the time, ſhall declare it: for God hath appointed a time to examine every mans doctrine by fire: which is nothing elſe but the judgement of God by the fire of his word, whereby every man, in the day of his calling and converſion, ſhall know whether he hath preached aright or not.

First, I will prove this expoſition to be ſound, and then ſhew how it is impugned. First, this fire muſt needs be either a materiall fire, or a ſpirituall: if materiall, then either everlaſting fire, or purgatorie fire, or the fire of the judgement day: not the firſt, becauſe that is only for the wicked; not the ſecond, nor the third, becauſe they doe not trie works, but the perſons; but this fire trieth every mans worke, Ergo, it is not a materiall, but a ſpirituall fire.

Secondly, this fire is a triall of every mans doctrine, how he hath preached and taught; but no materiall fire can make triall of doctrine: Ergo, a ſpirituall fire.

Thirdly, as is the gold and ſilver, ſtubble, wood, &c. ſo is the fire; but they muſt be underſtood ſpiritually: Ergo, ſo muſt the fire.

And thus much Bellarmine granteth, that in the two firſt places the fire of Gods judgement muſt be underſtood, but not in the third, in the 15. verſ.

Contra. First, that fire, whereby a man ſuffereth loſſe in his worke, is the fire hee ſhall be ſaved through, *verſ.*15. but the firſt fire is ſpirituall, becauſe it examineth the worke it ſelfe: Ergo, the other is the ſame ſpirituall fire.

Againe, by the ſame fire is as well the ſalvation of the worker, as the probation of the worke: for the probation of the worke tendeth to the ſaving of the worker: but the worke is proved and tried by a ſpirituall fire. Ergo, &c.

Further, Bellarmines owne application of the ſimilitude ſheweth as much: for he thus expoundeth it, as if two workmen ſhould make two houſes, one of hewed ſtone, the other of timber and ſtraw: fire is ſet to both houſes; the workman in the ſtone houſe is untouched of the fire, and his houſe ſafe: but the other houſe burneth, and the builder within is in danger, and cannot eſcape, but by paſſing thorow the fire, cap. 4. *loc.*2. Doth he not evidently grant, that it is one and the ſelfeſame fire, wherewith the houſe is burned, and through the which the builder eſcapeth? So then theſe foure properties named by the Apoſtle, of revealing, trying, burning, ſaving, muſt be referred to one and the ſelfeſame fire, which is a ſpirituall fire, and not a materiall: therefore no purgatorie fire.

Now Bellarmine goeth about to infringe this our expoſition of the ſpirituall fire of truth, whereby every mans worke is tried in this life, by theſe reaſons:

First, the Apoſtle ſaith, *The day of the Lord ſhall declare it verſ.*13. which is in Scripture taken for the day of judgement: and therefore it ſhall not declare it in this life.

Anſw. In the Originall Greeke we read onely the day, and not the day of the Lord: ſo that word ſeemeth to be added in the vulgar Latine. And againe, there ſhall be no purgatorie fire after the day of judgement: wherefore herein they doe contradict themſelves.

Secondly, The day which ſhall be revealed by fire, ſaith the Apoſtle: what day is this elſe but the day of judgement, which the preciſe ſignifying of fire declareth? Rhemiſt.

Anſwer. I will oppoſe againſt them the judgement of Bellarmine, who ſaith, That the fire of the day of judgement cannot here be underſtood: firſt, becauſe that fire ſhall worke onely upon the wicked, but S. Pauls fire ſhall try all. Secondly, that fire maketh not triall of works, as S. Pauls fire doth. Thirdly, it would follow that they which build hay, ſtubble, &c. ſhould not enter into Heaven before the day of judgement: ſo are they anſwered with their owne.

Thirdly, this fire ſhall try everie mans worke what it is: but this difference of mens working is not alwayes ſeene in this life. Ergo, ſic Rhemiſt. Bellarm.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Apoſtle meaneth not everie worke whatſoever ſhall bee made manifeſt here, but he ſpeaketh onely of the worke of the Miniſterie, which is publike, and to be diſcerned of all. Secondly, neither is it neceſſarie to underſtand the manifeſtation of theſe works to the ſight of others, but the revealing thereof to their owne conſcience, which alwaies falleth out in this life to thoſe that ſhall be ſaved.

Fourthly, they whoſe errors are revealed by the word of God, and their mindes lightned, doe ſuffer no loſſe, but rather have gaine by it: but the Apoſtle ſaith, that they whoſe worke burneth doe ſuffer loſſe by it, Bellarm.

Anſwer. They whoſe erroneous preaching is revealed by the ſpirit in the word, ſuffer no loſſe, in reſpect that they themſelves upon their repentance are ſaved: but yet they have loſſe in regard of their labour, which is loſt, and of the greatneſſe of reward which they ſhall have that preach ſincerely: and ſo is S. Paul to be underſtood, ſaying, They ſuffer loſſe, &c. yet are ſaved.

So then notwithſtanding theſe objections to the contrarie, our expoſition of the Revelation and triall to bee had in this life by the ſpirituall fire of truth in everie mans conſcience, as touching the worke of the Miniſterie, remaineth ſound and agreeable to Scripture. To this conſenteth Origen: Habuit Petrus aliquid plumbi, &c. Peter had a little lead, for our Saviour ſaith unto him, O thou of little faith. He therefore that is ſafe, is ſafe, as it were through fire: as the furnace trieth the gold, ſo tentation the righteous: Veniendum eſt ergo omnibus, &c. Wherefore everie one muſt come to the fire, muſt come to the conflatorie or fining pot, Hom. 6. in Exod. Likewiſe S. Hierome: Cum viderit Satanas nos ſuper fundamentum Chriſti, &c. When Satan ſeeth us upon the foundation of Chriſt to build hay, or ſtubble; ſupponit incendium, he ſetteth to the fire: wherefore let us build gold, &c. and he ſhall not dare to tempt us, lib. 2. adverſ. Iovinian. Both theſe Fathers by this fire underſtand the tentation in this life, whereby a man is tried, and brought to acknowledge his infirmitie: which is a preparation to the more excellent worke of the ſpirit, whereby they are further lightened.

I will alſo produce Bernard for the expoſition of this place, though I deny not, but that hee ſomewhat ſavoured of this Purgatorie invention: theſe words, He ſhall be ſafe, yet as through fire, he thus interpreteth: Ignis tria habet, fumum, lucem, ardorem, &c. Fire hath three things, ſmoake, light, heat: the ſmoake, that is the bitterneſſe of ſoule: the light is the confeſſion of the mouth: the heat is in the body the tribulation or puniſhment of repentance. The bitterneſſe then of the ſoule, the confeſſion of the mouth, the puniſhment of the body, are that fire whereby the looſe and negligent builder ſhall be ſaved, Serm. de lig. fœn. ſtipul. But all theſe are in this life. Ergo, &c.

Argum. 5. Matth. 5.25. Agree with thine adverſarie while thou art in the way with him, leſt he deliver thee to the Iudge, the Iudge to the Miniſter, and thou be caſt into priſon: Verily I ſay unto thee, thou ſhalt not come out thence, till thou haſt payed the utmoſt farthing. This priſon, ſaith Bellarmine, is Purgatorie, out of which after the debt is payed, the debtor ſhall goe forth. Matth. 5.25.

Anſwer. Firſt, this ſaying of our Saviour may ſafely be expounded according to the letter of the affaires of this life, as S. Chryſoſtome doth expound it, that men to prevent their further danger ſhould be ready to compound their controverſies betime. And ſuch counſell alſo the Wiſeman giveth, That if a man have given his word, and is become a ſuretie for another, he ſhould not ſleepe before hee had delivered himſelfe. And this expoſition is moſt agreeable to the text: for the word is ἀντίδικος, an adverſarie at the law. And Luke 12. 58. where the ſame ſentence of our Saviour is repeated, there is mention made of the Magiſtrate and of the Jaylor, which are termes and offices properly fitting the buſineſſe of this life. Bellarmine hath not any thing worth the anſwering, contrarie to this ſenſe. Prov. 6.3. Luk. 12.58.

Secondly, if we draw theſe words to a ſpirituall underſtanding, by the priſon Hell muſt be ſignified, a place of everlaſting torment, and not Purgatorie.

Firſt, becauſe the word φυλακὴ, a priſon, is ſo taken, 1 Pet. 3. 19. for the place of the diſobedient, which is Hell: for I thinke they will not ſend obſtinate ſinners to Purgatorie. 1 Pet 3.19.

Secondly, hee ſhall not come forth till hee hath payed the utmoſt farthing: or as S. Luke ſaith, the utmoſt mite; that is, never: unleſſe hee dare ſay that a ſinner is able by his puniſhment to ſatisfie the utmoſt mite of his debt, that is, his ſin unto God, which is great blaſphemy to affirme, and contrarie to the Scriptures: for we cannot anſwer God one thing of a thouſand. Iob 9.3.

Thirdly, this place may be expounded by that parable, Matth. 18. where the unkinde ſervant is caſt into priſon, till hee ſhould pay all that was due, verſ. 34. that is, he ſhould lye there for ever; for the debt was ten thouſand talents, too much for a Prince, much leſſe for a ſervant to pay: and verſ. 25. he had nothing to pay: and therefore his maſter forgave him the debt, verſ. 32. Wherefore we ſee our Matth. 18.34. 32.

debt is not payed unto God by us, but forgiven; and where it is not pardoned, it can never be payed. Againe, it followeth, verſ.35. So ſhall my heavenly father doe unto you, if you forgive not from your hearts one another your treſpaſſes: What is this, ſo ſhall my father doe unto you? ſend them to Purgatorie? No, but unto Hell: for uncharitable and malicious men, which will not forgive others, I truſt they 1 Ioh.3.15. will not ordaine unto a place of temporall puniſhment: for as S. Iohn ſaith, He that hateth his brother, and ſo is a manſlayer, cannot have eternall life.

Fourthly, thus S. Ambroſe expoundeth this place, lib.9. in Luc. c.19. Redde promiſſum, dum in hoc corpore es, &c. Render thy vow or promiſe while thou art in the body, before the exactor commeth, and caſteth thee into priſon, &c. Hence it followeth, that being in priſon, the promiſe or debt cannot be payed.

But S. Auguſtine more plainly: Conſenti cum adverſario, &c. Conſent with thy adverſarie in the way, &c. for afterward when we are paſſed out of this world, Nulla compunctio, vel ſatisfactio remanebit, There remaineth no compunction or ſatisfaction for ſinne, Tom.10. hom.5. ſuper illa. Conſenti cum adverſar. &c.

Matth.5.22. Argum. 6. Matth.5. verſ.22. Hee that is angrie with his brother unadviſedly, is culpable of judgement: he that ſaith, Racha, ſhall be puniſhed by a Councell: but he that ſaith, thou foole, is guiltie of hell fire. Ergo, all ſinnes are puniſhed with hell fire, but ſome have onely temporall chaſtiſement after this life: therefore in Purgatorie, Bellarm.

Anſwer. Theſe three degrees of puniſhment doe not ſhew divers and differing places of puniſhment after this life, but a difference of puniſhment in Hell; as it may be thus ſhewed:

1 Ioh.3.4. First, everie tranſgreſſion of the Law is ſinne, and the wages of everie ſinne is death: but to bee Rom.6.23. angrie raſhly, and to raile, are tranſgreſſions, and conſequently ſinnes, and ſo in themſelves worthy of everlaſting death.

1 Ioh.3.14,15. Againe, He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death, that is, hath no eternall life, but he that is angrie unjuſtly with his brother, loveth him not. Ergo.

1 Cor.6.10. Further, no railers ſhall inherit Gods Kingdome, that is, without repentance: but he that ſaith to his brother racha, that is, idlebraine, or lighthead, raileth: Ergo, this ſinne excludeth from Heaven; and conſequently in it ſelfe is worthy of hell. Wherefore it is great boldneſſe in the Jeſuite to exempt thoſe ſinnes from hell fire, which the Scripture judgeth worthy thereof.

And that theſe be three degrees of the ſame everlaſting puniſhment, wherein Chriſt alludeth to the formes of judgement amongſt men, S. Auguſtine ſheweth: Iudicium dicitur, &c. That is called Judgement where the ſentence is not pronounced; that is a councell, where the puniſhment is yet conſulted of: but Gehenna or Hell is that, which hath certaine damnation, &c. lib.1. de ſerm. in monte, cap.19. Like as then the pronouncing, conſulting, execution of ſentence, are all tending to the ſame puniſhment, yet in divers degrees: ſo is it here, &c.

1 Cor.15.29. Argum.7. Why are they then baptized for the dead, if the dead riſe not againe? The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the Baptiſme of teares, faſting, and prayer, which they did in behalfe of the dead, to eaſe them in the paines of Purgatorie: And that Baptiſme is taken for affliction, our Saviour Chriſt ſheweth, Luk.12.50. ſaying, I have a baptiſme to be baptized with, Sic Bellarm. cap.4. loc.3.

Anſwer. Firſt, this is a forced and unreaſonable expoſition of this Scripture: firſt, becauſe that in Scripture wee read of no ſuch Baptiſme by teares and faſting: the Scripture maketh mention of three Matth.3.11. Baptiſmes, flaminis, fluminis, ſanguinis: of the ſpirit. Chriſt is ſaid to baptize with the ſpirit of water, as Iohn is ſaid to baptize with water: of bloud, or of death, of which Baptiſme our Saviour ſpeaketh: but to apply Baptiſme unto teares, is improper; and they rather are ſaid to baptize themſelves, than to be baptized. Secondly, if the Apoſtles meaning were ſuch, why ſaith he not, why are we baptized, rather than they, ſeeing that he himſelfe uſed, as they ſay, to pray for the dead? And whereas he ſaith, the Apoſtle doth urge rather the ancient cuſtome of the Jewes, that prayed for the dead, than the uſe of the Church, and therefore ſaith, they, not we: it is falſe that the Jewes had any ſuch cuſtome, but rather the contrarie, for David prayed for his childe while he lived, but ceaſed to pray for him being dead. Thirdly, it is more agreeable to the text, to underſtand Baptiſme properly, for the Baptiſme of water, than coactly for the Baptiſme of teares: and ſo S. Ambroſe ſaith, that the Apoſtle alludeth to the erroneous uſe of ſome, that did either baptize the dead, or were baptized for the dead, in hope of the reſurrection. And whereas Bellarmine objecteth, that the Apoſtle then would have given ſome ſignification of this error, and not ſo lightly have touched it: S. Ambroſe anſwereth, that the Apoſtle adding further, And why are we in jeopardie? but ſaith not, Why are we baptized? Diſcrevit perſonas, oſtendens non catholicos eſſe, &c. Hee doth diſcerne the perſons, ſhewing that they were not Catholikes, that were thus baptized for the dead, Ambroſ. in hunc locum. This expoſition is better and more agreeable than Bellarmines: Firſt, becauſe in this ſenſe we are not forced to take Baptiſme for any ſuch new found Baptiſme, but properly for Baptiſme indeed. Secondly, becauſe in the Baptiſme of water there is a ſignification of the reſurrection, and a profeſſion of the hope thereof, which is agreeable to the Apoſtles purpoſe: but in the Baptiſme of teares there is no ſuch ſignification or repreſentation. Thirdly, becauſe that in the Baptiſme of water, the Baptiſme of teares is included, for prayer is made for the partie baptized: ſo that if Baptiſme of water be applyed to the dead, they have alſo benefit by the Baptiſme of teares. Fourthly, this expoſition is more reaſonable, becauſe of S. Ambroſe authoritie: yet it is no fit or proper interpretation of this place; as S. Chryſoſtome in his Commentarie ſheweth by theſe reaſons:

Firſt, becauſe that Marcion that wicked heretike, whoſe followers did uſe to put one in the dead mans bed, after he was departed, and ſo baptized him for the dead, did alleage this place for that ſuperſtitious uſe, which might ſerve his turne verie well; the Apoſtle giving approbation thereof, without any word of reprehenſion at all, if this place were ſo to be underſtood.

Secondly, as theſe words of Chriſt, Unleſſe you eat my fleſh and drinke my bloud, &c. are ſpoken to the living and not to the dead: ſo likewiſe where hee ſaith, Except a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, muſt be taken as ſpoken to the living.

Thirdly, if this were ſufficient for a man to be baptized when he is dead: then there might be hope for Pagans, Infidels, Jewes, when they are dead: upon theſe reaſons Chryſoſtome infringeth this interpretation allowed by Ambroſe, which comming neerer the Apoſtles ſcope than Bellarmines, yet miſſing the marke, ſheweth his expoſition to be abſurd and unreaſonable.

Secondly, then let us ſee how this place is truly expounded: ſome therefore doe underſtand it of thoſe, who either deferring their Baptiſme, or not being before admitted to it of the Church, becauſe they were lately converted from Paganiſme, did deſire Baptiſme upon their death-bed, being in a manner dead: and ſo were baptized for dead, that is, as dead. But this expoſition is not ſufficient: firſt, becauſe the Apoſtle ſhould have ſeemed to approve their negligence, that did drive Baptiſme to ſuch a ſtraight, as to the point of death. Secondly, the argument of the Apoſtle being drawne from a particular cuſtome of ſome, and not from the generall uſe of the Church, could not ſo ſtrongly conclude. Thirdly, becauſe the force of the Apoſtles reaſon is drawne from Baptiſme, and being baptized, the firſt part of the propoſition, and not from the latter, for dead: for it followeth not, they that are deadly ſicke deſire to bee baptized: Ergo, they expect a reſurrection: unleſſe that the reſurrection were ſhadowed forth in Baptiſme.

Wherefore leaving all by-expoſitions, I take none more fully to expreſſe the Apoſtles meaning, than that of Saint Chryſoſtome; who draweth the Apoſtles argument from the end & ſcope of Baptiſme, wherein whether wee conſider the confeſſion uttered in Baptiſme, the repreſentation of Baptiſme, or the efficacie thereof, whether theſe all together, or by themſelves; wee ſhall finde the argument to conclude: For the confeſſion, he ſaith, Hoc ad finem cum baptizaturi ſumus, &c. In the end, being about to baptize, we bid them ſay, I beleeve the reſurrection of the dead: For the repreſentation, Aquam ſubire & hinc remeare, &c. To goe into the water, and returne out of the water, are ſymboles, the one of deſcending, ad inferos, to the dead; the other, of riſing againe: and therefore S. Paul calleth Baptiſme the grave, Ye are buried then by Baptiſme into his death. And the Apoſtle further ſaith, That by Baptiſme we are graft into the ſimilitude of his death; and into the ſimilitude of his reſurrection, verſ. 6. For the third, the efficacie of Baptiſme, he ſaith, Spiritus ſanctus, &c. The ſpirit in Baptiſme conſumeth ſinne, as in a furnace, &c. and therefore the cauſe of death, which is ſinne, being extinct, death it ſelfe ſhall ceaſe, and the reſurrection follow. Thus then the Apoſtle ſaith, They are baptized for dead, that is, to dye unto ſinne, that they alſo may bee partakers of Chriſts reſurrection. This expoſition is both ſound and good, and moſt agreeable to the Apoſtles purpoſe: neither are the contrarie objections of any moment.

Firſt, Bellarmine objecteth, that if the Apoſtle had ſpoken ſimply of Baptiſme, he would have ſaid, why are we baptized, as afterward, Why are we alſo in jeopardie? for the Apoſtle was baptized into the death of Chriſt as well as the reſt.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, We are in jeopardie, as giving a ſpeciall inſtance of himſelfe: as afterward, verſ. 32. he maketh mention of his fighting with beaſts at Epheſus, after the faſhion of the Gentiles, which was a caſe peculiar to himſelfe. Secondly, the Apoſtle is not excluded, though hee ſpeake ſometime in the ſecond perſon, as verſ. 17. If Chriſt be not raiſed, your faith is in vaine; and ſo ſhould S. Pauls faith be in vaine alſo: ſometime in the third, as they that uſe this world muſt be as though they uſed it not, which ſaying extendeth alſo to the Apoſtle. Thirdly, this objection maketh as much againſt Bellarmines expoſition, ſeeing that hee thinketh that the Apoſtle did baptize himſelfe with teares for the dead: and yet he ſaith not, Why are we baptized?

1 Cor.15.32.
1 Cor.7.31.

Secondly, the ſentence is repeated againe, Why are they baptized for the dead? And againe, Why are they baptized for them? that is, the dead, which muſt be underſtood of thoſe that are dead: for otherwiſe they are baptized not for them, but for themſelves, Bellarm.

Anſw. The Latine text ſo readeth, as the Jeſuite alleageth: but the originall Greeke repeateth the ſame ſentence, Why are they baptized for the dead? So then this objection is nothing.

Wherefore all this, notwithſtanding our expoſition remaineth ſound and inviolable: firſt, becauſe it is authorized by collation of Scripture, Rom.6.6. as we have ſeene. Secondly, the argument doth conclude more ſtrongly from the generall cuſtome of the Church in Baptiſme, than from any ſpeciall uſe. Thirdly, Saint Chryſoſtome, the beſt of the Fathers, without compariſon, for the right interpreting of Scripture, ſo expoundeth it. Wherefore this ſentence of the Apoſtle, Why are they baptized for the dead? doth ſet forth the fruit and efficacie of Baptiſme, whereby wee are made partakers of Chriſts death, and are nouriſhed into the hope of his reſurrection: and ſo conſequently maketh nothing at all for Purgatorie.

Doway Bible, pag.33. Matth.5.26.

Our Doway Collegials would prove Purgatorie, both by the juſtice of God: for when any dieth penitent, and yet have not made full ſatisfaction, they muſt ſuffer for that remaineth after death, and be purged before they can enter into reſt, which remnant of debt our Saviour calleth the laſt farthing, and ſaith, it muſt be payed, &c. as alſo by the Jewes, who at this day hold the doctrine of Purgatorie by tradition, and conſequently pray for the ſoules departed.

Ezech.18.22.

Anſwer. 1. If a man dye truly penitent, all his ſinnes are forgiven him in Chriſt, none of his tranſgreſſions ſhall be mentioned: as the theefe was received to mercie upon the Croſſe, there was no further ſatisfaction required. 2 The ſatisfaction to Gods juſtice is not payed by us, but by Chriſt, who hath ſufficiently ſatisfied for our ſinnes: toward the remiſſion of ſinnes onely a lively faith in Chriſt is required of us: to ſay then that a man by his owne ſatisfaction muſt pay the utmoſt farthing of his debt unto God, is a blaſphemous aſſertion and derogatorie to the value of Chriſts death: yet that place in Matthew is not for their turne, as is ſhewed before in the anſwer to the fifth argument. 3 The ſuperſtitious Jewes are fit patrons of ſuch blinde doctrine: and what warrant have the Jewes? They doe well to ſay, they hold Purgatorie by tradition: for as one of their Jeſuites ſaith, Nihil ea de re in lege ſcriptum ſit, Nothing is written thereof in the Law, &c. And it may well goe among the traditions of the Elders, which our Saviour Chriſt reproveth them for: Yee lay aſide the commandements of God, to obſerve your owne traditions: For a tradition was that to offer ſacrifice, for thoſe which died in mortall ſin, namely idolatrie, for when they were dead, the idolatrous jewels were found under their coats: and that which is yet in practice among the Jewes, in the celebration of their Sabbath to powre wine upon the ground, thinking that thoſe which were ſwallowed up with rebellious Corah, doe finde refreſhing thereby: I thinke their coſin germans the Papiſts will hardly allow of ſuch traditions.

The Proteſtants.

THat there is no ſuch place of Purgatorie after this life, but that here onely is the place of repentance, and to be reconciled unto God; and that the ſoules departed are preſently either received up to Heaven, or thruſt downe to Hell: thus it is proved out of the Scriptures.

Eccleſ.12.14. Mark.16.16. Matth.25.

Argum. 1. The Scripture maketh but two kindes of works, either good or evill: But two ſorts of men, hee that beleeveth ſhall bee ſaved, hee that beleeveth not ſhall bee condemned: But two places, Heaven and Hell. Chriſt hath but two flocks, one of ſheepe, at the right hand; another of goats at the left: and hee ſaith to the one, Come ye bleſſed: to the other, Goe ye curſed. There are but two ſorts of men, therefore but two places: Ergo, no Purgatorie.

Bellarm. There ſhall be indeed at the comming of Chriſt but two places, Heaven and Hell: Purgatorie ſhall have an end.

John 5.24. John 3.18.

Anſw. Firſt, you ſay your ſelves that there ſhall be two infernall places for ever, Hell for the wicked, and a Limbus for infants that dye unbaptized, and Heaven that maketh three; and now you ſay there ſhall be but two. Secondly, there are but two places now, becauſe there are but two ſorts of men: for the beleevers are already paſſed from death to life, the unbeleevers are already condemned. Thirdly, Auguſtine conſenteth with us, Non eſt ulli ullus medius locus, ut poſſit eſſe niſi cum Diabolo, qui non eſt cum Chriſto: There is no middle or third place, but he muſt needs be with the Devill, that is not with Chriſt, *De peccator. remiſſ. & merit. lib.1. cap.*28. And againe, Tertium locum penitus ignoramus, imo nec eſſe in Scripturis ſanctis invenimus: The third place beſide Heaven and Hell, we are utterly ignorant of; nay we finde not in Scripture that there is any.

Eccleſ.11.3.

Argum. 2. Whether the tree fall toward the South, or the North, where it falleth there it ſhall bee. This place our adverſaries grant to be underſtood of the ſtate of the dead, which are diſpoſed of to two places; there is not then a third, and ſo conſequently no Purgatorie.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, by the South the ſtate of ſalvation is underſtood, which alſo comprehendeth Purgatorie.

Contra. Firſt, if to fall to the South be to enter into the ſtate of ſalvation, then the Patriarks that died before Chriſt preſently had poſſeſſion of everlaſting ſalvation, and ſo they have loſt their Limbus. Secondly, it is ſtrange, ſeeing they make Purgatorie a part and member of Hell, that they will comprehend in one word Heaven and Hell together.

Secondly, ſaith hee, wee may by the South underſtand Heaven, and by the North Hell, but then everie tree falleth not either North or South.

Contra. Firſt, this Scripture maketh mention but of theſe two places of the dead, and ſo you grant your Purgatorie to be deviſed beſide Scripture, as it is indeed. Secondly, the text ſaith, in quocunque loco, in what place ſoever it falleth: ſo that to fall to the South or North, is what place ſoever, that is, all and everie place toward the which the tree falleth.

Thirdly, if this place overthrow Purgatorie, it overthroweth as well alſo Limbus Patrum, whither the Fathers went before Chriſt, Bellarm.

Contra. We grant all that this place maketh againſt both the one and the other: for as there is not now a third place of Purgatorie beſide Heaven and Hell, ſo neither was there then of Limbus.

Rom.8.1. Matth.5.25.

Argum. 3. There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus: but all ordained to ſalvation are in Chriſt Jeſus, therefore to ſuch there is no condemnation: Ergo, no Purgatorie: for to be caſt into priſon, which they ſay is Purgatorie, is a condemnation.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that S. Paul by condemnation underſtandeth the contagion of ſinne, that commeth by the concupiſcence of the fleſh, which they have not that are in Chriſt Jeſus.

Contra. Firſt, ſinne is one thing, and the wages of ſinne is another, which is death or condemnation, Rom.6.25. therefore by condemnation the Apoſtle underſtandeth not ſinne. Secondly, if they Rom.6.25. that are in Chriſt have no ſinne, much leſſe doth the puniſhment of ſinne, which they ſay is in Purgatorie, abide them.

Argum.* 4. 2 Cor.5.1. We know that if our earthly houſe be diſſolved, we have an houſe in heaven not 2 Cor.5.1. made with hands, &c. Wherefore it followeth, that the ſervants of Chriſt preſently after their diſſolution enter into Heaven.

Bellarmine: The Apoſtle ſaith not that all the godly preſently after death goe unto their heavenly houſe, but onely thoſe that are cloathed with righteouſneſſe, as it followeth, verſ. 3. If ſo we be found cloathed, not naked.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle meaneth no ſuch cloathing: but the cloathing whereof he ſpeaketh, is to be cloathed with our houſe from Heaven, *verſ.*2. and then he addeth, not preſcribing a condition, but rendring a reaſon why wee deſire to bee cloathed with our heavenly houſe, verſ. 2. becauſe being cloathed (that is with our heavenly houſe) Wee ſhall not bee found naked. Secondly, that all the godly ſtraight after their diſſolution are cloathed with the heavenly houſe; it followeth, *verſ.*4. That we may not be uncloathed, but cloathed upon. But if any godly being uncloathed of their fleſh by death, ſhould not preſently be cloathed with immortalitie, then ſhould they be uncloathed which the Apoſtle denieth.

Argum.* 5. Saint Paul ſaith, that everie man ſhall receive the works of his body, according to 2 Cor.5.10. that which hee hath done either good or evill. Therefore there is no place to cleanſe and purge the ſoules of men after this life: for then they ſhould not receive according to the works done in their fleſh.

Bellarmine ſaith, that even they whoſe ſinnes are remitted after death, doe receive nothing but that which was done in the fleſh, for they deſerved in their life time to be helped after death.

Anſwer. Firſt, as for deſert, wee will ſhew elſewhere that it hath no place before God, neither in this life, nor the life to come: for the Scripture ſaith, Bleſſed is hee to whom the Lord imputeth no ſinne: not who deſerveth remiſſion of ſinnes, *Rom.*4.6. Secondly, this deviſed and frivolous diſtinction doth not ſtand with the Apoſtles meaning: for hee ſpeaketh of things actually done in the fleſh, not deſerved to bee done, and of the works of the body, not of the ſoule, and of things perfectly done, not begun onely or inchoate: and hee uſeth it as a reaſon to perſwade men, even while they live, to bee accepted of God, verſ. 9. 11. But if there might bee any ſuch help after death, there needeth no ſuch haſte preſently to be converted unto God. Thirdly, if they deſerved any thing in their life, why deſerved they not preſently to have forgiveneſſe of ſinnes, as well as afterward?

Argum.* 6. *Apocal.*14.13. Bleſſed are the dead from henceforth that dye in the Lord, for they reſt Apoc.14.13. from their labours: Ergo, there is no Purgatorie: for all the godly departed are at reſt.

Bellarmine. Firſt, it is not meant of the godly, but onely of Martyrs which dye for the name of Chriſt.

Anſwer. As to live in Chriſt Jeſus is a phraſe of Scripture, and ſignifieth to live godly in Chriſt, 2 Tim.3.12. *2 Tim.*3.12. ſo to dye in the Lord, ſignifieth to dye in the faith of Chriſt, 1 *Theſſ.*4.16. Therefore 1 Theſſ.4.16. this place is underſtood of all the godly.

Bellarm.* 2. This word (amodo) from henceforth, is not to be underſtood ſtraight after their death, but ſtraight after the day of judgement, then they ſhall be bleſſed.

Anſwer. Firſt, by this reaſon none that are dead in Chriſt ſhould be happie before that time. And yet by your owne confeſſion, Martyrs are ſtraightway received up to Heaven. Secondly, S. Iohn uſeth this word elſewhere, to ſignifie from this time forward, as *Ioh.*1.51. Chriſt ſaith to Nathanael, From Iohn 1.51. henceforth you ſhall ſee Heaven open.

Rhemiſt. Thirdly, it may be alſo underſtood of the ſoules in Purgatorie, that are without danger of ſinne and damnation, and are put in unfallible ſecuritie of their ſalvation, with unſpeakable comfort.

Anſwer. Firſt, ſo the Saints living are bleſſed, being as well without feare of damnation, and are Rom.8.1. aſſured of their ſalvation. Secondly, I pray you what reſt or comfort can they have, that endure Rom.8.16. greater paine than any in this life? And how can their conſciences be quieted, ſeeing their ſoules are ſo afflicted? for bodies they have none, whatſoever they ſuffer is in ſoule: how then can joy and paine, comfort and horror be together in the ſoule?

Let us ſee the judgement of former times: Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. lib. 1. cap. 1. Tribus modis peccata mortalium vindicantur, &c. The ſinnes of mortall men are three wayes puniſhed, two wayes in this life, and one in the next: Of the two wayes the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, if wee would judge our ſelves, &c. This is the puniſhment wherein everie ſinner taketh revenge in himſelfe: Afterward hee ſaith, but when wee are judged of God, wee are chaſtiſed, &c. This is the puniſhment which God in mercie doth lay upon ſinners: The third is moſt fearefull and terrible, not in this but the next world, when the juſt Judge ſhal ſay, Depart from me ye curſed, &c. We ſee then that Purgatory by the ſentence of this Councell is excluded, for it is none of theſe three kindes of puniſhments here expreſſed.

And yet we have more evident teſtimony out of their owne Canons, Gelaſius epiſtol. ad Anaſtaſium; Quæ ſolveris ſuper terram, &c. That which thou bindeſt upon earth: upon the earth, for he that dieth being thus bound, can no where bee abſolved: Therefore hee that is not abſolved in this life, cannot be afterwards: Ergo, no Purgatorie.

Againe, the ſame Gelaſ. decret. 2. de eo qui in divino judicio eſt conſtitutus, &c. Concerning him that is committed to the divine judgement, it is not lawfull to judge any other thing, than that wherein he died.

Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. c. 39. Non meretur juſtificari: Hee is not worthy to be juſtified, which did not confeſſe his ſins while he lived.

Ibid. c. 49. Leo; Quod manens in corpore non recepit: That which a man in his body received not, being uncloathed of his fleſh, he cannot obtaine, &c. If then there bee no remiſſion of ſins after this life, then conſequently no Purgatorie.

And as touching the word purifying or purging, whereof Purgatorie is derived, their owne Canons call repentance, Purificatorium ignem pœnitudinis, the purifying fire, decret. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. c. 11. If Repentance be a Purgatorie fire, what need another Purgatorie fire afterward?

Let them heare alſo the judgement of one of their owne writers, Animarum poſt diſſolutionem carnis ſuum quæque ſtatum immutabilem ſortiuntur: Everie ſoule after the diſſolution of the fleſh, doe enter into their immutable ſtate, Eſpenc. in 2 Timoth. p. 144. d. If the ſtate of everie ſoule after death be immutable, then there is no Purgatorie; for that ſtate is mutable and temporall by their owne confeſſion.

Let us adjoyne the teſtimony of the holy Martyrs, Richard Fevrus, French Martyr, being asked if he beleeved any Purgatorie, anſwered: I beleeve that Chriſt with his precious bloud hath made an end of all Purgatorie, and purgation of our ſinnes, Fox, pag. 913. col. 1. Francis Rebezies holy Martyr, I doe acknowledge that Purgatorie which is the death and paſſion of Chriſt, Fox, pag. 922. col. 1.

Pag. 842. 1. 30.

Iohn Frith holy Martyr, I beleeve there is no ſuch place to purge the ſpots and filth of the ſoule after this life: for man conſiſteth of two parts, that is, of body & ſoule, whereof the one is purged here in this world by affliction, perſecution, impriſonment, and laſt of all by death it ſelfe, and the ſoule is purged by the word of God, which we receive through faith, &c. Now if you can ſhew mee a third part of man beſide the body and the ſoule, I will alſo grant unto you the third place which is Purgatorie, &c. Fox, pag. 1034.

Maſter Latimer Martyr thinketh the device of Purgatorie, to be a meere imagination & fancie, and ſaith upon this ground, that hee would rather chuſe to be in Purgatorie, than in the Lollars tower: And of this his ſpeech he rendreth many ſufficient reaſons: See more, Fox, pag. 1741. col. 2.

Laſtly, Iohn Spicer, William Coberly, Iohn Maundrel Martyrs put to death, for ſaying that Purgatorie was the Pope pinfold, pag. 1894. col. 1. Let our adverſaries ſhew now, if they can, who of their ſect have died in the defence of Purgatorie, as wee are able to bring forth many Martyrs, who have witneſſed againſt it, even by their bloud.

Pag. 1719. 1. 80.

Of the Greeke Church we have Chryſoſtome, who doth otherwiſe interpret that place, 1 Cor. 3. Whereupon the Romaniſts chiefly ground their Purgatorie: by hay and ſtubble hee underſtandeth evill works: and where the Apoſtle ſaith, He ſhall ſuffer yet as it were by the fire: Hee underſtandeth it of everlaſting puniſhment: In perpetuo ſupplicio manebit, Hee ſhall remaine in perpetuall puniſhment, and ſo ſhall be preſerved in the fire. This ſenſe the Greeke Church followeth at this day, as Nilus ſaith, that properly in the Greeke tongue this word, τὸ σώζεσθαι, ſignifieth to remaine and have a being: and he alleageth Chryſoſtome for this expoſition inſerting alſo this narration, that while Chryſoſtome was perplexed in finding out the meaning of that place, he prayed unto S. Paul, who appeared unto him and ſtood at his elbow three evenings together, not ſeene of Chryſoſtome himſelfe, but of Proclus one of his ſchollers, that attended on him, who told ſo much unto Chryſoſtome, who by the deſcription of the man which Proclus ſaw ſtanding by him, one with a bald head, and like in all reſpects to the picture of Paul, which Chryſoſtome had before him, judged him to bee Saint Paul, who directed him to this interpretation. But if any ſuch thing had beene, it is like that Chryſoſtome in his Commentarie upon this place, would not have omitted it. But to leave this uncertaine and fabulous report, Nilus proceedeth to confirme this interpretation, underſtanding by the day, the day of judgement: and ſheweth out of Baſil, how the fire hath two properties, the one is καυστικὸν, conſuming, burning; the other φωτίζον, illuminating: that propertie ſhall be exerciſed by the fire upon the wicked, the other upon the righteous: and ſo everie one ſhall bee tried by the fire of the day of judgement. But it ſhall not need to proſecute this interpretation more at large, ſeeing it is refuſed before, as not agreeable to the meaning of the Apoſtle in this place: onely thus much I have inſerted to ſhew the divers interpretation of the Greekes from the Latines: I will now proceed to ſhew, that as they differ in the expoſition of this place, ſo they diſſent in the opinion of Purgatorie it ſelfe.

Nilus lib. de purgator.

Nilus ibid.

Nilus urgeth theſe arguments againſt Purgatorie fire. 1 The Scripture maketh not mention of two puniſhments after this life, nor two fires: we there finde everlaſting fire prepared for the Devill and his Angels, but no temporarie fire.

αἰώνιον πῦρ πρόσκαιρον πῦρ.

2 There is no neceſſity of deviſing Purgatorie, in reſpect of Gods juſtice, for the puniſhing of ſmall and veniall ſins: for it is more agreeable to Gods goodneſſe to reward a ſmall good, than to puniſh a ſmall evill. Now then as a little good in the wicked ſhall not procure unto them a reward, ſo neither a little evill among many good vertues, ſhall procure puniſhment: the difference of reward and puniſhment will helpe this matter: a new place of puniſhment is not neceſſary.

3 He alleageth Gregorie to this purpoſe: that after this life, it is a time of punition, not of purgation: and writing upon the Paſch, which was not to be left any part of it till the morning, he ſaith, that after the preſent night of this life, there is no purgation.

κόλασεως καιρὸς ὀ καθάρσεως μὴ δεῖ πο κάθαρσις.

4 It is againſt the nature of the ſoule, which is incorporall, to be puniſhed with corporall fire.

5 The doctrine of purgatorie fire, which ſhall have an end, giveth occaſion of reviving the errour of Origen, concerning the reſtoring of all things in the end, and of the waſting of hell fire.

ὡς ῥαθυμίαν ποιῶν.

6 This doctrine is to be baniſhed out of the Church, as breeding ſecurity in mens mindes, that they ſhould not indevour by all diligence to be purged in this life. To this purpoſe Nilus.

Sacranus. err. 33.

1 The Muſcovites to this day herein concurre and conſent with the Greek Church: aſſerunt non eſſe purgatorium: they ſay there is no Purgatory, but only two receptacles of ſoules after this life, heaven and hell. Againe, another ſaith, Purgatorium Græci & Rutheni negant: The Greekes and Ruſſians denie Purgatorie, but ſay, that every one after this life receiveth according to his workes the place appointed for him, where he expecteth the day of judgement, &c.

Guagnin. de relig. Muſcovit.

2 The ſame hath beene the opinion of the South Church of Africa. Cyprian ſaith, Ad refrigerium juſti vocantur, ad ſupplicium rapiuntur injuſti: The righteous are called to their refreſhing, the unrighteous are carried to puniſhment. Fulgentius, when he lay a dying, did often repeat theſe words: Domine hic da mihi pœnitentiam, poſtea indulgentiam: Lord grant me repentance here, and afterward forgiveneſſe. He beleeved that after death no comfort was to be found, which was not ſought for in this life by repentance: what the doctrine is now of the South Church in Æthiopia is not ſo certaine. Damianus à Goes ſetteth downe in the confeſſion of Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Biſhop, that ſoules are tormented in Purgatory, and that two dayes every weeke, the Sabbath and Lords day, (which both they keepe holy, the one out of the Law, the other for the Goſpell) the ſoules in Purgatory have reſt: and that they had eaſe by the almes-deeds of the living: but their Patriark can grant no indulgence, to ſhorten their time of puniſhment, that belongeth (they ſay) to God onely. But Alvares, who dwelt a long time among them, whereas Damianus ſpeaketh upon report, ſaith that they uſe no prayers for the dead, but onely read at their buriall the Goſpell of S. Iohn: which ſheweth that they hold no Purgatorie: for then conſequently they would pray for them.

The ſecond part, of the circumſtances and other matters belonging to Purgatorie.

The Papiſts.

1. THey ſay it is an Article of faith, to beleeve that there is a Purgatorie, and that he which beleeveth it not, is ſure to goe to hell, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Purgatorio, cap. 11. 11. Error.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold, that it is not onely an Article belonging to the faith, but contrary to it: and that though there were a Purgatorie, yet it ſhould not be neceſſarie to ſalvation to beleeve it. Firſt, becauſe the Scripture hath not determined it, which containeth all things neceſſary to ſalvation. Secondly, the Greeke Church holdeth it not to this day: they confeſſe no Purgatorie fire, though they pray for the dead: as may be ſeene in the Florentine Councell, Seſſ. 25. it were a hard matter therefore to pronounce them damned. Thirdly, Auguſtine doubted of it: He ſaith, that there ſhould be ſome ſuch place after death, non incredibile eſt, it is not incredible, & utrum ita ſit, quæri poteſt, & aut inveniri aut latere fideles poteſt: whether it be ſo or not, it may be enquired, and it may either be ſafely found out, or remaine hid and unknowne to the faithfull: Enchirid. 69. Auguſtine ſaith, A faithfull man may ſafely be ignorant of Purgatory.

The Papiſts.

2. THey, ſay they, onely goe to Purgatorie, that die in their veniall and light tranſgreſſions, or which have their ſins remitted, but not ſatisfied for the puniſhment, Bellarmin. lib. 2. de Purgat. cap. 1. 12. Error.

The

The Proteſtants.

Rom.6.23. FIrſt, we deny that any ſins are of their owne nature veniall, as they affirme, for the wages of all ſin, without the mercie of God, is death. Secondly, what equitie ſhould there be in this, that veniall ſins ſhould be puniſhed with the helliſh fire of Purgatorie, that exceedeth all the afflictions of this life, yea and a longer time than any man liveth upon earth; for the Pope taketh upon him to pardon for thouſands of yeeres: and yet mortall and deadly ſins (as they call them) may bee ſatisfied for here, where neither the penance can be ſo grievous, nor ſo long? Thirdly, the ſin once remitted, there remai-
Mark.2.5.10. neth no puniſhment: Mark.2.5. Chriſt ſaith to the ſicke of the palſie, Thy ſins are forgiven thee: and verſ.10. That ye may know that the Son of man hath authority on earth to forgive ſins, I ſay unto thee, ariſe, take up thy bed and walke. The releaſing him of the puniſhment of his body, was a ſigne that his ſins alſo were forgiven, and the ſin being remitted, the puniſhment alſo ceaſeth. Wherefore who ſo leaveth the world without ſin, is no more guilty of any puniſhment.

The Papiſts.

13. Error. Eccleſ.9.5. 3 THe ſoules in Purgatorie doe neither ſin any more, neither can they merit. Eccleſ.9.5. The dead know nothing at all: verſ. 10. there is neither work, knowledge, nor wiſdome in the grave, Bellarm.cap.2.

The Proteſtants.

WE ſay, that if there were any ſuch place as Purgatorie, the ſoules there tormented, muſt needs both increaſe in charitie and righteouſneſſe, becauſe the more they are purged the more pure they are, and the leſſe droſſe is in them: and being in unſpeakable torments, they cannot chuſe but tremble and feare; yea and alſo be diſquieted in their ſoules, as the Saints were ſometime in their afflictions here upon earth; and therefore cannot be without ſin: for feare hath painfulneſſe, as the A-
1 Ioh.4.18. poſtle ſaith, and he that feareth is not perfect in love: Ergo, a ſervile or ſlaviſh feare is ſin. That place alleaged doth not only take away meriting or working from the dead, but all knowledge and underſtanding. And it is ſpoken in the perſon of the Epicure and ſenſuall man, that thinketh that the dead know nothing.

The Papiſts.

14. Error. 4 THey affirme, that the ſoules in Purgatorie are certaine of their ſalvation in the midſt of their torments: for every ſoule departed, ſtraight after death receiveth ſentence of life or death, Bellarm.cap.4.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, that every ſoule is judged preſently after death, we grant: and it maketh ſtrongly againſt your Purgatorie: for the ſentence given is either of death or life; and the ſentence being given is accordingly executed: ſo that they which receive ſentence of life goe preſently to heaven, the other to hell. For to what purpoſe elſe ſhould the ſentence be given, if it be not ſtraightwayes
2 Cor.5.2.3.4. in force? So S. Paul ſaith, that they which looke to be cloathed with their houſe from heaven, ſhall not be left naked or uncloathed. But if ſome ſoules ordained to life eternall, ſhould pauſe a while in Purgatorie, being uncloathed of their fleſh, they ſhould be left altogether naked, having not yet received their cloathing from heaven. Secondly, where there is ſecurity of ſalvation, there is the greateſt comfort and joy that can be: how then can the ſoules in Purgatorie be ſo grievouſly tormented, which cannot be elſewhere than in their conſcience? for as for the whipping, ſcalding, freezing of ſoules in Purgatorie, they are but old wives fables: the joy then of the ſoule is in the conſcience, ſo is the ſorrow: how then can both theſe be matched in the ſoule together, to have unſpeakable joy, as alſo to feele moſt horrible paine?

5 In theſe points alreadie ſet downe, our adverſaries we ſee are bold to define certainly of Purgatorie: but there are as many points, and ſomewhat more, which they leave in doubt and uncertaine. Firſt, where Purgatorie ſhould be: Bellarmine geſſeth it is in the bowels of the earth next to hell, cap. 6. ſo doe the Rhemiſts, *Luk.16. ſect.*8. But they doe not all agree, neither hath their Church defined it. Secondly, they cannot tell how many yeeres Purgatorie endureth, whether an hundred, or two hundred, or a thouſand yeeres. Thirdly, they cannot tell certainly whether it be materiall fire which burneth in Purgatorie, but they ſay it is propable. Fourthly, neither can they ſhew how corporall fire ſhould worke upon the ſoules in Purgatorie, being ſpirituall and incorporall, Bellar.cap.12. Fifthly, they are uncertaine, whether the divels or Angels be the tormentors in Purgatorie, cap.13. Sixthly, whether the paines of Purgatorie be at all times alike, or by little and little ſlacked toward the end; and whether it doe exceed all the paines and ſorrowes of this life, they yet remaine uncertaine, and are not able to determine, *Bellarm.lib.2.de purgat.cap.*14. Let us leave them therefore with their uncertainties, and brainſick fanſies,: for the vaine inventions and imaginations of men have no end, but are fitly by the Prophets compared to ſparkles, that leape out thick out of the fire, but are Iſa.50.11. ſoone extinguiſhed. Walke, ſaith the Prophet, in the light of your fire, and ſparks that you have kindled: that is, as the ſparkles give but a dim light for a man to walk by, hee may ſtumble and grope about ſtill for all that light, even ſo, no marvell if the Papiſts doe wander up and downe in their imaginations, walking by the light and ſparkles of their fantaſticall and mathematicall fire of Purgatorie.

The

The third part, whether the prayers of the living, or any other workes of theirs doe profit the dead.

The Papiſts.

THeir opinion is, that the prayers of the living are neither available for the Saints in heaven, for they need them not, nor for the damned in hell, for they cannot be helped; but only for the ſoules tormented in Purgatorie, who doe finde great eaſe, ſay they, by the prayers of the living, and therefore we ought to pray for them, *Bellarm.lib.*2.*de purg.c.*15.18. *Rhem.annot.*2 *Theſſ.*2.*ſect.*19.

Hæreſ.15.

Argum. 1. Chriſt while he lived, profited the dead, for he raiſed to life the rulers daughter, *Matt.*9. the widowes ſonne, Luke 7. and Lazarus, which were dead: therefore even ſo the members of Chriſt ought one to helpe another, the living the dead, *Bellarm.cap.*15.

Anſw. Firſt, is not here a ſtrong argument, think you; Chriſt raiſed Lazarus, and ſome others from death to life: Ergo, we ought to pray for the dead? for it followeth not that upon the miraculous works of Chriſt, wee ſhould build the ordinarie duties of Chriſtians: Auguſtine would have told you that Chriſt is not to be imitated in ſuch works: Non hoc tibi dicit, non eris diſcipulus meus; niſi ambulaveris ſupra mare, aut niſi ſuſcitaveris quatriduanum mortuum: He ſaith not unto thee, Thou ſhalt not be my diſciple, unleſſe thou walke upon the Sea, and raiſe one that hath beene dead foure dayes: But, Learne of me, for I am humble and meeke, &c. Secondly, if prayer for the dead be unto us, as the raiſing of the dead was to Chriſt: then, as all the dead are to be prayed for, ſo Chriſt ſhould have raiſed againe all that went then to Purgatorie: or elſe, by your concluſion, he failed in charity, as we doe now, if we pray not for the dead, as you beare us in hand. Thirdly, though the Saints departed, and the faithfull living are members of the ſame bodie, and ſo are bound in love one to the other, yet it followeth not, that one ſhould pray for the other. They with us, and we with them doe wiſh and long to ſee the redemption of the ſonnes of God accompliſhed. But charitie bindeth us not one to pray for another, becauſe we know not one the particular needs of another. Nay, to pray for any departed, is againſt the rule of charitie: for love beleeveth all things, and hopeth all things. We ought to hope the beſt of the dead, that they are at reſt: but in praying for them, we preſuppoſe they are in miſerie, and ſo need our prayers: therefore we hope not the beſt of them, as charitie willeth us.

Revel.6.10.
1 Cor.13.7.

Argum. 2. There is a mutuall communication of all the members of Chriſts bodie; Saint Paul ſaith, if one member ſuffer, all ſuffer with it: but the righteous departed are members of the ſame bodie: Ergo, the living ought to be touched with compaſſion toward them, and aſſiſt them with their prayers, *Bellarm.lib.*2.*de purg.c.*15.

1 Cor.12.26.

Anſw. Firſt, though it cannot be denied, but that the Church of God in heaven and earth make but one family, yet it is evident, that in this place the Apoſtle only ſpeaketh of that part of the Church, which is on earth, wherein Chriſt hath ordained ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, &c. verſ. 28. which diſtinction of offices belongeth to the militant Church on earth. Secondly, yet wee grant that there is a mutuall communication betweene both members, ſuch as is agreeable with their eſtate: namely, that the Saints in heaven doe long for a conſummation of our and their happineſſe; and doe wiſh unto the Church militant, the like happie end of their afflictions, as they have attained unto, and the members yet living doe give thankes for the glorious victorie of the Saints in heaven, according as the Apoſtle ſaith, if one member be had in honour, all the members rejoyce with it; but the members living ſuffer not with the members departed; for as much as they ſuffer not at all, all teares being wiped from their eyes, *Apocal.*7.17. and therefore they have no need of our prayers.

Epheſ.3.15.
Revel.6.10.
1 Cor.12.26.
Apoc.7.17.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith, There is a ſin unto death, for the which a man ought not to pray: that is, deadly ſin, wherein a man dieth without repentance: but for other ſins not unto death, whereof men repent themſelves, it is lawfull to pray: Ergo, we may pray for thoſe that are departed not in deadly ſin: for this place is properly to be underſtood of praying or not praying for the dead: becauſe ſo long as a man liveth he may be prayed for, becauſe all ſins are pardonable in this life, Rhemiſt.ibid.

1 Ioh.5.16.

Anſw. Firſt, a ſin unto death is not onely finall impenitencie, but ſin alſo againſt the holy Ghoſt, ſuch as was the ſin of Iudas, and of the Phariſees. Secondly, though we ſhould underſtand it of finall impenitencie, yet it is but a ſorry argument: Some of the dead ought not to be prayed for: Ergo, the reſt may. Thirdly, the text cannot be underſtood of praying for the dead: for the text ſaith not, If any man ſee that his brother hath ſinned not unto death, but, If he ſee him ſinning: but the dead do neither ſin, nor are ſeene to ſin. Fourthly, whereas you ſay, that all ſins are pardonable in this life, our Saviour Chriſt ſaith contrarie, that the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt can never be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. See more of their arguments in the queſtion before of Purgatorie, *Argum.*2.& 7.

Our Doway men doe thus argue upon theſe words of Iob, Spare me, for my dayes are nothing: as Iob prayed God to ſpare him, or to ceaſe to puniſh him more, and to accept of that affliction which he had alreadie ſuffered: ſo the Church in the behalfe of the ſoules departed in ſtate of grace, prayeth God to ſpare, and ceaſe from further puniſhing them, and to give them eternall reſt, &c. annot.ibid.

Iob 7.16.

Anſw. Is not here now a goodly argument: Iob being alive prayed for the mitigating of his affliction: Ergo, in like manner we may pray for the eaſing of the puniſhment of the ſoules departed: Iob was alive, thoſe ſoules are departed: Iob felt his affliction, the ſtate of thoſe ſoules is unknowne to us: Iob had time and ſpace to repent: but no repentance profiteth after this life: Iob had Gods word and warrant for his prayer: but of praying for the dead the Scripture maketh no mention.

The Proteſtants.

TO pray for the dead, is a worke neither pleaſing before God, becauſe he hath no where commanded it, nor available for them that are departed, becauſe they have their judgement alreadie. While we live, let us one pray for another, but when we are gone, the prayers of the living helpe us not.

Heb.1.3.
Matth.3.11.
1 Cor.3.13.
Malach.3.3.
2 Pet.3.7.
1 Cor.15.53.

Argum. 1. The ground of this popiſh opinion of prayer for the dead, is their ſuperſticious device of Purgatorie: for none elſe doe they hold it lawfull to pray for, but for the ſoules onely in Purgatorie. But there is no Purgatorie, as we have ſhewed before, after this life: our purging is only in this life: Chriſt hath by himſelfe purged our ſins: Chriſt his blood is the chiefe and onely purgation of our ſins: there are alſo other inferiour and miniſteriall purgings, whereby that onely ſoveraigne purging is made beneficiall, and applied unto us: as the inward operation and work of the ſpirit is compared to fire. There is alſo a purging fire of affliction compared by the Prophet to Fullers ſope. There alſo ſhall be a third purging fire in the day of the Lord, when as the corruption and mortalitie of our bodies ſhall be purged away, and then ſhall our mortality put on immortalitie. Other Purgatorie after this life we acknowledge none. Seeing then that there are no ſoules in Purgatorie, and for none elſe it is lawfull to pray but for the ſoules tormented in Purgatorie: it followeth that we are to pray for none at all that are dead.

Hebr.11.6.
Iames 1.7.

Argum. 2. No prayer is acceptable to God without faith. Wee muſt pray without wavering and doubting: but ſo can we not pray for the dead: for we cannot tell in what caſe they are for whom we pray, whether they be in heaven, hell, or Purgatorie, and therefore we cannot aſſure our ſelves that our prayers are heard, but muſt needs pray with great doubting and wavering of the minde: Ergo, ſuch prayers are in vaine, Iames 1.7.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Firſt, it is better, that they ſometime ſhould have our prayers, that need them not, as the Saints in heaven, than they to want them, that need them, namely, the ſoules in Purgatorie: as wee give almes many times to the wicked, leſt wee ſhould bee wanting to the righteous.

Mark.11.24.

Contra. Firſt, he very unskilfully ſtill beggeth the thing in the queſtion, that the ſoules in Purgatorie need our prayers, which we doe inſtantly denie: ſo that our prayers are not ſuperfluous onely to ſome of the dead, but to all. Secondly, he would have men make their prayers, as the blinde man ſhooteth at the Crow, that as he ſhooteth many arrowes, that at the leaſt ſome may hit; ſo they to make many prayers, that ſome may prevaile: but the Scripture forbiddeth us to pray ſo uncertainly, ſaying, whatſoever you deſire, when you pray, beleeve that you ſhall have it, and it ſhall be done unto you. So then, if it were lawfull to pray for the dead, then wee ſhould be ſure to helpe all with our prayers, yea even thoſe which are in hell, which they themſelves deny. This rule then, it is better to be ſuperfluous in neceſſaries, than to be defective; to abound, rather than to lack; taketh place in matters arbitrarie, and ſubject to our will: but where Gods pleaſure is otherwiſe, as in this caſe of praying for the dead, it hath no place at all. Thirdly, the inſtance of almes is not alike, for we are commanded to doe good unto all, and ſo to the unjuſt, though chiefly to the houſhold of faith; but there is no commandement to pray for the dead: and againe, almes doe profit all the receivers, ſo are not prayers profitable to all, that are dead.

Secondly, ſaith he, a good work is never in vaine, it is meritorious to the doer, though it profit not the receiver, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, we deny that any good work is meritorious. Secondly, that it is no good work which is not of faith, nor commanded by the Lord: and therefore prayer for the dead, being not warranted by the word, is no good worke, but meere ſuperſtition.

Matth.3.2.8.
Isai.1.16.17.

Argum. 3. Our prayers profit not the dead, becauſe there is no place after this life for repentance or remiſſion of ſins: for this ſhould be the end and intendment of our prayer, that they might be releaſed of their ſins, and eaſed of their paine. There is no remiſſion of ſins after death, becauſe there is no true repentance: repentance there is none, becauſe there can be no amendment of life, which alwayes followeth repentance: for Iohn Baptiſt that was a Preacher of repentance, bid not only the people to repent, but to bring forth fruits worthy repentance. So ſaith the Prophet Ezechiel, If the wicked will returne from his ſins, and doe the thing that is lawfull, he ſhall live and not die. There are two parts then of repentance, as Iſay ſaith, Ceaſe to doe evill, learne to doe well. But there is no place of working out of the body: Ergo, then no repentance.

To this Auguſtine agreeth: Non eſt apud inferos pœnitentia ad ſalutem proficiens, ecce nunc tempus eſt ſalutis, nunc tempus remiſſionis, &c. In hac vita pœnitentia tantum patet libertas, poſt mortem nulla correctionis eſt licentia: De tempor. ſerm. 66. In hell, or among the dead there is no repentance unto ſalvation: behold now is the time of ſalvation, the time of forgiveneſſe, &c. In this life only have men liberty to repent, after death there is no place for amendment, &c. What is become now (I pray you)

you) of your Purgatorie repentance? after this life there is no ſalvation to be had, becauſe there is no remiſſion of ſins: no remiſſion of ſins, becauſe there is no repentance: there is no repentance, becauſe there is no amendment.

See the conſent of antiquitie againſt prayer to be made for the dead: Gelaſius epiſtol. ad Anaſtaſium Imperator. Quaſolveris ſuper terram, &c. ſuper terram (inquit:) nam in hac ligatione defunctum nuſquam dicit abſolvi: Whatſoever thou looſeſt upon earth (ſaith our Saviour Chriſt:) he ſaith, upon earth: for he that dieth being bound, is no where ſaid to be looſed, &c. If the dead then cannot be looſed from their ſins, in vaine they are prayed for.

Concil. Toletan. 3. can. 22. Qui divina vocatione ab hac vita recedunt, cum Pſalmis tantummodo & Pſallentium vocibus debere ad ſepulchra deferri: nam funebre carmen, quod vulgo defunctis cantari ſolet, &c. prohibemus: They which are called by God out of this life, are to be brought to the grave only with Pſalmes and the voice of ſingers: for that funerall verſe, which they are wont to ſing to the dead, we doe forbid to be uſed, &c. Here ſinging only and thankſgiving for the departure of the dead is permitted: and all verſes and whatſoever enditings directed to the dead are forbidden: therefore alſo prayers for the dead are unlawfull by this decree.

Further, prayer for the dead is contrarie to their owne rule: Injuriam facit Martyri, qui orat pro Martyre: He doth wrong to a Martyr, that prayeth for a Martyr; and therefore whereas in their old Maſſe bookes they prayed thus, Annue nobis Domine, ut animæ famuli tui Leonis. &c. Grant Lord, this oblation may be profitable to the ſoule of thy ſervant Leo; they have changed the forme thus; Quæſumus Domine, ut interceſſione, &c. We beſeech thee Lord, that by the interceſſion of bleſſed Leo, this oblation may be profitable to us, Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Wherefore their prayers for the dead muſt needs bee injurious, ſeeing amongſt others, they pray alſo for many Saints in heaven.

Thomas Hawkes holy Martyr, hath ſealed this truth: The prayer of the righteous man is availeable for the living, but not for the dead: for David ſaith, no man can deliver his brother from death, nor make agreement unto God for him: Pſal. 49. Fox pag. 1587. col. 2. Pag. 1442. l. 70.

1 Chryſoſtome thus ſheweth how all endevour is in vaine for the dead: Quonſque nobis tempus conceditur, recte vivamus, &c. neque gubernator poſtquam navis ſubmerſa eſt, neque medicus poſtquam ægrotus obiit, quicquam prodeſſe poteſt: Let us live well as long as we have time, neither the Pilot when the ſhip is drowned, nor the Phyſician when the ſick man is dead profiteth any thing, &c. Prayer then for the dead is as a Phyſician after death. Ieremie the Patriark, though in ſome places he ſeemeth to favour making of prayer and giving of almes for the dead, hath this ſaying, Tunc demum deſperationis tempus erit, &c. Then is the time of deſpaire, when the nuptiall bed ſhall be ſhut, and they which have lived well, Abrahæ potientur ſinu, ſhall enjoy Abrahams boſome; but yet this time is not come, nondum ſolutum theatrum, necdum curſus confectus eſt, &c. but yet the theatre is not diſſolved, the race is not ended, &c. His opinion here is, that after the righteous ſoules are received into Abrahams boſome, then the reſt have no more hope: but this is immediatly after the departure of the ſoules, as Nilus ſheweth out of that parable of Lazarus and the rich man, the one went to Abrahams boſome, a place of happineſſe, the other to a place of torment: there is no middle place (ſaith he) betweene both.

4 Whereas divers of the ancient Fathers are produced as witneſſes of prayer for the dead, as Cyprian, Nazianzene, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, who prayed for the two Emperours Theodoſius and Valentinian being dead, and in the ancient Miſſals, they prayed for Leo, that that oblation might profit his ſoule: we can have no better anſwer, than of ſome of the Romaniſts themſelves: as Caſſander, they did it, either to ſhew their love and affection to the dead, or their hope of the reſurrection, or gratiæ agebantur, &c. they gave thanks for the glorious victorie of the Martyrs. Yet Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, Fortaſſe petunt gloriam corporis, in die reſurrectionis: It may be they pray for the glory of the body in the reſurrection, &c. Their manner of praying then for the eaſing of ſoules in Purgatorie ſavoureth not of antiquitie.

Caſſander conſultat. artic. 22.
Lib. 2. de Purgator, c. 18.

Now then to conclude this point: whereas there are foure ſtates and conditions held of the ſoules departed, either to be in heaven or hell, as we all beleeve, or elſe ſome to be in a place of joy, yet inferiour to heaven, as the Greeks, or in Purgatorie a place of torment beſide hell, as the Papiſts: hereupon alſo foure kinde of prayers have beene uſed for the dead: 1 Some have thought, that even the damned may finde ſome eaſe by the prayers of the living: as Damaſcene, Oration. pro defunctis, maketh mention, how the ſoule of Trajane by the prayers of Gregorie, and of Falconilla by the prayers of Tocla were delivered out of hell: the ſame tales are alſo received by Ierome the Patriark as currant: but Bellarmine rejecteth them as fables, and ſo doe we, for out of hell is no redemption.

Lib. 2. de Purga.

2 The Greeks holding that the ſoules doe not preſently enjoy the ſight of God, doe pray that they may be taken into a more glorious place, as is ſhewed before: but this is rejected on both ſides: for as Auguſtine ſaith, Injuriam facit Martyri, qui orat pro Martyre: He doth wrong to a Martyr, that prayeth for a Martyr.

Serm. 17. de verb. Apoſtoli.

3 The third kinde is to pray for the ſoules in Purgatorie: but this faſhion no Chriſtian Church either in the Eaſt, South, or Weſt, hath taken up, but only the Church of Rome: neither is it warranted either by Scripture or antiquitie.

4 The laſt kinde, is to remember in our prayers thoſe which are at reſt and joy in heaven: which in ſome ſort may be allowed: and that firſt either to give thanks unto God for them, being delivered out of the miſeries of this life, or to ſhew the hope of our reſurrection together with them, as in the Liturgie of S. Baſil, Memento Domine omnium dormientium in ſpe reſurrectionis vitæ æternæ: Remember Lord all ſuch as ſleepe in the hope of the reſurrection to eternall life: and ſo we may ſay of the dead, God ſend him a joyfull reſurrection; or we doe wiſh well unto the dead, only to ſhew our love and affection: as Ambroſe ſaith of Gratian and Valentinian: Beati ambo, ſiquid meæ orationes valebunt, nulla dies vos ſilentio præteribit: Ye two bleſſed ones, if my prayers can availe ought, no day ſhall paſſe you over in ſilence, &c. And ſo the confeſſion of Wittemberg ſaith, Charity requireth that we ſhould wiſh all peace and happineſſe to them that are dead in the Lord: artic. 24.

De obit. Valentinian.

An Appendix or an appertinence to this part, concerning the burials and funerals of the dead.

THere are certaine points wherein there is no great variance or diſſention betweene us. Firſt, we confeſſe, that it is meet and convenient, that the bodies of Chriſtians, being departed, ſhould after a ſeemly and comely manner be brought to the grave: as David commendeth the men of Iabeſh Gilead, for burying the body of Saul, 2 Sam. 2. 5. The brethren alſo took the body of Stephen and buried it, Act. 8. 2. Secondly, it is not to be denied but that lamentation and ſorrow may be made for the dead, obſerving S. Pauls rule, that we mourne not as thoſe that have no hope, that is, exceſſively: where S. Paul doth not ſimply forbid Chriſtians to ſorrow, but not as the Gentiles. The brethren alſo made great lamentation for Stephen, Act. 8. 2. Thirdly, we do alſo grant, that according to the divers cuſtoms of countreys, it is not unlawfull to uſe ſome comely rites and ceremonies in the buriall of the dead; not for religion, but for orders ſake: as among the Iſraelites, the mourners were wont to goe about in the ſtreets, Eccleſiaſt. 12. 5. And Chriſt commended the woman in the Goſpell, for anointing of him againſt his buriall, Mark. 14.

1 Theſſ. 4. 15.

But beſide theſe points by us confeſſed, and acknowledged, there are other more weighty matters, as touching the order of funerals, wherein wee worthily and juſtly diſſent from our adverſaries.

16. Error.

1 They doe attribute much to the places where men are buried, as in Churches, and Churchyards, but eſpecially under the Altar, Rhemiſt. As the ſoules of the righteous doe reſt in Chriſt, who is that Altar, under the which the Apoſtle ſaw the ſoules of Martyrs: ſo for the correſpondence to the place in heaven, their bodies are commonly laid under the Altar, where the ſacrifice of the body of Chriſt is daily offered, Annot. Apocal. 6. verſ. 9.

Anſw. The altar of the Croſſe was the only place where the body of Chriſt was ſacrificed: neither need it to be often offered in ſacrifice, but it ſufficed once only to have beene done. And in the Communion, we acknowledge no ſacrifice, but of praiſe and thankſgiving. It is kept only in remembrance of the death of Chriſt. And how ſhould it be available for the dead, ſeeing it profiteth not all the living, but only thoſe that are preſent, which doe eat and drink the holy elements of bread and wine in remembrance of the body and bloud of Chriſt, given and ſhed for them? So ſaith the Scripture, Doe this, as oft as you doe it, in remembrance of me. The doers therefore, agents and receivers, have the preſent benefit, not they which are abſent: how then can the dead receive any ſolace by it? It profiteth them not a whit to be laid in Churches, or Churchyards, or other hallowed places, as they call them; for all places are alike: neither helpeth it the dead to be buried in one place more than another: for God ſhall command the ſea, and all other places to give up their dead. The very Heathen did confeſſe as much: one ſaith, It skilleth not, humile, an ſublime putreſcam, whether I rot under, or above the ground. And another thus writeth, Cœlo tegitur, qui non habet urnam: Heaven is a covering to him that hath no other coffin. It were a foule ſhame then for Chriſtians, to exceed the very Gentiles in their ſuperſtitious conceits. Auguſtine ſaith, Si aliquid prodeſt impio ſepultura precioſa, oberit pio vilis, aut nulla: If ſumptuous funerals profit the wicked, then homely or no burials doe hurt the godly. Therefore as it helpeth not a wicked man to be buried in one place more than another; ſo it doth not hinder or hurt the godly and righteous man.

De cura pro mortuis cap. 3.

Bellarmine objecteth the example of the Patriarks, who dying in Ægypt, gave charge for their bodies to be buried in the land of promiſe: from whence he concludeth, that it is availeable to be buried in holy places: And afterward in the times of the Chriſtians, they uſed to burie their bodies in Churches, Bellarm. cap. 19.

Contra. Firſt, the Patriarchs deſired to be buried in the land of promiſe, not for the holineſſe of the place, but partly to be joyned to the ſepulchres of their fathers, as Iacob alleageth, partly to ſhew their faith and aſſurance of Gods promiſes as touching the deliverance of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, as Ioſeph confeſſeth: for afterwards, when the people were come out of Egypt, they had no ſuch deſire for their buriall: for Miriam was buried in Kadeſh, and Aaron in the mount Hor in the wilderneſſe, Numb. 20. Gen. 49. 31. Gen. 50. 26.

Secondly, it is untrue that it was practiſed of ancient time among the Chriſtians to burie their dead in Churches, but this uſe was taken up afterward, as ſuperſtition increaſed: for this was forbidden both by the Imperiall, and Eccleſiaſticall lawes: as Cod. lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 12. Mortuorum corpora non debent in civitatibus ſepeliri: The bodies of the dead muſt not be buried in Cities: Ergo, much leſſe in Churches. And lib. 1. tit. 5. leg. 2. Theodoſ. Nemo martyrum, &c. Let no man thinke, that the ſeat of the Martyrs and Apoſtles is granted for humane bodies, that is, to be buried in.

Likewiſe, Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 13. qu. 2. c. 15. Prohibendum eſt ſecundum majorum ſtatuta: We prohibit, according to the decrees of our elders, that they be not buried in the Church, but in the porch, or the limits without the Church: but within the Church, & prope altare, and neere to the Altar where the bodie and blood of Chriſt is made, let them be buried by no meanes, &c. This Canon overthroweth the Rhemiſts collection for burials under the Altar.

Concil. Avernenſ. can. 5. De opertorio altaris non ſacerdotis corpus, dum ad tumulum evehitur, obtegatur, quia ſacro velamine dum honorantur corpora, altaria polluuntur: The Prieſts bodie muſt not bee covered with the Altar-cloth, while it is carried to the grave, for while the bodies are honoured with the holy vaile, the Altar is defiled, &c. If it be not lawfull for the Altar-cloth to cover the dead, much leſſe for the Altar it ſelfe, which is greater than the covering.

Concil. Bracarenſ. 1. cap. 36. Ut defunctorum corpora nullo modo intra Baſilicam ſanctorum ſepeliantur, quia & hoc moris civitatum eſt, ut nullius defuncti corpus intra ambitum murorum ſit humatum: That the bodies of the dead ſhould not in any caſe be buried within the Churches of the Saints, becauſe that it is the cuſtome alſo of Cities, not to burie their dead within the walles, &c. But if it had beene ſo great a privilege to the dead to be buried in the Church, and neere unto the Altar, I thinke this Councell would not have forbidden it.

This alſo hath beene the confeſſion of thoſe that have beene perſecuted for the truth: William Tracie; As touching the burying of my bodie, It availeth me not whatſoever be done thereto, Fox pag. 1043. col. 1. Thomas Patmore: That hee regarded not the place, whether it were hallowed, or no, where he ſhould be buried, after he was dead, pag. 1644. col. 2.

2 We condemne alſo their ſuperſtitious ceremonies which they uſe at their funerals; as the burning of Tapers, which ſignifieth, ſay they, that the ſoules of the dead are alive, Bellarm. de Purgator. lib. 2. cap. 19. 17. Error.

Anſwer. Firſt, this ſuperſtitious uſe of ſetting up candles, was directly forbidden in the Eliberine Councell, Canon. 34. 2. Cereos per diem in cœmiteriis placuit non incendi: We thinke it good that no wax-candles be burned by day in the Churchyards.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Councell doth onely forbid the ſuperſtitious uſe of the Gentiles in burning of candles: but this notwithſtanding, candles may be uſed to betoken the life of the ſoules departed.

Anſwer. The words of the Councell are generall, as in the 37. Canon likewiſe it is forbidden, Ne lucernas publicè accendant: That they ſhould in no wiſe ſet up candles publikely; and ſo abſolutely it condemneth the uſe of candle light by day.

Of the like ſort alſo were other ſuperſtitious uſages, as the going about of the Belman to will the people to pray for their ſoules, the ringing or jangling of bels to bring their ſoules to heaven, with queere-ſongs and other melodie to commit the bodies to the ground, and commending their ſoules to the protection of Saints. We denie not, but comely and decent orders, void of ſuperſtition, may be uſed, according to the faſhion of the Countrie: as Iacobs bodie was embalmed after the manner of the Ægyptians, Geneſ. 50. 2. At the buriall of their Kings, the Iſraelites uſed to burne odors, Ierem. 34. 5. The Jewes manner was to waſh the bodies of the dead, to winde it up in a linnen cloth, and burie it with ſpices and odors: So our Saviours bodie was buried after the manner of the Jewes, Iohn 19. 40. We read alſo that Ioſeph was put into a Coffin or Cheſt, Gen. 50. 26. Of theſe and the like cuſtomes, Auguſtine giveth a rule, writing upon thoſe words in the Goſpell, Iohn 19. 40. As it was the manner of the Jewes to burie: Non mihi videtur Evangeliſta ſic fruſtra dicere voluiſſe: ita quippe admonuit, in hujuſmodi officiis, quæ mortuis exhibentur, morem cujuſque gentis eſſe ſervandum: in Iohann. tract. 120. Me thinketh the Evangeliſt ſaid not thus without cauſe: hereby letting us to underſtand, that in performing ſuch duties of buriall to the dead, the manner and cuſtome of every Countrie is to be kept.

The Jewes alſo had a cuſtome, with ſome companie or frequencie of people, to bring their dead to the ground, Eccleſ. 12. 5. And in the while, to uſe ſome admonition to the people concerning death and mortalitie which came in by ſinne, and of the wrath and mercie of God, Syrus. interp. in Mark. 14. 3. Neither doe we ſee, why it is not lawfull now among Chriſtians, at funerals and burials, to have ſome godly Sermon and exhortation, to put the people in minde of their end, and to comfort them with the hope of the reſurrection, as alſo to give God thanks, for thoſe his faithfull ſervants, that did glorifie him by their life, and by their godly departure. This ſeemeth alſo to have beene the commendable cuſtome of the Church in ancient time: as Auguſtine writeth thus, Expoſit. in Pſal. 103. part. 1. Pauca nos cogit dicere temporis anguſtia, quod & novit charitas veſtra debere nos exequiis fidelis corporis ſolemne obſequium: The ſhortneſſe of the time cauſeth me to be briefe, and you know, that we are to performe a ſolemne dutie to the body of our faithfull brother, &c. The Sermon ſeemeth to have beene made at ſome funerall.

Concil. Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 52. In ſepulturis & exequiis mortalitatis admonitio diligens fiat, & excitandi inter alia præſentes, ut recogitent ſibi eodem modo hinc excedendum eſſe: In burials and funerals, the people muſt carefully be admoniſhed of mortalitie, and they which are preſent, ſhould be ſtirred up to conſider, that they alſo are mortall.

Jerem. 16. 7. John 11. 38. The Jewes alſo, the buriall being ended, did comfort thoſe that mourned, and ate and dranke with them, and gave them the cup of conſolation: Both which cuſtomes may be kept and retained without any ſuperſtition. But other cuſtomes and ceremonies, that doe ſavour of impietie, and doe any way imply prayer or commendation of the ſoules of the dead, ought to be left and aboliſhed.

18. Error. 3 Another abuſe in popiſh funerals, is their ſuperſtitious and often remembrance of the dead: for they have their weeks minde for the dead the ſeventh day, nay their halfe weeks minde the third day, their moneths minde the thirtieth day: and beſide, their anniverſarie or yeeres minde. I pray you what need all this? Where doe they finde, that we ſhould mourne for the dead many dayes, yea moneths, yea a whole yeere, as they uſe to doe: Ioſeph mourned but ſeven dayes for his father: So did the Gileadites for Saul. The Egyptians indeed mourned threeſcore and ten dayes, when Ioſeph mourned but ſeven: that we may ſee a manifeſt difference betweene the moderate mourning of the faithfull, and the exceſſive lamentation of Infidels. But the popiſh yeeres mindes doe farre exceed the Egyptians ſtinted mourning: there being five times 70. dayes in a yeere. Yet yeerely ſtipends, erected for weekly, monethly, quarterly, or yeerely Sermons we miſlike not: being ordained for the inſtruction of the people, without any relation to the ſoules of the dead, otherwiſe, than to give God thanks for them, and thoſe good things which the Lord wrought by them.

Gen. 50. 10. 1 Sam. 31. 13.

Let us ſee their owne Canons: Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 13. qu. 2. c. 24. Et luxit eum Iſraël, &c. And Iſrael mourned for Iacob ſeven dayes: Hæc ergo ſequenda ſolennitas, quam præſcribit lectio: This ſolemnitie is then to be obſerved, which the Scripture preſcribeth. And againe, Planxerunt filii Iſrael Moſen, &c. The children of Iſrael bewailed Moſes thirtie dayes. Both theſe obſervations are grounded upon authoritie, &c. for Iacob they mourned but ſeven, for Moſes thirtie, who was ſuch a Prophet, as Iſrael in all reſpects had not the like. This was not a yeeres minde: and beſide, the Iſraelites in this mourning made not prayers for the dead, as they uſe to doe, but mourned for the loſſe of ſuch excellent men.

19. Error. 4 They doe greatly erre and are deceived, in holding it to be a meritorious worke, which is performed in the buriall of the dead: alleaging to this purpoſe that place, where David ſent meſſengers to the men of Jabeſh Gilead, ſaying; Bleſſed are ye of the Lord, that you have ſhewed ſuch kindneſſe unto your Lord Saul, and have buried him: therefore now the Lord ſhew mercie and truth unto you. Bellarm. cap. 19.

2 Sam. 2. 4.

Anſw. There can be no ſuch concluſion gathered out of theſe words: The Lord will ſhew mercie, according to his truth and promiſe, to thoſe that are mercifull: Ergo, it is meritorious to be mercifull: for here the reward dependeth of Gods promiſe and truth, not upon the worthineſſe of the worke: Indeed David ſaith, as it followeth in that place, I will recompence this benefit, becauſe you have done this thing. They might deſerve kindneſſe at the hands of David, becauſe one good turne requireth another: but before the Lord there is no merit or deſert. Secondly, to burie the dead is a worke of charitie, and therefore commanded, as all other duties of charitie are. The things then commanded, we doe of dutie, we are bound to doe them: Ergo, they are not meritorious. So ſaith our Saviour Chriſt, doth the maſter thanke his ſervant for doing that which he was commanded? I trow not.

Luk. 17. 9.

20. Error. 5 In their funerals and ſuffrages for the dead, they doe make great difference betweene the rich and the poore: for they ſay, it is poſſible that ſo many prayers and ſuffrages may be made at once for the dead, that their ſoules may at once be delivered out of Purgatorie, Et ideo in hoc ſolo caſu melior eſt conditio divitis, quàm pauperis, quia habet unde ſuffragia fiant pro ipſo: And therefore in this caſe onely the eſtate of the rich is better than the poore, becauſe he hath wherewithall ſuffrages ſhould be made: that is, is able to give great Legacies, and bequeſts to that end: Albert. mag. de officio miſſ. tract. 3. Againe, they have greater reſpect unto the Pope departed, than any other: for the firſt day, there muſt be 200. Maſſes read for his ſoule, and for nine dayes after 100. Maſſes every day, Tilemann. de primat. pontif. error. 86.

Anſwer. Where doe they read in all the Scriptures, that the rich in matters of the ſoule ſhould be preferred before the poore? nay, the Scripture ſaith plainly, that God is no accepter of perſons: And S. Iames ſaith, We ought not to regard a rich man that weareth goodly apparell, having a gold ring, before a poore man in vile apparell. Where alſo doe they learne to pray for none but for thoſe, Jam. 2. 2. for whom they are hired to pray? And if prayer be a worke of charitie, and if by their prayers they can deliver mens ſoules out of Purgatorie, why doe they not extend their charitie to all in praying for them?

What if the rich Glutton, and poore Lazarus were alive now, or theſe Popiſh Maſſe-mongers had lived then; would they have beene bought for money to have prayed for the rich mans ſoule, and let Lazarus alone? It is like they would. But ſurely all their Maſſes ſhould neither have profited the one, nor the want of them have hindered the other. Marke, I pray you, what Auguſtine ſaith: Præclaras De cura pro mortuis cap. 9. exequias in conſpectu hominum purpurato illi diviti turba exhibuit famulorum: ſed multò clariores in conſpectu domini ulceroſo illi pauperi miniſterium præbuit Angelorum: A goodly funerall did the friends and ſervants make for the rich man araied in skarlet in the ſight of the world: but a more bleſſed buriall had the poore man in the ſight of God, by the miniſterie of the Angels, &c. Therefore there is no reſpect of perſons to be had among the dead: neither have the rich any greater privilege for the multitude of ſuffrages, than the poore that wanteth them: for no doubt the rich mans executors ſpared for no coſt; Maſſes, Trentals, Dirges they had enough, if they were then to be had: yet for all this ſtirre his ſoule went to hell, and Lazarus ſoule was by the Angels carried to heaven, that had none of this geare.

6 Laſtly, if there were no other thing to be miſliked in their funerals, this were ſufficient to con- 21. Error. demne them as abominable; that they thinke, their ſinging, chanting, ringing, giving of dole and almes to the poore, and all other their ſuperſtitious cuſtomes, doe helpe and profit the dead, Bellarm. ibid.

Auguſtine giveth two reaſons of this dutie to be ſhewed in the burying of the dead. Firſt, Corpori humando quicquid impenditur, non eſt præſidium ſalutis, ſed humanitatis officium: What dutie is performed in entring the bodie, is an officious worke of humanitie, not any releefe for the health of the ſoule. Secondly, ſaith he, Corpori mortuo, ſed tamen reſurrecturo, &c. impenſum hujuſmodi officium, ſit De cura pro mortuis epilog. c. 18. quodammodo ejuſdem fidei teſtimonium: This Chriſtian dutie beſtowed in burying the dead bodies, which ſhall notwithſtanding riſe againe, is a lively teſtimonie in us of the ſame faith. That is, we doe carefully commit the bodies of Chriſtians to the ground, knowing that they are not loſt, but ſhall riſe againe: but as for the dead themſelves, they receive no benefit at all. Curatio funeris, conditio ſepultu- De cura pro mortuis cap. 2. ra, pompa exequiarum, vivorum ſunt ſolatia magis, quàm ſubſidia mortuorum: This great proviſion for funerals, this great pompe of burials, they are comforts for the living, not helps to the dead.

The ſecond part of this Controverſie, of the Saints departed that are in joy and bliſſe.

This controverſie ſtandeth of theſe ſeverall queſtions.

1 Of the bleſſed eſtate of the Saints in heaven, and of the canonizing of them upon earth.

2 Of the adoration of Saints: Firſt, whether they be to be adored or not, and whether it be lawfull to ſweare by them. Secondly, of the divers kinds of worſhip. Thirdly, of the worſhip of Saints upon earth.

3 Of the invocation of Saints; whether they pray for us and underſtand our prayers.

4 Of the adoration, tranſlation, keeping of reliques, and of the miracles wrought by them.

5 Of Images, and the ſigne of the Croſſe, and other matters thereto belonging more particularly handled.

6 Of Churches: the forme, uſe, ornaments, dedication of them, and ſuch like.

7 Of Pilgrimages and Proceſſions.

8 Of holy and feſtivall dayes, the Lords day, and Saints dayes.

9 Of the Virgin Mary, her conception, vowes, aſſumption, worſhip, merits. Of theſe now in order.

The firſt queſtion, concerning the bleſſed and happie eſtate of the Saints departed.

This queſtion hath two parts: Firſt, of their bleſſedneſſe which they have before God in heaven. Secondly, of the publiſhing or making knowne their bleſſedneſſe before men, which they call the canonizing of Saints.

The firſt part, of the bleſſed eſtate of the Saints before God in heaven.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine taketh great paines, Lib. 1. de Sanctis, in ſix long Chapters together, to prove, that the Saints departed doe preſently enjoy the ſight of God, and doe enter into bliſſe; and that their ſoules forthwith are received into heaven, and are not kept in any ſecret by-places till the day of judgement. But all this while he fighteth with his owne ſhadow: for we grant as much as he proveth,

Luk. 23. 40.
Philip. 1. 23.
2 Cor. 5. 1.
Heb. 12. 22.
22. Error.

that the righteous are with Chriſt ſo ſoone as they are looſed from their bodies, as Chriſt ſaid to the theefe upon the Croſſe, This day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe. See alſo to this purpoſe, Philip. 1.23. 2 Corinth. 5. 1. Heb. 12. 22. All theſe places doe evidently prove, that preſently after their departure, the ſoules of the faithfull doe enjoy the preſence of Chriſt, and the celeſtiall companie of the Angels in heaven. Yet our adverſaries ſtay not here, neither are contented with this; that the Saints are bleſſed: but proceed further, and give them a full poſſeſſion of bleſſedneſſe, making no difference betweene them and the Angels in glorie, but affirme that they are as highly exalted as the Angels are, Rhemiſt. annot. Luk. 15. ſect. 2. And Bellarmine therefore taketh up Calvin, becauſe hee ſaith, the Saints are yet in hope and expectation of the perfect fruition of glorie, cap. 1. lib. 1. de Sanctis.

The Proteſtants.

Apocal. 14. 13.

WE confeſſe, that the Saints in heaven are alreadie bleſſed: yet they looke for the full accompliſhment and perfection of their glorie, when as their bodies ſhall be glorified in the reſurrection: Then it is ſaid, they ſhall be like the Angels, and yet not in all things; much leſſe are their ſoules now equall to the Angels in glorie.

Matth. 22. 30.
Apoc. 6. 10.

Argum. 1. The Saints ſhall be as the Angels, but not before the reſurrection. Neither can it bee proved out of that text, that they ſhall then be equall to the Angels in all things: for it is not all one to ſay; They ſhall be as the Angels, becauſe they ſhall then need no marriage, as to ſay, they ſhall bee equall to the Angels in all things. The ſoules under the Altar doe crie, Lord, how long! Ergo, they are in expectation of greater glorie. And reaſon alſo giveth as much, that the bodie and the ſoule being joyned together in the Kingdome of God, ſhall make a fuller weight and meaſure of joy.

2 Pet. 2. 4.
Jud. 6.
Matth. 25. 41.
Matth. 8, 29.
Luk. 8. 31.
1 Iohn 3. 2.

Argum. 2. The wicked ſpirits and damned ſoules have not yet their full and perfect torment: Ergo, neither the Saints their perfect joy. The devils are now tormented, and kept in chaines of darkneſſe: But their full damnation is reſerved for the day of the Lord: They are not yet tormented in ſuch meaſure as they ſhall be, and themſelves make account for.

Argum. 3. 1 Iohn 3. 2. Wee know, that when he ſhall appeare, wee ſhall be like him. This Scripture ſheweth, that wee ſhall not have a perfect conſummation of glorie before the day of judgement.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the text is not, When he ſhall appeare; but as before the Apoſtle ſaid, It doth not appeare what we ſhall be, ſo here, when it (not he) ſhall appeare, what we ſhall be: ſo that this place ſheweth only that the glorie of the Saints ſhall not be manifeſted to the world before that day, not that they ſhall not have their glorie before, Bellarm. lib. de ſanctis c. 3.

Coloſſ. 3. 4.

Contra. Who ſeeth not how hee corrupteth this text: for what elſe can be the ſenſe of this place, Cum apparuerit, ſimiles ei erimus: than this, when hee (not it) ſhall appeare, wee ſhall be like him: what him ſhall we be like, but the ſame that is underſtood to appeare? Againe, that Chriſt is here implied to appeare, it is manifeſt by the like place: When Chriſt, which is our life, ſhall appeare, then ſhall wee appeare with him in glorie: So then, the perfection of our glorie is deferred till Chriſts comming.

* Rhemiſt. Luk. 20. ſect. 3. affirme that ſome Saints ſhall be above the Angels.
Heb. 2. 16.
Tractat. in Johan. 110.

Laſtly, if now the Saints are equall to the Angels in joy, their ſoules onely being in heaven; it then followeth, that in their reſurrection, when their bodies ſhall be reſtored to their ſoules, their happineſſe ſhall farre * exceed the Angels: which no where the Scripture teacheth us, unleſſe they will thus reaſon, Chriſt tooke not the Angels, but the ſeed of Abraham: Ergo, we are better than the Angels. But to this Auguſtine anſwereth very well: Some perhaps will ſay, that wee are better than the Angels, becauſe Chriſt died for us, and not for the Angels. Quale eſt (ſaith he) ideo ſe velle (agrotum) laudari, quia vitio ſuo tam deteſtabiliter agrotavit, ut non poſſet aliter quàm medici morte ſanari: As if a ſicke man deſerved commendation, becauſe by his owne fault he was ſo dangerouſly ſicke, that hee could not be healed but by the death of the Phyſitian. Quid hoc aliud eſt, quàm de impietate gloriari? Chriſtus enim, &c. pro impiis mortuus eſt: What is this elſe but for man to boaſt of his wickedneſſe? Chriſt died not for Angels, but for men, becauſe they were wicked.

Now, whereas Bellarmine reproveth Calvin for thus writing, Animas piorum militia labore perfunctas in beatam quietem concedere, ubi cum fœlici lætitia fruitionem promiſſæ gloriæ expectant: That the ſoules of the godly having ended their warfare, are gone unto bleſſed reſt, where moſt joyfully they doe expect the full fruition of the promiſed glorie: And the Jeſuite further giveth this uncharitable cenſure: Nota miram ſtultitiam hominis: See the great fooliſhneſſe of the man: Now it ſhall eaſily appeare, that Calvin ſaith none other thing than was concluded by the Greeke and Latine Church in the Florentine Councell: In proœmio: Animas juſtorum perfectam ſuam felicitatem, quatenus animæ, conſecutas cenſemus; ita tamen ut aliam cum corporibus ſuis perfectionem expectent, qua perpetuò fruantur: We doe thinke that the ſoules of the righteous have alreadie obtained their perfect felicitie, as they are ſoules; yet ſo, that they looke for a more perfect ſtate with their bodies, for ever to enjoy. Thus Bellarmine either of malice or ignorance, chargeth a generall Councell with fooliſhneſſe, ſeeing he raileth upon Calvin, for ſpeaking or writing as it was by this generall Councell decreed.

Their owne Canons conſent hereunto: Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. ca. 6. It is confeſſed by Innocent. 3. Sanctorum gloriam uſque ad judicium augmentari: That the glorie of the Saints doth increaſe till the day of judgement. And the Maſter alloweth their opinion as more probable, that hold, that Angeli uſque ad diem judicii ſcientia & aliis proficiant, Angels doe increaſe in knowledge and other things till the day of judgement, lib.2. diſtinct.11.g. If the glorie of Angels is not yet perfect, much leſſe of the Saints, who yet expect the redemption of their bodies.

1 In the Greeke Liturgie, which goeth under the name of S. Baſil, they thus uſe to pray, Lord remember the Saints, which have pleaſed thee from the beginning, our holy Fathers, the Patriarks, Prophets, Apoſtles, Martyrs, Confeſſors, Evangeliſts, Preachers, and all the righteous, which are dead in the faith, and ſpecially the bleſſed and ever living virgin Marie, S. Iohn Baptiſt, S. Stephen, &c. If they did hold, that there could be no acceſſion of glorie to theſe bleſſed Saints, they would not thus pray: they have relation to the perfect glorie, which ſhall be in the reſurrection: for thus alſo it ſtandeth in the ſame Liturgie: Memento Domine omnium dormientium in ſpe reſurrectionis æterna: Remember all them O Lord, which ſleepe now in the hope of eternall reſurrection.

2 So the Liturgie of Cyrill of Alexandria: O Lord, have pittie upon our fathers and brethren, whoſe ſoules thou haſt received, give them reſt: and then they name the Patriarks, Prophets, the virgin Marie, S. Iohn Baptiſt, S. Stephen: grant that all their ſoules may reſt in the boſome of Abraham, &c. Raiſe their bodies in the day which thou haſt ordained, according to thy true promiſes.

3 Wittemberg, c.24. The ſtate is all one of a Saint, which is at reſt in Chriſt, and a faithfull man that dieth, for he that dieth in the faith is a Saint, &c. Charitie wiſheth, that we deſire to the dead all tranquilitie and felicitie in Chriſt, &c. but the dead are not helped by our prayers, &c.

4 See their owne decrees alleaged before.

The ſecond part, of the Canonizing of Saints.

The Papiſts.

23. Error. THe Canonizing of Saints is nothing elſe but the publike determination and ſentence of the Church, whereby men that are dead, are judged to be Saints, and worthie of honour and worſhip, as to be prayed unto, Temples and Altars to be ſet up in their names, holy dayes to be appointed for them, and their reliques to be adored. And thus it is lawfull, profitable, and expedient for the Church to canonize Saints, Bellarm. cap. 7.

Arg. 1. The Patriarks and Prophets were canonized for Saints in the old Law, Heb.11. So Act.7. Stephen and other were canonized: therefore it is credible, that the Lord would have the ſame order ſtill continued in his Church, Bellarm. cap. 7.

Anſwer. First, neither in the old nor the new Law, were any ſet up to be Saints, with intent to be worſhipped, called upon, Temples to be conſecrated in their names; but onely the Scripture giveth teſtimonie of them, as of holy and faithfull men: and ſo may wee alſo honour the bleſſed Martyrs, whom the cruell Emperours of Rome, and ſince them the Popes of Rome have ſent through fire and other torments to heaven. Secondly, when they have as good teſtimonie for their Saints, as we have for the holy Patriarks and Prophets, they may be bold to pronounce them to be holy, bleſſed. Thirdly, your argument followeth not, unleſſe you will ſay, that the Church may doe all things now, which the Prophets and Apoſtles did then: They may as well make Scripture, and more Canonicall books by the ſame reaſon, as make and canonize new Saints.

Arg.2. The Saints are unto us examples of vertue and to be imitated, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Remember your overſeers, which have ſpoken to you the word of God, the end of whoſe converſation beholding, imitate their faith. But how can we imitate them, unleſſe we know in particular who are to be imitated? Bellar. Heb. 13.7.

Anſwer. First, the Apoſtle propoundeth the example of their Paſtors then living, to be imitated of them, whoſe converſation they did behold. This place maketh nothing for the imitation of canonized Saints, dead many yeeres agoe: whoſe life and converſation is not certainly knowne. Secondly, we need not run to Popiſh fables, to ſeeke patterns to follow, wee may ſet before us the example of godly men living; or if they faile us, we have moſt perfect examples in Scripture: as S. Paul ſaith, Be followers of me, as I am of Chriſt, and obſerve them, as you have us for an example. Thirdly, if Popiſh Saints ſhould be imitated, then Thomas Becket muſt be followed in his rebellion to the King; Bonaventure in his blaſphemie againſt Chriſt, aſcribing the worke of our ſalvation to the virgin Marie, as may be ſeene in his Ladie Pſalter, compiled to the honour of her: and many ſuch goodly examples ſhall we finde in the lives and acts of Popiſh Saints. 1 Cor.11. 1. Philip. 3. 17.

The Proteſtants.

THat none of the Saints are to be adored or worſhipped, their images, or reliques, or prayers to bee made unto them, or any ſuch honour to be given them, it ſhall afterward appeare more at large: and therefore they ought not be canonized to any ſuch end or purpoſe. We alſo grant, that the number of Gods Saints and elect increaſed daily: and we are ſure in generall, as the Scripture teſtifieth, that the death of his Saints is precious in the ſight of God, And that all are bleſſed that die in the Lord: But particularly wee are not able certainly to determine of any; the matter is to be left wholly unto God, and we in the meane time to hope the beſt. Pſal.116. 15.

Argum. 1. If the Church have authoritie to canonize Saints, and determine of the election or ſalvation of men, then may we as well judge of the condemnation of thoſe that are loſt: for if it bee knowne to the Church who are Saints in heaven, they alſo may as well define who are damned in hell. But this none can doe: nay, it were great raſhneſſe, and want of charitie for any ſo to take upon them. S. Paul ſaith, Rom. 14. 4. Why condemneſt thou another mans ſervant? he ſtandeth or falleth to his owne maſter. No man can judge whether the ſervant ſtand or fall, but his maſter: Ergo, if the Church preſume to determine of the election or damnation of thoſe that are departed, ſhe is now a Miſtriſſe and Ladie rather of the Saints, than they Lords or Patrons to her, as the Papiſts hold they are.

1 Cor. 4. 5. Argum. 2. Iudge not (ſaith S. Paul) before the time untill the Lord come. The judgement then of men, who are ſaved, and who are condemned, is reſerved for the comming of Chriſt: Therefore it is great preſumption for men to prevent the time, and to take upon them to bee Judges in Gods place. Againe, our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, that to ſit at his right hand or left, in his Kingdome, was not his to Matth. 20. 23. give (meaning as he was man) but it ſhall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my father. How then is it in the power of any ſinfull man, to give unto any a ſeat, either at the right hand, or left hand of Chriſt, in the Kingdome of God? Argument. Gualter. Bruti. Fox. pag. 487.

Auguſtine alſo conſenteth, Non ſeparatio jam cuiq; tuta eſt, &c. It is not ſafe for men now to make ſeparation (of the good and bad) it belongeth to him that cannot erre: Wee in this life doe hardly know our ſelves, how much leſſe ought we to judge raſhly of others? Expoſit. in Pſal. 139. in præfat. Here are two reaſons given, why it is not lawfull for men to judge of the election or reprobation of men: firſt, their judgement is ſubject to error, and therefore the matter muſt be referred to God, who erreth not. Secondly, we cannot judge our ſelves, much leſſe can we judge of others: Ergo, no man living ought, or is able to define either who are Saints in heaven, or who are damned in hell.

Anaſtaſius decret. 2. Monente nos beatiſſimo Paulo Apoſtolo, &c. Know ye, that as the Apoſtle Paul doth admoniſh us, we muſt obſerve and take heed, that there ariſe no offence in the Church, while we take upon us to doe that which we cannot, that is, to judge thoſe which are gone out of the world: for none of us liveth or dieth to himſelfe, but whether we live or die, we are the Lords: wherefore, why judgeſt thou another mans ſervant, &c. Here we have the judgement of a Pope himſelfe, grounded upon S. Pauls judgement, that it is not in the power of the living to judge the dead, either in condemning or acquiting them.

Thevet. Coſmogr. lib. 10. c. 15. 1 The Greekes acknowledge none of the Saints of the Latine Church, nor the Indians, except the Apoſtles and Prophets.

2 The Æthiopians or Abyſines doe acknowledge but very few of the Saints honoured in the Latine Church, Thevet. lib. 10. c. 15. except S. Catharine, by reaſon her bodie is in Mount Sinai, S. Anthonie the Egyptian, and S. Helen, and the virgin Marie: it ſeemeth that they hold no ſuch canonization of Saints neceſſarie.

Harm. ſect. 2. pag. 28. 3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 17. We call ſuch beleevers in Chriſt (as yet are converſant here in earth) Saints, as S. Paul ſaith, all the Saints greet you: 2 Cor. 13. 12. See alſo to this purpoſe, the confeſſion of Wittemberg in the former queſtion. If the faithfull in earth are Saints alreadie, they need not to be canonized afterward.

Lib. 1. de adorat. diſp. 5. c. 3. 4 Vaſques the Jeſuite ſaith: Aliqui Catholici probant, non eſſe certum de fide, &c. Some Catholikes prove that it is not certaine, as of faith, that the Saints, which we worſhip, are to be worſhipped, Quia non eſt ex fide eos eſſe ſanctos: becauſe it is not of faith, that they are Saints.

An appendix or third part, of other circumſtances, which belong to the canonizing of Saints.

The Papiſts.

24 Error. THey ſay, that it doth appertaine onely to the Pope, to canonize a Saint for the whole Church: and that none ought to be acknowledged for Saints, but they that are ſo canonized by him: And that herein the Pope is of ſo infallible a judgement, that he cannot erre in canonizing of Saints: becauſe that ordinarily none are canonized by the Pope for Saints, which have not beene knowne to worke miracles, Bellarm. lib. 1. cap. 8. 9. 10.

Argum. 1. That it belongeth to the Pope to canonize Saints, Bellarmine thus proveth: to define and declare who are hereticks, appertaineth to the Pope: Ergo, the contrarie alſo, to determine who are Saints in heaven.

Anſwer. Firſt, the argument followeth not, the Pope may judge of men according to their preſent ſtate in this life: Ergo, of their ſtate afterward. For an heretike is diſcerned according to that he preſently holdeth and teacheth, who may afterwards be converted from his hereſie: as S. Paul ſaith, 1 Tim. 1. 20. He had delivered Hymenæus and Alexander to Sathan, that they might learne not to blaſpheme. Though the Apoſtle for the preſent caſteth them out as hereticks, yet he deſpaireth not of their converſion: wherefore to be an heretick and a reprobate doe not alwayes concurre, and therefore the argument followeth not: For to be an heretick and a Saint are not contraries: he that is firſt an heretick, being converted, may become a Saint, as S. Paul of a perſecuter was made a Preacher.

Secondly, it belongeth not to the Pope to determine who are hereticks; but every Church hath power to declare by the Scriptures what hereſie is, and who are hereticks: the Apoſtles have given us 1 Cor. 16. 22. rules to know hereticks by; as, If any man love not the Lord Ieſus, let him be anathema: according to this rule, all that detract from the humanitie of Chriſt, as the Anabaptiſts; or fom his divinitie, as the Arrians; or from his offices, as the Papiſts, are hereticks. Againe, If any man obey not our doctrine, note him. And, Every ſpirit that confeſſeth not that Ieſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is not of God. According to theſe and ſuch like rules in Scripture, it is lawfull for every Church to define an heretick, and for every man to avoyd him. An heretick, after the firſt and ſecond admonition, avoyd. It is but a ridiculous toy, that we muſt ſend up to Rome firſt, to know the Popes pleaſure, who ſhould be counted an heretike. 2 Theſſ. 3. 14. 1 Ioh. 4. 3. Tit. 3. 10.

Thirdly, the Popes are not fit men to judge of hereſie, ſeeing many of them have beene hereticks: as Marcellinus an Idolater, Liberius an Arrian, Honorius a Monothelite, with many more, as we have ſeene before in the controverſie of the Pope.

Argum. 2. Now that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing of Saints, hee would make us beleeve, becauſe there hath yet beene no error detected that way: the Pope hath Sainted none which were not Saints indeed.

Anſw. The contrarie is true, that hee hath canonized many notorious rebels, and other wicked perſons, as Thomas Becket of Canterburie, Hugh of Lincolne, both rebels to their Prince, with many more, as further followeth preſently to be ſhewed, Argum. 3. and therefore, becauſe the Pope is and hath beene ſo groſlie deceived in canonizing of Saints, hee may bee aſhamed to juſtifie his palpable errors.

The Proteſtants.

First, if Saints were to bee regiſtred and canonized, as they ſay; yet it ſhould not belong to the Pope, but to the whole Church.

Argum. 1. The Pope hath no authoritie over the whole Church; no nor yet in any other Biſhops dioceſſe, no more than they have in his: Let him be content with his owne dioceſſe (and it were to be wiſhed that he could rule that well) the whole world is too large a Province for him. Secondly, the whole Church hath power to excommunicate and deliver up to Satan, and to cut off the prophane and wicked from the Church of God, as Heathen and Publicans: Ergo, to judge who are members of the Church, and Saints of God, is a matter which appertaineth to the whole Church. Thirdly, before anno 800. in the time of Carolus magnus there was no Saint publikely canonized by the Pope, as Bellarmine confeſſeth: but the truth is, this cuſtome of ordinary canonizing Saints began not till more than 1000. yeeres after Chriſt, till Alexander the 3. his time, and Gregorie the 7. I pray you then, were there no Saints before? if there were, who canonized them? 1 Cor. 5. 4. Matth. 18. 17.

Argum. 2. So much as is to be knowne of Saints and holy men, every Chriſtian is to acknowledge, without any publike decree or determination of the Pope or any other: for the word of God giveth rules, whereby wee may diſcerne the righteous from the unrighteous. Chriſt ſpeaking of falſe Prophets, ſaith, By their fruits ye ſhall know them. And againe, he ſaith thus to his Apoſtles, By this ſhall men know that you are my diſciples, if you love one another. By theſe rules, it is eaſie for every Chriſtian to judge who for the preſent time are the true diſciples of Chriſt, who otherwiſe. Matth. 7. 16. Ioh. 13. 35.

Argum. 3. It is a moſt impudent and ſhameleſſe ſaying, that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing of Saints: Firſt, Miracles are no ſufficient proofe of a Saint: for many that ſhall be condemned in the day of judgement, have had power to doe ſtrange works. Secondly, what better argument can wee have of this, than common experience? For the Popes have regiſtred in their Calendars notorious wicked men, and traitors to their Princes, as Saints and holy men: Such an one was Thomas Becket, who ſome hundred yeeres was worſhipped as a Saint, by the name of Saint Thomas of Canterburie; and yet was a plaine traitor to his Prince, Fox pag. 225. And therefore his ſhrine was juſtly put downe in King Henry the 8. dayes. Richard Scroope of Yorke was openly in armes againſt Henry the 4. Thomas Earle of Lancaſter a rebell againſt Edward the 2. yet both are the Popes canonized Saints. Matth. 7. 22. 23. Fox pag. 579.

Elizabeth Barton was called the holy Maid of Kent, and fained that ſhe had many revelations: yet was found to be a traitor, and executed: Theſe are the Popes Saints. And on the other ſide, they have condemned the true Saints and Martyrs of God, and accurſed them to the bottomleſſe pit of hell: as they dealt moſt wickedly with Iohn Huſſe that zealous ſervant of God, upon whoſe head they ſet a crowne of paper pictured with devils, as if he were given unto the power of Satan. But we doe judge of theſe holy men, as the Scripture teacheth, which ſaith, that they are bleſſed which die in the Lord. Their good life, holy profeſſion, and conſtant death and martyrdome declared no leſſe; and that aſſurance, which God gave them of their election, as it appeared in that worthie Martyr Doctor Barnes, who being brought to the ſtake, ſaith thus unto the people; If Saints doe pray for us, I truſt to pray for you within this halfe houre: who at the ſame time uttered his opinion, that notwithſtanding to pray unto Saints was againſt the word of God, although it ſhould be granted that they pray for us. Fox pag. 1054. Apoc. 14. 13. Fox pag. 1139.

Let them now bee aſhamed to ſay ſtill, that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing Saints, who condemneth good men, and juſtifieth the wicked, according to the common ſaying, Many are worſhipped for Saints in heaven, whoſe ſoules doe burne in hell.

If the Pope herein be of ſo infallible a judgement, how came it to paſſe, that Bonifacius the 8. did cauſe Hermannus Ferrarienſ. who had beene canonized for a Saint, after 30. yeeres to be taken out of his grave, and burned, anno 1300. Either he, by whom he was firſt canonized, or elſe Bonifacius, by whom hee was uncanonized or unſainted, muſt needs have groſly erred. And is it not as poſſible for the Pope to be deceived in judging who are Saints, as Tertullian and Origen erred in commending of Pilate and his wife for good Chriſtians? Tertull. apologet, cap. 21. by which authorities ſome were moved to canonize them for Saints. And Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 45. cap. 1. mention is made of one, that was ſlaine in his drunkeneſſe, whom they worſhipped for a Saint. But it will be anſwered, that Alexander the 3. reproveth that abuſe in the ſame decree. But what will they ſay concerning the Saints of Rome, that are worſhipped under the Popes noſe, and by his allowance; ſhall they all go for currant, and true Saints indeed? Let them heare what Lindanus an archpapiſt complaineth of this matter: Breviaria etiam Romanum novum feſta quædam habent ſanctorum, quorum nomina, neſcio an ſatis ſint vindicata, &c. The Breviaries or Maſſe-books, yea the new Roman Breviarie hath many feſtivals of Saints, whoſe names, I know not whether they are ſufficiently tried and purged, &c. He affirmeth, that even in Rome many obſcure and unknowne Saints were worſhipped.

Fourthly, Auguſt. thus writeth of this matter: Mutabilis eſt mens noſtra, qua percipit diſcendo, quod neſciebat, &c. & veriſimilitudine fallitur, &c. Mans minde is mutable, learning that which it knew not, and loſing that by forgetfulneſſe, which it knew: and is deceived by a certaine likeneſſe of truth, to approve that which is falſe for true, &c. Tractat. 99. in Ioann. Ergo, the judgement of men is uncertaine, and the beſt may be deceived in judging of others, who are bad, and who good.

If all the Popes canonized Saints are to be worſhipped, prayers to be made unto them, holy dayes, and Churches to be conſecrate to their memorie, wherein (as the Jeſuite telleth us) conſiſteth the canonization of Saints: hereby it may appeare what ſmall diſcretion the Popes have ſhewed in their canonizing, in bringing ſuch an idle and ſuperfluous multitude into the Saints Calendar: that it were impoſſible for a man to remember all ſuch Saints names, that are to be prayed to. Alexander anno 1180. did canonize Bernard Clarevallenſ. and Thomas of Canterburie: Innocentius 4. anno 1250. Edmund of Canterburie, Staniſlaus Biſhop of Cracovia, and Peter Veronenſ. a Dominicane: Alexander 4. anno 1260. did canonize Clara, Francis his ſiſter, the father of the Franciſcanes: Nicholaus 4. Lodovik. Toloſan a Minorite: Bonifacius 8. Lodovike the French King: Clement 6. did canonize Ive a Prieſt anno 1350. Nicholaus 5. did make Bernardine Senenſ. a Franciſcane, a Saint: anno 1455. Calixtus 3. did adde to the Calendar Vincentius Valentinenſ. a Dominicane, Albert. Depranenſ. a Carmelite: Pius 2. did magnifie one Angelus a Carmelite, and Katharine Senenſ. anno 1464. Sixtus 4. Bonaventure: anno 1484. Innocentius 8. Helipoldus Duke of Auſtria: And many hundreds more have beene by the Popes advanced to the dignitie of Saints, ſome Kings, ſome Dukes, ſome Biſhops, ſome Prieſts, ſome Friers, ſome Widowes, ſome Virgins: ſo that the dayes of the yeere are not enough for every Saint to have his day. Now let it be conſidered, whether the Pope hath not good skill in ſainting of men, thus multiplying without end the number of his houſe-gods.

Sacrani & Guagnin. de relig. Muſcovit. Titleman. de fid. Æthiop.

1 The Muſcovites following the Greeke Church, condemne and reject the Saints of the Roman Church.

2 Among the Æthiopians, their Biſhops doe canonize for Saints, thoſe, who while they lived did give evident teſtimonies of their holineſſe. Thoſe Chriſtian Churches depend not upon the Popes judgement, for canonizing of Saints.

3 Wittemberg, artic. 24. There is no difference indeed, betweene a Saint reſting in Chriſt, and a faithfull man departed: for every one which dieth in the faith of Chriſt is a Saint. Every Church then may better determine who are Saints than the Pope, becauſe it is better knowne to them, who both live and die well.

Agrip. de vanit. ſcient.

4 Agrippa ſaith, there are many that hold hereticall opinions, tamen cenſetur in canone ſanctorum, yet are counted in the Canon of Saints. Cardinall Beſſarius ſaith, that he ſaw many canonized at Rome, quorum vitam improbavit, whoſe life he miſliked. The Pope then may erre in canonizing of Saints.

The ſecond queſtion, concerning the adoration of Saints.

THis queſtion hath three parts: Firſt, whether Saints are to be adored. Secondly, of the divers kinds of adoration. Thirdly, concerning the worſhip due unto holy men living, as the kiſſing of feet, and ſuch like.

The firſt part, whether Saints are to be adored and worſhipped.

The Papiſts.

25. Error.

THey doubt not to affirme, that there is a kinde of religious worſhip due unto Saints, not that great religious worſhip which is proper unto God, but a kinde ſomewhat leſſe and inferiour to that; yet a religious adoration, which is the meane or middeſt betweene that higheſt worſhip due unto God, and civill honour which is given unto men. So this is their ſentence, that religious worſhip is due both to God and to the Saints: herein only (ſay they) the difference is, the more religious worſhip belongeth only to God, the leſſe unto the Saints, Bellarm. cap. 12. lib. 1. de Sanctor. beatit.

Argum. 1. Bellarmine obiecteth certaine examples out of Scripture of the adoration of Angels, as Gen. 18. 2. how Abraham adored the Angels, and Lot, and Ioſua alſo adored the Angell that appeared unto him: Gen. 19. 1. therefore Angels, and ſo conſequently Saints, may ſafely be adored and worſhipped. Joſua 5. 14.

Anſw. Firſt, it is certaine that the Angell whom Abraham worſhippeth, was God himſelfe, even Gen. 18. 17. 25. Chriſt, that appeared in the ſhape of an Angell; for verſ. 17. he is called Iehovah, which name is never in Scripture given to any Angell: and verſ. 25. Abraham calleth him Judge of the world, which is Chriſts office onely; ſo alſo the Angell that appeared to Ioſua, was Chriſt himſelfe; for Ioſua calleth him Lord, and himſelfe his ſervant: But the Angels doe not preſume to take us as their ſervants, but acknowledge themſelves to bee our fellow ſervants unto the ſame Lord, theirs and ours. And this is Revel. 22. 9. the judgement of divers of the ancient Fathers, and namely Origen; Ioſua non adoraſſet eum, niſi agnoviſſet Deum, &c. Ioſua would not have worſhipped him, if he had not knowne him to be God, for who elſe is the Prince of the Lords warfare, but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt? hom. 6. in Ioſua.

Secondly, it cannot bee ſhewed out of the text, that Lot did worſhip the two Angels that came to Sodome; but did onely make obeiſance, and bow himſelfe unto them, as excellent and heavenly perſons: for the word שחה ſhacah ſignifieth an inclination and bowing of the bodie, as Iacob is ſaid to bow himſelfe to his brother Eſau: this therefore was no religious adoration, but a ſeemely reverence, Gen. 33. 3. which might be given to thoſe glorious ſpirits.

Thirdly, the Angels of the old Teſtament, and the Angels of the new are all one; but in the new Teſtament, the Angels refuſe to bee adored: Ergo, the Angels of the old Teſtament did not re- Revel. 22. 9. ceive it.

Argum. 2. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, Adore his footſtoole: and Iacob adored the top of his rod: Ergo, Pſal. 99. 5. it is lawfull to adore creatures: Bellarm. cap. 13. Rhemiſt. annot. 11. Heb. ſect. 9. Heb. 11. 21.

Anſw. In the firſt place by the footſtoole is underſtood the Tabernacle with the Arke: the Prophet ſaith not, Adore his footſtoole, but, At or before his footſtoole: for we denie not, but that wee may kneele downe, and fall proſtrate in adoring of God before ſuch things, but none is to be adored but God. In the ſame place the Apoſtle ſaith, that Iacob worſhipped toward the end of his ſtaffe, that is, leaning upon his ſtaffe. The vulgar Latine ſaying corruptly, Adoravit faſtigium baculi, He worſhipped the end of his ſtaffe: for then the Greeke prepoſition ἐπὶ were ſuperfluous. And Auguſtine expoundeth it aright, ſaying that Iacob by faith worſhipped God upon the end of his ſtaffe: quaſt. in Gen. 162. Fulk. annot. Heb. 11. ſect. 9.

Argum. 3. Nabuchadnezzar bowed himſelfe to Daniel, and cauſed odors to be offered unto him, Dan. 2. 46. and worſhipped him, who for ſo doing was not reproved of the Prophet: Ergo, Saints are to be worſhipped: Bellarm. ibid. Rhemenſ. annot. Apocal. 19. ſect. 5.

Anſw. Firſt, your owne vulgar text thus readeth, the King commanded, ut ſacrificarent ei hoſtiam, to ſacrifice an hoſt unto him: and Arias Montanus tranſlateth Sacrificium, to offer a ſacrifice unto him; but to offer ſacrifice, is a part of the divine and godly worſhip: ſo that the King commanding ſacrifice to be made to Daniel, doth attribute unto him ſuperſtitiouſly divine worſhip. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the ſacrifice of beaſts is that ſacrifice which is peculiar unto God; but as for odors and other gifts, they may be yeelded unto men: as 1 King. 10. certaine of the Iſraelites refuſed to bring gifts unto Saul, the ſame word (מנחה) is there uſed: and we (ſaith he) doe cenſe up odors before the images of Saints, though we grant that ſacrifice is onely due unto God: Bellar. cap. 13. argum. 3.

Contra. Firſt, that the Hebrew word (מנחה) here uſed, is ſometime taken for a civill gift, we grant, Gen. 32. 13. as in the place alleaged, and Gen. 32. 13. where Iacob ſent a gift or preſent to Eſau: but in this place it ſignifieth a religious oblation, in which ſenſe hee cannot finde in all Scripture, that it was given to any mortall man, but onely was due unto God, as Ierem. 41. 5. they had offerings and incenſe in their Jerem. 41. 5. hands to offer in the houſe of God: And this word, when it is uſed in a religious ſenſe, is taken only for ſacrifice due unto God; as 1 King. 18. 29. when they had propheſied till the time of the evening 1 King. 18. 29. Sacrifice; and 2 King. 3. 20. in the morning, when the Sacrifice uſeth to be offered: in both theſe 2 King. 3. 20. places the word מנחה is uſed. Secondly, whereas he granteth, Sacrificium non deberi niſi ſoli Deo: That ſacrifice is not due but unto God, it followeth, that the King committed Idolatrie, in ſacrificing to Daniel, as your owne vulgar readeth. Thirdly, it is great impietie in him to allow the cenſing of odors to Saints, or Saints images, whereas in the old Law it was a part of the worſhip of God; as may appeare Ierem. 41. 5. they brought odors and incenſe: and it may be gathered, that the offering of incenſe was the more principall part of the ſacrifice, as it followeth even now to be ſhewed.

Secondly, it is untrue, that Daniel accepted of this worſhip and reproved it not: Firſt, though it be not mentioned, it followeth not, that he miſliketh it not: for neither is the inceſt of Lot, Geneſ. 19. nor of Iudah, Geneſ. 38. cenſured in the ſtorie; doth it follow therefore that they were juſtified? Secondly, it may be diverſly gathered that Daniel miſliked the Kings purpoſe: Firſt, becauſe from the beginning, hee giveth the glorie unto God, and telleth the King, that it was the God in heaven that was the onely Revealer of ſecrets, verſ. 27. and therefore it is not like, that Daniel would take the honour unto himſelfe. Secondly, becauſe the King afterward, verſ. 47. being better inſtructed by Dan. 2. 27. 47. Daniel, giveth God the honour, ſaying he was God of Gods, and ſo onely to be worſhipped. Thirdly, verſ. 48. he magnifieth Daniel now as Gods inſtrument, and beſtoweth great gifts upon him, whereas he offered ſacrifice before.

In the laſt place we will examine our Doway diſciples arguments for the adoration of Saints.

1 The honour of Saints redoundeth to the honour of Chriſt: as Baſil ſaith, Honor ſervorum redundat in communem Dominum: The honour of the ſervants redoundeth to the common Lord: pag. 8.

2 Adoration of God and creatures is not repugnant, proved by Iacobs adoring of Ioſephs rod, prefiguring Chriſts Kingdome: pag. 144. in the margen.

2 King. 2. 15. 3 They adored Eliſæus flat to the ground, they adored him for his holineſſe, &c. therefore not with civill, but religious honour: pag. 763.

Anſw. 1. The honouring of Gods ſervants, as his Miniſters, doth redound to the Lord: as our Matth. 10. 40. bleſſed Saviour ſaith, He that receiveth you, receiveth me: but to give part of that honour, which is due unto God, as all religious worſhip is, unto his ſervants, is a diſhonouring of the Lord himſelfe:
Iſai. 42. 8. for he will not give his glorie to another.

2 Concerning Iacobs adoration of the rod, ſee before our anſwer to the ſecond argument.

3 The children of the Prophets gave but a civill kinde of honour and reverence unto Eliſha the Prophet: as may appeare in that they call Elias the Prophet his maſter, verſ. 16. Let them goe and ſeeke thy maſter: I hope they whom they give religious worſhip unto, have no other maſter but Chriſt. And the word ſhacah ſignifieth the inclination and bowing of the bodie, which is uſed as well in civill as religious adoration: ſee before the anſwer to the firſt argument. But I will further oppoſe our Do-
2 King. 18. 4. way ſtudents with that example of Heſekiah, who brake downe the braſen Serpent, becauſe the people burnt incenſe to it: yet this was not the divine worſhip, but only the inferiour kinde of religious
Lib. 2. de Sanct. cap. 13. ſect. Neque obſtat. worſhip in their opinion: for Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, Porro ſuaves odores nos etiam in ipſa eccleſia offerimus imaginibus: We our ſelves in the Church offer ſweet odors unto images, &c. Heſekiah, then in forbidding incenſe to be offered, denied all religious worſhip unto the braſen Serpent. Our Doway men ſay they offered ſacrifice which is prayer to God only: but the text here maketh mention onely of burning of incenſe.

The Proteſtants.

WE can find in the word of God but two kindes of worſhip or adoration: a religious worſhip onely due unto God: and a civill honour uſed amongſt men. As for the Angels and Saints, we doe honour them with love, not with ſervice. We doe alſo reverence the holy men upon earth, as the Prophets and Apoſtles were in times paſt, with a civill adoration or worſhip of love, not with a religious ſervice. There is alſo a due reverence and eſtimation of ſuch things as are ſanctified to holy uſes, as of the Tabernacle, Arke, Altar, Sacrifice in the law: ſuch now are the Sacraments, which are duely to be reverenced, yet not to be adored, or kneeled unto. So we conclude, that all religious ſervice and worſhip belongeth onely unto God, and it were great idolatry to give it to any other, Fulk, annot. Apocal. 19. ſect. 5.

Matth. 4. 10. Argum. 1. The Scripture is plaine: Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt
1 Tim. 1. 17. thou ſerve. To God onely wiſe, immortall, inviſible, bee all honour and glorie: Ergo, all religious worſhip is only due unto God. Bellarmine anſwereth, that theſe places are to be underſtood of a certaine kinde of religious worſhip, which is onely proper to God. Anſw. All religious worſhip is forbidden in theſe places to bee given to any but unto God: for Satan did not tempt Chriſt to worſhip him as God, but onely to fall downe and worſhip him: hee asked onely of him, προσκύνησιν, a certaine inclination of the body, which Chriſt denieth, as being onely proper to God, Calvini Argum.

Acts 10. 25. Argum. 2. When Cornelius fell downe at Peters feet and would have worſhipped him, he was for-Apoc. 22. 9. bidden by Peter. So the Angell would not ſuffer Iohn to worſhip him. Paul and Barnabas ſtayed the Acts 14. 14. people that would have offered ſacrifice unto them.

Bellarm. anſwereth to the firſt, that Peter of modeſty refuſed the homage of Cornelius.

Anſw. Peter giveth this reaſon, why he would not have Cornelius ſo to doe, I alſo am a man (ſaith hee:) thereby letting him to underſtand, that ſuch kinde of worſhip ought not to bee given to any man. The ſame reaſon is rendred, Acts 14. by Paul and Barnabas, why they refuſed ſacrifice: Wee alſo (ſay they) are men. If Peter did of modeſtie refuſe Cornelius worſhip, then Paul and Barnabas did for modeſtie ſake onely likewiſe refuſe to be ſacrificed unto, which I am ſure they will not grant.

Bellarmine to the ſecond ſaith, that Iohn did well in worſhipping the Angell, and the Angell did well in refuſing to be worſhipped: for though the Angels of right are to be worſhipped, yet they doe well to refuſe it, for reverence to the humanity and manhood of Chriſt: Before the comming of Chriſt, Angels ſuffered themſelves to bee adored; but ſince that the Angels after Chriſts incarnation did worſhip man in him, they would not be worſhipped of men, eſpecially of the Apoſtles: who although they refuſe to be worſhipped, yet we doe well to worſhip them.

Anſw. Firſt, let it be noted that Bellarmine ſhapeth a cleane contrarie anſwer to our Rhemiſts, as appeareth before, Cont. 8. queſt. 3. part. 1. For they ſay, that Iohn was deceived in the perſon of the Angell, taking him for Chriſt, and is forbidden by the Angell to worſhip him as God: but Bellarmine altogether freeth Iohn from all error, and commendeth his doings whereas it is certaine, that Iohn knew well enough that he was an Angell, but being carried away in the extaſie of his minde, did for the preſent time forget himſelfe. Secondly, that the Angell did not of modeſtie refuſe to be worſhipped, but abſolutely and ſimply, it is made manifeſt by his anſwer to Iohn, Worſhip thou God: he would not have the Apoſtle to worſhip him, but God. And againe the Angell ſaith, I am thy fellow ſervant, &c. but it is unmeet for one fellow-ſervant to worſhip another, they both have but one Lord to worſhip: wherefore the Angell meaneth indeed, that he ought not to be worſhipped, and doth not of modeſtie refuſe it. This alſo is Auguſtines judgement: Recte itaq; ſcribitur hominem ab angelo prohibitum, ne ſe adoraret, &c. It is therefore truly written, that man was forbidden by the Angell to worſhip him, but only God, under whom he was his fellow-ſervant: De vera relig. cap. 55.

Thirdly, where findeth he that Angels in all the old Teſtament ſuffered themſelves to be adored? hee can ſhew neither precept nor practice for the adoration of Angels: And that the Angels ſince Chriſts comming did depart from their right, it is a prophane conceit, and derogatorie to Chriſt, as though he by his comming impaired the ſtate of Angels, which by him is made glorious: And if our Saviour would have the chaire of Moſes reverenced, though evill men ſate in it, it was not his pleaſure, that the dignitie of thoſe holy Spirits ſhould be abated.

Bellarmine to the third ſaith, that the Apoſtles did well in refuſing to be ſacrificed unto: becauſe to offer ſacrifice is an externall act of worſhip to be performed onely to God, cap. 14.

Anſw. 1. What reaſon have they to burne incenſe unto Saints and their images, rather than to offer ſacrifice? For it appeareth in the law, that the burning of incenſe was more precious, and a more high point of the Leviticall ſervice, than was the offering of ſacrifice. Firſt, the Altar of incenſe was more curiouſly made, being overlaid with fine gold, and was called the golden Altar; the other for burnt offerings, the brazen Altar. Secondly, the Altar of incenſe was placed in the Tabernacle neere unto the moſt holy place; the other Altar ſtood at the doore without. Thirdly, the Miniſters were divers: the Prieſts offered ſacrifice in their courſes; but Aaron only and his ſucceſſors the high Prieſts burned incenſe. Fourthly, upon the brazen Altar incenſe was offered with other ſacrifices, Levit. 2. but upon the golden Altar no burnt ſacrifice or any oblation, but only incenſe was offered unto God. Fifthly, of all offerings and oblations, it moſt lively prefigureth the ſacrifice of attonement wrought by Chriſt upon the croſſe, who therefore is called by the Apoſtle, A ſacrifice of ſweet ſmelling ſavour unto God. Seeing then that the offering of incenſe was a more ſovereigne thing in the Law, than was the oblation of ſacrifices: there is ſmall reaſon for it, that our adverſaries ſhould reſerve the leſſe, that is, the offering of ſacrifices for the Lord, and participate the greater and more worthie ſervice, that is, cenſing of odors and perfumes unto Saints, as Bellarmine doth, cap. 13.

Exod. 40. 26.
Exod. 40. 26, 29.
Exod. 30. 7.
Epheſ. 5. 2.

Anſw. 2. If ſacrifice were not then to be offered to Saints, much leſſe are prayers to be made now unto them: for to call upon God is a greater thing, than to offer ſacrifice. If Saints cannot challenge the leſſe, that is, to have ſacrifices, they have no right to the greater, namely, to be called upon and prayed unto.

Pſal. 50. 8, 14.

Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſit nobis religio cultus hominum mortuorum, &c. Let us not make it any part of religion to worſhip men that are dead: for if they lived well, they are now in that ſtate, that they need not, neither doe require any honour at our hands: but they would have us to worſhip God, &c. They are then to be honoured for imitation, not to be adored for Religion: Hæc Auguſt. de vera Religion. cap. 55.

Bellarmines anſwer here to S. Auguſtine is very meane, that hee ſpeaketh againſt the error of the Gentiles, who made wicked men departed their Gods: Lib. 1. de Sanct. cap. 14. Contra. But Auguſtine ſpeaketh not of wicked men, but of ſuch, as, pie vixerunt, lived a godly life, and are to be imitated, but ſo are not the wicked. Therefore his meaning is, that no men, though never ſo godly, or worthie of imitation in their life, are to be adored, or worſhipped. The Jeſuite we ſee then faileth in his anſwer.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 45. Sancti, qui vita hujus curſum beato fine clauſerunt, &c. The Saints, who have happily ended this life, as the moſt noble members of Chriſts body, are worthily of us to be honoured, not with that worſhip, which is due unto God, but with the worſhip of love and brotherly fellowſhip, as we worſhip or reverence holy men in this life, &c. The argument from hence is framed thus: As holy men are to bee worſhipped in this life, ſo are the Saints in heaven: but no religious worſhip is due unto them here, but only of love, &c. Ergo.

A civill adoration then we denie not to be due unto holy men, ſuch as the Civill law aſcribeth to Princes: Cod. lib. 2. tit. 9. l. 6. Noſtram adoraturos purpuream: They are ſaid to adore the Kings robes, that is, the Kingly Majeſtie: but this is farre from religious adoration.

I will in the laſt place alleage the ſentence of a learned Papiſt againſt the adoration of Saints, namely Driedo, who thus writeth: There be certaine ſtories of the Saints to be ſuſpected, &c. Ut commemorantur ſancti in mortis agone conſtituti, aut monuiſſe aut exegiſſe, ut ex hoc mundo tranſlati colerentur, &c. As when the Saints are reported in the agonie of death, to have warned or required, that after they were gone out of this world, they ſhould be worſhipped, and in diſeaſes and other dangers to be called upon: for it is not like, that they paſſing out of the world were carefull for their honour, but would pray rather with David, Lord enter not into judgement with thy ſervant: De libris Apocryph. lib. 4. c. 1. Thus farre one of their owne, miſliking the adoration of Saints.

Maſter Lambert holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: who out of Auguſtine here before alleaged doth thus inferre, that we ſhould worſhip no men departed, be they never ſo good or holy, for they ſeeke no ſuch honour, but that we ſhould worſhip God alone: Honoramus eos (ſaith Auguſtine) charitate, non ſervitute: We honour them with love, not with any worſhip or ſervice: Fox pag. 1108. col. 1.

Pag. 1013. a. 41. Contr. 80. hæreſ. Epiphanius ſaith: Pater, filius, & ſpiritus ſanctus adoretur; Mariam nemo adoret, non dico mulierem, immo ne virum; Deo debetur hoc myſterium, neq; angeli capiunt talem glorificationem, &c. Let the Father, Sonne and holy Ghoſt be honoured: let none adore Mary, I ſay not a woman, but no not any man; this myſterie is due to God, no not the Angels are capable of this glorie.

2 Of the South Africane Church, we have ſeene the judgement of Auguſtine before. Athanaſius ſerm. 3. cont. Arrian. teacheth that neither man nor Angels adoratione colendos, to bee worſhipped with adoration.

3 Latter confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 5. Wee love them as brethren, and honour them alſo, yet not with any worſhip, but with an honourable opinion of them, and doe conclude with their juſt praiſes, we alſo doe imitate them.

4 The Romaniſts themſelves complaine of the groſſe idolatrous worſhip of Saints among them. Comment. in 2 Tim. p. 118. Eſpencæus; Many Chriſtians offend in a good thing, quod divos divaſq; non aliter venerantur, quam Deum, that they worſhip Saints no otherwiſe than God himſelfe. Conſult. art. 21. Caſſander: The matter is come to this paſſe, that Chriſt reigning now in heaven, beatæ Virgini, &c. by nature is made ſubject to the bleſſed Virgin.

An appendix to this firſt part, concernig vowes and oaths made to or by Saints.

The Papiſts.

26. Error. First, vowes may be made to Saints (ſay they) properly as unto God, though not altogether in the ſame manner: Prayer may be made to Saints, therefore vowes alſo. A vow in the Greeke tongue is called εὐχὴ, votum, prayer προσευχὴ, oratio. As they differ not in name, ſo neither indeed are they to be ſevered: Bellarm. lib. 3. de cult. Sanctor. c. 9.

Anſw. 1. He taketh that for granted, which is chiefly in queſtion: for it is idolatrie to pray to any other but unto God: Call upon me in the day of trouble. Pſal. 50. 15. It is not lawfull to pray unto Saints, therefore not to vow.

2 To make vowes is a more ſtrict and binding act of religion, than prayer is; for in every vow there is a prayer: we pray God to give us grace to performe the thing vowed: and there is beſides a full purpoſe of the heart with a ſolemne promiſe, whereby we binde our ſelves to the performing. Againe, wee may make petition and requeſt unto mortall men, but vowes wee can make none unto them: It would not therefore follow, though Saints might be prayed unto, that they are alſo capable of our vowes.

Secondly, It is alſo lawfull (they ſay) to ſweare by the name of Saints, becauſe all is referred to the honour of God; as hee that ſweareth by the Temple, ſweareth alſo by him that dwelleth therein; Rhemiſt. Matth. 21. ſect. 8.

Anſw. 1. In this place Chriſt reproveth the Phariſies for their ſwearing, and condemneth it by this argument: that howſoever they thought it a ſmall matter to ſweare by the Temple, yet in effect they did ſweare by God himſelfe. See then the boldneſſe of theſe men, that dare juſtifie ſwearing by creatures by the ſame reaſon that Chriſt condemneth it. Ambroſe much better: Iurare mihi per cœlum non licet, judicare de Dei filio licet? It is not lawfull for me to ſweare by heaven, and is it lawfull to judge the Sonne, &c. Lib. 5. de fid. c. 9. 2 Our Saviour ſaith nothing but this, that in every oath there is an invocation of the divine power, and therefore whoſoever ſweareth by a creature, committeth idolatrie, in making it his God.

In their annotation upon Geneſ. cap. 42. Our Doway Divines doe here alſo helpe out at a pinch: by the practice of Ioſeph ſwearing by the health of Pharaoh, they inferre that it is lawfull to ſweare by creatures: ſo it be with requiſite conditions, as in judgement, equitie and truth, as Hierome ſaith, cap. 4. p. 131. Yea, they are bold to ſay, that it is not onely lawfull to ſweare by creatures, but ſometime more convenient, than immediatly by God himſelfe, pag. 202.

Anſw. 1. What if Ioſeph did not ſweare, but onely uſed a conſtant and earneſt aſſeveration, as Anna did, ſaying to Elie, as thy ſoule liveth. 1 Sam. 1. 26. 2 Or what if this were an infirmitie in Ioſeph, which he learned in Pharaohs Court, to ſpeake as they did, though he intended not to ſweare directly. Either of theſe doth ſatisfie this objection. 3 But if this were an oath and that lawfull, then not onely by Saints, but even by mortall men and idolaters, ſuch as Pharaoh was, ſhould it be lawfull to ſweare. 4 And it is a preſumptuous ſpeech to ſay it is more convenient to ſweare by creatures, than by God, and uttered without judgement. Ierem. 4. 4. Ieremie ſaith, we muſt ſweare in judgement; but how? the Lord liveth: this part of the ſentence they of purpoſe left out. 5 And Moſes ſaith directly, Thou ſhalt feare the Lord, and ſhalt ſerve him (only, as the Latine tranſlator readeth) and ſhalt ſweare by his name, he is thy praiſe, and he is thy God: Deut. 10. 21. they upon this text give this note, an oath muſt bee made in the name of God, not of falſe gods: but indeed it excludeth all creatures beſide God, as he onely is to be ſerved, ſo his name onely to be ſworne by, as the reaſon is given, he is thy God.

1. THat it is great impietie to make vowes unto Saints, it is thus proved, Eſay 19.21. In that day the Ægyptians ſhall know the Lord, and ſhall doe ſacrifices, and vow vowes unto the Lord. But ſacrifices are not due unto Saints, but only to God: therfore neither vowes.

Eſay 19.21.

Againe, the vowes of Chriſtians are not to bind themſelves to goe in pilgrimage, or to offer unto this Saint or that, this Image or that, as Auguſtine ſaith, Alius pallium, alius oleum, alius ceram,&c. One voweth a cloke, another oyle, a third a wax candle: God careth not for theſe vowes, ſaith he, Sed hoc, quod hodie redemit, ipſum offer, hoc eſt, Animam tuam. But offer and vow unto God, that which as this day he hath redeemed, that is, thy ſoule. The vowes therefore of obedience and repentance and all Chriſtian duties are the true vowes, the vowing of bodie and ſoule to the ſervice of God: But this cannot be vowed unto any but to him that redeemed us: Ergo, not to any Saint.

Rom.12.1.

2 That we ought onely to ſweare by the name of God, the Scripture is plaine: Thou ſhalt feare the Lord thy God and ſerve him, and ſhalt ſweare by his name; and by no other. But Saints are not here to be feared or ſerved, for the Septuagint tranſlate: λατρεύσεις, Thou ſhalt worſhip God, which kind of worſhip the Papiſts themſelves dare not attribute to Saints: Ergo, neither are we to ſweare by them.

Deut.6,13.
Exod.23.13.

Againe, to ſweare, is to call him to witneſſe by whom wee ſweare, and ſo to make him our God: for whom we ſweare by, we confeſſe to be a ſearcher and knower of our hearts, and revenger of falſe ſwearers. To ſweare then, is to call God to witneſſe. Quid tu facis cum juras? Deum teſtem adhibes. Auguſtine. What doſt thou when thou ſweareſt? Thou calleſt God to witneſſe. But they that ſweare by Saints, call them to witneſſe, and none elſe are called to witneſſe, but they by whom they ſweare: Ergo, they make Saints their Gods, ſeeing God is called upon in every oath.

Serm.10. Sermonum 17.

Concil. Carthaginenſ.4. can. 61. Clericum per creaturas jurantem, acerrime objurgandum; ſi perſtiterit in vitio, excommunicandum: That a Clergie man ſwearing by creatures ſhould ſharply be reproved; and if he continue in that vice, to be excommunicate, &c. But he that ſweareth by Saints, ſweareth by creatures. This Canon is alſo confirmed in the decrees: cauſ.22.queſt.1.c.9.

See alſo to this purpoſe the decree of Pope Pius; ibid. 10. Si quis per capillum Dei, vel caput juraverit, &c. If any man do ſweare by the haire or head of God, if hee be an Eccleſiaſticall perſon, let him be depoſed; if a lay-man, let him bee anathematized, &c. If it bee not lawfull to ſweare by the bodie of Chriſt, or any part thereof, which is united to his Godhead in one perſon, much leſſe by this Canon is it lawfull to ſweare by any other creatures. Let us ſee alſo to this purpoſe the determination of their Maſter: Quæritur utrum liceat jurare,&c. A queſtion is made, whether it bee lawfull to ſweare by the creatures? and it ſeemeth we ought not, becauſe it is written in the Law, Thou ſhalt render thy oathes unto the Lord: and a little after, the Jewes were commanded, if they did ſweare, they ſhould ſweare onely by the Creator, not by the creature; for ſwearing by the Angels, &c. they did worſhip the creatures, which honour was more ſafe to be given unto God, than to the creatures, lib.3.diſt.39.d.

William Thorpe, holy confeſſor of Gods truth, about anno 1400. ſaith thus, To ſweare by any creature, both Gods law and mans law is againſt it: And thereupon inferreth, that it is unlawfull to ſweare by a booke, becauſe it is a thing compact of divers creatures: Fox pag. 529 col. 2. Wherefore a booke is brought forth, when an oath is miniſtred, not to ſwear by; but it is uſed as an externall rite, and teſtifying ſigne or witneſſe, for the better adviſement to bee had in the oath: as Abrahams ſervant laid his hand upon his Maſters thigh, ſwearing unto him: and as Iacob and Laban made the heape of ſtones a witneſſe of the covenant between them, yet neither did the one ſweare by his maſters thigh, nor the other by the ſtones.

1 It ſeemeth that in Chryſoſtomes time this uſe was not taken up to ſweare by Saints in the Greek Church: for he reproveth the common uſe of ſwearing, even by the name of God, Ut etiam caſtigatus puer Deum ac Chriſtum jurare non vereatur, That the child being chaſtiſed is not afraid to ſweare by God and Chriſt: children imitated the common uſe, which was to ſweare by Chriſt.

This great Prince ſweareth only by Jeſus Chriſt: See alſo the Councell of Carthage before.

4 See the Maſter of ſentences, and the decrees of Gratian before alleaged: So then make the beſt of it they can, this Popiſh faſhion of ſwearing by Saints, is but an imitation of the Pagans ſuperſtition, who uſed to ſweare by their Gods: as Libanius doth often times in his bookes ſweare by Hercules, Bacchus, Aſclepius, as witneſſeth Socrates. lib.3.c.23.

The ſecond part of this diſtinction of the two kinds of worſhip λατρεία, and δουλεία.

The Papiſts.

27.Error. THat kind of worſhip which is proper to God, they ſay, is fitly expreſſed by the Greeke word λατρεία, neither is this word uſed, but for the worſhip of God: the other word δουλεία, is taken for all kind of ſervice both of God and men: ſo that the religious worſhip, which is called λατρεία, is onely to be given to God: the other called δουλεία, may be attributed to Angels and Saints, Bellarmine, cap.12.

August.lib.20. de civitat.c.21. Deut.6.13. 1 King.18.7. Our Doway tranſlators do here alſo come in with their part, as out of Auguſtine they prove, that the worſhip in the Greeke called Latria is a ſervice proper unto God. Pag. 219. They infer as much out of that place, Deut. 6.13. Him onely ſhalt thou ſerve: Some adoration agreeth to creatures, but ſervice of (Latria) to God only: Pag.413. in the margen: So, where it is ſaid, that Abdias meeting Elias, fell upon his face: They give this note, it was no civill honour, for in the world Abdias was the greater perſon, neither was it divine honour, that had beene idolatrie, it was therefore religious honour called Dulia, due to ſpirituall excellencie: pag.746.

Anſwer. 1. Auguſtine ſaith no more but this, that the word (if λατρεία, it bee taken in his proper ſenſe) ſignifieth a worſhip peculiar to God: but it is found, that the word ſometime is more largely taken, as ſhall be ſhewed afterward: but he maketh not two kinds of religious worſhip: as in the ſame place, he ſaith thus: Wee honour Martyrs with the worſhip of love and ſocietie, wherewith holy men are worſhipped in this life, &c. Theſe words are by themſelves recited, but it ſeemeth they had not their ſpectacles on, when they ſet them downe: a worſhip of love and ſocietie or fellowſhip, is no religious, but a civill and ſociable reverence.

2 In that place given in inſtance, the word λατρεύειν, is uſed, but in divers other places, the ſame word is uſed to ſignifie civill ſervice, and the other word δουλεύειν, is given unto God, as ſhall bee preſently ſhewed.

1 King.1.23. 3 It was a civill adoration, which Obadiah gave unto Elias: who though hee were greater in the world in civill reſpects, yet Elias was his ſuperiour in ſpirituall: in that reſpect hee doth reverence him: ſo wee read that Nathan the Prophet made obeiſance to King David downe to the ground: though Nathan were in ſpirituall things Davids director, yet in temporall David was his ſuperiour, and therefore Nathan honoured him: neither is it like that David, though he reverenced Nathan as the Lords Prophet, would have yeelded religious worſhip to him, of whom hee received civill: the reverence which Obadiah gave unto Elias, was of the ſame kind with this, that Nathan yeeldeth to David.

The Proteſtants.

THis diſtinction is but of late invented and coyned of our adverſaries, ſomewhat to countenance them out in their Idolatrous and ſuperſtitious worſhip of Saints: We thus doe refell it.

Argum. 1. This diſtinction helpeth them not: for here are onely two words which doe betoken two kinds of worſhip, λατρεία, is the religious honour: δουλεία, is the civill dutie, ſuch as ſervants performe to their maſters. They ſhould have found out three names for their three kinds of worſhip: they have gained nothing by this diſtinction, but that civill adoration is due unto Saints, ſuch as is given to men upon earth. As for their fained word ὑπερδουλεία, which may be called a ſuperſervice, when they can find it in Scripture, they ſhall know more of our mind: and yet receiving this tearme, it ſignifieth but a more civill ſervice, it betokeneth not a new kind of religious worſhip.

Levit.23.7. Argum. 2. Neither are the words ſo uſed, as they make us beleeve: for the word λατρεία, which they make proper for the ſevice of God, is applied to men, as Levit.23. Opus ſervile non facietis. You ſhall do no ſervile work: the word is, ἔργον λατρευτὸν, Lodovic Vives alſo ſheweth out of prophane authors, that ſometime the word λατρεύειν is taken for the ſervice of men or maids to their maſters: In 10. lib. Aug. de civit. Dei. cap.1. So likewiſe Laurentius Valla ſheweth the ſame uſe of the word.

Gal.4.8. So contrariwiſe, the word δουλεύειν is taken in Scripture for the proper ſervice of God, as Gala.4.8. Yee did ſervice to them that by nature were no Gods: the word is, ἐδουλεύσατε. Ergo, religious ſervice is onely due unto God, not unto Angels or Saints, for they are not by nature Gods. So wee ſee that theſe two words, not onely in prophane authors, but in Scripture alſo are confounded.

Auguſtine ſaith, δουλεία, debetur Deo, tanquam Domino: λατρεία, verò, non niſi Deo, tanquam Deo: quaeſt. in Exod.94. Religious ſervice is due unto God as Lord; religious worſhip is onely due unto God, as hee is God.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this place of Auguſtine maketh for him; for hence it followeth, that the worſhip called λατρεία, being due unto God, as God, is not communicable unto any, becauſe there is but one God; but the other, called δουλεία, ſervice, being attributed to God as Lord, may bee communicated, becauſe there are many truly and properly called Lords, Bellar.cap.16.

1 Cor.8.6. Contra. Firſt, he directly oppugneth the Scripture, for the Apoſtle ſaith, Unto us there is but one God, & one Lord Ieſus Chriſt, 1 Cor.8.6. The Apoſtle ſaith, that there is but one Lord that is properly and verily, he ſaith, there are many. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, There are many Gods & many Lords in the world, ver.5. that is, improperly ſo called; ſo then, as many are called Lords, ſo alſo they are named in ſome ſort gods in the earth, and that in Scripture, I have ſaid ye are Gods,&c. Wherefore he hath anſwered juſt nothing. Pſal.82.6.

That there is but one kind of religious worſhip, and that onely due unto God, and that whatſoever reverence beſide, is but a civill kind of adoration, wee have the evident teſtimonie of antiquitie: Concil.Nicen.2. Action.4. Quid aliud eſt, quam honoris alicubi exhibiti emphaſis, adoratio? What elſe is adoration or worſhip, but a more emphaticall or earneſt yeelding of honour? It is then no new kind of honour, but a further degree only of civill worſhip.

Likewiſe in the ſame Councell, action.7, Tharaſius entreating of the worſhip of Saints, doth notably handle this point, προσκυνεῖν, i.adorare, & ἀσπάζεσθαι, i.ſalutare, & φιλεῖν, i.amare, ſignificat: nam quod quis amat, id etiam adorat, & quod adorat, id etiam amat: To adore, or worſhip, is all one, as to ſalute, or love; for that which a man loveth, he adoreth: and what he adoreth, he loveth. Then hee goeth forward: Of the Phariſies our Saviour ſaith, that they love the firſt places at feaſts, and ſalutations in the Markets: Certum eſt, ἀσπασμὸν, ſalutationem hoc loco à domino appellari προσκύνησιν, adorationem: It is certaine, that by ſalutation here is underſtood adoration, or worſhip. Againe, he giveth another inſtance out of the 21. of the *Acts, verſ.*19. how Paul ſaluted or embraced the Elders aſſembled with Iames: Hic ſalutationem honorificam, adorationem mutuo factam Apoſtolica ſententia ſignificat: Here the Apoſtle by his honourable ſalutation, ſignifieth their mutuall adoration one of another. Further (ſaith he) Eſt adoratio, quæ venerationem & deſiderium ſignificat: There is an adoration, which ſignifieth a reverent kind of deſire, as we adore the Emperour: Eſt quæ timorem tantum ſignificat: There is an adoration that ſignifieth feare, as Iacob adored Eſau: Eſt quæ gratiam notat: There is an adoration which betokeneth thankfulneſſe, as Abraham adored the ſonnes of Heth, of whom hee bought the field: qui ſperant beneficium, adorant: They that hope for a benefit, adore, as Iacob adored Pharao. And all theſe are but divers kinds of civill adoration, ſuch, and no other, as are due unto the Saints, as more plainly writeth Adrian. 1. Epiſtol. ad Conſtantin. about the time of this 2. Nicen Councell: Qualis eſt iſte adorationis honor? profecto non alius, quam is, quo nos invicem proſequimur, ſalutantes nos inter nos per honorationem, & dilectionem: What manner of worſhip is this (which is to bee given to the Saints?) ſurely none other, than that, which we give one to onother, ſaluting our ſelves by honour and love,&c. Thus this Popiſh diſtinction of religious worſhip is found to be cleane contrary to antiquitie. Act.21.19.

1 Epiphanius is a cleare witneſſe, that there is but one kind of religious worſhip, and that due unto God, and that no religious worſhip is to be given to any creature, no not that inferiour kind, which they make leſſe than the divine: Virgo erat Maria, & honorata, ſed non ad adorationem data,&c. Marie was an honourable Virgin, but not given unto us to bee worſhipped, &c. Neq; Helias nobis adorandus, &c. neq; Iohannes, &c. neq; quiſquam ſanctorum adoratur, &c. Neither Helias is to bee adored of us, nor Iohn,&c. nor any of the Saints, &c. And that hee ſpeaketh of a religious worſhip inferiour to the divine, is evident: alluding to that place in Ieremy; Let them not ſay, Honoramus reginam cœli, Let us honour the Queene of heaven; but theſe idolatrous women did not make the ſtars and works of heaven their Gods. And againe, Imagines adorandas introducunt adulterante mente ab uno ſolo Deo: They bring in Images to bee adored, with a mind adulterate from the one and onely God, &c. But none are now ſo abſurd, no not the Heathen, as to make Images their gods. Therefore Ieremie the Greeke Patriarke ſaith well: Neq; in ſanctis eorumq; imaginibus colendis nimii ſumus: We are not too exceeding in the veneration of Saints, and their Images, but in meaſure, fearing leſt that honour which is proper unto God, we ſhould give unto them,&c. But the Papiſts were exceſſive herein, worſhipping their Saints no otherwiſe than God himſelfe, as ſome of their owne ſect complaines. See before, *Err.*25. in fine. Cont.hæreſ. lib.3.cont. Collyridian. Ierem.44 17. Cenſur.Oriental.c.21.

2 Cyril of Alexandria: Sanctos Martyres neque Deos eſſe dicimus, neque adorari conſuevimus, laudamus eos potius ſummis honoribus,&c. We neither call the holy Martyrs our gods, neither uſe we to adore them: but wee ſet them forth with praiſe and high honour, becauſe they ſtrived valiantly for the truth,&c. Here is no religious worſhip given at all unto them, but onely praiſe and honour. Auguſtine alſo of the Africane Church ſaith, Honorandi ſunt propter imitationem non adorandi propter religionem: They are to be honoured for imitation, not to be adored for religion. Lib.6.cont. Iulian. De vera relig. cap.55.

3 David Pareus, to diſprove this diſtinction betweene λατρεία and δουλεία, hath taken paines, to ſhew the uſe of theſe words in the Scriptures: firſt, that the worſhip of God is oftner ſignified by dulia, than by latria: the firſt is found 39. times ſo uſed in the old Teſtament, the other about 30. times, as he hath ſummed and ſet downe the places. Secondly, he ſheweth that the other word latria is given to the creatures: as in ten ſeverall places it is found, thou ſhalt not doe ἔργον λατρευτὸν, any ſervile worke. Thirdly, the worſhip of Images is forbidden under the terme latria, 34. times in the old Teſtament, and more in the new, Rom. 1.23. and 23. times under the other terme dulia. See *Pareus, dub.*9. in 12. ad Rom.

4 See before the teſtimonie of Adrian 1. one of the Biſhops of Rome.

The third part, concerning the kiſſing of holy mens feet.

The Papiſts.

29.Error. IT is a ſigne of reverence done both to Chriſt and other ſacred perſons, as Prophets, Apoſtles, Popes, or other repreſenting his perſon here upon earth. Rhemiſt. Act.4. ſect.3.

2.King.4.17. Argum. 1. The Shunamite fell downe and embraced Eliſeus feet: Ergo, the Popes feet ought to be kiſſed.

Anſwer. 1. Your Popes muſt bee firſt as holy as this Prophet was, who was thus reverenced for his holineſſe, before they can challenge the like honour.

2 This reverence to the Prophet was voluntarie in the woman, not looked for or exacted by the Prophet, as the Pope looketh for it of dutie.

3 Here is no mention made of kiſſing of feet, but only that ſhe caught him by the feet, which was partly a ſigne of her joy, that ſhe had met with the Prophet, partly by this ſudden and diſordered geſture, the Prophet perceived that ſhe was troubled in mind: for Gehazi would have thruſt her away, but he ſaid, Let her alone, for her ſpirit is troubled within her.

4 This is no warrant for the Pope to offer his feet to bee kiſſed of Kings and Emperours, becauſe the woman fell downe at the Prophets feet; think you, that if the King of Iſrael had ſo done, the Prophet would have ſuffered it?

Argum. 2. Mary kiſſed Chriſts feet: Ergo, the Popes feet ought to be kiſſed.

Anſwer. what arrogancie is this, that the Pope, a mortall and ſinfull man, ſhould challenge that honour which was done to Chriſt, being God in the fleſh, and void of ſin? He might alſo with the like blaſphemie challenge to be worſhipped, becauſe the woman in the Goſpell caught Chriſt by the feet, Matth.28.9. and worſhipped him. We may ſee by this, of what ſpirit he is, and whether he be not that Antichriſt 2.Theſſ.2.4. that ſhall make himſelfe as God.

The Proteſtants.

THe kiſſing of the feet, was an humble and lowly geſture, which was worthily uſed toward our Saviour Chriſt, who was God in the fleſh, and in his bodie and humanitie annexed to his Godhead, as God to be worſhipped: but it is too divine, and too lowly an homage to bee offered to any mortall man: And holy men in times paſt refuſed it, when any carried away with immoderate zeale and admiration of their perſon, were readie to give it unto them.

Argum. 1. When Cornelius fell downe at Peters feet, the holy Apoſtle would not ſuffer him to do it. The Pope is of a cleane contrarie ſpirit to S. Peter: for he refuſed it being offered; the Pope holdeth out his toe, and offereth it to be kiſſed, and urgeth men therunto.

Argum. 2. If ſuch kiſſing of feet be commendable, how commeth it to paſſe that the Pope onely hath holy feet to kiſſe; and not other Biſhops and Clergie men, as well as he?

Auguſtine thus writeth upon thoſe words of the Pſalme, Worſhip his footſtoole, reading according to the Septuagint, ſaith he, the earth is his footſtoole, but wee muſt not worſhip the earth: Converto me ad Chriſtum, & invenio, quomodo ſine impietate adoretur terra, &c. ſuſcepit enim de terra terram, quia caro terra eſt in Pſal.98. I turne me (ſaith he) unto Chriſt, and I find how the earth may without any impietie be worſhipped: for he tooke earth of earth, fleſh of the fleſh of the Virgin, the fleſh is earth, &c. Out of theſe words I conclude, that the fleſh, the bodie, the humanitie ought not in any to bee worſhipped, but onely in Chriſt, for the neer conjunction of the Godhead and humane nature together: and therefore conſequently no kiſſing of feet, which is an externall act of divine worſhip, is ſeemly for any mortall man.

The Jeſuite might as well defend other inſolent parts of the Popes, as the kiſſing of their feet; as that they take upon them to be carried upon mens ſhoulders, as Stephanus 2. was anno 757. Alexander 3. did tread in the Emperour Fredericks neck: Adrianus 4. found fault with the Emperour for holding his ſtirrup on the left ſide: to whom the Emperour made this ſober anſwer: Scire velim ex te, hoc officii genus ex debito ne ſit, an beneplacito, &c. I would know of thee, whether this ſervice bee of dutie, or good will; if of good will, it skilleth not on which ſide hee commeth that ſheweth his good will, &c. So then it ſeemeth that this great reverence ſhewed to the Popes, as in kiſſing their feet and ſuch like, proceeded rather from the good will, and lowlineſſe of others, than of any dutie belonging to their perſons. But concerning this and other proud parts of the Pope, the ſaid Frederick the Emperour writing to Adriane, ſaith, as the truth was; Superbia deteſtabilem beſtiam uſque ad ſedem Petri reptaſſe videmus: We ſee that the deteſtable beaſt of pride is crept even into Peters chaire.

This proud and inſolent faſhion of kiſſing the feet, one Pope learned of another: as Eugenius the fourth offered his feet to bee kiſſed of both the Emperours of the Eaſt and Weſt, as was ſet up in his Vincentius lib.31. Epitaph: Iſtius ante ſacros ſe prabuit alter ab ortu, alter ab occaſu Caſar uterq; pedes: Fredericus the third kiſſed the feet of Nicholas the fifth ſitting in an Ivorie chaire, and offered him a great maſſe of gold. Ladiſlaus alſo King of Bohemia, and Hungarie, Albertus Duke of Auſtria, and Leonora the Sabellic. ennead.9. in fine. Empreſſe did likewiſe kiſſe his feet. The Emperour Sigiſmund kiſſed Pope Martines the fifth his feet.

But this popelike pompous pride is of ſmall antiquitie. 1 The Emperours, when it pleaſed them to ſhew their exceeding love to godly Biſhops, would embrace them, and kiſſe their eyes, lips and breaſt, as Theodoſius did to Miletius : Gainas the Goth did reverence Chryſoſtome, Et liberos ejus genib. admovit; And ſet his children to his knee. Here is no kiſſing of feet. Nay the Biſhops themſelves did bow unto the Emperors, and reverence them with bare heads : as the Biſhops being aſſembled at Conſtantinople under the Emperour Gratian, Capitib. detectis, religioſe palatium ingrediuntur, & pie ſuaviterq; ſalutant, &c. Uncovering their heads, doe devoutly enter the Palace, and reverently and lovingly ſalute him, &c. This was the uſe of the Greeke Church.

Theodoret. lib.5.7. Ibid.c.33.

Sozomen. lib. 7.c.6.

2 And in the South Church, as in Ægypt, in Athanaſius time, they uſed to waſh the ſtrangers feet : as he reporteth how one Hermias was taken of the Armie which had waſted Alexandria, waſhing ſtrangers feet, and caſt into priſon : Kiſſing of feet was not yet knowne. Indeed the Emperour of Æthiopia writing to the Pope (not to conceale that which I find) ſaith, Mitto ad deoſculandos ſanctitatis tuæ pedes, more cæterorum, &c. I ſend to kiſſe the feet of your holineſſe, after the manner of other Chriſtian Kings, unto whom neither in religion nor power, I am inferiour, &c. This great King was content his meſſenger ſhould doe as other Princes did, leſt it might ſeeme to bee ſome want of dutie in him : hee ſpeaketh this as a ſtranger, not knowing the pride and inſolencie of the Pope, and letting it paſſe as an ordinarie ſalutation. But at another time, when Oviedo a Spaniard was ſent by the Pope to draw the Abyſſines to acknowledge the Romane Church, the Emperour Claudius chaſed him away, and Oviedo was compelled to hide himſelfe. Here is no more talke of kiſſing of feet, after his pride was diſcovered.

The third queſtion, concerning the invocation of Saints.

THis queſtion hath three parts : firſt, whether prayers are to be made unto Saints. Secondly, whether they doe pray for us. Thirdly, whether they underſtand our prayers.

The firſt part, whether prayers are to be made to Saints.

The Papiſts.

THeir aſſertion is this, Sanctos defunctos piè & utiliter à viventibus invocari : That Saints departed are with great profit and pietie called upon, and prayed unto : and that it is not only lawfull but godly, ſo to doe, Rhemiſt. 1. Tim. 2. ſect. 4. Bellarm. cap. 19. lib. 1. de Sanctor beatit.

30. Error.

Argum. 1. They ſay, they doe not pray unto Saints, as authors of any benefit or grace, but as interceſſors only : Neither doe they make them immediate interceſſors, but onely through Chriſt, concluding all their praiers, Per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum. Bellarm.

Anſwer. 1. It is falſe, that you pray unto them as interceſſors onely, for you deſire them not only to pray for you, but to have mercie on you : for thus they pray, O bleſſed Ladie have mercie upon us, preſerve thy ſervants, let the merits of S. Marie bring us to the kingdome of heaven, Fulk, 1 Tim. 2. ſect. 4.

2 It is falſe alſo, that they make them not immediate interceſſors, but conclude their prayers, Per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum : For in that blaſphemous prayer, Tu per Thoma ſanguinem quem pro nobis impendit, fac nos Chriſte ſcandere, quò Thomas aſcendit : Here they aske life eternall of Chriſt by the blood of Thomas of Canterburie. How then is it true which the Rhemiſts affirme in word, that Chriſt alone by his merits procureth all grace and mercie toward mankind, ibid. when they hope to obtaine their requeſts by the merits of Saints ? See Fulk, annot. Ioh. 16. ſect. 3. where divers praiers to Saints, as to S. Marie, S. Oſmond, S. Anne, S. Katherine, are reckoned up, and none of them concludeth, Per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum.

Fox. pag. 1274. Likewiſe anno 1551. in Scotland it was taught as good doctrine among the Papiſts, that it was lawfull to ſay the Pater noſter to Saints, that we may call them our fathers, and ſay, Hallowed be your names, becauſe God hath made their names holie, And that their kingdome may come, becauſe the kingdome of heaven is theirs by poſſeſſion : and further, That their will may bee done, ſeeing their will is Gods will : and ſo of the other petitions. Whereby it appeareth, that they would have prayers made unto Saints properly, even as unto God.

Exod. 32.13. Argum. 2. Moſes thus prayeth. Remember Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob thy ſervants. Moſes here hopeth to have his prayers heard by the merits of theſe holie men. Bellarmine objected alſo by our Doway tranſlators, pag. 700.

Geneſ. 17.7. Anſwer. Moſes rehearſeth onely the covenant, which the Lord made with theſe holy men and their ſeed, as the words following doe ſhew, To whom thou ſwareſt by thine owne ſelfe and ſaidſt unto them, I will multiplie your ſeed : Moſes therefore pleadeth not the merits of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob ; but urgeth and preſſeth the promiſe of God, and covenant made with them : as we may read, Geneſis 17.7. where the Lord ſaith to Abraham, I will be God unto thee, and thy ſeed after thee.

1 King. 15.4. Bellarmine replieth, that mention is not onely made of the covenant, but of their merits alſo : For Davids ſake did the Lord give him a light in Ieruſalem, &c. becauſe David did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, &c. objected likewiſe by the Doway profeſſors. pag. 935.

1 King. 11.32. Contra. Firſt, here is no mention of Davids merits : for in the ſame place Davids ſin againſt Vrias is remembred, which was ſufficient to ſtaine all Davids merits with God. Secondly, God doth many times crowne the righteouſneſſe of the parents with temporall bleſſings in their poſteritie, according as the Lord promiſeth in the ſecond commandement, I will ſhew mercie upon thouſands to them that love mee : So that all this dependeth upon Gods mercie and promiſe. Thirdly, compare this place with chap. 11.32.34. there we ſhall find this reaſon given, becauſe I have choſen David, &c. therefore God would not rent all the kingdome from Salomons poſteritie : wherefore this mercie to Davids ſeed, did firſt of all iſſue from the free election of God. Fourthly, this place maketh nothing at all for the invocation of Saints, though God reſpecting the obodience of David, ſhould ſhew mercie unto his ſeed.

Rom. 15.30. Epheſ. 6.19. Coloſſ. 4.3. Argum. 3. The Saints doe pray one for another here upon earth, and doe one deſire anothers prayers : S. Paul, Rom. 15. Epheſ. 6. Coloſſ. 4. and in other places deſireth to be aſſiſted by their prayers : Ergo, much more may we deſire the prayers of Saints departed, Bellarm. Rhemiſt.

Anſwer. Firſt, to pray one for another while we live, is a dutie of charitie, and commanded in Scripture : but to requeſt the prayers of Saints departed, hath no warrant in the word. Secondly, we doe not deſire the godly living to pray for us, as our Mediatours, or as though by their worthineſſe we are brought into the favour of God, as you ſay the Saints doe : and therefore your argument followeth not, from the prayer of the living to the prayer of the dead. Thirdly, wee may one pray for another, and one requeſt the prayers of another, while we live, becauſe we know our mutuall neceſſities : but the Saints departed, know not what things are done upon earth, neither are every where preſent to heare our praiers. Thus is their argument anſwered, whereof Bellarmine ſo boaſteth, that he ſaith, it was unanſwerable, cap. 19.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine produceth divers teſtimonies of the Fathers, and certaine Canons of Councels to prove the invocation of Saints : as namely, Synod. 7. act. 6. in fine : Cum timore, &c. Let us doe all with feare, intreating the interceſſion of the undefiled Virgin, of the Angels, and all Saints, &c.

Anſwer. Firſt, this 7. Synod, which was the Nicene 2. is not worthie to bee counted amongſt the generall Councels, wherin it was concluded that images of Saints were to be worſhipped, and it was aſſembled againſt Iconoclaſtas, the breakers of images : but the 4. Conſtantin. rather is to be held the 7. generall, which was gathered againſt Iconolatras, the worſhippers of images : wherein it was concluded, that it was neither lawfull to have the images of Saints, not to worſhip them. And that this deſerveth rather the name of a generall Councell, it may appeare, both becauſe it had the preſence and conſent of two Emperours, Leo and Conſtantinus ; whereas the other had but the conſent of Irene the Empreſſe, Conſtantinus her ſonne being yet under her government, who afterward comming to yeeres of diſcretion, did abrogate the conſtitutions of this Councell : as alſo for that the one was moderated by the reverend Patriarke of Conſtantin. Paul and Theodoſius Biſhop of Epheſius ; but the other was overruled by Tharaſius that unlearned Prelate of Conſtantinople, of a lay-man ſuddenly made a Patriarke, contrarie to the Canons, whoſe election Charles the great did take exception againſt.

Secondly, that it may appeare what reſpect is to bee had to this Councell, let us ſee ſome of their beſt ſtuffe : Action. 4. One Iohannes ſtepped up, and ſaid, Major eſt imago quàm oratio : An Image is greater than prayer. Action. 1. Tharaſius the Preſident ſaid : Malum perpetuò idem eſt & æquale : Evill or ſinne is alwaies equall and the very ſame : & idem eſt errare in magnis & parvis, and to erre in great matters or ſmall, concerning the faith, is all one. Such blaſphemous and erroneous concluſions, may very well beſeeme ſuch a blind Councell. Of the ſame kind is their reſolution for the invocation of Saints.

Thirdly, this Synod is of no great antiquitie, being celebrate about anno 780. and therefore not much to bee regarded. Almoſt foure hundred yeeres before this the doctrine of the Church was otherwiſe, as out of Ambroſe is moſt evident, whereas hee thus writeth in 1. cap. ad Roman. Dicunt per iſtos ire ſe poſſe ad Deum, &c. They ſay that by theſe (that is by Saints) they may have acceſſe unto God, as by Courtiers we come unto the King: Goe to, is any man ſo mad, or ſo forgetfull of himſelfe, as to give the honour of the King to a Courtier? and doe they thinke they doe well, that give the honour of God to a creature, & relicto Domino conſervos adorant, and leaving the Lord, to adore their fellow ſervants? And therefore we come unto the King by Courtiers, becauſe the King is a man, and knoweth not to whom he ſhould commit the affaires of the kingdome; but unto God, from whom nothing is hid, who knoweth every mans merits (that is, workes) ſuffragatore non eſt opus, ſed mente devota, wee need no ſpeaker, but a devout mind, &c. No doubt this ſaying of S. Ambroſe was agreeable to the doctrine of the Church in thoſe dayes: out of the which wee may gather theſe three reaſons againſt the invocation of Saints: firſt, becauſe this was to give the honour of the King to his ſubjects, of God to the creature. Secondly, Angels and Saints are our fellow-ſervants, and therefore not to be worſhipped with our invocation. Thirdly, it is not ſo with God as with Princes: to them wee muſt have acceſſe by others, becauſe they otherwiſe know not our neceſſities, but God knoweth our hearts.

See further of the exceptions taken to this Synod. Cont. 3. of generall Councels q. 3.

Bellarmines anſwer, to this ſo evident a teſtimonie, is very ridiculous: firſt, ſaith he, Saint Ambroſe ſpeaketh againſt the Ethnicks, that did worſhip the ſtars, and calleth them our fellow-ſervants, that is, creatures.

Contra. Firſt, it is a very improper and unuſuall ſpeech, to call the ſenſleſſe creatures our fellow-ſervants, and this beggerly ſhift bewraieth the nakedneſſe of their cauſe. Secondly, S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh of ſuch fellow-ſervants, as ſhould admit us into Gods preſence; but I thinke he is not ſo fooliſh to thinke, that the ſtarres are mediatours unto God for us: wherefore it is evident he ſpeaketh of the mediation of Saints.

Secondly, ſaith he, on Gods behalfe, ſuffragatore non eſt opus, we need no ſpokſman, but in reſpect of our ſelves, we have need, &c.

Contra. A ſimple and weake diſtinction: for firſt, S. Ambroſe maketh this compariſon: We need a ſpokſeman to the King, becauſe he knoweth not our wants; but to God we need none, becauſe of himſelfe, he underſtandeth our prayers: wherefore there is no need at all of a ſpokſeman to God. Secondly, he ſheweth, that on our behalfe alſo we need no ſpokſeman, but a devout mind: a devout mind, I thinke is not required on Gods behalfe, but on ours. Thus this ſophiſticall popeling wreſtleth by his ſubtiltie with the cleere evidence and light of truth, but every where proclaimeth the weakneſſe of his cauſe. And as hee anſwereth this place of S. Ambroſe, ſo hee dealeth with the reſt: but fully now to anſwer the objections out of the Fathers, would inlarge this volume too much, of purpoſe therefore I doe forbeare: yet here and there in the more waightie controverſies, I think it not amiſſe to give a taſte.

Our Doway diſciples doe here alſo put in their verdict: Honour was religiouſly given unto Saints, while they lived, as a Nobleman adored Elias, and Eliſeus was adored by his diſciples: henſe they would prove a majori, the honour and interceſſion of Saints: pag. 935.

This was no religious, but a civill kind of higher reverence given unto theſe holie men, as is ſhewed before, error 25. 26. in the anſwer to the Doway objections: neither doth the argument follow from the living to the dead: as likewiſe ſee before in the anſwer to the third argument.

But, if it be further objected, that many have prayed to the Saints, and namely to the Virgin Mary, and have obtained their requeſts, and therefore ſuch prayes are available. We anſwer, that this is no good argument, that is taken from the event: for ſo Livie writeth, that Romulus prayed to Iupiter, that he would ſtay the flight of the Romanes, that he might keepe off the Sabines, and it was effected. Plinie alſo reporteth, that one Helpis ſeeing a trampling lion come againſt him, prayed to Bacchus and was delivered: like as the praying to heathen gods is not juſtified by the ſubſequent effects, no more is the invocating of Saints, &c.

Lib. 5.

Plin. lib. 8. c. 16.

The Proteſtants.

THat prayer is onely to be made unto God, and to no other creatures beſide, as being an eſpeciall part of the worſhip of God, which wee ought not to give to any other: thus it is proved out of the word of God.

Argum. 1. How ſhall they call upon him, in whom they have not beleeved? But wee muſt beleeve onely in God, and therefore onely pray to God. Rhemiſt. anſwer: It is true, no more can wee pray unto our Ladie, nor any Saint in heaven, unleſſe we beleeve they can helpe us. So doth Bellarmine anſwer likewiſe.

Rom. 10. 14.

Anſw. The Scripture every where teacheth that we muſt beleeve in God, and that they are curſed that put any confidence in man. Againe, they can have no aſſurance to ſettle their conſcience, but out of the Scriptures: They have a vaine perſwaſion of the abilitie of Saints to helpe them, but they have no ground of any ſuch beleefe out of the Scripture.

Ierem. 17. 5.

Boner, as great a patrone of poperie in his time, as any of the Rhemiſts now, he ſaith thus: To truſt to any wee bid you not; but to call upon them, and pray to them, we bid you, Fox pag. 1587. Hee thought it a groſſe thing, that wee ſhould truſt to Saints, which the new Papiſts ſet downe for good wholeſome doctrine.

Heb.4.16. Argum. 2. Heb.4.16. Let us come with boldneſſe to the throne of grace: Ergo, we have no need of the invocation of Saints, ſeeing we have free and bold acceſſe through Chriſt.

Rhemiſt. By this reaſon we ſhould not pray one for another while we are alive.

Anſw. We doe not put our confidence in the merit and worthineſſe of other mens praiers, as you doe in the interceſſion of Saints. Againe, this mutuall dutie of prayer one for another, is commanded and required of God, as the other is not: wherefore to runne unto Saints, and not unto Chriſt, is to doubt either of his readineſſe, or abilitie to helpe us.

John 16.26. Argum. 3. Chriſt ſaith, that after hee hath by his mediation and interceſſion brought us into the favour of God, In that day ſhall you aske the Father in my name, and I ſay not, that I will pray to the Father for you, for the Father himſelfe loveth you. If then the prayer of Chriſt to God his Father ſhall not then be needfull, what uſe is there of the prayer of other creatures? Fulk. 1. Tim. 2. ſect. 4.

Matth.6.9. Argum. 4. Our Saviour Chriſt hath taught us in the Goſpell, to whom we ſhould direct our prayers, ſaying, Our Father, which art in heaven, &c. Matth.6. This prayer cannot be ſaid either to Angell, or Saint: Ergo, it is contrarie to Chriſts rule to pray unto them.

Bellarmine anſwereth, by the ſame reaſon onely God the Father ſhould bee prayed unto, neither God the Son, nor the holy Ghoſt; for he teacheth us only to ſay, Our Father, &c.

Contra. Firſt, here he ſheweth his wilfull ignorance: as though the whole Trinitie in reſpect of us, and every one of the perſons, is not our Father; though in the reſpect that they have one to another, Iſai.9.6. there is but one Father, and one Son, for Chriſt is called the everlaſting Father, Iſay 9. and the holy James 1.17. Ghoſt, Iames 1. 17. is named by the Apoſtle, Pater luminum, the father of lights. Secondly, there is Matth.28.20. not a petition in the Lords praier but agreeth to the whole Trinitie: as where we pray, Hallowed be thy name, for there is one name of the whole Trinitie, as Matth.28. Goe and baptize in the name of the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt: as S. Ambroſe ſheweth, lib. 1. de ſpiritu, cap. 14. Let thy kingdome come: this alſo concerneth the whole Trinitie, which hath but one kingdome: as S. Ambroſe proveth Rom.14.17. out of that place, Rom.14. The kingdome of God is not meat, but righteouſneſſe, and peace. and joy in the ſpirit: the kingdome of God, and of the ſpirit, is all one. So likewiſe they have all one will: they all do John 20.22. together forgive us our ſins, as Ioh.20. Receive ye the holy Ghoſt; whoſe ſins yere mit, they are remitted. The holy Ghoſt therefore forgiveth ſinnes, as well as the Father, or the Son: wherefore it is evident, that the Lords prayer is directed to the whole Trinitie in the name of Father. Thirdly, yet Bellarmine is not altogether ſo abſurd, as ſome popiſh Scottiſh Divines have beene, who were not aſhamed to grant, that the Lords prayer might be ſaid to the Saints. See Fox pag. 1274.

Auguſtine ſaith, Pro quo nullus interpellat, & ipſe pro omnibus; hic unus veruſq; Mediator eſt lib.2. cont. Parmenian. cap. 8. Hee for whom no man prayeth, but himſelfe intreateth for all men, he is the only true Mediator: Ergo, Saints no Mediatours, and therefore not to be prayed unto.

Let us ſee the teſtimonie of holy Martyrs: Thomas Hauks; It is an abominable blaſphemie againſt God, and his ſon Chriſt, to call upon any, to truſt to any, or to pray to any, ſave only to Chriſt Jeſus. Rom.10. His reaſon is out of S. Paul Rom. 10. that we cannot call upon any, upon whom we beleeve not: But our beleefe, faith and truſt muſt only be fixed upon God. To this agreeth the concluſion of a generall Councell, Nicen.2. Action.2. Tharaſius Preſident of the Councell thus ſaith: Apertis verbis teſtamur, nos duntaxat in unum Deum veram latreiam, id eſt, cultum, & fidem noſtram referre & reponere: We doe plainly teſtifie, that we repoſe and referre our faith and truſt only unto God.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: Whereas the Papiſts commonly object, that as wee cannot be admitted into the preſence of the Prince, but by mediatours and freinds going betweene; ſo is it between God and us: he anſwereth, that there is great difference betweene God and a mortall Prince: For neither hath the Prince the knowledge that God hath, who knoweth and ſeeth all things every where, &c. neither is hee in mercy and gratious dealing like to God, who is of that infinite mercie, that I may as ſoon obtaine of him that is needfull, as I ſhould by praying to Saints to bee Mediatours, &c. And ſo he concludeth, I will pray unto Saints, when I thinke that God either cannot or will not give Pag.113.1.40. my petition; but that ſhall never be: Ergo, &c. pag. 1109. reſponſ. ad articul. 14.

1 Ieremie Patriark ſaith: Nos dicimus invocationem vere & proprie ſoli Deo convenire, &c. eam autem, quæ ſanctorum eſt invocationem, non proprie dici, ſed ex accidenti, &c. We ſay, that invocation tru-Cenſur.Oriental.c.22. ly and properly belongeth only unto God, and that invocation which is of the Saints, is not properly ſo called, but accidentally, as it were by grace and privilege, &c. And a little after, De ea invocatione, &c. Of that invocation which is due unto God himſelfe, Paul writeth to the Romans, how ſhall Rom.10.14. they call upon him, on whom they have not beleeved? Deum ſine omni dubio intelligens, underſtanding God without all doubt, &c. He denieth any truſt to be repoſed, but only in God, and ſo conſequently invocation to belong properly only to God.

Liturg of S. Cyril. 2 In ancient time the South Church uſed thus to pray in their Liturgie, Call to remembrance O Lord our holy fathers, the Patriarks, Prophets, Apoſtles, and above all the reſt, the holy and glorious Virgin Mary, S. Iohn, S. Stephen, grant them all to reſt in the boſome of our holy fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, &c. raiſe their bodies, &c. It ſeemeth then that in thoſe daies they praied rather for, than to the Saints. that God would give them a glorious reſurrection. Athanaſius, though many things are found in his writings touching the invocation of Saints: yet hee ſomewhere thus affirmeth: The words of the Pſalmes are not to be changed, but as they are written to be recited: ut ſancti qui iſta verba ſuppeditarunt, ſua eſſe agnoſcentes, comprecentur nobiſcum: That the Saints which ſupplied theſe words, acknowledging their owne, may pray together with us, &c. Here he maketh the Saints joynt intreaters with us, not mediators for us. What is the judgment and practice of the now Æthiopik Church, is not ſo certaine: for in the Æthiopian Liturgie thus they pray: Rejoyce O Ladie, we will pray for thy health, O Virgin carrie our prayers up on high to the eares of thy Saints, &c. Here they ſeeme both to pray for, and to the Virgin Marie: but theſe ſpeeches ſeeme rather to be Apoſtrophees and Proſopopaes, to ſtir them up to devotion: for Hondius ſaith that they in no wiſe call upon Saints. And it may bee thought rather to be ſo, than otherwiſe: for their Emperour David in his Epiſtle to Emmanuel King of Portugall uſeth theſe formes of prayer: Deo agenda ſunt gratia, is eſt qui vobis mundum dedit: Thanks muſt be given unto God, it is he that hath given you the world, &c. And againe: Rex unus Deus te ſervet, qui eſt Deus cœli: The one God keepe thee, hee which is God of heaven, of one ſubſtance, &c. He bleſſeth here in the name of God only: he ſeemeth alſo to aſcribe ſomewhat to the prayers of Saints, but in generall only he prayeth not unto them. See error 31.

Yea he goeth further and ſaith, Non eſt expreſſum in novo Teſtamento, &c. It is not expreſſed in the new Teſtament, but by tradition, leſt the Gentiles might have thought that a multitude of Gods had been put upon them, &c. The ſecond part, whether the Saints departed do pray for us.

The Papiſts.

THat the Saints in heaven doe not onely pray in generall, but particularly for us, ready in all our needs by their prayer and mediation to aſſiſt us, thus they would prove it. 31. Error.

Argum. 1. I will endevour (ſaith the Apoſtle) that you may have remembrance of theſe things after my departure. Peter promiſeth to be carefull of them, and to pray for them after his departure. Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. cap. 18.

There is no ſyllable, which ſoundeth that way, that hee would pray for them after his diſſolution.

Argum. 1. Apocal. 5. 8. The 24. Elders are ſaid to have golden vials full of odour, which are the prayers of the Saints, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum. Ergo, the Saints in heaven doe pray for us. Apoc. 5. 8.

Argum. 3. Ierem. 15. 1. If Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, my affection could not be toward this people: therefore Moſes and Samuel being dead, did uſe to pray for the people. Bellarm. Ierem. 15. 1.

Anſw. Firſt, the contrarie rather may be gathered, that Moſes and Samuel did not pray for the people dead: becauſe the Lord ſaith, if they did, &c. but it is not like, that their charitie is leſſe in heaven to ceaſe praying for the people, if the Saints had any ſuch office, ſeeing that Samuel yet living ſaid, God forbid that I ſhould ceaſe praying for this people. Secondly, this place may be expounded by that Ezech. 14. 20. Though Noah, Iob, Daniel, were in the middeſt of the citie, they ſhould but deliver their owne ſoules: So here, if Moſes and Samuel were living to pray for the people, as they uſed to doe, God will not heare them.

1 Sam. 12. 23.

Ezech. 14. 20.

Argum. 4. Luke 16. in the parable, the rich man prayeth for his brethren, much more doe the righteous pray for the whole Church: as Revel. 6. The ſoules under the altar crie, Lord how long doeſt thou not judge and avenge our blood, &c.? Bellarm. cap. 18.

Luke 16. 27.

Revel. 6. 10.

Anſw. Firſt, to the firſt place I anſwer, that it is a parable, or admitting it to be a ſtorie, wee muſt needs acknowledge many things to be ſpoken in parable and allegorie, as that he deſireth a drop of water to coole his tongue, whereas hee neither had any tongue, his bodie being left in the grave, neither is water able to aſſwage the paines of hell. Againe, to take the conference betweene Abraham and the rich man literally, may bee occaſion of many doubts: as how they could one heare anothers talke, there being a great gulfe betweene them: neither had Abraham any ſuch power to ſend Lazarus to the living: wherfore it is hard upon every part of this parable to ground an argument. Secondly, there is no charitie in hell, how then can there be any praier there, which proceedeth of charitie? Thirdly, be it granted that the prayer of the rich man is hiſtoricall: it only ſheweth a generall deſire and wiſh that he hath to his kindred: and ſo wee denie not, but that the Saints in generall doe deſire the conſummation of Chriſts bodie, and the eternall reſt of the reſt of his members yet militant in earth.

To the ſecond place we likewiſe anſwer: firſt, if that prayer or complaint which the ſoules under the Altar make, be ſtrictly according to the letter taken, is it to be thought that the Saints have leſſe charitie in heaven, than they had in earth? for Stephen praied that his perſecutors might be forgiven at his death, and doth the ſoule of Stephen now being under the Altar call for vengeance? This is Hieromes reaſon: they doe not deſire their blood which perſecuted them, pro eis enim precatio fuſa eſt, &c. for they prayed for them, that the ſinne ſhould not bee laid to their charge. Secondly, they pray not therfore particularly for the deſtruction of any, but generally, that an end may bee made of the tyrannie of Satan: as Hierome expoundeth, Spirituales nequitia hic intelliguntur: Spirituall enemies are here underſtood, De vir. perfecto. And it is in effect the ſame with the prayer of the Church, Apoc.22.17. Apocal. 22.17. The ſpirit, and the bride ſay come: that is, they doe all wait for the finall accompliſhing of Chriſts kingdome. Thirdly, wee grant then that the Saints in heaven doe long both for the conſummation of their own glorie, and wiſh generally unto the Church militant the like triumphant end and victorie to their labours; and we confeſſe as much as S. Cyprian ſaith: Magnus illic charorum numerus nos expectat, &c. parentum, fratrum, filiorum de ſalute ſua ſecuri, de noſtra ſolliciti: A great number of our friends doe there wait for us, &c. being ſecure of their owne ſalvation, carefull for us: Serm. 4. de mortalit. But hence it followeth not, that they have particular knowledge of our manifold neceſſities, and ſo make their particular requeſts unto God for us.

The Doway tranſlators would prove that the Saints have care of the affaires of the Church, and pray for the ſame, by the example of Elias, who ſeven yeeres after he was tranſlated, had care of Iehoram and his kingdome, admoniſhing him by letters of Gods wrath againſt him and his people for their ſinnes, 2 Chron. 21. 11. pag. 903. and 935.

Anſw. To this objection divers anſwers are made: Firſt, ſome thinke, that Elias is there taken for Eliſha, who ſucceeded him, and heired his propheticall gifts: Engliſh annotat. Secondly, Iunius thinketh, that Elias before he was taken up, did leave this propheticall letter, therein foretelling of Iſai.44.28.45.1. Iehorams wicked government, and of the judgment of God againſt him, as Iſaiah propheſieth of Cyrus 1 King.13.2. long before: and the man of Iudah and Ioſiah: to this may be added, that Iehoram began to reigne under his father, in his eighteenth yeere, and had governed two yeeres under his father, before Eliah 1 King.21.17. was taken up: ſo that even then the Prophet had experience of his evill diſpoſition. This anſwer is without exception the beſt: we need not imagine any letters to be ſent from heaven or Paradiſe written by Elias: we read not in Scripture of any writing ſent from heaven, but of the ten Commandements given by Gods owne finger delivered to Moſes.

The Proteſtants.

THat the bleſſed Saints doe ſing unto the praiſe of God in heaven, and doe magnifie the Lord, and Apoc.5.9. praiſe him with a new ſong of thankſgiving, which is a kind of praier, we denie not, Apocal. 5. 9. and that they have a generall deſire and longing, both for us, for themſelves, and all the elect of God, that the day of our refreſhing were come, and that all the people of God were joyned in one, and Apoc.6.9. their enemies vanquiſhed and deſtroied, we learne alſo out of the Scripture, Apoc. 6. 9. But that they ſhould offer up our ſpeciall praiers, and make particular requeſt for us to God, it no where in the Scripture is found, but rather the contrarie.

Argum. 1. The Scripture no where teſtifieth, that the Saints in ſuch manner doe pray for us: Ergo, wee may ſafely bee ignorant of it: nay it were great preſumption, without Scripture to beleeve it.

Argum. 2. The Saints departed know not our wants, nor what is done in the earth. The living Eccleſ.9.5. know that they ſhall die, but the dead know nothing at all, Eccleſ. 9. 5. But of this more ſhall be ſaid in the next part. See Auguſtine of this matter, Contro. 8. quaſt. 2. part. 3.

1 Tim.2.5. Argum. 3. Saint Paul ſaith, There is one mediator of God and man, the man Ieſus Chriſt, 1 Tim. 2. 5. Ergo, Saints are not our mediators, and ſo conſequently they doe not pray for us.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Chriſt is ſaid onely to be our mediator for three cauſes: firſt, becauſe hee is the onely mediator of our redemption. Secondly, hee is a mediator not by his office onely, but in reſpect of his nature alſo, being both God and man. Thirdly, becauſe he is ſo a mediator, that hee needeth not any other mediator, as the Saints doe, who are mediators, but not in the foreſaid reſpects: Bellarmine cap. 20.

Anſw. Bellarmine hath ſtrengthened our argument well, and given three reaſons why the Saints cannot be mediators in any reſpect at all. Firſt, there can bee no advocate or mediator, but the ſame muſt be the propitiation for our ſinnes, as S. Iohn ſheweth, The Saints are not a propitiation for our ſins. Ergo. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, A mediator is not of one, Galath. 3. 20. So then he that is the mediator betweene God and man, muſt not be of one nature: hee muſt bee both God and man: Ergo, Saints are no mediators. Thirdly, he cannot be a mediator, that hath himſelfe need of a mediator, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, that they could not bee our high Prieſt, that had need firſt to offer for their owne ſinnes, and then for the ſins of the people, and to offer up our prayers is belonging to the Prieſthood. Saints cannot bee our Prieſts: Ergo, neither our mediators. Thus hath Bellarmine reaſoned well for us againſt himſelfe.

1 Ioh. 2. 2. Galath. 3. 20. Heb. 7. 27.

Francis Rebezies holy Martyr: ſheweth in what manner Saints doe pray for us: who, when a Doctor had put forth this reaſon, The Apoſtles made interceſſion to Chriſt when as he was upon the earth, why may they not doe ſo now? ſeeing Chriſt then was the interceſſor of the world, as now. Hee thus anſwereth: So long as they were in the world, they exerciſed their miniſterie, and prayed one for another, as needing humane ſuccours together: but now being in paradiſe, all the prayer they make is this, that they wiſh that they which bee upon earth may attaine to their felicitie: but to obtaine any thing at the Fathers hand, wee muſt have our recourſe onely to his ſonne. Fox pag. 922. col. 2.

Pag. 841. 2. 60.

Although not long after the Apoſtles time ſuperſtition began by little and little to creep into the Church; and the Saints and Martyrs began to be more than devoutly honoured, yet the Lord left not his truth without witneſſe both in the Eaſt and South Churches. 1. Chryſoſtome, though hee ſometime after his orationall manner ſet forth the praiſes of the Saints, and turne himſelfe unto them: yet hee thus alſo more adviſedly writeth: Clauſo oſtio, id eſt, intra conſcientia ipſius ſecretum à Domino jubemur orare, ut ab eo, qui ſecretorum eſt cognitor, recipiamus orationis occulta mercedem: We are commanded of the Lord to pray, the doore being ſhut, that is, within the ſecret of our conſcience, that from him who is the knower of ſecrets, wee may receive the reward of our ſecret prayer, &c. Now ſeing the Saints know not our hearts, how can they bee mediators of our ſecret prayers, which are only made with the heart?

Hom. 8. in 5 Matth.

2 Origen in his time made doubt of this matter: Utrum Sancti extra corpus poſiti agunt aliquid, & laborant pro nobis ad ſimilitudinem Angelorum, &c. habeatur hoc inter occulta Dei, &c. Whether the Saints being out of the bodie do any thing, and labour for us after the manner of the Angels, &c. let it be numbred among the ſecrets of God, &c. Cyrillus of Alexandria ſpeaketh more directly: Orandum eſt in nomine ſalvatoris, ſi exaudiri à patre volumus, &c. We muſt pray in the name of our Saviour, if we will be heard of the Father. Auguſtine of the South Africane Church is very direct: Si eſſet mediator Paulus, eſſent utiq; & cæteri Co-apoſtoli, & ſic multi mediatores eſſent, nec conſtaret ipſi Paulo ratio, qua dixerat, unus Deus, unus mediator, &c. If Paul were a mediator, the reſt of his fellow Apoſtles alſo ſhould be mediators, and ſo there ſhould be many mediators, and then Pauls reaſon could not ſtand in ſaying, there is one God, and one mediator of God and man, the man Ieſus Chriſt. Indeed Cyprian before Auguſtines time, thus writeth: If any of us doe goe before by the divine calling, perſeveret apud Deum noſtra dilectio pro fratribus & ſororibus noſtris: Let our love perſevere with God for our brethren and ſiſters, &c. They which are departed out of this life, doe in generall wiſh well unto the Saints yet living, and wiſh them to be partakers of the ſame felicitie: but their particular neceſſities they know not, neither can offer up their particular and private requeſts, &c. And thus alſo wee may underſtand thoſe kinds of prayers, uſed in the Æthiopike Church to this day, though we may well thinke, that they in proceſſe of time, &c. have degenerate from the puritie of the ancient faith, as other Churches have done. The Empreſſe Helena, which had the government during the minoritie of her ſon David, thus wiſheth unto Emanuel King of Portugall: The Lord proſper thee, per devotos preces nuntiorum redemptoris Chriſti, by the devout prayers of the meſſengers of our Redeemer Chriſt, that is, the foure Evangeliſts, Iohn, Luke, Marke, Matthew, quorum orationes te ſervent, whoſe praiers and holineſſe keepe thee, &c. Though this ſovour of ſome ſuperſtition, yet the meaning may be reſtrained to the generall prayers and deſires of the Saints departed.

THey affirme three things, which they are driven to grant by neceſſitie of argument, while they ſtiffly maintaine invocation of Saints: for firſt they grant that they know our hearts, and our inward repentance, and ſecret thoughts: for otherwiſe it would not availe to pray unto them, yet not of themſelves, but by the revelation of God, *Bellar. cap.*20. And of foure opinions of this matter, as that the Saints know our prayers either by the revelation of Angels, or by their celeritie or agilitie of nature, paſſing from place to place, or at once they ſee in God as in a glaſſe, all things that may concerne them, or elſe they know mens ſecret thoughts, by ſome ſpeciall revelation from God, as Eliſha deſcried the corruption of Gehezi, and Samuel had a ſecret revelation concerning Saul, 1 *Sam.*9.15. Of theſe foure he preferreth the two laſt, and refuſeth the other.

2 King.5.26. 1 Sam.9.15.

So alſo the Doway tranſlators ſay, that glorified Saints know our cogitations by ſeeing God, in whom all things appeare: or they have it by inſpiration, pag. 605. and if God communicated this power to Prophets, being yet mortall, to ſee mens thoughts, much more doth God reveale to glorified Saints our preſent ſtate, &c. pag. 710.

Apoc.6.10. Act.3.21. 1 Iohn 3.2. 1 Sam.16.6. 2 King.4.27.

Anſw. Neither of theſe foure wayes can ſtand: not the firſt, for though Angels ſhould reveale to the Saints, yet our thoughts they cannot reveale, becauſe they know them not themſelves: not the ſecond, for Saints doe reſt under the Altar, which is Chriſt, Apoc. 6. and paſſe not to and fro, ſeeing that Chriſt as he is man, ſhall be contained in the heavens till his comming againe. Not the third, for we ſhall not ſee Chriſt as he is, till he doe appeare. And concerning the laſt we denie not, but that God may reveale to the Saints ſome things at his pleaſure, as he did to the Prophets: but it hereof followeth not, that all our prayers are revealed unto them: for neither were all things revealed to Samuel, when he went to anoint David: and Eliſha ſaith, concerning the Shunamite, Her ſoule is vexed, and the Lord hath not told me.

Againe, what a prepoſterous order is this, and ſuperfluous, God firſt, revealeth unto them our prayers, and then they ſollicit God in our behalfe? I pray you what need this, ſeeing God knoweth our prayers? Firſt, why is hee not as readie of himſelfe to grant our requeſts, as to ſtay till hee bee entreated?

Iob 14.21.

And whereas our Doway men doe affirme that the Saints come to the knowledge of our thoughts both wayes, by ſpeculation in God, or inſpiration and revelation from God: 1. Theſe two waies one overthrowes another: for if they have this knowledge by revelation, then not by ſeeing God; if by ſeeing, then they need no revelation. 2 The reaſon is not alike, for revelation to Prophets living, and to the Saints, for that the Lord uſed his Prophets as his miniſters and inſtruments here in earth: ſo doth he not the Saints departed. 3 The Scripture is contrarie: Iob ſaith of them which are dead, he knoweth not if his ſons ſhall be honourable, neither ſhall he underſtand concerning them, whether they ſhall be of low degree: where they give this marginall note, that the parents departed are not affected with the ſtate of their children, as they be in their life, &c. But the text directly ſpeaketh of knowing; that not ſo much as the knowledge of humane ſtates is imparted to the dead: as Auguſtine ſaith, Ibi ſunt ſpiritus defunctorum, ubi non vident quacunq; aguntur, aut eveniunt in iſta vita, &c. There the ſpirits of the dead are, where they ſee not the things that are done, or happen to men in this life, &c. If it were otherwiſe, what benefit was it for Ioſias to be promiſed, that he ſhould die before he ſaw the evils to come: De cur. pro mort. cap. 13.

33. Error.

Secondly, ſeeing it were in vaine to pray to Saints, if they had not power to helpe us: they alſo are urged to confeſſe, that the Saints are patrons of men, and have the government of the world committed to them: yea, that they may receive others into the kingdome of heaven.

Apoc.2.26.

Argum. 1. To him that overcommeth, will I give power over nations, and hee ſhall rule over them with a rod of iron: Ergo, the Saints have the government of men committed unto them, *Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. cap.*18.

Anſw. The power which our Saviour here promiſeth, is the participation of his kingly inheritance: firſt, ſpiritually to overcome the world by faith in this life, and after this life they ſhall be ſet in full poſſeſſion of his royall inheritance. The rod of iron, is the word of God, which is alſo called a two edged ſword, whereby they execute vengeance upon the heathen: It is the ſword of the ſpirit, whereby the wicked ſhall bee deſtroyed. Auguſtine exponndeth it to be the rod of Juſtice, whereby the good are corrected, and the wicked broken in pieces, Homil. 2. in Apocal.

Pſal. 149. 7.

Againe, it followeth in the text, As a potters veſſell ſhall they be broken. This cannot be underſtood of the Church of God: wherefore this place ſerveth not to prove the regiment of the Saints over the Church of God. Thirdly, ſeeing this is a promiſe made to every one of Gods Saints, who are many hundred thouſands, by this reaſon every one of them ſhould have a regiment in the Church of God, which were infinite. Laſtly, Chriſt promiſeth that thy ſhall rule, with a rod of yron, as himſelfe hath received; and they ſhall ſit with him in his throne: will they inferre hereupon, that the Saints have the like kingdome and power and glory with Chriſt? this were very abſurd to grant, and againſt Chriſt blaſphemous. Wherefore, the meaning of theſe and the like ſpeeches is nothing elſe, but this that Chriſt ſhall impart and communicate unto the Saints the glory of his kingdome, not in ſuch full manner as he himſelfe hath it, but in ſuch ſort as it is meet for them to receive. S. Ambroſe thus expoundeth the like words of our Saviour, Father, I will that they whom thou haſt given me bee with mee where I am, &c. Ut ſint mecum, non ut ſedeant mecum, &c. That they may bee with mee (ſaith hee) not ſit with mee; where I am, but not as I am; to ſee my glory: to ſee it, not to have it; for the ſervant ſeeth, the maſter poſſeſſeth, lib. 5. de fide, cap. 3. And againe, upon thoſe words, Hee hath made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt: Non ut homines ſedere ſibi ad dextram patiatur Deus, &c. Not that God doth ſuffer men to ſit at his right hand, but to ſit in Chriſt, who is the foundation of all, the head of his Church, who hath in himſelfe merited to our nature the prerogative of the heavenly ſeate, &c. lib. 5. de fide, cap. 7. Thus Ambroſe ſheweth how the Saints are ſaid to ſit in the heavenly throne, namely in Chriſt, in reſpect that our nature in him is advanced to that heavenly ſeate; which prerogative being complete and full in Chriſt, is in meaſure communicated to his members.

Apoc. 3. 21.

Epheſ. 2. 6.

Argum. 2. Make you friends of the unrighteous Mammon, that when they need, they may receive you into everlaſting habitations: See the Saints may receive their friends and benefactors into their eternall manſions, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Luke 16. 9.

Argum. 1. Almes beſtowed upon the poore doe procure their prayers, but not their patronage. 2 The words are thus parabolically to be underſtood: They ſhall receive you, that is, ſhall give teſtimonie of you, and your almes ſhall bee a teſtimonie of your charity, and proceeding from a lively faith, ſhall everlaſtingly bee rewarded. 3 That it is not meant of the perſons, but of the worke, it is plaine, becauſe almes which iſſue from a true faith, ſhall bee rewarded at the Lords hand, though beſtowed upon an hypocrite.

Thirdly, they alſo hold that the Saints at their pleaſure can be preſent with their bodies, and bee amongſt us, and ſo heare our prayers, Bellarm. cap. 20.

34. Error.

Argum. 1. Otherwiſe the Saints ſhould be fettered as it were in heaven, if they remaine and bee kept all in one place.

Anſw. They are not fettered when they are limited by the Lord to a place: ſee alſo what a goodly opinion theſe fellowes have of heaven, making a priſon of it, Rhemiſt. annot. Apocal. 6. 9

Argum. 2. They follow the Lambe whither ſoever he goeth: Ergo, they may be every where.

Anſw. 1. That place is underſtood of all the elect, yea of thoſe that doe imitate and follow Chriſt, living upon earth, as it followeth verſ. 4. Theſe are brought from men, being the firſt fruits unto God, &c. which comprehendeth all the elect both living and departed to God. 2 If the ſoules are every where, becauſe the Lambe is every where, then Chriſt in his humanity is every where, and ſo the Papiſts are become Ubiquitaries.

Apoc. 14. 4.

Argum. 3. The Devils are of great dexteritie, and celeritie in paſſing from one place to another: Ergo, much more the Saints.

Anſwer. 1. The argument followeth not: for devils by propertie of nature together by the ſufferance of God, doe wander up and downe the world, being thereto appointed of God: but the ſoules of Saints have no ſuch office, as we reade in Scripture, to bee curſorie ſpirits in the world. 2 Though it ſhould be granted, that in a ſhort time they are able to change their places: yet it is unpoſſible, they ſhould be in ſo many places to heare the prayers every where made unto them, unleſſe they could bee in divers places at once.

The Proteſtants.

First, it is a great untruth and blaſphemie to ſay, that the Saints doe know our thoughts, inward repentance, prayers, as the Rhemiſts affirme.

Argum. 1. God only is the knower of the heart, neither doth he communicate this propertie of the Godhead to any creature: he may reveale what he thinketh good unto them: but for them, when they will themſelves, to know our ſecret prayers and meditations (for this is the queſtion) it is impoſſible.

Bernard agreeth with us, thus writing: Ioſeph cum prævidiſſet exaltationem ſuam, non tamen præſcivit ſui venditionem, quamvis proprior eſſet venditio, quàm exaltatio: Though Ioſeph foreſaw his exaltation, yet did he not foreknow that he ſhould be ſould; and yet his ſelling was neerer, than his preferring, &c. By this he ſheweth, that although God may and doth reveale ſome things to the Saints, yet it followeth not, they ſhould know all things.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that God only is the knower of mens hearts naturally, and by his own power: but the Saints know them by revelation.

1 King. 8.39.

Contra. Salomon ſaith, Thou only knoweſt the hearts of all men: He ſaith not, God chiefly or principally knoweth the hearts, but only. If God then only know our hearts, then the Saints know them not.

Eſay 63.16. De cura pro mortuis.

Argum. 2. Auguſtine out of thoſe words of the Prophet, Abraham is ignorant of us, and Iacob knoweth us not, concludeth thus, Si tanti Patriarcha, quid erga populum ex his procreatum ageretur, ignoraverunt, quomodo mortui vivorum rebus atque actibus cognoſcendis adjuvandiſque miſcentur? If ſo great Patriarks were ignorant, what became of the people which was borne of their loynes? how is it like, that other dead can bee preſent to underſtand, and bee helping to mens affaires? And here Saint Auguſtine alſo meeteth with the cavillous anſwer of Bellarmine, who ſaith, that the Patriarks under the law being dead, knew not the affaires of the living, becauſe they were not yet in heaven: but the Saints now departed are in heaven, and therefore may and doe know our eſtate: for Saint Auguſtine reaſoneth cleane contrary, If Abraham ſo great a Patriarke knew not, much leſſe the dead now: Againe, he ſtill very unlearnedly beggeth the thing in queſtion, ſeeing we have proved before, that the Patriarks were in heaven.

This was the confeſſion of one Paul Luther, confeſſour of Gods truth anno. 1529. that Saints in heaven cannot help us, and know no more what men doe here in this world, than a man in the North Countrey knoweth what is done in the South Countrey: Fox 1040. col. 2.

Secondly, we acknowledge no patrons, protectors or captaines in heaven, but our Lord God and Saviour Chriſt.

Pſal. 73.25. Gen. 28.20.

1 The Prophet David ſaith, Whom have I in heaven but thee? and Iacob calleth only upon the Lord God, to bee the guide of his journey: Upon which words of the Pſalme S. Ambroſe thus noteth, Tu portio mea es, abundas mihi ad omnia, &c. Thou O Lord art my portion, thou ſufficeſt mee for all things, I require none other thing, but to have thee my portion: I need the help of none, being received of thee; neither is there any thing in heaven, which I ſeeke beſide thee, &c. de interpel. lib. 4. c. 12. Behold, Chriſt only in heaven, without the help either of Angell, or Saint, ſufficed Ambroſe, and may ſuffice every faithfull man.

2 By appointing Saints to bee patrons of places and countries, at length they brought in a multitude of Popiſh Saints, and were not in ſuperſtition farre behind the Gentiles, who gloried in the number of their Gods: For have they not allotted ſome to Countries, as S. George for England, S. Andrew for Scotland, S. Denis for France, S. Patricke for Ireland? So likewiſe divers Saints were called upon for divers diſeaſes, as S. Rombal for the tooth-ach, S. Petronil for the Ague: One for horſe, as S. Loye, S. Antony for Pigges, S. Gregory for Schollers, S. George for Souldiers: Even thus the Heathen inventend divers gods, Neptune for the ſea, the Satyrs for the woods, the Nymphs for the water, Ceres for corne, Bacchus for wine, Venus for the Trojans, Pallas for the Grecians, Iupiter ſtator for the Romans.

Auguſt. lib 4. de civit. Dei cap. 8.

Nay, they were yet more ridiculous, they appointed many gods for one thing: as for Infants Vagitanus, that made them to cry, Cuninus, that kept them in their Cradle, Adeona, Abeona, to teach them to goe: So for the entrie of the houſe, they had Limentinus the God of the threſhold, Cardea the God of the hinges, Forrulus that kept the doore: for their Corne, they had the Goddeſſe Seia when it was ſowne, Proſerpina when it ſprouted, Nodotus when it knotted, Hoſtilina when it eared, Flora when it waxed white, Runcina when it was cut downe. The like ſuperſtition almoſt reigneth in Popery. But what need we run to ſo many for theſe things, when as at the Lords hands we are promiſed, asking in the name of Chriſt, to receive all things we need? This great folly of theirs ſheweth what good commeth by the deviſed patronage of Saints.

Cantic. 2.3. Super cantic. ſerm. 48.

Bernard here helpeth us well, writing upon that place in the Canticles: My welbeloved is as the apple-tree among the trees of the forreſt: Non comparantur huic omnia ligna ſylvarum, &c. All the trees of the wood are not to be compared to this: for although there bee faire and great trees which may ſeeme to help, by their prayer, miniſterie, inſtruction, example; yet Chriſt only the wiſdome of God is the tree of life: the other trees though they have a ſhadow of ſolace, yet no refection of life: there is one author of our life, the only mediator of God and man.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr hath put to his ſeale: Why ſhould I truſt in Pauls prayer or holineſſe: for if Paul were alive, and loved me, as he did them of his time, what could he doe for me, or wiſh me, but to preach Chriſt, and pray to God for me to open my heart, to give me his ſpirit, and to bring mee to the knowledge of Chriſt? &c. Fox pag. 1250. col. 2. artic. 16. This holy Martyr with the reſt, were farre from making Saints their patrons, or advocates.

Thirdly, it is alſo another Popiſh fable and dreame, that the Saints may be preſent every where, as it pleaſeth themſelves, at their tombes and ſepulchres, and whereſoever elſe they are called for.

Act. 3. 21.

Argum. 1. The heavens containe the humanity of Chriſt: it hath pleaſed him there to reſt himſelfe, untill his comming to judgement: Ergo, much more are the Saints kept in their reſting places.

Apoc. 14. 13. Apoc. 6. 9.

Argum. 2. The Saints are at reſt, they doe ceaſe from the affaires of this life: They reſt under the Altar in the peace of Chriſt, there expecting and waiting the comming of Chriſt to judgement: Ergo, they do not wander nor ſtray abroad in the world, neither doe intermeddle with humane affaires.

Auguſtine ſaith, Si rebus viventium intereſſent animæ mortuorum, &c. meipſam pia mater nulla nocte deſereret, quæ terra marique ſecuta eſt, ut mecum viveret: De cura pro mortuis, c. 13. If the ſoules of the dead were preſent at the affaires of the living, my devout mother would never a night bee from mee, who when ſhe lived, followed me by ſea and land, to have my company, and to live with mee: Ergo, the Saints departed are not preſent with us when they would.

Bernard alſo agreeth, writing thus upon the death of Humbertus: Quandiu viveret, in ejus laude non aperui os meum, ne forte poſſemus, vel ego adulationis notam, vel ille culpam incurrere vanitatis: ex hoc ſane neutrum jam timetur, nec ego illum video, & forſitan ille me non audit: While he lived, I opened not my mouth in his praiſe, leſt that I might have incurred the ſuſpition of flatterie, he of vaine glory: but now neither of theſe is feared, for I neither ſee him, and perhaps he heareth not me: Sermon. in obitum Humbert. Bernard doubteth whether the Saints be preſent to heare us, and thinketh rather that they doe not.

I will laſtly adde out of their owne decrees, par. 2. cauſ. 13. qu. 2. c. 29. Fatendum eſt, neſcire mortuos, quid hic agatur, &c. We muſt confeſſe that the dead know not what is done here: but they doe heare of thoſe that depart hence, not all things, but what they are ſuffered to declare, and what it behoveth them to heare, &c. So then the dead know not all the affaires of the living, but ſo much as it pleaſeth God ſhould be declared unto them.

Further, 1 Chryſoſtome ſaith, Clamore vocis non eſt opus in oratione ad Deum, quem ſcimus ſecreta cordis intueri, ſed clamore fidei, &c. We need not the clamour of the voice in our prayer to God, whom wee know to behold the ſecrets of the heart, but the voice of faith, &c. He thinketh God only to bee knowne of the heart, and to heare the prayer of the heart: Gregory Nazianzen doth doubt, whether the Saints heare our voice: as that he ſaith, in his oration for Gorgonia his ſiſter: Si tibi aliqua ſermonis noſtri eſt ratio, & hoc ſanctis à Deo munus, ut talia reſciſcant, ſuſcipe noſtrum ſermonem: If thou haſt any ſenſe of my ſpeech, and this be a gift of God to the Saints, to know ſuch things, receive my ſpeech, &c. Ieremie Patriarke ſaith, Neq; Petrus neq; Paulus ipſe eorum quenquam exaudit, qui eum invocant, ſed gratia & donum, quod habent juxta illud promiſſum, Neither Peter nor Paul himſelfe doe heare any of thoſe, but the grace and gift, which they have according to that promiſe, I am with you to the end of the world, &c. By the gift hee underſtandeth the ſpirit of charity, which is alwaies preſent with the Saints: as Theodulus underſtandeth that place, Rom. 8. The ſpirit maketh requeſt with ſighes, &c. Dicit; quod donum & gratia orationis apud Deum pro nobis intercedit: Hee ſaith, that the gift and grace of prayer doth make requeſt to God for us with ſighes: that is, the ſpirit of charity remaineth with the Saints toward us, which maketh them mindfull of us.

Hom. 8. in 5. Matth.

Cenſur. c. 21.

Rom. 8. 26.

2 For the South Church, what Origens opinion was, is ſeene in the former queſtion, and Auguſtine alſo is alleaged before; who alſo further thus ſaith: Ita eſt eis cura de vivis, quanquam quid agant, omnino neſciant, &c. The dead have ſuch care of the living, though they know not at all what they doe, as wee have care of the dead, though we know not what they doe, &c. De ſpirit. & anim. c. 29. he giveth to the one and other only a generall deſire and mutuall wiſhing of the others good.

3 Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 21. the invocation of Saints aſcribeth unto the dead an omnipotencie, in that Saints ſhould ſee the motions of mens hearts. Saxonie artic. 22. invocation of a creature, which is departed from the ſocietie of this life, aſcribeth unto it omnipotencie, in beholding the heart, and in diſcerning the true ſighes from faigned, &c. Wittemberg. artic. 23. The Saints are not to be prayed unto, becauſe they are no ſearchers of the heart.

Harm. ſect. 2. pag. 37.
Ibid. pag. 40.

4 The Romaniſts are uncertaine themſelves, how the Saints ſhould know our prayers, whether by revelation from the Angels, or from God, as our prayers are made, as Auguſtine, or as being every where preſent themſelves, as Hierome, or as ſeeing in God all things, as Gregory, and Thomas: only Bellarmine ſaith, That this latter is the more probable opinion: and thus prayer which ſhould proceed of faith, they ground upon probabilities and uncertainties.

Bellar. lib. 1. de ſanct. c. 20.

The fourth queſtion, concerning the reliques of Saints.

THis queſtion hath foure parts. 1 Whether the reliques of Saints are to be worſhipped. 2 Of the tranſlation of reliques. 3 Of the keeping and preſerving of reliques. 4 Of the miracles wrought at the tombes and reliques of Martyrs.

The firſt part, concerning the worſhip of Reliques.

The Papiſts.

THe reliques of Saints, that is, their bodies, and bones, and Sepulchres, where they are buried, are to be adored and reverenced, Trident in. Concil. ſeſſ. 25. though with leſſe honour ſomewhat than the Saints themſelves, Bellarm. de reliquiis ſanctor. lib. 2. cap. 21. And not only their bodies (ſay they) are worthy of due reverence, but other monuments of theirs, as S. Peters chaire at Rome, Rom. 16.

35. Error.

verſ. 16. the priſon, wherein S. Paul was kept in Malta, Rhemiſt. The chaine that S. Paul was bound with at Rome, Act. 27. 4. The ſtone that hit S. Stephen upon the elbow, now to be ſeene at Ancona in Italy, Act. 7. ſect. 6.

Act. 27. 4.

Anſwer. As for S. Peters chaire, and S. Pauls chaine, they are neither able to ſhew that Peter ſate in ſuch a chaire, or that it is the very chaine which they ſhew, wherewith Paul was bound. Concerning the priſon houſe at Malta, they ſhew that which never was: Paul was a priſoner, but not in priſon there: that of the ſtone that ſmote Stephen upon the elbow is a meere fable: See Fulke upon that place.

Argum. 2. Ioſias, when hee cauſed the bones of other dead to be burned, yet he commanded them to let the Prophets bones alone, Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 3. The diſciples of Iohn came and buried his body: an example of dutie and religious devotion to the dead bodies of Saints, Rhemiſt. Matth. 14. ſect. 2. Their bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghoſt, and ſhall be raiſed againe to life: Ergo, they muſt bee adored and worſhipped, Trident. Concil. ſeſſ. 25.

Anſwer. One anſwer may ſerve for all theſe arguments. We deny not, but that the dead bodies of the faithfull are to be laid up with reverence in hope of the reſurrection; but it therefore followeth not, that they muſt bee abuſed to Idolatrie. Iohns diſciples buried his body, but ſhrined it not to bee worſhipped: Ioſias made difference betweene the bones of the Idolatrous Prieſts, and of the true Prophet: the one hee burned, and thought them unworthy of honeſt ſepulture; the other hee ſuffered to reſt, and enjoy the honour of buriall. But of any adoration or worſhipping of his bones, wee read not.

Argum. 3. Iſay 11. 10. Erit Sepulchrum ejus glorioſum: His grave or Sepulcher ſhall bee glorious. This is underſtood of the grave of Chriſt, that it ſhould be honoured: wherefore reliques are worthy of honour. Bellarm. cap. 3.

Anſwer. First, though the Latine text ſo tranſlate, as the Jeſuite readeth; yet there is no ſoch thing in the originall: the word is מנוחה,* which ſignifieth reſt, and ſo the Septuagint tranſlate it, ἀνάπαυσις: ſo that the ſenſe is, his reſt, that is, his Church ſhall be glorious: and ſo is this word uſed, Pſalm. 132. 14. This is my reſt for ever. Secondly, we deny not, but that (admitting the Latine reading) the place of Chriſts buriall was glorious, and to bee honoured, while as Chriſts precious body was there, but that afterwards it remained holy, this text ſheweth not. Thirdly, if Chriſts body and the place thereof were to be honoured; how ſerveth this place for the reliques of Saints? Chriſts body was to bee adored, becauſe of the uniting to the Godhead; but the ſervants are not to be honoured as the Maſter.

* Menucah.

Pſal. 132. 14.

The Proteſtants.

THe bodies of Martyrs are reverently to bee brought to the ground, in teſtimonie of our hope of their reſurrection, and their memory is to bee honoured, as in praiſing God for their conſtant Martyrdome: ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Right precious in the ſight of God is the death of his Saints, as alſo in following their ſteps, and propounding unto us their good example: but to adore and worſhip their bones, to kiſſe, and kneele downe at their ſepulchres, is too too groſſe idolatrie, and not to bee uſed amongſt Chriſtians.

Pſal. 116. 15.

Argum. 1. The Lord did of purpoſe himſelfe bury the body of Moſes in a ſecret place, which was never knowne to the Iſraelites: and this reaſon is generally rendred by moſt writers, leſt the people of Iſrael ſhould worſhip his body, and ſo commit Idolatrie: Ergo, the adoration of the bodies of Saints diſpleaſeth God. Argum. Calvin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that though the people of Iſrael might by that meanes have fallen into idolatrie; yet the people of God may now more ſafely honour reliques, becauſe they are not ſo prone to idolatrie.

Anſwer. Experience of Popiſh idolatrie proveth the cleane contrary: for the like ſuperſtition and worſhipping of images was never ſo common and uſuall, no not in the moſt corrupt times of that Church, as now it is in Poperie.

And what danger of ſuperſtition is occaſioned by the keeping of reliques, and other ſuch unprofitable uſages, I appeale to the late Popiſh Synod, Auguſtenſ. cap. 23. Sedulo moneri populum, ne ceremonias religioſiſſime inſtitutas in abuſum vertant, aut ſuperſtitionem, ſed ipſis ad exercendam pietatem utantur: That the people ſhould be continually admoniſhed, that they turne not ceremonies moſt religiouſly inſtituted, to any abuſe, or ſuperſtition, but uſe them for the exerciſe of pietie, &c. If there be feare of ſuperſtition in the uſe of ceremonies which had a good beginning, much greater danger is there in theſe, that can have no good uſe, neither ever had any good inſtitution.

Argum. 2. Our Saviour Chriſt reproveth the Scribes and Phariſees, calling them hypocrites, becauſe they did garniſh the Sepulchres of the Prophets, whom their forefathers put to death, but their doctrine they neglected and regarded not. Such hypocrites are the Papiſts at this day, who commit a double fault; for they contemne the doctrine of the Apoſtles, whoſe memories they would ſeeme to honour: and againe, in the ſuperſtitious honour and worſhip, which they yeeld unto them, they exceed the bounds of Chriſtian pietie.

Matth. 23. 29.

Argum. 3. Their bodies were not to be worſhipped when they were alive, much leſſe now they are dead. What are they now but earth, duſt and aſhes? according as the Lord ſaid to Adam, Thou art duſt, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne. What is this elſe, but to worſhip the earth, even duſt and aſhes? So Auguſtine ſaith, Timeo adorare terram, ne damnet me, qui fecit cœlum & terram: I am afraid to worſhip the earth, leſt he condemne me, that made both heaven and earth. Only in Chriſt (ſaith he) I find, Quomodo ſine impietate adoretur terra: How the earth, that is, his body may bee worſhipped without any impiety: namely becauſe of the neere conjunction and union of his humane nature with the Godhead in one perſon, &c. for otherwiſe of it ſelfe the body of Chriſt is Gods Creature and workmanſhip, and not capable of divine worſhip. This then is the privilege that Chriſt hath, more than all Saints and Martyrs beſide, that in him only the humanity is adored.

Gen. 3.19.
In Pſal. 98.

Concil. Carthag. 5. can. 15. Placuit à glorioſiſſimis imperatoribus peti, ut reliquia non ſolum in ſimulachris, ſed in quibuſcunq́; locis, lucis vel arboribus deleantur: Wee thinke good to make requeſt to the moſt renowned Emperors, that reliques may bee taken away, not only ſuch, as are kept in ſhrines and images, but in what place ſoever, woods, or trees, &c. Theſe fathers were ſo farre off from worſhipping reliques, that they would not have them at all extant: but it will bee here anſwered: that they meane that the reliques of heatheniſh idolatrie ſhould be removed; for in the 14. canon, which is produced by Bellarmine, it is decreed, that no memories or monuments of Martyrs ſhould bee there appointed, where no reliques of the Martyrs were, &c. It is true, they would not have the people deceived, to be made beleeve, that in ſuch places the Martyrs bodies were buried, where no ſuch thing was: but they decree againſt the ſuperſtitious abuſe of reliques: Nulla ibi ſuperſtitione devincti teneantur, That they ſhould not be tyed to any ſuch place by a ſuperſtitious devotion. c. 14. Yet this canon notwithſtanding, the words of the 15. canon are generall, & may be urged againſt all ſuperſtitious reliques: and whereas they would have no memoriall of Martyrs, without their true reliques, this maketh againſt the practice of the Roman Church, wherin ſo many forged reliques are ſhewed, as Eraſmus complaineth, afterward alleaged.

Concil. Lateranenſ. ſub Innocentio 3. cap. 62. Ne reliquia ſanctorum oſtendantur extra capſam: That the reliques ſhould not be ſhewed out of the caske or cheſt, where they were kept, &c. It ſhould ſeeme that their meaning was not to have them worſhipped; unleſſe we thinke the cheſt and caske ſhould be worſhipped withall.

Their owne decrees alſo witneſſe with us, part. 2. cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 65. Si ita Martyrium fecerimus, ut noſtras velimus ab hominibus reliquias honorari: If we deſire Martyrdome, to the intent our reliques ſhould be honoured of men, it deſerveth puniſhment, and not reward, &c. And if it be a ſin in them to require it, it is in us alſo to performe it.

The holy Martyrs have ſealed this doctrine: Thomas Bilney holy Martyr; Prieſt (ſaith hee) take away the offerings, and hang them about their whores necks, and after that they take them againe from their whores, if they pleaſe them not, and hang them upon the Images: and is not that a great relique, when it is hanged there againe? Fox pag. 1010. And are not ſuch reliques now meet things to be worſhipped?

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: That oblations ſhould bee offered or done to the Sepulchres and reliques of Saints, God did never inſtitute any ſuch thing in the new Teſtament, which is the verity and rule of all Chriſtian people to follow and beleeve. And this he further ſheweth by the buriall of Moſes, whoſe grave was hid from the Jewes, leſt they being prone to new fangled worſhipping, ſhould have fallen into idolatrie: this argument we have touched before.

Pag. 1014. 1 40.

1 The Muſcovites, following the Greeke Church, miſlike the Romaniſts, Quia cadavera mortuorum Epiſcoporum inſepulta ſervant, &c. Becauſe they keep the bodies of Biſhops unburied certaine weeks, &c. which was to make reliques of them.

2 The Councell of Carthage, for the African and South Church, is before alleaged.

3 Helvetia, latter confeſſ. c. 5. If the Saints are not to be worſhipped, much leſſe are their bodies to be adored, &c. Theſe auncient holy men thought, that the moſt noble reliques of their anceſtors, were their vertues.

Harm. ſect. 2. pag. 22.

4 Eraſmus in that worke, which he dedicated to Pope Leo the tenth: thus reproveth the ſuperſtition of the Papiſts in ſetting forth their reliques, If S. Hierome did ſo reprove ſimple women (for certaine ſuperſtitions) what would hee ſay, if he ſhould have ſeene the milke of Marie ſet forth for gaine, the fragments of the wood of the Croſſe, which if they were gathered together, would load a ſhip? here to be ſhewed S. Francis coole, there the virgin Maries petticoate, in another place Annes combe, in another Ioſephs breeches, Thomas of Canterburies ſhooe, &c.

The ſecond part, of the tranſlation of the bodies of Saints.

The Papiſts.

IT is an uſuall thing amongſt them to tranſlate, and carrie from one place to another the bones and reliques of Saints: as they ſay Iohn Baptiſts head was tranſlated from Samaria to Alexandria, and is now at Amiens in France, Rhemiſt. Matth. 14. ſect. 1. So the body of S. Luke was removed, they ſay, from Achaia to Conſtantinople, and from thence to Padua in Italy, where now it remaineth: Argum. in Luk. Rhemiſt. The ſtone alſo that hit S. Stephen, is now at Ancona in Italy, Act. 7. ſect. 6.

56. Error.

Argum. 1. Ioſeph gave charge concerning his bones when hee died, and they were removed from Egypt to the land of Canaan, at the departure of the Iſraelites, Exod. 13. Heb. 11. 22. Ergo, the removing and tranſlation of Saints bodies or reliques is lawfull, Rhemiſt. Bellarm. cap. 4. ſo alſo our Doway men object.

Heb. 11. 22.
Pag. 202.

Anſwer. Ioſeph gave commandement concerning his bones, to teſtifie his faith and hope in the promiſe of God, for the inheritance of the land of Canaan, as it followeth: God will ſurely viſite you and bring you to the land which he ſware to Abraham; therefore yee ſhall carry my bones hence, &c. They were not removed to bee adored or worſhipped, but to bee buried: Ergo, no ſuch tranſlation of reliques is hereby proved. Pererius the Jeſuite confeſſeth thus, the bones of Ioſeph, which the children of Iſrael brought into the land of promiſe, Sepeliverunt in Sechem, They buried in Sechem, as it is in the laſt of Ioſua: they were not tranſlated to bee adored, but to bee buried. Secondly, you can ſhew no ſuch charge, that S. Paul, Peter, or any of the reſt, gave concerning the tranſlation of their bodies, as Ioſeph gave unto his poſterity.

The Proteſtants.

WE deny not, but that the bodies of the dead, before they bee interred, may be convayed unto the place of their buriall, as Ioſias was carried being dead by his ſervants from Megiddo to Jeruſalem, where a ſepurchre was prepared for him: But either for the dead to be removed to be buried in ſome one place more than another, for the holineſſe thereof; or the bones of Saints to bee raked out of their graves, and tranſlated, with intent to ſhrine them, and ſet them up to be adored: they are ſuperſtitious cuſtomes, and not uſed of ancient time among the people of God.

2 King. 23. 30.

Argum. 1. That the place profiteth not the dead, but unto them it is all alike whereſoever they are buried: we have ſhewed afore, 1 part. controver. 9. queſt. 2. part. 4. The example of Auguſtines mother is notable, and worthy the memory: She had with great care provided her a Sepulchre neere unto her husband, who died at Thagaſta in Africa, and was there buried, and was purpoſed her ſelfe to lye by him: but the Lord ſo diſpoſed, that ſhe left her life at Hoſtia in Italy, and being ready to depart, ſhe ſaid thus to her ſonnes: Ponite hoc corpus ubicunque, nihil vos ejus cura conturbet: Burie my body where you thinke good, take no great care for it. And being asked, if it grieved her not to leave her body ſo farre off from her owne Citie, ſhe gave this godly anſwer: Nihil longe eſt à Deo, neque timendum eſt, ne ille non agnoſcat in fine ſeculi, unde me reſuſcitet: Auguſt. lib. confeſſ. 9. cap. 11. No place is neere to God than other, neither am I to feare, leaſt the Lord ſhould not as well raiſe me up in this place, as in mine owne Citie: Ergo, in reſpect of the dead, it skilleth not where they are buried.

Argum. 2. The other cuſtome of tranſlating of reliques to bee worſhipped, is farre more impious and ſuperſtitious: for hereupon it commeth, that the people have been deceived with falſe reliques; yea one and the ſelfe ſame relique is ſaid to bee in divers places. As of S. Iohn Baptiſts head: his face they ſay, is at S. Jean Angelz: the reſt of his head at Malta: his ſcull at Nemours: his braine at Novium Raſtrovienſe: his jaw-bone at Veſalium: a piece of his eare at S. Floride: his forehead and haires in Spaine at S. Salvadores: and yet for all this his whole head is to bee ſeene at S. Silveſters in Rome, and at Amiens in France: Fulk, Matthew 14. 2. Thus they have mangled alſo the body of S. Peter: halfe (they ſay) is at S. Peters in Rome, halfe at S. Pauls: his head at S. John Laterane: his neather jaw with his beard at Poyčters in France: at Triers many of his bones, Fulk. Rom. 6. ſect. 4. See what mockage and couſening here is, and abuſing of ſimple people? How can their whole bodies bee in one place, and yet their parts and bones in another? And where doe they learne thus to diſmember their bodies, and to rake them out of their graves? The honouring of the bodies of Martyrs, is to ſuffer them quietly to reſt in their graves, and not to rot above the ground. Ioſias honoured the Prophets Sepulchre, and would not remove his bones: herein therefore they diſhonour the Martyrs, and offer violence to their bodies, thinking falſly that they doe great worſhip unto them.

Auguſtine ſaith, that he which would now renew the ceremonies of the Jewes, that are as it were buried: Tanquam ſopitos cineres eruens, non erit pius deductor aut bajulus corporis, ſed impius ſepulturæ violator. Epiſtol. 19. He ſhould be as one raking in the aſhes of the dead, and ſo be rather a violator of Chriſtian buriall, than a bringer of the body honeſtly to the ground. So by Auguſtines judgement, eruens ſopitos cineres, hee that pulleth out dead mens aſhes, bones, or reliques, is ſepulturæ violator, a prophaner of their buriall.

Synod. Moguntiac. can. 51. Deinceps corpora ſanctorum de loco ad locum, nullus præſumat transferre, ſine conſilio Principis, vel Epiſcopi, & ſancta ſynodi licentia: From henceforth let no man preſume to carry the bodies of the Saints from place to place, without the councell of the Prince or Biſhop, and leave of the Synode, &c. This Councell miſliked the common and uſuall manner of tranſlating Saints bodies, and therefore maketh a reſtraint for it: this Canon is alleaged among the decrees, part. 3. diſt. 1. c. 37.

We have alſo further evidence both out of the civill and Canon law, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. c. 26. Leo. Reliquia in ædes publicas non debent illicitè inferri: Reliques muſt not be removed or caried from their places, into publike or common houſes. This law forbiddeth reliques to bee removed out of the Church. Lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 14. Valentinian. Nemo ſine Auguſti afflatibus, &c. That no man without the leave of the Emperor ſhould remove any humane body.

Likewiſe in what caſes humane reliques ſhould bee removed, or tranſlated, the law hath determined: as Cod. lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 1. Si vi fluminis reliquia filii tui contingantur: If thy ſonnes reliques be beaten upon by the water, thou maiſt remove them, or upon any other juſt or neceſſary cauſe, ibid. leg. 10. Si necdum perpetua ſepultura corpus traditum, &c. If the body bee not yet interred, or committed to ſepulture, it may be removed, &c. So then there may bee civill occaſions to remove bodies, but no religious.

The Canon law alſo agreeth, decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 1. c. 36. Tribus ex cauſis Sanctorum loca tranſmutanda ſunt: The places of the Saints may bee changed upon three occaſions, when a perſecution is raiſed in the place: ſecondly, when as the place it ſelfe is difficult, or inconvenient: thirdly, when as, malorum ſocietate gravantur, they are moleſted with the company of the wicked, &c. This Canon alloweth Saints bodies to bee removed, either when perſecuters would rage againſt their aſhes, or the place is inconvenient, by reaſon of the overflowing of water, or otherwiſe; or when the people are ready to abuſe them to idolatrie, or any other ungodlineſſe: but all this while no mention is made of tranſlating of reliques, to be honoured or worſhipped.

Thus have wee ſeene the practiſe and judgement in former times: 1 both of the Greeke Church in their Imperiall conſtitutions, 2 and of the African Church in [a]Auguſtines mothers comely reſolution: 3 and of the Roman Church in their decrees: 4 and hereunto conſent the reformed Churches: as of Helvetia, latter confeſſion, artic. 25. the Scripture willeth that the bodies of the faithfull, being the temples of the Holy Ghoſt, which we truly beleeve ſhall riſe againe at the laſt day, ſhould be honeſtly without any ſuperſtition committed to the grave, and beſide, that wee ſhould make honourable mention of them, that have godly died in the Lord, and performe all duties of love, to ſuch as they leave behind them, as their widowes and fatherleſſe children: other care to be taken for the dead, we teach none, &c. So then all the dutie to bee performed to the dead conſiſteth in theſe three things; in honeſt buriall of their bodies, honouring of their memories, kinde uſage of their poſterity: no veneration is to be ſhewed toward their reliques.

Harm. ſect. 16. Pag. 483.

Herein two extreames are to be ſhunned: for both we miſlike the Cynikes, which neglected the bodies of the dead, and the Gentiles, which though they were polluted by comming neere the bodies of the * Martyrs: as alſo wee condemne the ſuperſtitious adoration of them: which was brought in by three wayes eſpecially: 1 By the corrupt imitation of the Gentiles, who uſed to remove their gods from one place to another, to help their common calamities. 2 By the inſtigation of Satan: as when Iulian conſulted with the Oracle of Apollo about his expedition againſt the Perſians, hee received this anſwer, that he was hindred by the dead, which were buried there: whereupon Iulian gave leave to the Chriſtians to remove the body of Babylas the Martyr: but not long after, the temple was conſumed by lightning, and the image of Apollo burnt to aſhes: to ſhew, that it was the power of God, not the vertue of the Martyrs reliques, that did put the devils Oracle to ſilence. 3 By fained miracles reliques grew into ſuch great requeſt: as Nicephorus writeth, how when the Emperor ſent to remove the body of Chryſoſtome, firſt the tombe was immoveable, then by the prayers of the Emperor unto Chryſoſtome to ſuffer his body to be tranſlated, they tooke it up, and ſet it in a throne, and the body opening the mouth, bleſſed the people, &c. Any reaſonable man may judge what ſmall credit is to bee given unto ſuch ſtuffe.

Theodoret, lib. 3. c. 11.

Nicephor. lib. 14. c. 43.

The third part, of the keeping and preſerving of reliques.

The Papiſts.

WE muſt not thinke it impoſſible, that the monuments of Saints, as their garments, reliques, bones, ſhould endure a long time, ſeeing Manna was kept ſo many hundred yeeres in the pot, which was placed by the Arke, being a thing ſo apt to putrifie. Rhemiſt. Hebr. 9. ſect. 4. So alſo our Doway tranſlators object, pag. 712.

37. Error.

Anſwer. When wee have a commandement for the reſervation of ſuch things, as the Iſraelites had, we may beleeve they will keep ſo long. And againe, the Iſraelites for all that did not worſhip the pot of Manna, though it were of ſuch long continuance.

The Proteſtants.

THe bodies and bones of men departed, neither are to be kept out of their graves, as we have ſhewed, neither can they be preſerved without corruption.

Argum. 1. Unto all Adams ſeed it is ſaid, Duſt thou art, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne: only the body of Chriſt had this privilege, not to ſee corruption: Ergo, the bodies of men departed though they were never ſo holy, being all the ſeed of Adam, muſt be turned to duſt.

Pſal. 16. 19.

Argum. 2. If they would glorify God and ſpeake the truth, they doe very well know by experience, that the reliques of Saints have no ſuch promiſe or warrant for their continuance: for moſt of their reliques were forged and deviſed, and no ſuch thing indeed. Saint Peters braine at Geneva was found to bee a pumice ſtone: S. Anthonies arme was found to be a Harts piſle: at Towres of late the image of Venus in an Agate was worſhipped for the image of the Virgin Mary: the blood of Hales in England was deſcribed to bee the blood of a Drake: the three hoſts at Calice were but three white counters ſoldred into a marble ſtone. Theſe and many ſuch monuments and reliques of Saints the Church of Rome hath great ſtore: no marvell now, if they be of long continuance, for ſtones and counters may laſt a great while; and Drakes blood, with other ſuch ſtuffe, is not ſo daintie, but it may be ſtill renewed.

Of ſuch couſening tricks Auguſtine complained in his time; ſpeaking of runnagate Monks, hee ſaith: Alii membra martyrum, ſi tamen martyrum, venditant: Alii fimbrias ſuas, & phylacteria magnificant: Some doe boaſt of reliques of Martyrs, which they carrie about, and perhaps they are no ſuch reliques: ſome doe extoll their habit and Monkiſh weed: De opere Monachorum, cap. 28.

To this place of Saint Auguſtine, Bellarmine thus anſwereth, cap. 5. That Saint Auguſtine doubteth only of ſuch reliques, which were privily carried about, not of thoſe which were publikely ſhewed.

Contra. Yea many of your publike reliques were forged: for to what end elſe, was that decree made by Innocent. 3. decr. Greg. 3. tit. 45. c. 2. Prælati non permittant, &c. Prelates ſhall not ſuffer thoſe which come to their Churches to worſhip, Variis figmentis & falſis, &c. to be deceived with falſe and fained reliques, as the cuſtome hath been in divers places for luker ſake, &c. So then even publikely in their Churches they uſed to deceive the ſimple people with forged reliques.

See then, I pray you, what devilliſh idolatrie was this, to cauſe the people to worſhip Counters, Drakes blood, Harts ſinewes, and other ſuch baſe creatures, in ſtead of reliques: which, though they were ſuch indeed, ought not to be worſhipped.

Gelaſius decret. de apocryphis, thus writeth of this matter: Scriptura de inventione crucis dominica, & alia de inventione capitis Iohannis Baptiſta, novella quadam relationes ſunt, & nonnulli eas catholici legunt: ſed cum hac ad catholicorum manus veniunt, beati Pauli pracedat ſententia, Omnia probate, quod bonum eſt tenete: The writings of the invention of the Lords Croſſe, and of Iohn Baptiſts head, are new reports, and ſome Catholiks read them: but when ſuch writings come to Catholiks hands, let them remember S. Pauls ſaying, Trie all things, and keep the beſt. Here wee have the judgement of a Biſhop of Rome, who thinketh that many reliques, that are ſaid to have been found, and ſo kept, and preſerved, are but meere forgeries, and foiſted in by heretiks.

That corruption is now incident unto all Adams poſterity, upon whom ſin entred: and that Adams body only before his fall was created immortall and free from corruption: 1 Cyril teſtifieth, ſpeaking of Adam, erat ei corpus utiq; immortale, vitam enim infuderat omnium opifex: Hee had an immortall body, for the Creator of all had infuſed life, &c. but after his fall, hee was ſubject to corruption: as Damaſcene ſaith.

Lib. 1. de fid. cap. 1.

2 Auguſtines judgement concerning the carrying about of reliques, wee have ſeene before: 3 as likewiſe the teſtimonie of Gelaſius for the Roman Church. 4 See alſo before error 36. the ſentence of the reformed Churches, that one part of our dutie to be ſhewed to the dead, is to commit them to buriall: yea Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth, that it is an honour to the dead to be buried: non caret ignominia quadam, quod fœditas noſtri corporis aliorum conſpectibus pateat: It is not without ſome ignominie, that the filthineſſe of our bodies is ſhewed to the ſight of others. And, if wee will know the originall of this reſerving of reliques, it was firſt taken up by the Heathen, as Plutarch reporteth of Niſus King of the Magarians, that he had ſuch affection to his wife, that he cauſed her bones to be attired with the ſame apparell, which ſhe wore in her life time: The ſame author reporteth, that in Egyp they ſhew the ſepulcher of Oſiris in divers places, and that at Delphos they affirmed they had the reliques of Bacchus, placed neere unto the Oracle.

Lib. 2. de purgat. c. ult.

Lib quæſtion. Græcor. qu. 18.

Plutarch. lib. de Iſid. & Oſirid.

The fourth part, concerning viſions and miracles done at the Tombes and reliques of Martyrs.

The Papiſts.

38. Error. First, they almoſt make it an ordinary thing in their Church to worke miracles: Bellarmine ſaith, that it is a ſufficient note of the Church, the glory or power of miracles, De eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 14. Chriſt ſaith, that they that doe beleeve in him, ſhall doe greater works than he. No marvell then, if the image of our Ladie (ſay they) and the like, worke miracles, as Peters ſhadow did, and that they ſeeme greater than Chriſts: for hee promiſeth that his Saints ſhall worke greater miracles than himſelfe, Rhemiſt. annot. Ioh. 14. ſect. 3. They alſo call upon us to confirme our doctrine by miracles, becauſe we preach newly and extraordinarily, Rhemiſt. 2. Corinth. 12. ſect. 5.

John 14. 12.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First, that place alleaged proveth not ſuch a generality and perpetuity of working miracles: for then every one that beleeveth ſhould doe greater works than Chriſt: for our Saviour ſpeaketh generally, Hee that beleeveth, it muſt bee referred to the whole body of the Church, wherein the vertue of Chriſt remaineth for ever. Auguſtine doth farre otherwiſe, and in a better ſenſe expound this place: Hee that beleeveth in me ſhall doe the ſame works that I doe: Quæ opera, niſi ut ex impio juſtus fiat? prius ego facio, deinde & ipſe faciet, quia facio, ut ipſe faciat: What works, ſaith hee, but that he which beleeveth, of a wicked man ſhall be made righteous? which worke first I doe (ſaith Chriſt) then he himſelfe doth it becauſe I make him to doe it. Quod utiq; in illo, ſed non ſine illo Chriſtus ſtus operatur: Mans converſion is wrought by Chriſt in man, and not altogether without man, becauſe Chriſt working in us, doth enable us by his grace to worke out our ſalvation: yet is it not our ſelves that worke, but the grace of God in us. Then it followeth, hee ſhall doe greater works than theſe; Prorſus majus hoc eſſe dixerim, quàm eſt cœlum & terra: The redemption and converſion of men is a greater worke than the heavens or the earth, Tract. in Iohan. 72. Auguſtine therefore doth properly underſtand this place, not of outward miracles, but of the wonderfull converſion of the heart, which we are ſaid to worke, becauſe Chriſt worketh it in us.

Philip. 2. 12.

Origen alſo long before Auguſtine thus expoundeth this place, Homil. 7. in Levit. Chriſtus dicit, qui credit in me, &c. Chriſt ſaith, he that beleeveth in me, ſhall doe greater things than theſe: Verè enim majus mihi videtur, &c. For it ſeemeth indeed a greater thing unto me, that man being in the fleſh, being armed only with the faith and word of Chriſt, doth overcome legions of devils, though it bee Chriſt that overcommeth in us, yet he ſaith it is more, that he overcommeth by us, than by himſelfe. Chryſoſtome underſtandeth this great worke to bee terrarum orbis converſionem, the converſion of the whole world, which was done by the Apoſtles by Chriſts ſpirit, Homil. 6. in 1 Cor. c. 2.

2 As we deny not but that there may in theſe dayes be miracles wrought: and all ſuch miracles as ſerve to confirme the doctrine delivered in Scriptures, we doe not refuſe, though we be not bound to beleeve any mans report of ſuch miracles, but only the writings of the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts: ſo we affirme that there is no ſuch neceſſitie of miracles, as in times paſt; neither that we are to be preſſed to ſhew miracles, ſeeing we profeſſe the ancient Apoſtolike faith, which hath been already confirmed by the miraculous works of our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Wherefore wee condemne the fabulous hiſtories and reports of popiſh Saints, whoſe lives are fuller of miracles, if wee will beleeve them, than were the lives of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Nay, there is nothing almoſt done in their ſervice but by a miracle: Chriſts body preſent in the Maſſe by a miracle: Devils chaſed away with holy water: Saints know their thoughts, heare their prayers, are preſent here and there, their bodies many yeeres kept from corruption, and all by miracles. I conclude this point with Auguſtine: Aut non ſunt vera, quæ dicuntur; aut ſi hæreticorum aliqua mira facta ſunt, magis cavere debemus: Either they are not true miracles, which they boaſt of: or if they be, we muſt beware and take heed of them the more.

Thus ſpeaketh alſo Thomas Bilney holy Martyr: The miracles done at Walſingham, Canturburie, Ipſwich, were done by the devill, through the ſufferance of God, Fox, pag. 1001.

Heare alſo what a whole Councell ſaith: Colonienſ. part. 6. c. 23. Miracula ne impudentius jactentur, niſi quæ ſcripturis prodita, aut non à levibus ſcriptoribus ſumma cum hiſtoria fide tradita ſunt: Let not miracles bee too much boaſted of, but ſuch as are ſet forth in Scripture, or delivered by grave writers, with evident truth of hiſtorie. Wee are not bound therefore to beleeve all miracles, which are reported in the popiſh Church. And that there is now no ſuch neceſſitie of miracles, another Councell teſtifieth: Interrelig. Cæſar. cap. 19. Inter initia fidei, interna virtus externis ſignis & miraculis demonſtrabatur, ad confirmationem rudis fidei: nunc verò adulta & corroborata fides, ſigna quæ infirmis dantur, non requirit: In the beginning of faith, the inward vertue or operation (of the ſpirit) was ſhewed by outward ſignes and miracles, for the confirmation of the weake faith: but now faith being come to perfect growth and eſtabliſhed, needeth not ſuch ſignes as are for the weake.

To this effect alſo one of your owne writers alleageth Gregory, Moral. lib. 27. cap. 11. Quid eſt Paule, quod Publii patrem ægrum, &c. What is the cauſe (O Paul) that by thy prayer thou didſt heale the father of Publius being an Infidell, Act. 28. but thou preſcribeſt to Timothie for his health after the manner of Phyſitians, 1 Timoth. 5? Surely Publius was to be healed by a ſigne, that he might bee converted to the faith: but Timothie needed no miracle, being already converted: Quid ergo mirum, ſi propagata fide, &c. What marvell then, if (the faith being now propagated) miracles are not often done, when as the Apoſtles ſometime did not ſhew miracles in the faithfull? If then in Gregory his time, almoſt a thouſand yeeres ſince, there were ſo few miracles, how much fewer are now to be looked for?

Eſpenc. 2 Tim. p. 183.

1 Tim. 5. 23.

1 Chryſoſt. in his time ſaid, ſigna in præſentia non fiunt, miracles now are not done: and hee giveth the reaſon out of the words of our Saviour to Thomas: Bleſſed are they which have not ſeene, and yet beleeve: quanto itaq; certius demonſtratur argumentum, tantum fidei præmio detrahitur: for the more certaine demonſtration is made, ſo much the leſſe reward hath faith, &c. We walke by faith, not by ſight: and therefore, gehenna ad terrorem proponitur, non apparet: Hell is propounded for our terror, it appeareth not. Then he addeth further: Yet if thou doeſt ſeeke ſignes, thou maiſt ſee ſignes: prophetias innumeras, orbis terrarum converſionem, ferorum morum mutationem, &c. innumerable propheſies, the converſion of the world, the change of brutiſh manners, the propagation of pietie, &c. In thoſe dayes ſuch miracles were not done by the reliques of Martyrs, or at their Tombes.

2 Cor. 5. 7.
Hom. 6 in 1 Cor. c. 2.

2 Auguſtine hath an excellent ſpeech of this matter, for asking the queſtion, cur miracula nunc non fiant, why miracles are not done now adayes, he maketh this anſwer: Poſſem dicere neceſſaria fuiſſe priuſquam crederet mundus, ad hoc ut crederet mundus: quiſquis adhuc prodigia, ut credat inquirit, magnum eſt ipſe prodigium, qui mundo credente non credit: I can ſay miracles were neceſſary, before the world beleeved, that it might beleeve: but whoſoever now doth require a wonder, that hee may beleeve, is himſelfe a wonder that beleeveth not, when all the world beleeveth, &c.

3 Helvetia latter confeſſion, cap. 25. To the Glutton, &c. is denied any returne to his brethren, the Lord by his word pronouncing, they have Moſes and the Prophets, &c. The word of God is ſufficient to inſtruct without miracles.

The Papiſts.

39. Error.

SEcondly, they doe as much maintaine their fabulous viſions and apparitions, as lying miracles; as how Chriſt came in a pilgrimes weed to Gregories table of hoſpitality, Rhemiſt. Hebr. 13. 2. Peter beleeved the viſion and apparition ſhewed to Cornelius, at his report, before it was written: Ergo, we ought to beleeve viſions not written in Scripture, Rhemiſt. Act. 10. ſect. 3.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, that of our Saviour Chriſts appearing, is an hereticall fable, and impugneth the article of our faith concerning Chriſts aſcenſion into heaven, and there remaining till his ſecond comming. Secondly, Peter was not bound to beleeve Cornelius viſion, till he had been by viſion admoniſhed himſelfe: the Apoſtles which were then endued with the gift of diſcerning ſpirits, could better judge of true viſions, than any man now can: yet we refuſe not to give credit to viſions, when they are as credibly reported unto us, as this was to Peter: but no viſion, nor miracle, nor Angell from heaven ſhall draw us away from the doctrine of the Scriptures to beleeve errors. Laſtly, we deny not, but that they may have viſions; but ſuch, as one Vincentius bragged of, that wrote againſt Auguſtine concerning the originall of the ſoule: He ſaid, that another Vincentius who had been a captaine or chiefe Donatiſt, appeared unto him in viſion, and bade him write thoſe books: to whom Auguſtine thus anſwereth; Ille qui ſe transfigurat in angelum lucis, in eo tibi eſt transfiguratus, quem tu fuiſſe vel eſſe veluti angelum lucis credis: He that can transfigure himſelfe into an angell of light, did transfigure himſelfe into the ſhape of that man whom thou eſteemedſt as an angell of light, &c. Such apparitions they may have, and yet no great cauſe to boaſt of them.

Lib. 3. cap. 2. de animæ origine.

Such was that viſion that one Polychronius a Monothelite heretike boaſted of in the fixth generall Councell at Conſtantinople, action 15. how that a man appeared unto him in white, who told him that Chriſt had but one will, and that he ſhould write the confeſſion of his faith, and lay it upon a dead man, and he ſhould raiſe him to life againe. The Councell gave him the hearing, and provided a dead body for him to worke his skill upon, who muttered over the dead a long time in vaine, and could doe nothing. Such viſions as this was, popiſh prieſts have had many: and that wee ſlander them not, one of their late Popes Paulus 3. ſhall ſpeake for us: Qui legendas Georgii & Chriſtophori tolli præcepit de breviario: Who commanded that the legends of George and Chriſtopher ſhould be taken out of the Breviary. Thus Paulus Vergerius proteſted in the late Tridentine Chapter, and therefore was excluded. Of ſuch old wives fables thus was it decreed, Concil. Colonienſ. part. 6. cap. 10. Ineptas & aniles fabulas devitabit (id eſt, concionator) qualia nuper erant, qua ex nullis probatis authoribus, ſed potius ſuſpectiſſim. hominum commentis adferebantur exempla: The preacher muſt take heed of fooliſh old wives fables, ſuch as of late were reported not out of any approved authors, but from the ſuſpicious devices of men.

Such is that tale and Monkiſh fable of Pilate, that he ſhould be ſeene every yeere in a Judges habit in a certaine lake, called after his name, under a hill not farre from Lucerna in Helvetia; and that hee, which chanceth to ſee him, liveth not a yeere after. This is held to be a ridiculous fable by one of their owne writers, Eſpenc. in 1 Timoth. p. 159. d. Of the like credit hee holdeth that dreame reported by Chriſtianus Maſſæus, lib. 8. Chronic. how that Trophimus going to Rome to ſee Peter, as he ſailed, buried his wife, dying in travell, in a Rocke, with the child at her breaſts, and after two yeeres comming that way againe, found his wife alive, and the little child playing at her breaſt, who were preſerved by Mary Magdalen, Eſpenc. 2 Timoth. p. 183. a. Wee ſee the Papiſts themſelves are aſhamed of theſe fables. The ſame author doubteth not to ſay of the ſecond Nicene, where the worſhip of Images was decreed; That the fathers there, Dæmonum ſpectris, & muliebribus ſomniis parum verecunde abutebantur, did without ſhame abuſe the viſions of devils, and womens dreames, to eſtabliſh their opinion.

Let us heare alſo the complaint of Abbas Cluniacenſ. more than 400. yeeres ſince, who (ſaith hee) was aſhamed, when he did ſing in the Church the ſong of S. Benet, Mendacia ad minus 24. Canticum id citato percurrens animo reperi: wherein he found 24. lies at the leaſt, running over the ſong haſtily in his minde, lib. 5. epiſt. 29. Wherefore according to the rule of the Civill law, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 6. Alexander. Monumentorum inſcriptiones non faciunt fidem: The ſuperſcriptions of monuments are not to bee beleeved, &c. No more are the fabulous viſions and miracles which are reported to have been ſeene and done at Tombes, to be received.

The Papiſts.

40. Error.

THirdly, they ſay, that the power of working miracles was in the Apoſtles actually, and that they properly did give health, and other things by their miraculous gift, though they received the force and vertue of God. And therefore they find fault with us, becauſe we give this note, A miracle done by Chriſt by the hands of the Apoſtles.

Firſt, Peter ſaith, That which we have, give we to thee, Act.3.6. Secondly, we muſt not thinke that they had no more power, than as dead inſtruments in the workmans hand, Rhem. in hunc locum.

Act. 3. 6.

The Proteſtants.

WE both agree, that the power of working miracles was given of God: but herein wee differ, they thinke that this power was inherent in the Apoſtles, and that having once received this power of God, they could execute it themſelves: like as a man having the power of ſenſe and moving by nature, moveth and ſeeth when hee liſt himſelfe. But we hold againſt the Pelagians, Gratiam Dei ad ſingulos actus dari, that the grace of God is daily infuſed, and we have need of it for every act: it is not ſufficient once generally to have received it. So then the Apoſtles were but the inſtruments of Chriſts working: he is better ſaid in them and by them to worke miracles, than they in and by him. Neither doth it follow, that they are dead inſtruments: for the horſe (I trow) that draweth in the plough is no dead inſtrument: yet hee hath need for every bout and turning to have a driver and a guide: truly wee are as unfit for the Lords yoke by nature, as the horſe is for the plough: and therefore have need of the Lords continuall direction. The Apoſtles then gave that they had, not as owners, but as the Lords agents and inſtruments of his working.

Argum. 1. Act. 3.16. His name hath made this man ſound: and the faith which is by him hath given to him this diſpoſition of his whole body. From hence we reaſon thus: That which depended upon the faith of the receiver, was not actually inherent in the power of the giver; but this miraculous worke of healing was by the faith of him that was healed: Ergo, it was not actually in the Apoſtles that gave this gift. Againe, the name of Chriſt did make him ſound: Ergo, properly the Apoſtles gave not health, but only as Miniſters, the Name of Chriſt working in and by them: And Saint Peter himſelfe denieth, that they did this miracle of their owne power or godlineſſe, Act. 3. 12. wherefore the Apoſtles properly, (as they ſpeake) that is, by a power inherent or reſiant in them, did not worke miracles.

Act. 3. 16.
Act. 3. 12.

Argum. 2. If the Apoſtles had the power of working miracles alwaies actually in themſelves, then might they exerciſe the ſame facultie when they would: but ſo could they not; for Saint Paul, when Epaphroditus was ſicke, depended by prayer upon Gods mercie for his health, whom no doubt hee would have cured by miracle, as well as the father of Publius, if this power had been alwaies preſent with the Apoſtle; So then, as the Apoſtles had not knowledge and foreſight of all things to come; as S. Paul truſted to have been delivered being a priſoner at Rome, as it may appeare, Hebr. 13. 13. yet did it not ſo fall out; but ſuch things only, as God did ſee profitable for his Church to bee knowne, were revealed: in like manner, neither could the Apoſtles worke miracles as they were diſpoſed themſelves at all times, but when it pleaſed God thereto to enable them. I will not refuſe herein the teſtimonie of one of their owne: Et alia pleraq; Apoſtolos pro ſua diſcipulorumq; ſalute utiliter nequiviſſe conſpicimus: Wee ſee that the Apoſtles could not doe many other things, for their owne, and their diſciples health: Eſpenc. comment. in 2 Timoth. p. 183.c.

Heb. 13. 13.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Majora quàm ipſe fecit, dicit eos facturos, ſed in eis vel per eos ſe faciente: He ſaith, they ſhall doe greater works than hee: that is, himſelfe working in them or by them: Ergo, Chriſt wrought miracles by the hands of the Apoſtles, they were his lively inſtruments in working.

Tractat. in Iohan. 71.

The Papiſts.

FOurthly, they doe greatly triumph and rejoyce for the miracles which are wrought by the vertue of holy reliques. Firſt, the woman was healed by touching the hemme of Chriſts garment: Ergo, vertue in holy reliques. Rhemiſt. Secondly, napkins that had touched Saint Pauls body wrought miracles, by the vertue given unto them: Ergo, reliques may, Act. 19. verſ. 12. Rhemiſt.

41. Error.

The Doway tranſlators doe thus contend for the miraculous vertue of reliques: the Arke being an holy thing as reliques are, was terrible to their falſe god, the devill: ſo the reliques of Babylas the Martyr overthrew the falſe god Apollo, &c. p. 381. We have example of Saints reliques in the cloake of Elias, in Eliſeus bones, and in another Prophets body buried in Bethel, which Ioſias would not ſuffer to be touched, &c. p. 935.

2 Kings 2. 14.
2 King. 13. 21.
2 King. 23. 18.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. TO the firſt: firſt, the vertue was not in the hemme of Chriſts garment, but he ſaith, it proceeded from himſelfe, Luke 8. 46. Secondly, it was her faith that healed her, for many that thronged Chriſt, touched his garments, but received no benefit: neither was there any vertue in his garments when the ſouldiers parted them amongſt them. Thirdly, if it pleaſed the Lord to uſe ſome externall ſignes, as of oyle, clay, ſpittle, in healing of men: yet have we no warrant, that hee will doe the like by touching of reliques.

Luke 8. 46.

To the ſecond: firſt, the napkins brought from Paul had no ſuch vertue in them; for the text is plaine, that they were wrought by the hands of Paul. Secondly, not all that touched them were preſently healed. Thirdly, they were but as ſignes and tokens to the diſeaſed, that the Apoſtle (when it pleaſed God) might diſpenſe miracles, even when hee was abſent. Laſtly, if they have to this day miracles wrought by the reliques and monuments of Saints; I feare me, nay, I dare ſay, they are no better than the Donatiſts miracles were, either figmenta mendacium hominum, vel portenta fallacium ſpirituum:

ritum: either the gloſings or fables of lying men, or the ſtrange workings of deceiving ſpirits: as Auguſtine ſaith of them.

To our Doway diſcourſers we anſwer: 1 That the Arke was a viſible ſigne of Gods preſence, and to that end conſecrated by God himſelfe, and ſo confirmed by his own word and promiſe: when they can ſhew ſuch warrant for their reliques, they ſhall ſay ſomewhat. Againe, what argument betweene an Arke made of durable wood, and the corruptible bodies of dead men, that fall to duſt and corruption? It was not the bodie of Babylas that deſtroyed Apollo, but the power of God, for the Martyrs bodie was removed before: and it was the devils owne Oracle, that aſcribed firſt ſuch vertue to the Martyrs reliques: ſee before error 36. in fine. 2 It was not Elias cloake, but the God of Elias, that divided the waters. 3 And one extraordinarie miracle wrought by touching the Prophets dead bodie, is no warrant, to make ſuch miracles uſuall and ordinary. 4 Ioſias did ſuffer the Prophets bodie to enjoy the honour of buriall, and who denieth, but that the bodies of the Saints are reverently to be uſed, and honeſtly to be buried?

Argum. 1. The Apoſtles by their owne power, vertue, or godlineſſe did not worke miracles, Act. 3. 12. but there was greater vertue in the living Apoſtles, than in dead and ſenſeleſſe reliques; Ergo, much leſſe is there any vertue in reliques.

Act. 3. 12.

Argum. 2. If there be any vertue in reliques, it would appeare as well at one time as another, becauſe the vertue ſhould be abiding in the reliques: but ſo doth it not, for Elias cloake at the firſt ſmiting did not part the waters, till Eliſhah had ſaid, where is the Lord God of Elijah? ſo that the vertue was not in the garment, but in the invocation of the name of God.

2 King 2. 14.

Concil. Nicen. 2. action. 7. Tharaſius the preſident propoundeth this queſtion: Quammobrem miracula à noſtris imaginibus non eduntur? What is the cauſe that miracles are not wrought by our images? then he anſwereth thus: Miracula non credentibus data ſunt, ſed illis qui incredulitate verſantur: Miracles are not given to thoſe which beleeve, but to thoſe that beleeve not. This Councell was celebrated at the leaſt 800. yeeres agoe, about anno 780. whatſoever images and reliques did before, wee have here the warrant of this Councell, that they have done none ſince.

The holy Martyrs alſo have confirmed this truth: Thomas Bilney: They gild their gods, and beare them about, and men ſay, they do ſpeake; and if they ſpeake, it is the devill that ſpeaketh in them, not God, Fox pag. 1010.

Pag. 921. 2. 81.

M. Tyndal holy Martyr: when they crie miracles, miracles, remember that God hath made an everlaſting teſtament in Chriſts blood, againſt which we may receive no miracles; neither the preaching of the Angels, &c. the end of Gods miracles is good, the end of theſe miracles is evill, Fox pag. 1251. col. 1. articul. 24.

Pag. 1140. 1. 20.

Now to conclude this matter touching the viſions and miracles at the tombes, and by the reliques of Saints: it is ſtrange how ridiculous and light of beleefe the papiſts are, to give credit unto ſuch fabulous and lying reports: We are told of ſeven ſleepers of Epheſus, that had ſlept an 142. yeeres from the time of the Emperor Decius, unto the reigne of Theodoſius, and then they awaked, and came out of the cave where they lay aſleep: and to ſpeake many things to the Emperor of the reſurrection, and then fell aſleep againe: We heard before how Chryſoſtoms body being taken up, opening the mouth, bleſſed the people: the like tale there is, how in the time of the Chalcedon councell, the Orthodoxes and Heretiks, agreed to lay the libels of their faith, in the tombe of Euphemia the Martyr, and prayed that ſhe might decide the controverſie, and three daies after, they opened the tombe, and they found the heretiks libell caſt at her feet, and the other the dead body reached with the right hand to the Emperor. Thus theſe fables, as wee ſee, were in coyning long ſince: and leſt we ſhould thinke it ſtrange that dead bodies ſhould ſpeake and ſhew other actions of life, we are told of S. Bernakes cow, that being ſtollen and cut in peeces, and caſt into a cauldron, did low when S. Bernake called her, and Saint Patrike cauſed a ſheep to bleat in the bellie of him that had eaten it: And yet that which is more ſtrange, the ſtones anſwered unto the prayer of Bede, and ſaid, Amen venerable Bede: Are not theſe jolly fables, and worthy of credit: and as the Latine Church is thus given to tell and beleeve lies, as Saint Paul ſaith, becauſe they received not the love of the truth, &c. God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion to beleeve lies. So the Muſcovites following the Greeke Church as it now ſtandeth very corrupt, are not behind in this their credulitie. The ſixth great Duke telleth us of a temple in Lydia built by the Apoſtles, where was a picture of the Virgin Mary, made not by humane hands, but by God himſelfe, and that the Virgin Mary comming to the dedication of that Church, ſaid of the image, virtus mea huic adſit, my vertue and power bee preſent with it: which image afterward Iulian commanded to be demoliſhed, but the more they battered it with their iron inſtruments, the faſter it ſtood, &c. This is much like to the great fable which the heathen deviſed of the image of Diana, that it ſhould come from heaven: and like to the mad conceit of the Helcheſaits, which refuſed the writings of S. Paul, and ſaid they had a booke which came from heaven, which whoſoever heard, ſhould have remiſſion of ſins: yea I find that the Æthiopike Church at this day, is ſomewhat addicted to ſuch fabulous narrations: as how the queene of Saba called Maqueda, went to heare Salomons wiſdome, and had by Salomon a child called Melech, whom ſhee ſent afterward to Salomon to bee inſtructed, who called him David, and at his departure Azaria the ſon of Sadoch, went with him and carried away the tables of ſtone, leaving other much like unto them? this tale Zaga Zabo telleth; wherein there are divers evident untruths: for, 1 Zadock had no ſonne ſo called, Abimaaz was Zadocks ſonne, which Abimaaz indeed begot Azaria: 2 Seeing the high Prieſt only entred into the holy place, how is it like that Azaria ſhould ſteale away the tables? 3 Of this Azaria the ſonne of Abimaaz deſcended the high Prieſts of Judah: which could not be if he had gone into Æthiopia there to abide. 4 And of all other it is moſt unlike, that the counterfeit tables remained in the Arke: whereas it is held by a generall conſent, that there the true tables remained till the captivitie. But howſoever now thoſe Churches in the Eaſt and South are addicted to fables, (though nothing ſo much as the Latine Church) yet in former times their judgement was otherwiſe.

The fiſth Queſtion, Concerning images, and of the ſigne of the Croſſe.

THe firſt part concerning images, is ſubdivided into certaine other articles and points. Firſt, of the difference of idols and images. Secondly, whether it be lawfull to have images. Thirdly, if it be lawfull to worſhip them. Fourthly, what manner of worſhip it ſhould be.

The firſt Article, Of the difference betweene idols and images.

The Papiſts.

THere is great difference (ſay they) betweene an image and an idoll: an image called in Greeke εἰκὼν, is the true ſimilitude of a thing: an idoll εἴδωλον, in Greeke, tranſlated ſimulachrum, doth repreſent that which is not, as were the idols of Venus, Minerva, women Goddeſſes, which was a meere deviſed thing. Images they confeſſe they have, but no idols, Bellarm. cap. 5.

42. Error.

Firſt, S. Paul ſaith, That an idoll is nothing: that is, doth repreſent a thing that is not: as ſuch were their heathenish idols, Bellarm.

1 Cor. 10.

Anſwer. Firſt, the place is not ſo underſtood: for the Apoſtle ſaith, That things offered to idols alſo are nothing, which were not made to repreſent any thing: But his meaning is this, that of themſelves they are nothing to breed offence, neither were it needfull to ſhun eating of idoll ſacrifices, or to abhorre an idoll, but that they are abuſed and turned to the ſervice of Devils, as it followeth in the next verſe. Therefore an idoll is not ſaid to bee nothing, becauſe it repreſenteth a thing imagined, but that of it ſelfe being but wood, or ſtone, or ſuch like, it were not offenſive, if it were not abuſed to idolatrie. Secondly, all the portraictures of the Heathen were not idols in this ſenſe: for Iupiter, Mars, Apollo, Hercules, whoſe images they had, were men ſometime living. Thirdlv, you have images repreſenting nothing: as the pictures of Angels, of God the Father, of the Holy Ghoſt, which have no ſhape nor likeneſſe. Againe, you have alſo your imagined Saints, as * S. George, S. Chriſtopher, for there were never any ſuch: and therefore you have idols as well as the Heathen.

* Bellar. lib. 1. de ſanctor. beatit. cap. 10.

Bellarmine proveth this diſtinction out of Orig. hom. 8. in Exod. who there affirmeth that then a man maketh a ſimilitude or likeneſſe, when he portraiteth in metall, ſtone or wood, the faſhion of any creature? but an idoll is ſome ſtrange ſhape that is not, as when to a mans body is joyned the head of a dog, &c. or a man is pictured with two faces, &c. to this purpoſe Origen.

Anſwer. 1. This authoritie maketh nothing for them: firſt, if an idoll be nothing elſe but a ſtrange and monſtrous ſhape, then had the Gentiles no idols, for they worſhipped the reſemblances and pictures of men. Secondly, Origen in the ſame place ſheweth it to be unlawfull to worſhip any ſimilitude or likeneſſe as well as any idoll, writing upon the ſecond Commandement, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any idoll, or the ſimilitude or likeneſſe, &c. Thirdly, this was but Origens conceit; for the Fathers did confound theſe words, indifferently taking the one for the other: S. Ambroſe calleth idols images: Simulachrum verè nihil eſt, quia imago videtur rei mortua: A ſimulachre or an idoll is nothing, being the image of a dead thing, in 1 Cor. 10. and S. Hierome alſo, Sicubi fiat imago, dæmones dabant reſponſa: If an image were made, the Devils gave anſwer: Tradit. in 2 Paralcip. c. 11.

This diſtinction betweene an idoll and an image, our new tranſlators of Doway doe not ſo much ſtand upon: for they confound the words themſelves, and make this difference of them: that an image made for a God, which the Hebrewes call peſel, which was an idoll of Gentilitie, ſuch as Micah made, *Iudg.*17. was forbidden, not the ſacred images of Chriſt and the Saints: *Annot. Iudg.*17. pag. 533. Theſe they call images of idols, which are forbidden, not of other things, pag.412. which they alſo call images of falſe gods, pag.103. but the terme of image and idoll they uſe indifferently: as the idols of Belphegar, they terme the images of Belphegar: pag. 386. ſo pag. 906. they tranſlate the images of Baal, 2 *Chron.*23.17. whereupon they give this note: they are wilfully blinde that will not ſee difference betweene the images of Baal and of Chriſt, or of Saints, &c.

Contra. 1. It is well then that they yeeld us the indifferent uſe of theſe words image and idoll; and confeſſe that an image may be of an idoll: this is otherwiſe than Papiſts uſually teach: and the great Relig. Muſcovit. c.13. peremptorie Duke of Muſcovia had learned ſo much from his ſuperſtitious Greekes: Aliud eſt coram imagine, aliud coram idolo diabolico poplitem curvare: It is one thing to bow the knee before an image, another before a devilliſh idoll: And indeed an image and an idoll ſet up for religious uſe are Geneſ.31. the ſame: as Hierome tranſlateth the Hebrew word teraphim, idols, *Geneſ.*31. which, ſaith he, Aquila Lib.1.de finib. interpreteth μορφώματα, Figuras vel imagines, Figures or images: and Cicero who knew well the propertie of words, ſaith, Atomi, vana imagines, quæ idola nominantur: The ſmall motes, vaine images, which are called idols.

2 But as in the names, ſo there is ſmall difference in the things: for both to the idols of the Gentiles, Pſal.115.5. and of Pſeudo-Chriſtians, agreeth that deſcription, Pſal. 115. They have eyes and ſee not, &c. a mouth and ſpeake not: and both of them are adored and worſhipped.

3 To omit their new phraſe and terme, of an image of an idoll, which is as much as to ſay, an image of an image, or an idoll of an idoll: it cannot bee ſhewed that the image which Micah ſet up was Iudg.17.13. an idoll of Gentilitie, for he ſaith, now Iehovah will be good unto me: hee worſhipped the true God, though after a ſuperſtitious manner: hee did not make that image his God, nor yet ſet up an heathen idoll.

Geneſ.31.34. 4 And whereas they alſo pag. 103. on the 31. of Geneſis, read that Rachel had ſtollen her fathers idols, they themſelves confeſſe that the word teraphim doth not alwayes ſignifie an idoll in that 1 Sam.19.13. ſenſe: for the image which Michol put into the bed in ſtead of David, is ſo called teraphim, where they themſelves confeſſe in their marginall note, that the word in that place importeth not an idoll.

5 If this make a difference betweene an image and an idoll, that this is worſhipped for a God, Lib.6.Invent. c.13. and not the other, then are the Popiſh images idols, which are worſhipped and truſted unto: the other ſort, ſaith Polydore, Magis fidunt illis, quam Chriſto, Doe put more confidence in them than in Chriſt.

The Proteſtants.

Though the name idoll have an odious ſignification in the Engliſh tongue, yet neither the Greeke εἴδωλον, nor the Latine ſimulachrum, doe ſound ſo evill unto the eares: and in many places of the Scripture wee may indifferently read, idoll or image: for all worſhipping of images is idolatrie. If wee will diſtinguiſh them, they are thus rather to bee ſevered: An idoll is that image which is ſet up with an intent to bee worſhipped: an image is a generall name as well to unlawfull pictures ſet up for idolatrie, as lawfull, which have but a civill uſe. But that the Papiſts idols are images, thus we prove it.

Rom.1.23. Argum. 1. The Scripture calleth the Gentiles idols, images, *Rom.*1.23. there the word εἰκὼν is uſed: Ergo, idoll and image are taken for one: they have images ſet up for religious, or rather irreligious uſes; Ergo, idols.

Argum. 2. *Apocal.*9.20. There is mention made of idols of gold, ſilver, braſſe, which cannot bee underſtood of the idols of the Gentiles, which were aboliſhed long agoe: and that Prophecie is to be underſtood of men living after the opening of the ſeventh ſeale, which is toward the end of the world. Wherefore it muſt needs bee underſtood of the Papiſts, who are the onely knowne people in the world that worſhip images: Ergo, they have idols.

Auguſtine taketh imago, and ſimulachrum, which is the Latine, for the Greeke εἴδωλον, for all one: for the love of the dead (ſaith he) images were firſt made, whereof the uſe of ſimulachres or idols did ariſe. Againe, Nec idipſum, quod ſedere pater dicitur, flexis poplitib. fieri putandum eſt, &c. tale enim ſimulachrum Deo nefas eſt Chriſtiano in templo collocare: God is not to be imagined to ſit in Heaven as with bowed knees: ſuch a ſimulachre or idoll it is not lawfull to ſet up in the temple of Chriſtians:

de fide & ſymbolo, cap.7. The picture then of God, which the Papiſts call an image, Auguſtine termeth an idoll, for ſimulachrum by their owne confeſſion, ſignifieth the ſame thing which Idolum doth, Bellarm. cap. 5.

Likewiſe in the Civill Law, from whence we may beſt derive the different uſe of words, an image and a ſimulachrum or idoll is all one: as Cod. lib.1. tit.27, leg.2. Theodoſius, Si quando noſtra ſtatua, vel imagines eriguntur: If our images or pictures be erected, &c. and tit.28. leg.1. the ſame are called Imperatoria ſimulachra, the Emperours idols: for Bellarmine granteth, that everie where in the old Teſtament, where the Latine Text readeth, ſimulachrum, the Greeke hath the word εἴδωλον.

And yet more plainly it appeareth, that imago and idolum are all one in ſignification: for in the Nicen.2. generall Councell action. 6. tom.6. Gregorius Biſhop thus ſpeaketh, Nemo ſub prætextu exterminationis imaginum, manum in ea, quæ Deo ſacrata ſunt, injiciat, quia poſſunt transferri in alios uſus hujuſmodi idola: Let no man under the colour of pulling downe images, lay his hands upon things conſecrate to God, for ſuch idols may bee tranſlated to other uſes: Here images and idols are taken for all one.

Cajetanus a learned Papiſt taketh an image and an idoll to be all one: in 20. cap. Exod.

Thomas Hawkes holy Martyr hath ſealed this point: That there is no difference betweene an idoll and an image: when Boner had thus diſtinguiſhed, If it bee a falſe God, and an image made of him, that is an idoll; but if an image be made of God himſelfe, it is no idoll, but an image, becauſe he is a true God. The Martyr anſwereth: Lay your image of your true God and falſe God together, you ſhall ſee the difference: have not your images feet, and goe not, eyes and ſee not, eares and heare not, hands and feele not, mouths and ſpeake not, even ſo have your idols? Fox, pag. 1589. col.2.

Wee have ſeene before the judgement of the Eaſt Church, and of ſome of the African Church, as alſo of ſome of the Romaniſts, unto whom we will adjoyne the teſtimony of Polydore Virgil: Imaginum cultum, &c. Almoſt all the ancient Fathers condemned the worſhip of images, ob metum idololatriæ, for feare of idolatrie, &c. idolatrie here and the worſhip of images are made coſin germans. Lib. 6. Invent. c.13.

The reformed Churches know no difference betweene images and idols: Helvetia former confeſſion, c. 23. Idols which are ſet up to be worſhipped, &c. wee doe remove them, &c. Saxony artic. 21. there is invocation of the dead, &c. adoring of images, &c. Paul would in no caſe allow of ſuch vowes as are joyned with the worſhip of idols: They make here the adoration of images and worſhip of idols all one. Harm. ſect. [illegible] p.569.

The ſecond Article, VVhether it be lawfull to have the images of the Trinitie, or of Chriſt, or of Angels.

The Papiſts.

THat images may have a good civill uſe, as for decencie or comelineſſe of ſome worke, or for utilitie of ſtorie, it is of neither part denied: but they further affirme, that it is lawfull to expreſſe the Trinitie by pictures; as God like an old man, and with the world in his hand; Chriſt as hee walked upon the earth; the Holy Ghoſt in the likeneſſe of a Dove; the Angels with wings: and theſe pictures (they ſay) are verie meet and profitable to be ſet up in Churches, Rhemiſt. Act.17. ſect.5. 43, Error.

Argum. 1. To paint the Trinitie, or any one of them, as they appeared viſibly, is no more inconvenient, than it was undecent for them ſo to appeare, Rhemiſt. ibid. & Bellarmin. cap.8.

Anſwer. You flatly controll the Law of God, which ſimply forbiddeth any ſimilitude to be made of things in heaven or in earth to worſhip God by. And Deut.4.15. God expreſſely declareth, that he would not appeare in any viſible ſhape when he gave the Law, leſt the people ſhould abuſe that ſhape, to make an image of God after it. Againe, the argument followeth not: for God ſaw it was convenient ſometime by viſible ſignes to appeare unto men, and yet ſeeth it to be inconvenient for pictures to be made to reſemble him by: for elſe he would never have forbidden it. Laſtly, though the argument be admitted, yet ſeeing now that all ſuch viſible apparitions of the Trinitie are ceaſed, all ſuch viſible pictures likewiſe ſhould be out of uſe: And if that when ſuch apparitions were ſeene, yet no ſuch images were tolerated, how much leſſe are they lawfull now, all ſuch viſions being long agoe determined. Deut. 4. 15.

Argum. 2. The Angels were pictured in forme of Cherubims: Ergo, Spirits may be portraicted, Bellarm. cap.8. argum.1.

Anſwer. When you can ſhew an expreſſe commandement for your images, as the Iſraelites had for them, we will yeeld that they are lawfully made. Againe, how followeth it, God may command images to be made for the uſe of religion: Ergo, men may? for the Law bindeth not the Lord who is the Law-maker. But the Law ſaith, thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe, that is, by thine owne authoritie, any graven image. The Cherubims alſo were not made publikely to be ſeene and gazed upon by the people, but were ſet in the holy place: ſo are not your pictures and images which are ſet up openly in your Churches to entice people to idolatrie.

Argum. 3. The Scripture deſcribeth God by humane members, as by his hands, eyes, feet, &c. therefore he alſo may be ſo deſcribed in picture, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſwer. Firſt, if it be lawfull to ſet forth God by picture, as he is deſcribed in Scripture, then make a Lion alſo to ſignifie Chriſt, for hee is called the Lion of the tribe of Juda: picture him alſo with Doves eyes, Ravens lookes, marble legs, &c. for ſo he is deſcribed *Cantic.*5. and thus will you make a monſter of Chriſt. Secondly, if an idoll be, as your ſelves define, a picture of that which is not; then doe you make an idoll of God, when you paint him with hands and feet, &c. whereas there is no ſuch thing in God. Thirdly, the Scripture ſo deſcribeth God to our capacitie, for our edifying and inſtruction, becauſe we cannot otherwiſe underſtand the high things of God: but there is no ſuch end of pictures; which are ſo farre from edifying, that they are rather occaſion of offence: and therefore the argument concludeth not from the phraſe of Scripture, to the phantaſie of Painters; from divine authoritie to human preſumption.

The Proteſtants.

TO ſet forth the Godhead and divine nature by any picture or image, is impoſſible; and therefore both unlawfull and inconvenient: but to bring them into Churches, and to make them for ſome uſe of religion, is a high ſtep unto groſſe ſuperſtition.

Argum. 1. Such images of the Trinitie among the Papiſts, are made to reſemble the Divinitie and Godhead: for to what purpoſe elſe ſhould ſuch images be made? They picture God the Father like an old man, becauſe in that forme he appeared to Daniel: but how know they whether it were God the Father, rather than God the Sonne, who is as old as God the Father, or than the whole Godhead? They commend alſo the image of God the Father with the world in his hand: which is a lying image, and maketh ſimple people to beleeve that the world was made onely by God the Father, which was the worke of the whole Trinitie. Some of the Papiſts themſelves, as [a] Abulenſis, [b] Durandus, [c] Pereſius, doe hold that the image of God ought not to be made, and that it is rather tolerated than allowed in the Church.

[a] In 4.Deut.q.5.
[b] In 3. diſt.4. qu.2.
[c] De trad.par.3. in tract.de imaginib.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that there are three ſorts of images or pictures: ſome doe expreſſe the verie ſimilitude and nature of a thing, and ſo onely things materiall and corporall may be pictured: ſome images doe not properly, but by way of Allegorie and implication expreſſe the thing deciphered, as when Angels are pictured with wings to ſhew their celeritie, &c. there can be no image of God made after the firſt ſort, but after the ſecond there may, &c. A third ſort of pictures are to ſet forth ſome hiſtorie, as if any would deſcribe the expulſion of Adam out of Paradiſe, he would paint God walking in Paradiſe in the forme of a man, and the Angell alſo in human ſhape carrying a naked ſword, &c. *Bellarm. lib.2. de imaginib. c.*8.

Anſwer. Firſt, if an image bee made of a thing which doth not expreſſe the nature thereof, as a picture aſcribing to God a bodily ſhape which hee hath not, is but a lying image: ſecondly, the properties of God being infinite, cannot any way by a picture be implyed or ſhadowed forth, as Iſay 40. 12. God hath meaſured the waters with his fiſt, and counted heaven with a ſpan: and *verſ.*17. All nations before him are as nothing, &c. then it followeth, To whom then will you liken God, or what ſimilitude will you ſet up unto him? The Prophet reaſoneth thus; God is omnipotent, infinite, incomprehenſible, therefore by no ſimilitude whatſoever can be expreſſed. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe ſaith, Quod inviſibile eſt, pingi non poteſt, & Deus, qui ab his omnibus alienus eſt, quomodo poteſt imaginem habere viſibilem? That which is inviſible cannot be pictured, and God which is farre from any bodily ſhape, how can he have a viſible image? Ambroſe in 1. ad Coloſſ. Hee denieth that God any way may bee viſibly deſcribed. Fourthly, it is one thing to make a picture for hiſtorie, which is a cited thing, another for a religious uſe, which is altogether forbidden, of what thing ſo ever it be the image: God the Father was never ſeene in any human ſhape: neither ever ſhewed himſelfe in any viſible forme, as Ambroſe affirmeth, that the Father never appeared unto any: but when God ſhewed himſelfe in any outward figure, Non pater intelligitur, ſed filius; The Father is not underſtood, but the ſonne, &c. therefore God the Father is no way to be reſembled by any picture: Concerning other pictures, as of Angels with wings, becauſe they have ſo appeared, if it be onely for the ſetting forth of ſome hiſtorie, we doe not much gaine-ſay it: and concerning the image of Chriſt, if likewiſe it be made onely hiſtorically, as to deſcribe ſome of his miraculous works, as they were done, without any ſpeciall or particular relation to his perſon, it is farre more tolerable, than when the image of Chriſt is ſet forth by it ſelfe, without any ſuch hiſtoricall intention, onely to portrait his perſon and countenance, which cannot be but dangerous and offenſive.

Iſay 40.12.

In Coloſſ.1. vers.15.

As for the images of Chriſt in the forme of a Lamb, and the Holy Ghoſt in ſhape of a Dove, Bartholomæus Caranza a Papiſt ſheweth that they were forbidden in the ſixth generall Synod, Canon 82.

Bellarmine here anſwereth, that the Councell condemneth not the image of Chriſt in forme of a Lamb, but preferreth onely the other picture of Chriſt as a man.

Contra. Firſt, the words of the Canon are theſe; Picturam illius agni Chriſti, &c. in poſterum pro veteri agno erigendam ſancimus: Wee decree that the picture of Chriſt, as hee is man, bee from henceforth erected in ſtead of the picture of the Lamb. If the one picture muſt give place to the other, what is that elſe, but to abrogate the one, and eſtabliſh the other? Secondly, Caranza the abridger of the Councels ſo expoundeth the Canon; though it pleaſe Bellarmine to oppoſe himſelfe againſt him.

Concerning the picture of Chriſt as he was man, the Papiſts themſelves confeſſe, and we deny not, but it may better bee made than the image of the Trinitie; yet can there not bee any true image of Chriſt, as he was in forme of man: for the image doth only expreſſe his bodily ſhape, not as hee was God in the forme of man: and ſo ſuch a picture were dangerous to the weake and ignorant, being a lying image, ſhewing Chriſt only as man, who was both God and man. And againe, the image which is made of his bodily ſhape, is no more the image of Chriſt, than of any other man: Fulk, Act. 17. ſect. 5.

But ſome will ſay, if Chriſts image cannot conveniently bee made, becauſe it expreſſeth not his Godhead; by the ſame reaſon wee cannot make a picture of a man, becauſe his ſoule being inviſible cannot be painted.

Anſw. The reaſon is not alike: for hee that pictureth a man living, ſetteth forth the life, beautie, and motion of the body; by which effects, by a conſequent, the ſoule is reſembled, which cauſeth and worketh theſe things in the body: but in the bodily ſhape of Chriſt there cannot be made to appeare any ſuch notorious ſignes of his Godhead.

2 Though it be not ſimply unlawfull to expreſſe in painting the viſible ſhapes that were ſhewed in viſion to the Prophets, if it be only for uſe and ſignification of the hiſtorie, or if there be any other commendable uſe: yet to make thoſe ſhapes for any uſe of religion, or ſervice of God, is abominable idolatrie, Fulk, ibid. Epiphanius ſaw in a Church at Anablatha, an image painted in a table, as it had beene of Chriſt or a Saint, he tooke it downe and cut it in peeces: affirming that it was contrarie to the Scripture for any image of a man to hang in the Church of Chriſt. The Eliberine Councell, Canon 36. decreed, that no pictures ſhould bee made in Churches. If no pictures, much leſſe carved images, which are a more ſtrong provocation to idolatrie. The words of the Councell are theſe: Placuit picturas in Eccleſia eſſe non debere, ne quod colitur, aut adoratur in parietibus depingatur: Wee thinke good that no pictures ſhould be in the Church, leſt that which we adore and worſhip, ſhould be painted in the wals.

Auguſtine rendreth a reaſon, why it is dangerous to have images in Churches, where there is, yea but the leaſt feare of ſuperſtition: Quis adorat vel orat intuens ſimulachrum, qui non ſic afficitur, ut ab eo ſe exaudiri putet, ut ab eo ſibi praeſtari, quod deſiderat, ſperet? Who (ſaith he) worſhippeth or prayeth beholding an image, and is not ſo affected, as though he were heard of it, and hopeth not to have that performed by it, which he deſireth? in Pſal. 113. part. 2.

Againſt the having or making of the image of Chriſt, it was thus reaſoned Conſtantinople 7. generall Synod: as it is alleaged Nicen. 2. action. 6. tom. 3. Ipſam imaginem Chriſti, Chriſtum vocare, eſt autem Chriſtus Deus & homo; ſequitur ut imago ſit Dei & hominis, & ſic deitatem circumſcriptibilem, & cum Eutyche confuſionem inducunt, &c. They doubt not to call the image of Chriſt, Chriſt: but Chriſt is both God and man; it followeth then that the image of Chriſt muſt be the image of God and man; and ſo they make the Deitie circumſcriptible, and with Eutyches confound the natures of Chriſt: or elſe they doe picture the body of Chriſt without the Deitie, and ſo with Neſtorius they divide the perſon of Chriſt, and ſeparate the humanitie from the divine nature: Vel tertio, illi alteram perſonam conſtituentes, dum carnem à deitate ſeparant, quam imagine repraeſentari dicunt, quartam perſonam Trinitati adjiciunt: Or thirdly, they make a new perſon of Chriſt (while they ſeparate the fleſh from the Deitie) which they ſay is repreſented in picture, and ſo adde a fourth perſon to the Trinitie. Theſe abſurdities theſe Fathers did foreſee would follow in having the pictures of Chriſt.

Againe, they reaſon thus in the ſame place, tom. 3. from the words of our Saviour Chriſt uttered in the inſtitution of the Sacrament, this is my body, &c. doe this in remembrance of me: Volens non eſſe ulla alia ſpecies electa ab illo, aut quaſi non poſſet ullo alio illorum, quæ ſub cælo ſunt, incarnationis illius repraeſentari: Ecce igitur vivificantis illius corporis imaginem vocant, panis ſcilicet ſubſtantiam, quam mandavit apponi: As though hee had choſen no other ſhape, nor any other type of all things under Heaven, whereby his incarnation could be repreſented: Behold then all the images of that quickning body, the ſubſtance of bread, which hee commanded to be uſed, &c. Chriſt then hath appointed no other way to be called to our remembrance by, but by the Sacrament.

One other reaſon I will adjoyne, alleaged in the ſame place out of Euſebius Pamphilus, tom. 4. who thus writeth to Conſtantia the Empreſſe, who had ſent to him for the image of Chriſt: what image (ſaith he) doe you require? ſuch an one as may expreſſe the characters of his divine nature? but I thinke you are ſufficiently inſtructed of this, that no man hath thus ſeene the Son but the Father: Sed ſervi requiris formæ imaginem: But you require the image of the forme of a ſervant, which hee tooke; but underſtand you that it was joyned to the glorie of his Godhead: in ſo much that his Apoſtles could not behold the glorie of his fleſh in the mount: much more glorious is it now having put off mortalitie: Quis igitur gloriæ & dignitatis ſplendores micantes & fulgurantes effingere mortuis & inanimatis coloribus & umbratili pictura poſſet? Thoſe ſhining and brightſome beames of ſo great glorie, who is able with dead and liveleſſe colours, and a ſhadowed picture to expreſſe?

See alſo the determination of the Civill Law, Cod. lib. 8. tit. 12. leg. 20. Theodoſ. Valentinian. Baſili- nam alicujus imaginis, &c. Wee forbid the Church to be obſcured with the images or painted tables of any, &c. This law forbiddeth pictures to be ſet up in Churches.

One alſo of their own writers is bold to write thus of Nicephorus, for reporting of S. Luke to have been a Painter, and to be the firſt that made the images of Chriſt, and of Marie, and of the Apoſtles: In hiſtoria ſi non mendax, certè valdè audax: He is verie bold in his hiſtorie, if not a liar: Eſpenc. comment. in 2 Timoth. p. 173.

This truth the holy Martyrs have ſealed: Nicholas Shetterden Martyr: The Law forbiddeth to make any manner likeneſſe, or image of God, Deut. 4. 17. you ſaw no ſhape, &c. To whom Wincheſter objected thus: Yet by your leave we may make an image of ſo much as was ſeene, as of Chriſt, of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Father appeared to Daniel like an old man. The Martyr anſwereth: This is no proofe that wee may make images contrarie to the commandement, for the Holy Ghoſt appeared like a Dove, yet was he not like in ſhape, but in certaine qualities, &c. Fox, pag. 1675. col. 2.

We have here alſo further evidence: 1 Of the Eaſt Church, Ephrem ſaith, Wilt thou be the temple of God? fac habeas imaginem illius in corde, ſee thou have his image in thine heart, Dei imaginem dico, non colorum varietate in ligno, &c. I call that the image of God, not which is in wood or other matter formed with varietie of colours, but that image of God which is painted by good works, &c. Damaſcene ſaith, Of the inviſible and incircumſcriptible God, quis facere poteſt repræſentationem? who can make any repreſentation? The ſuperſtitious and peremptorie Duke of Moſcovia ſeemeth to allow no images of the inviſible God: for thus he ſaith, Divinarum imaginum, prima eſt Ieſu Domini, &c. Of divine images the firſt is of our Lord Jeſus, then of his pure mother, &c. the third kinde of the heavenly Powers and Saints.

3 Confeſſion of Helvetia the former, chap. 4. Becauſe God is an inviſible ſpirit, and an incomprehenſible eſſence, he cannot therefore by any art or image be expreſſed: for which cauſe we feare not with the Scripture to terme the images of God meere lies, &c. although Chriſt tooke upon him mans nature, yet he did not therefore take it that he might ſet forth a patterne for Carvers and Painters: he denied that he came to deſtroy the Law and the Prophets, but images are forbidden in the Law and the Prophets, &c.

4 The opinion of ſome of the Romaniſts, as of Abulenſis, Durandus, Pereſius, is mentioned before.

The third Article, Whether the images of Saints are to be worſhipped.

The Papiſts.

[illegible]

That images are to be reverenced and worſhipped, ſo it be not with the divine honour due unto God, it was concluded in the late Tridentine Chapter, ſeſſ. 25. confeſſed by our Rhemiſts, Act. 17. ſect. 9. and maintained by the Jeſuites, Bellarm. cap. 12.

Argum. 1. The braſen Serpent was worſhipped of the people, ſeeing it was ſet up in an high place, and gave health to thoſe that looked upon it; Ergo, images may be worſhipped, Bellarm. So alſo the Doway tranſlators give inſtance of the braſen Serpent, pag. 366. The people alſo fell downe before the Arke and Tabernacle, and worſhipped God: Ergo lawfull, praying, to fall downe before a Crucifix, Rhemiſt. Annot. Heb. 11. 21.

Joh. 3. 14.

Anſw. Firſt, it was not the Serpent that healed them, but Chriſt who was thereby prefigured. The Serpent was lift up that the people might round about the better behold it, and it ſheweth forth alſo the lifting up of Chriſt upon the Croſſe. It was not ſet up to be worſhipped, neither was it worſhipped till the people fell into ſuperſtition, and offered incenſe to it, and therefore becauſe the people abuſed that monument, Hezekiah brake it downe, 2 King. 18. Secondly, it is not all one to fall downe before, in, or at the Arke and Tabernacle, and to worſhip God, as to worſhip the Arke or Tabernacle. You doe not only fall downe before a Crucifix, but worſhip it. Neither is it as lawfull to worſhip before a Crucifix, as it was before the Tabernacle: for the one was commanded of God, the other is the ſuperſtitious device of men.

Argum. 2. As the image of Nabuchadonozor was for his honour, ſo the image of Chriſt is for his, Rhemiſt. Revel. 13. 14.

Anſw. A good ſimilitude, if Chriſt himſelfe had not forbidden ſo to bee honoured and worſhipped.

Argum. 3. Man is honoured becauſe he is the image of God: Ergo, images of Saints are to be reverenced, becauſe they are their images, *Bellarm.cap.*12.

Anſw. Firſt, man is a livelie image of Gods owne making, images of Saints are the works of men.

Secondly, no image can ſo lively repreſent a Saint, being but a dead thing, as man who hath a living ſoule is the image of God.

Thirdly, we doe reverence men with civill honour, not with religious worſhip, as they doe their images.

Fourthly, though Gods image in man were to be worſhipped, yet it would not follow, that Saints images ſhould: for all divine worſhip belongeth onely to God: but the Saints themſelves, though they were alive, are not to be worſhipped, much leſſe their images.

Argum. 4. The chiefe Iconomachi, that is, enemies or oppugners of idols, ſay they, are the Jewes, Samaritanes, Mahometanes: yea the devill himſelfe loveth no images, Bellarm.ibid.

Argum. Firſt, it followeth not, the Jewes and Turks abhorre images, and therefore Chriſtians ought to love them: for the Heathen hated many vices, which are alſo to bee abhorred of Chriſtians.

Secondly, they were not the firſt Iconomachi, image haters: for Moſes was an Iconomach, when he cauſed the golden Calfe to be burnt to powder: Hezekiah an Iconomach, that brake downe the braſen Serpent: Ioſiah an Iconomach, that cauſed the idols to be deſtroyed, 2 *King.*23. Nay, God himſelfe was the firſt Iconomach, that forbiddeth images and idols to be made in the morall Law.

Thirdly, I pray you where did the Jeſuite learne, that the devill hateth an image? I am ſure the Scripture ſpeaketh contrarie, that what was offered to idols was ſacrificed to devils. 1 Cor.10.20.

Argum. 5. The College of Doway doe bring theſe arguments for the adoration of images.

1 Images were conſerved in the Temple, 3 *King.*7. as before in the Tabernacle.

2 When Idolatrie was moſt deſtroyed, 3 *King.*15. 4 *King.*13. yea an abuſe riſing of the brazen Serpent, for the which Hezekiah deſtroyed it, 4 *King.*18. yet he touched not the image of Cherubims in the Temple: which none but Infidels ſought to deſtroy.

3 Oſee the Prophet, (Chap. 3.) bewaileth the want of Teraphim or Images, among other ſacred things.

4 Whereby the ancient Rabbines prove very well, that the images of Angels, as of other Saints, are not contrarie to the Decalogue, but the image of Idols, &c. to this purpoſe they argue, pag. 936. and before pag. 103.

Anſw. 1. The images in the Tabernacle and afterward in the Temple, were made by Gods commandement, they were not ſet up publikely in the view of the people, but altogether kept in the holy place, whither the Prieſts only reſorted, neither were they adored: popiſh images have none of theſe, they have neither Gods warrant, they are expoſed to the view of the people, they adore them, and fall downe before them: therefore this preſident ſerveth not their turne.

2 Hezekiahs example condemneth all adoration of images, as having no commandement from God: the images in the Temple he defaced not, for the reaſons aforeſaid: if the brazen Serpent, ſet up by Gods commandement, were deſtroyed becauſe it began to be adored, and incenſe burned unto it, much more images erected by men to be worſhipped, are to be demoliſhed.

3 Oſee bewaileth not the want of Teraphim: but foretelleth the miſerable ſtate of the Iſraelites, Oſee 3.4. that they ſhould have no face at all either of Church or Common-wealth, nor that corrupt ſtate, when under the Kings of Iſrael they worſhipped images: and ſo conſequently he propheſieth of the deſtruction of the idols, wherein they truſted: otherwiſe, if the Prophet allowed Teraphim, then hee ſhould give allowance to idols, as theſe tranſlators interpret that word, *Geneſ.*31. where it is ſaid, Rachel ſtole her fathers idols: the word is Teraphim: but if Teraphim may be taken in any good ſenſe; what ſay they to the word Mazzebah, the Prophet ſaith, they ſhall be without a ſtatue or image: which word is applied to ſignifie an idoll, as the image of Baal is ſo called, 2 King. chap. 10. verſ. 26. 2 King.10.

4 They make the Jewes their patrones of images: but Bellarmine nameth them, as is ſhewed in the former argument, the Iconomachi, enemies to images. And it is untrue, that the Jewes either by that text, or any other, are induced to allow any images at all. Some indeed of their popiſh writers are of opinion, that not all worſhip of images, but ſuch as the Heathen gave to their idols, was forbidden to the Jewes, as Waldenſ. Cajetan, Stapleton, Sander, Alphonſ. de Caſtro. But there are more of the contrarie opinion, quemlibet uſum imaginum & ſtatuarum, &c. fuiſſe interdictum: that all uſe whatſoever of images and ſtatues was by the poſitive law, *Exod.*20. forbidden to the Jewes, as Richardus, Alexander, Bonaventure, Henricus, Paludanus, Catharinus: which ſaith their Vaſquez, a Jeſuite is the more probable opinion: and another Jeſuite, Gretzerus proveth out of Ioſephus, that the Jewes would not admit of the trophees, armes or enſignes of the Romanes, ſuſpecting leſt ſome images were hidden under them, which altogether were forbidden by their law.

Joſeph.lib.15. cap.11.
Gretzer.lib.1. de cruce,c.49.

Argum. 6. We will helpe them out with another argument: which the Muſcovian Duke alleageth, that miracles have not been wrought by the idols of the Gentiles, as by their images: Anſwer to Rokita, cap. 13.

Anſw. Yet divers examples may be produced, of prodigious things wrought by the heathens idols, through the cunning and illuſion of Satan: Cicero, actione 6. in Verrem, ſpeaking of the image of Ceres in Sicilia, ſaith, multa prodigia vim ejus numenque declarant: many wonders doe ſhew the divine vertue thereof: the Grecians uſed to ſet up in tables the diſeaſes cured by Æſculapius in Epidaurus. Strab. lib. 8. Virgil writeth 1. Georgic: that after the murder of Cæſar, the yvorie and brazen images did weepe and ſweat: Auguſtine ſaith: let them heare what wonderfull things done or ſeene, the Pagans report of their gods, et tamen dii gentium dæmonia, and yet the gods of the heathen are but devils: de unit. Eccleſ. c. 16.

The Proteſtants.

THat images or idols are not at all to be reverenced or worſhipped, or to be made, or ſet up in Churches, or in any other place for any religious, or rather irreligious uſe: thus out of the holy Scriptures we make it plaine.

Exod. 20.4.
Deut. 4.15.
Iſai. 40.18.
Rom. 1.23.
1 Cor. 10.20.
1 Iohn 5.21.

Argum. 1. The making of any ſimilitude or likeneſſe, to fall downe before it and worſhip it, is flatly forbidden in the ſecond Commandement: Ergo, they are not to be worſhipped. So likewiſe, Deut. 4. 15. Iſai. 40. 18. and in many other places in the old Teſtament: worſhipping of images, which is idolatrie, is manifeſtly alſo forbidden in the new Teſtament, Rom. 1. 23. 1 Cor. 10. 20. 1 Iohn 5. 21. Ergo, not lawfull.

Anſ. One Catharinus a great Papiſt ſaith, that the commandement in the law againſt images was but temporall, and to continue but till the eſtabliſhing of the new Teſtament. But Bellarmine utterly miſliketh this anſwer, being moſt abſurd, for the morall law is perpetuall, De imaginib. ſanct. lib. 2. c. 7. They doe give therefore a more deliberate anſwer: that the Scriptures doe reprove and condemne the idolatrie of the Heathen, which worſhipped their images as gods. But ſo doe not they: they make no account of them, as they affirme, for their matter or forme; but for that relation they have to the things whoſe images they are, Rhemiſt. Philip. 2. ſect. 2.

Exod. 32.4.5.
1 King. 12.28.
Exod. 32.5.
Iudg. 17.3.

Anſ. Firſt, the Jewes alſo in their golden Calfe had a relation to that God that brought them out of the land of Egypt, Exod. 32. 4. 5. The like relation had Ieroboam in ſetting up of his Calves, 1 King. 12. 28. for they were not ſo mad as to think that a calfe brought them out of Ægypt. And it appeareth yet more plainly: for Exod. 32. 5. Aaron ſaith, To morrow ſhall be the Lords holy day: the word is Iehovah, which name the Jewes only aſcribed unto God. So Iudg. 17. 3. Micha his mother ſaith, that ſhe had conſecrated the ſhekels of ſilver unto the Lord Iehovah, to make a molten image: wherefore in their images they had relation to God, and yet were they reproved for their idolatry. The like relation the Gentiles alſo had in their idols, as Auguſtine witneſſeth: Non ego illum lapidem colo, &c. adoro, quem video, ſed ſervio ei quem non video; Quis eſt ille? Numen quoddam inviſibile quod præſidet illi ſimulachro: I doe not worſhip that carved ſtone or image: I reverence that I ſee, but I ſerve or worſhip that I ſee not: that is, a certaine divine ſpirit, which is preſident in that image, &c. Wherefore popiſh idolatrie can no more be excuſed by this ſhift of reference or relation, than either the Jewes or Gentiles, that pretended the ſame colour.

In Pſal. 96. in expoſition.

Our Dowey men doe here alſo come in with their part: they ſay that Calvin giving this note, that the Iſraelites were not ſo inconſiderate, as not to remember that it was God which brought them out of the land of Ægypt, is quite contrary to that text, Deut. 32. 18. God that begat thee, thou haſt forſaken, and haſt forgotten the Lord thy Creator: Whereupon they inferre, that they indeed made the golden Calfe their God. P. 245. and 465.

Deut. 32.18.

Ezech. 8.10.

Contra. 1. If the Iſraelites had thought that Calfe to be their very God, it is not like that Aaron would therein have condeſcended to their madneſſe, though he ſhewed great infirmity in yeelding ſo far as he did: and whereas Ezechiel found in a ſecret corner 70. ancients of Iſrael, cenſing before the images of creeping things and abominable beaſts: is it like they were ſo groſſe, to imagine God to be like an abominable thing? 2. Herein they had been more groſſe than the Pagans, who uſed this defence of their idolatry, as Caſſander one of their own men alleageth out of Lactantius: non ſimulachra timemus, ſed eos, ad quorum imaginem ficta, we doe not reverence the images, but them according to whoſe image they are made. 3 Yet they forgot God, in as much as they ſo ſoone tranſgreſſed the commandement ſo lately given them, not to make them any graven image to worſhip it, &c. as the Lord himſelfe ſaith, they are ſoone turned out of the way which I commanded them.

2 It may be proved by the practice of the Popiſh Church in England, that ſimply without any ſuch relation or ſignification they commanded images to be worſhipped. Thomas Man Martyr troubled, becauſe he beleeved not in the Crucifix. Robert Rave of Dorney moleſted, becauſe he ſaid, that an image graven with mans hand, is neither God nor our Ladie, but made for a remembrance of Saints: nor we ought to worſhip any thing, but God and our Ladie, and not images of Saints, which are but ſtocks and ſtones. Miſtreſſe Alice Dolie brought into trouble for ſaying; We ſhould not worſhip that thing that hath eares, and eyes, and can neither ſee nor heare. Theſe good men and women, we ſee, were perſecuted in thoſe dayes for denying worſhip to images, as they were images. And of latter dayes, we ſee the popiſh ſect, even they amongſt them which had the name of learning, to have fallen into the ſame idolatrous dotage of their forefathers: as it may appeare by Boners ſetting up of the Rood in Pauls, at the comming in of King Philip: how he with his Chaplaines anointed the Rood, crept unto it, and kiſſed it, and ſo ſet him up in his place, all the Quire in this meane ſeaſon, ſinging Te Deum: Let indifferent men now judge, whether they made not this Rood their God aright, Fox pag. 1472. So then the popiſh practice agreeable to their doctrine was, (as it appeareth) that images were ſimply to be worſhipped: which Pollydore one of their owne men confeſſeth, that the ruder ſort among them, magis eis fidunt, quam Christo, doe put more confidence in the image, than in Chriſt himſelfe.

Apocal. 9. 20.

Argum. 2. Apocal. 9. 20. Worſhippers of idols of ſilver and gold are there condemned; which can be no other but the Papiſts: for that propheſie is to be fulfilled in the latter times towards the end of the world, after the opening of the ſeventh ſeale and blowing of the ſixth trumpet. But there is no knowne nation in theſe parts of the world, nor hath beene many a day, that worſhippeth images as the popiſh Synagogue doth.

Argum. 3. Man is the image of God, and yet is not worſhipped: how much leſſe ought we to worſhip carved images, which are but made with mens hands? As Augustine ſaith, Opera hominum non colenda, meliores ſunt artifices: The handy works of men are not to be worſhipped, the workmen themſelves are better, and yet not worſhipped, &c. What foule idolatry is this, to prefer the works of mens hands before the work and image of God, to deſpiſe men, and have in ſo great regard dead ſtocks and ſtones?

Argum. 4. Ezechias cauſed the brazen Serpent which Moſes had made, to be broken in peeces, becauſe the people worſhipped it, and burnt incenſe to it: Ergo, images are not to be worſhipped.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the people did honour the brazen Serpent, for the matter ſake, thinking that the benefit of health proceeded from the image it ſelfe, cap. 17.

Contra: Firſt, they could not honour it for the matter, it being of braſſe, not of gold, or any other precious metall. Secondly, neither did the people aſcribe the miracle to the image it ſelfe: for in the text it is added, which Moſes had made: they remembred very well, that it was made by Moſes, at Gods appointment, and ſo was indued with that vertue.

Secondly, ſaith he, they did worſhip it as God, becauſe they offered incenſe to it, which in the old law was accounted a ſacrifice, ibid.

Contra. See firſt how contrarie Bellarmine is to himſelfe: for before, lib. 1. de Sanctor. beatitud. c. 13. argum. 3. he told us, that the ſacrifice of beaſts onely was peculiar unto God: but odours and incenſe might be given to Saints; and that therefore Nabuchadnezzar commanding odours to be offered to Daniel, did therein no lawfull thing. But here he affirmeth the contrary, that the people in offering incenſe to the brazen Serpent, did give the honour of God unto it. Thus well he agreeth with himſelfe.

Secondly, the people were not ſo blinde, to think a Serpent to be their God, no more than their forefathers took the golden Calfe for God, but they worſhipped it in the remembrance of God: for they were not ſo blockiſh to think that a calfe did bring them out of Ægypt. Thus doe the Papiſts worſhip their images even as the people did the brazen Serpent.

Augustine ſaith, Novi multos eſſe ſepulchrorum & picturarum adoratores; I know there are many which worſhip ſepulchres and pictures. Of theſe he warneth men to take heed, Noli conſectari turbas imperitorum; Follow not ſuch unlearned and unskilfull multitudes. Bellarm. anſwereth, that Augustine wrote thus when he was a young man, and not fully converted, cap. 16. A ſilly ſhift: yet we will vouchſafe an anſwer, though it be worthy of none. Let us heare what Augustine thought when he was old, and ſtaid in judgement: Iam vero artifex melior eſt eis, &c. quem te tamen puderet adorare: melior es tu, quamvis ea non feceris, quoniam, quæ illa non poſſunt facis, melior & beſtia: The workman is better than the image, who gave faſhion and ſhape unto it, yet thou wouldeſt be aſhamed to worſhip him: thou thy ſelfe art better, for thou canſt doe many things which that cannot: nay a bruit beaſt that heareth and ſeeth is better, &c. By this we may ſee what Augustine thought of worſhipping of images.

We have the glorious teſtimony of the holy Martyrs: Claudius Monerius burned at Lions for the truth, anno 1551: Nothing is to be adored, but that which is not ſeene with the eyes, that is, God alone, which is a ſpirit, &c. Images therefore are not to be ſet up before Chriſtians, ſeeing the nature of man is ſo prone to idolatry, ever occupied and fixed on thoſe things which lie before his eyes, rather than upon thoſe which are not ſeene. Fox pag. 905. col. 1.

Pag. 846. 1. 40.

Maſter George Wiſehart holy Martyr, reporteth how he had conference with a Jew, as he was ſailing upon the water of Rhene: and asking him the cauſe of his pertinacie in not receiving the Chriſtian faith, alleaged this with other, for that Chriſtians did worſhip images contrary to the law of God, which will have God onely to be honoured. Fox pag. 1269. col. 2.

Pag. 1256. 2. 40.

Iohn Maundrel, William Coberly, Iohn Spicer, put to death for denying the worſhipping of images, pag. 1893. with many other that gave their lives in defence of this truth: The Papiſts for their idolatry cannot ſhew ſo ſure a ſeale.

Pag. 1719. 1. 40.

I will adde in the end the determination of the ſeventh generall Councell at Conſtantinople, as it is extant, Nicen. 2. Action. 6. tom. 6. Qui ab hoc die imaginem auſus fuerit ſibi parare aut adorare in eccleſia, aut in privata domo conſtituere, aut clam habere; ſi clericus, deponitor, ſi laicus, anathemate percellitor: If any man from henceforth ſhall dare to make him an image, or to worſhip it in the Church, or ſet it up in his houſe, or keepe it ſecretly, if he be of the Clergie, let him be depoſed; if a lay man, accurſed be he.

Againe, tom.5. in fine: Nos qui ſacerdotii dignitate ſuccincti ſumus, ſimul exiſtentes una voce definimus, omnem imaginem ex quacunque materia improba pictorum arte factam ab eccleſia Chriſtianorum rejiciendam velut alienam & abominabilem: We of the Prieſtly dignity aſſembled together, doe define with one voice, that every image, of what matter ſoever, made by the lewd skill of painters, is to be caſt out of the Church of Chriſtians, as a ſtrange and abominable thing. This was enacted anno 780. by the conſent of 300. Biſhops aſſembled at Conſtantinople, in the preſence of two Emperours, Leo and Conſtantinus in two ſeverall Synodes.

Our adverſaries here anſwer, that this aſſembly at Conſtantinople is not the ſeventh generall Synode, but that which followed at Nice, called Nicen. 2. which was kept under the Empreſſe Irene and her ſonne Conſtantinus, wherein the adoration of images was eſtabliſhed: and to this Councell Adrian Biſhop of Rome gave his conſent, which the other wanted.

Anſw. The Synode of Conſtantinople is rather to be held univerſall, than this of Nice. Firſt, it was aſſembled by the authority of two Emperours, Leo, and Conſtantinus: whereas this of Nice had but the authority of a woman, Irene the Empreſſe: for her ſonne Conſtantine, being then in his nonage, afterward revoked his conſent, which he gave in his childhood: Secondly, there were 300. Biſhops preſent at Conſtantinople, a number ſufficient to make a generall Councell, and it came before the other: wherfore then ſhould it not be counted the ſeventh generall before the other? Thirdly, What though the Biſhop of Rome conſented not? no more did he to that act of the Chalcedon Councell, which giveth the Patriark of Conſtantinople equall authority to the Biſhop of Rome; yet is it held to be univerſall. Againe, it had the Patriark of Conſtantinoples conſent, who was then Paulus, who is the chiefe of the Eaſt Churches, as the Pope would be of the Weſt. Wherefore for ought yet alleaged, the ſeventh generall Councell ſhall be that which was kept at Conſtantinople, not the other at Nice. And of this ſuperſtitious Councell one of their owne giveth this teſtimony; That the Fathers there, Dæmonum ſpectris, & muliebribus ſomniis parum verecunde abutebantur: did unſhamefaſtly abuſe the viſions of devils, and the dreames of women, to prove the adoration of images, Eſpence. in 2 Timoth. p. 151. a.

Laſtly, againſt the adoration of images we have the teſtimony of the Civill law, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 14. leg. 7. Martian. Abſit à ſeculo noſtro, &c. Farre be it, that in our time the accuſtomed honour ſhould bee given unto the curſed idols, incenſe to be burnt unto them, &c. And becauſe it will bee here anſwered, that this law was made onely againſt the idols of the heathen: ſee further, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 27. leg. 2. Theodoſ. Quando ſtatua noſtra eriguntur, &c. adſit judex ſine adorationis ambitioſo faſtigio: When our images are erected, let the Magiſtrate be preſent, without any ambitious or flattering ſhew of adoration. This law forbiddeth the images of godly Emperours, and ſo alſo Saints, to bee adored.

Their owne decrees agree hereunto: Decret. p. 3. diſtinct. 3. cap. 27. Gregor. Sanctorum imagines quod adorari vetuiſſes, omnino laudamus, &c. We doe every way commend you, for that you did forbid the images of Saints to be worſhipped, &c. What could be ſaid more directly againſt the adoration of images?

Epiphanius of the Greek Church condemneth the adoration of images: Mortui ſunt qui adorantur, ipſorum vero imagines, quæ nunquam vixerunt, &c. adorandas introduxerunt, adulterante mente ab uno ſolo Deo, &c. They are dead which are adored, but their images, which never were alive they have brought in to be adored, with a minde adulterating from God, &c. Bellarmine telleth us, that hee ſpeaketh againſt thoſe which worſhipped images as the Gentiles did their idols with divine worſhip.

Bellar. lib. 2. de imaginib. c. 16.

Contra. 1. He ſpeaketh againſt all kinde of adoration of images: he calleth it ſimulacriſticum ſtudium, a ſtudy of imagery, and of the Virgin Mary he ſaith, ipſa honorata, ſed non ad adorationem data. ſhe is to be honoured, but not given to be adored, &c. making a difference betweene civill honour, and religious adoration. 2 The Papiſts themſelves are not farre from giving divine adoration to Saints and their images, as one of their owne writers ſaith: that many Chriſtians, Divos divaſq; non aliter venerantur, quàm Deum: doe worſhip their he and ſhe Saints, no otherwiſe than God. The Muſcovites as ſuperſtitious as they are at this day, which follow the Greek Church, doe not worſhip their images: as Faber reporteth, Non unum vel alterum adorare, &c. Thou ſhalt hardly finde one that doth adore them, though they uſe them as monuments: Sacranus ſaith, imagines operis & artificii catholicorum horrent: the images of the work and making of the Catholikes, though it be of the crucifix, they doe abhorre, &c. that is, carved and graven images, for they allowed none but painted in plaine tables: ſo alſo another ſaith, Statuas nullas in templis venerantur: they worſhip no images in their temples.

Lodovic. Vives in Auguſt. de civitat. Dei lib. 8. c. ultim. De religione Muſcovit. Cap. 2. error. 7. Ad D. chrytiticum de religio. Ruſſer. Alvarez. deſcr. Æthiop. cap. ultimi.

2 The Æthiopike Church, though they have plaine painted images, yet as it ſeemeth, they worſhip them not: for they keepe them wrapped up in their veſtures among other papers, and bring them not forth unleſſe it be upon feſtivall dayes: yet Damianus would make us beleeve, that, in their Churches, the images of God, of the Virgin Mary and Saints, haberi colique, are received and worſhipped: but he ſpeaketh this by hearesſay, whereas Alvares the reporter of the other, did a long time dwell among them, and ſo was better acquainted with their faſhions.

But Bellarmine telleth us, he onely ſpeaketh againſt ſuperſtitious adoration of images, whereby they are worſhipped as gods, chap. 16. Contra. Nay he forbiddeth they ſhould be adored, omnibus modis, by all wayes and meanes whatſoever, and he further ſaith, aliud eſt picturam adorare, aliud quid ſit adorandum per picturam addiſcere: it is one thing to adore a picture, another to learne by a picture what is to be adored, &c. he alloweth no adoration at all, but onely an hiſtoricall uſe of pictures.

Argum. 1. His beſt argument is taken from the practice in the old Teſtament, the images of Cherubims were allowed in the Temple.

Anſwer. To this objection anſwer is made before: firſt, that they had Gods expreſſe commandement for it: Secondly, and beſide, they were onely in the moſt holy place, whither the high Prieſt only came, where the Arke was covered with Cherubims: Thirdly, the other pictures of Cherubims, which were in the vale, were onely for ornament, and comelineſſe, not ſet up for an idle ſhew. Fourthly, and thereby was ſignified the preſence of the Angels, ſpecially in holy places, where God is invocated, as Chryſoſtome well obſerveth: Cum in aere Angelorum multitudo verſatur, multo magis in eccleſia, multo amplius hodierno die, cum Dominus eorum aſcendit in cœlum: Seeing there is a multitude of Angels in the aire, much more in the Church, much more this day, when the Lord aſcended into heaven, &c.

Homil. de aſcenſion.

The Proteſtants.

It is not ſafe to ſet up any images painted, carved, or graven, in Churches and places of Gods worſhip, unleſſe they be ſuch pictures, which are for comelineſſe and ornament onely, or for hiſtoricall uſe, and thoſe alſo very ſparingly, and cauteloully without any manner of offence to be uſed.

Argum. 1. We reade in Ezechiel, that there were the ſimilitude of creeping things, and abominable beaſts painted upon the wall, which were privily made, unto the which they went by a ſecret doore made in the wall: even theſe idolatrous Iſraelites were aſhamed to ſet up ſuch pictures publikely, they ran into corners unto them.

Ezech.8.10.

Argum. 2. Moſes ſaith, Deut. 4. 15. Take heed to your ſelves, you ſaw no image on the day that the Lord ſpake unto you: God hath given us a patterne and preſident, that where preaching is, no images ſhould be ſet up: for it would draw away the people from attention, while they are gazing upon them: and it may be an occaſion unto them of ſtumbling, and therefore they are bid to take heed to themſelves.

Deut.4.15.

See the teſtimony of Claudius Minerius Martyr before, error 44. that images are not to be ſet up before Chriſtians, becauſe they are ſo prone to idolatry.

1 Epiphanius ſhall ſpeak for the Greek Church; who in an Epiſtle to Ioannes Patriark of Jeruſalem writeth, that finding a certaine picture of a man hanging in the doore of an Oratorie, cauſed it to be cut in peeces, adding, that it was againſt the authority of Scripture, quod in eccleſia penderet imago hominis, that the picture of a man ſhould hang in the Church.

To this place they make us divers anſwers: 1. Alphonſus de Caſtro doth note him of error. 2 Valentia ſaith, the authority of the whole Church ought more to prevaile with us. 3 Marianus Victorius in his Annotations upon that Epiſtle, ſaith it was the picture of ſome profane man, whereas Epiphanius ſaith himſelfe it ſeemed to be the picture of Chriſt, or of ſome Saint. 4 Thomas Waldenſ. ſaith Epiphanius did ſo, becauſe of the error of the Anthropomorphites, which was rife in thoſe dayes. 5 But Bellarmine hath found out another anſwer, that thoſe words are ſuppoſititia, foiſted in: yet is the whole Epiſtle found tranſlated by Hierome, tom. 3. I think he borrowed this anſwer from the peremptory Duke of Muſcovia, who denieth the truth of this hiſtory, and maketh it to be a fained thing. Thus, when they can anſwer nothing elſe, they deny the author, or ſuppoſe one vaine thing or other: meaſuring others by themſelves, becauſe they take upon them to correct, or rather corrupt authors (as their expurgatorie Indices bewray their fraud) they imagine alſo ſo of others: they ſhould doe well to ſhew when, by whom, and how long ſince, thoſe words have beene coined, which they ſhall be never able to ſhew.

2 Origen when Celſus objected that the Chriſtians did not care for altars nor images, maketh this anſwer: that the Chriſtians had images, non per impuros opifices fabricata, ſed per Dei verbum in nobis

Lib.8.cont. Celſum. nobis formata, not made by impure workmen, but formed within us by the word of God, &c. It ſeemeth that in theſe times Chriſtians had no images, for Origen then would have juſtified and defended the uſe of them: The cuſtome of the Æthiopike Church is ſhewed before, err. 44. They have certaine pictures, but wrapped up in their veſtries, which are onely brought out upon feſtivall dayes: neither will they have Chriſt painted, as he was crucified, ſaying that no man is worthy to ſee him in that paſſion: It ſeemeth then, that they hang not up pictures in their Churches. Alvarez c. ult.

Harm.ſerm.2. pag.49. 3 Sweveland chap. 22. They held it an abominable thing, to admit any images, graven or painted in the Church, and they prove it by that place of Epiphanius before alleaged.

2 Sam.5.8. 4 I will here alleage the teſtimony of our Doway men: who give this marginall note upon that place: The blinde and lame ſhall not enter into the Temple: Idols (ſay they) that have eyes, and cannot ſee, feet and cannot goe, ſhall not enter into the Church of Chriſt, &c. As though all popiſh images be not of this ſort, they have eyes, eares, hands, mouth, feet, and can neither ſee, heare, handle, ſpeak or goe, as it is in the Pſalme. Pſal.115.6.

The fourth Article, VVhat manner of Worſhip is to be given to Images.

The Papiſts.

46. Error. B*ellarmine*, who is the mouth of the reſt, ſetteth downe theſe poſitions: Firſt, that images, though they are not properly to be worſhipped with divine honor, neither is it ſafe ſo to teach in the hearing of the people; yet improperly they may have the ſame worſhip, which properly belongeth to the Saint whoſe image it is, cap. 23. Secondly, there is a religious worſhip properly due unto images, as they are conſidered in themſelves, & non ſolum ut vicem gerunt exemplaris, and not only as they repreſent another thing: Bellarm. de Imaginib. Sanctor. lib. 2. cap. 21.

Argum. Bellarmine reaſoneth thus: As the image is to that, whoſe image it is, ſo the worſhip of the image is to the worſhip of the exemplar, patterne, or patrone thereof: but the image, ſecundum quid, after a ſort, is the thing it ſelfe, as a painted man is a man after a ſort: therefore after a ſort alſo the ſame worſhip, which is due to the thing it ſelfe, may bee given to the image, cap. 25.

Anſ. Firſt, he taketh that to be granted, which is in queſtion: for we deny, that an image hath any worſhip at all, and therefore it is in vaine to contend, what manner of worſhip it ſhould be. Secondly, his owne example is againſt him: for a painted or pictured man, cannot be ſaid to be a man, but onely the image of a man; ſo neither can the worſhip of the thing be given to the image of the thing. Thirdly, we grant, as the image is to the thing, ſo is the worſhip, &c. for both ſuch images are idolatrous, and all worſhip given unto them, impious.

The Proteſtants.

WE have ſhewed before that images ought not to be worſhipped at all, and that all religious worſhip is due only unto God: wherefore to us this queſtion is ſuperfluous, with what religious worſhip images are to be adored; for no religious worſhip at all is due unto them: yet let us vouchſafe the while, to ſee the contradictions that are amongſt them, and the abſurdities that they are driven unto.

Argum. 1. Our Rhemiſts confeſſe, that images are not at all to be worſhipped with any divine honour, Act. 17. ſect. 5. But it was decreed in the idolatrous Councell of Nice the 2. and maintained by Thomas Aquinas, Bonaventure, Cajetanus, and other Papiſts, that the image of God is to be worſhipped with the ſame worſhip that is due unto God. And Bellarmine commeth not much ſhort of them, that ſaith, impropriè, improperly images may have the ſame worſhip: as the Kings Ambaſſadour improperly is honoured as the King. I pray you how farre are theſe men from making their images gods? for they ſay they are the Lords Deputies and Vicegerents, as the Ambaſſadour is for the King.

Againe, the Rhemiſts affirme, that the images of Chriſt are not to be honoured or accounted of, but for the reſpect and relation they have to our Saviour, Annot. Philip. 2. 2. So the Tridentine Councell determineth, Seſſ. 25. Honos qui eis debetur, refertur ad prototypa, quæ illæ repreſentant: The honour due unto them is to be referred unto thoſe things which they repreſent.

Nicen. 2. action. 2. Non ipſum lignum honoratur, ſed ipſum illud, quod in ligno datur contemplandum: The wood it ſelfe is not to be honoured, but that which is in the wood is offered to our contemplation, Likewiſe, Action. 3. Imagini honor exhibitus, ad ipſum prototypum referatur: The honour exhibited to the image, muſt be referred to the originall. Adrian. 1. Epiſt. ad Conſtantin. Conſtat ob recordationem ſanctorum, imagines tantum pingi, venerari, coli: It is manifeſt that images are worſhipped and reverenced onely in the remembrance of the Saints. But Bellarmine teacheth cleane contrary, that they have not onely a reſpective honour, as repreſenting other things, but properly and in themſelves conſidered are to be worſhipped. We may ſee by this, how handſomely they agree together.

Argum. 2. Let us ſee their abſurdities. Firſt, they hold that all images are not to be worſhipped alike: for they make three degrees of religious worſhip; the higheſt, which they call λατρεία, due unto God; the loweſt religious worſhip, which they call δουλεία, proper to the Saints; the middle or meane worſhip, called by them ὑπερδουλεία, as you would ſay, Super-ſervice, to bee given onely to the Virgin Mary. And as theſe three, Chriſt, the Virgin, the Saints doe differ, they ſay, in honour; ſo their Images accordingly muſt be diſtinguiſhed in their worſhip.

Thus it commeth about, that a Rood of wood repreſenting Chriſt, is more to be honoured, than an image of our Ladie of ſilver; and her image, if it bee but of ſtone, is more to bee reverenced than a Saints image of gold: and thus the excellencie of nature, which is given to theſe things by creation, is inverted.

If it ſhall be anſwered, that a baſer mettall may be preferred before a more precious kind, not in reſpect of the matter, but of the higher repreſentation: We reply, that all ſuch repreſentations by images are idolatrous, and therfore cannot obſcure the privilege of nature: ſo alſo the braſen Serpent had a good ſignification, yet when it began to be abuſed to idolatrie, Hezekiah made no better account of it, than of a peece of braſſe: and ſo he calleth it, Nehuſhtan. 2.Reg.18.4.

Againe, whereas beſide theſe three deviſed worſhips which are properly due (as they ſay) to the Saints, not to their images, the images alſo have their proper worſhips: they make three other inferiour kinds of worſhip, which doe exceed in degree, as the other ſuperiour kinds doe: ſo as Chriſt hath his λατρεία, worſhip, his image muſt have ὑπολατρεία, his under-worſhip, (for wee muſt coyne new names for ſtrange deviſes) their Lady Mary hath her ὑπερδουλεία, ſuper-ſervice: her image muſt have an ὑποϋπερδουλεία, an under-over-ſervice: as the Saints have their δουλεία, ſervice; ſo their images muſt have their ὑποδουλεία, an under-ſervice. And thus have we ſix kinds of religious worſhip; as Bellarmine hath coyned them, cap. 25. and yet before the Jeſuite told us but of two kinds of religious worſhip, and the third a civill; three in all, Lib.1.de Sanct.beatit.cap.12.

But the Scripture acknowledgeth one only kind of religious worſhip, and that due only unto the Lord: Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerve. And the Angell forbad Iohn to fall downe before him, giving a rule for all religious worſhip: Worſhip God, ſaith he, Apoc. 22.9.

Matth.4.10.
Apoc.22.9.

Now, if our adverſaries deale plainly with us, and tell us in good ſooth, that they would not have Images to be adored with divine worſhip: I aske them, whether to offer incenſe bee not a part of divine worſhip? They cannot denie it: for Hezekiah therfore brake downe the braſen Serpent, becauſe the people burned incenſe to it. Seing then the Jeſuite alloweth cenſing and burning of odours before Images, *Bellarm.lib.1.de Sanctor beatit. cap.*13. They give unto them divine honour. The Jeſuits ſimple ſhift, that offering of incenſe was a ſacrifice then, and ſo part of divine worſhip, but it is none now, is not worth the anſwer, *Bellarm.lib.*2.*cap.*17.

2 King.18.4.

We want not the witneſſe of the Papiſts themſelves; as Alexander. 3.p. quaſt. 30. *art. ultim. Durand.lib.*3.*diſt.*9.qu. 2. Alphonſus à Caſtro, &c. All theſe are bold to affirme, that an Image in it ſelfe, is not to be worſhipped at all.

1 The Greekes uſe a kind of reverence at this day to the images of Saints, but Ieremie telleth us, that all the honour is referred to the firſt exemplars: Res eſt impia, et a Chriſti Eccleſia alieniſſima, vere & non ad aliud relate ſacram imagines adorare: It is a wicked thing, ſaith he, and far from the Church of Chriſt, to worſhip ſacred images verily, and not with reference to another thing, &c. And what kind of reference this is, hee telleth us in another place: that divers wayes have men found out to conſerve the memorie of their benefactors, as ſepulchres, images, pillars, feſtivall dayes: Quorum omnium unum eſt inſtitutum, non ſincere, ut viri præclari oblivioni mandentur, &c. Of all which there is one end, not to ſuffer, that excelent men ſhould be forgotten: This is but a civill and hiſtoricall end of images, to keepe in remembrance the vertues of holy men departed. The Muſcovites to this day doe not adore their images at all: they yeed a kind of reverence by bowing their head, not in kneeling, or uncovering the head, which reverence they ſhew to other holy things, they touch not the Goſpels with their hands, Niſi caput prius multoties inclinando, But firſt bowing their heads often: And Faber in his report giveth this reaſon, why they adore not images: becauſe there is no man which is ignorant, A lege prohibitum eſſe, ne veneremur lapides, That it is forbidden by the law, that wee ſhould worſhip ſtones.

2 The Æthiopians at this day, doe not give adoration to their images: for they bring them ſeldome into the peoples ſight: neither doe they uſe any reſtauration or amending of the images defaced or worne out upon the Church wals: yet a kind of reverence they ſhew, as to other things ordained for ſacred uſe: as the Eccleſiaſticall perſons do put of their hoſe and ſhooes when they come into the Church, as God commanded Moſes, Exod. 3. And if any paſſe by a Church being on horſeback, he alighteth downe, and boweth himſelfe till he be paſt it.

Alvares deſcrip.Æthiop. c. ultim.

3 The reformed Churches condemne all worſhip of images, and therefore it is needleſſe for them to diſpute, what kind of adoration ſhould be yeelded unto them: as confeſſion of Saxonie, artic. 21. calleth adoration of images a foule ſuperſtition: Bohemia cap. 17. Images are not to be worſhipped with any honour or affection of ſpirit.

4 The Latine Church is of ſundry opinions concerning the manner of worſhipping images. 1. Gregorie in his time allowed images to bee made, but onely for hiſtoricall remembrance of things done: Quod legentib. ſcriptura, hoc idiotis præſtat pictura intuentib. As writing is to the reader, ſo a picture to the ignorant beholder, &c. 2 Thomas Aquin. defendeth, that an image muſt be worſhipped with the ſame honour, which is due unto the perſon whoſe image it is; as the Crucifix with the ſame honour that Chriſt hath: And Azarius the Jeſuite confeſſeth, that this is the conſtant opinion of the ſchoolemen. 3 But Bellarmine dare not goe ſo farre, he ſaith, that images, *impropri*e, improperly, and accidentally may be worſhipped, cultu latria, with divine worſhip. c.23. 4 Other yet better adviſed, denie divine worſhip in any ſenſe to be exhibited unto images: howſoever it bee conſidered, though as an image, and ſigne of another thing, Res eſt inſenſibilis & creatura, It is a thing without ſenſe and a creature, to the which the adoration called λατρεία, is not to be exhibited: Gabriel Beel hee alloweth no divine worſhip in any ſenſe, but that inferiour kinde, called δουλεία, ſervice. 5 But Wicelius a devoted Romaniſt, denieth this kinde of worſhip alſo. It grieveth me (ſaith hee) that under pretext I know not of what (dulia) it is affirmed, that one may, and ought to honour with adoration, the Saints and their images. 6 Our Doway men further acknowledge, that no honour is due to the image, but unto him, whoſe image it is: as they give this note in the margen, Chriſt and Saints are honoured in their image: and in the annotation: The honour is not done to the image for it ſelfe, but at the preſence of the image to Chriſt, or Saint, whoſe image it is, &c. They differ from other Papiſts, allowing no honour to the image for it ſelfe, but with relation to the Saint, whoſe image it is. Thus they wearie themſelves with their brainſicke and braineleſſe inventions.

The ſecond part of this Queſtion, concerning the ſigne of the Croſſe.

THis part alſo is divided into certaine points or articles.

1 Of the honour due to the true Croſſe of Chriſt, whereon he ſuffered.
2 Of the image of the Croſſe.
3 Of the ſigne of the Croſſe in the forehead, or made otherwiſe with the hand.
4 Of the power and efficacie of the Croſſe.

The firſt Article, of the true Croſſe whereon our Saviour ſuffered.

The Papiſts.

47.Error.

THe wood of the Croſſe, both the whole and every peece thereof (ſay they) is worthie of great worſhip and reverence: and therefore it hath beene worthily viſited in pilgrimages, honoured with feſtivall daies, reſerved with all devotion in times paſt, Rhemiſt.annot.Iob.19.ſect.2.

*Argum.*1. It is highly ſanctified, by the touching, bearing, and oblation of the ſacred bodie of Chriſt, the Altar of that ſupreme ſacrifice, and inſtrument of our redemption: Ergo, to be worſhipped, *Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm.lib. 2.de Imagin.cap.*27.

Anſwer. If therefore it was holy becauſe it touched the body of Chriſt, and was an inſtrument of his death: by the ſame reaſon, the nailes that pierced him, the ſpeare that gored his ſide, the tormenters that crucified, Iudas that betrayed and kiſſed him: All theſe ſhould alſo bee honoured and worſhipped, that handled and touched him, and were inſtruments, occaſions, and procurers of his death.

Againe, admit it was holy, becauſe of Chriſts body, it was holy no otherwiſe than the ground where the Angell appeared to Moſes, Exod. 3. and to Ioſua chap. 5. which Bellarmine elſe-where confeſſeth, was holy, ob præſentiam angeli, becauſe of the preſence of the Angell: that is, it continued not alwaies holy, but was for that inſtant: ſo the Croſſe was holy, becauſe of the neereneſſe and preſence of Chriſts body, but this holineſſe remained not afterward.

*Argum.*2. The Croſſe of Chriſt was found out, ſay they, in Conſtantines time the great, by a ſtrange miracle: for there were three Croſſes digged up, which had beene a long time buried in the earth: the two Croſſes upon the which the two theeves ſuffered; the third whereon our Saviour hung: They brought them all three to a waman that then lay very ſicke, they laid the two firſt to her, and ſhee remained as ſhee was; then they applied the third, and ſhe was preſently made whole, Bellarm.ex Ruffino: Ergo, the Croſſe is holy and to be worſhipped.

Anſwer. The invention of the Croſſe by Helena Conſtantines mother, ſeemeth to be a forged and fabulous ſtorie.

1 Euſebius that writeth of the life of Conſtantine, and the acts of Helena, and regiſtreth divers matters of leſſe importance, yea hee ſheweth how the Mount Calvarie, where the Heathen had built idolatrous Temples, was purged, and in that place (ſay they) the Croſſe was found; yet he maketh no mention at all of the invention of the Croſſe: which is very like he would not have omitted, if there had beene any ſuch thing.

2 The moſt ancient author that writeth of this matter, is Ambroſe, de obitu Theodoſii, which oration Eraſmus thinketh to be forged in Ambroſes name.

3 There is great diſagreement amongſt writers about this ſtorie. Ambroſe ſaith, the Croſſe was knowne by the title that Pilate faſtened to it. Sozomenus and Nicephorus ſay, the letters were worne out, and it could not be diſcerned by the title. Paulinus ſaith, the way to diſcerne it, was revealed to Helena : Ruffinus aſcribeth the device to Marcarius Biſhop of Jeruſalem : Paulinus ſaith, it was knowne by raiſing up a dead man to life : Ruffinus, by reſtoring a ſicke woman to health, Fulk. annot. Iohn* 19. ſect. 2. Thus wee ſee of what ſmall credit this ſtorie is. And be it granted, that there might be ſome ſuch thing found : yet they muſt bring better proofe for that miraculous invention, before wee will beleeve it.

The Proteſtants.

WHe are not taught any where in the word of God, to give any religious worſhip to any creature, nor to adore ſtockes and ſtones, no nor the very Croſſe it ſelfe, whereon Chriſt was crucified, if it were now to be ſeene or had.

Argum.* 1. If there had belonged unto the Church any religious care of it, the Apoſtles would (no doubt) have procured the ſafe keeping thereof, and not have ſuffered the Church to want it 300. yeeres : and it had beene an eaſier ſute for Ioſeph and Nicodemus to begge the Croſſe, than the bodie of Jeſus.

Argum.* 2. If the Croſſe were to be adored, wee are uncertaine which it is, and where to be had ; and ſo might worſhip a common peece of wood, for the wood of the Croſſe : for there is no doubt, but this relique is forged and counterfeited as the reſt be. Evagrius ſaith, the Croſſe was at Apamea ; Ruffinus, that it was left at Jeruſalem, and that Helena ſent a peece of it to Conſtantinople : and in manie other places there are peeces of the Croſſe to be ſeene, which if they were all laid together (as Eraſmus ſaith) would fill a ſhip : for why ? Paulinus witneſſeth, that the Croſſe remaineth whole at Jeruſalem, as though it had beene never touched, though innumerable peeces be daily cut off from it, at the requeſt of men. But this fable that goeth under the name of Paulinus, the Papiſts themſelves are aſhamed of.

But if the true and right Croſſe were to bee had ; why might it not bee ſerved, if people began to abuſe it to idolatrie, as Hezekiah ſerved the braſen ſerpent? he brake it in peeces, when the people began to make an Idoll of it.

Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus ambulavit in mari, &c. Chriſt walked in the Sea, to ſhew us that our way muſt be through the Sea : but thou, becauſe thou canſt not walke in the Sea, muſt ſaile in a ſhip, and be caried in a peece of wood : Beleeve in him that was crucified for thee : and a little before, no man can paſſe the ſea of this world, but being borne up with the Croſſe of Chriſt. Tractat. 2. in Ioan.

Here Auguſtine maketh no reckoning of the wood of the Croſſe, which was eaſier to be had in his dayes, than ever ſince, but aſcribed all to faith and beliefe in Chriſt crucified.

Gelaſius decret. de Apocryphis, writeth thus, Scriptura de inventione crucis dominicæ novellæ quadam relationes ſunt, & alia de inventione capitis Iohannis Baptiſtæ, &c. The writings of the invention of the Croſſe are but new deviſed reports, and of the invention of Iohn Baptiſts head : and therefore he giveth Chriſtians warning to take heed how they read them, &c. This is the judgement of a Biſhop of Rome, as touching the finding out of the Croſſe which hee judgeth to be a fabulous report : this decree Gracian hath remembred, part.* 1. 15. cap. 3.

The teſtimonie of Maſter Hawkes holy Martyr is ſingular : If the Croſſe were of ſuch profit unto us, as you ſay, why did not Chriſts diſciples take it up and ſet it on a pole, and carrie it in proceſſion, with (ſalve feſta dies !) Chadſey : It was taken up. Hawkes: Who tooke it up ? Helene, as you ſay, for ſhe ſent a peece of it to a place of Religion, where I was with the viſitors, when that houſe was ſuppreſſed, and the peece of the holy Croſſe (which they had in ſuch eſtimation) being called for, it was found to be but a peece of a lath, covered over with copper, and double gilt, as though it had beene cleane gold : Fox. p.* 1589. col. 2. Were they not well occupied now, that thus deluded the people, giving them ſuch Croſſes to be worſhipped ? Pag. 1444. c. 40.

To admit that narration of the invention of the Croſſe by Helena Conſtantinus mother. 1. It was not their meaning to have it adored : Socrates writeth, that Helena did keepe part of it in a ſilver ſheaeth or box at Jeruſalem, for a monument for them that were deſirous to ſee it : and ſent the other part to Conſtantine, who put it within his owne ſtatua, or image at Conſtantinople : his intent was not to have it worſhipped, unleſſe his image ſhould be adored withall, which groſſe idolatrie he was farre from : And it may ſeeme alſo probable, that the parcels of the Croſſe, was not ſo carefully kept at Jeruſalem, which Helena left there : for then Theodoſius the younger needed not to have ſent a golden Croſſe to have beene ſet up in mount Calvarie in ſtead thereof, if it be true that Nicephorus writeth. And what reverence they would have yeelded to the Croſſe, whereon Chriſt ſuffered, may bee gathered out of Damaſcene, who would have the ſpeare, nailes, the cave, the ſepulchre, the manger, the place it ſelfe Golgotha, and all things, that touched Chriſts bodie, to bee adored, as well as the wood of the Croſſe : but I hope no man is ſo abſurd, to thinke, that the ſcourge, the hammer, the chaines, the cordes, and other inſtruments of Chriſts death, are to be adored : then adore alſo the villaines and hangmen, which ſcourged him, and nailed him to the Croſſe.

Chriſt hanged, which was ſent her from Jeruſalem, whereof ſhe had made two Croſſes, one ſhe ſent him, the other ſhee kept: the wood thereof was blacke, &c. whether this were a part of the Croſſe, whereon Chriſt ſuffered, is not the queſtion, (it is more like it was not) but howſoever the Æthiopians would not adore it: for their manner is to adore no images, as is ſhewed in the former queſtion the laſt part, and ſo neither the image or ſigne of the Croſt.

3 Confeſſion of Bohemia, c.17. it is by no meanes to be ſuffered, that the honour of the Lamb Chriſt our Lord, and things belonging to him, and due to him alone, and appertaining to the proper and true Prieſthood of his nature, ſhould be transferred to them &c. That is, to Saints, and by the ſame reaſon, that worſhip is not due to the Croſſe, which belongeth onely to Chriſt.

4 Eraſmus ſaith, Fragmentula ligni crucis tam multa, ut ſi in acervum redigant, vix una navis oneraria vehat: The frangments of the wood of the Croſſe are ſo many, that if they were gathered to one heape, a ſhip of burden would ſcarce carrie them. The wood of the Croſſe then being forged in ſo many places, how can worſhip be yeelded unto it, without great idolatrie? Annot. in. Mat. 23. dedicated to Leó the 10.

The ſecond Article, of the Image of the Croſſe or Crucifix.

The Papiſts.

43 Error. THe Image of Chriſt upon the Croſſe, whether painted, carved, or graven, we ſee is had in great honour amongſt our adverſaries: They kneele downe before their Crucifix, weare it in their boſomes next to their heart, carrie it in their journeyes, ſet it up to be adored in their Churches.

*Argum.*1. As adoration was done unto God in old time, at and before the Arke and Tabernacle; ſo it may be done now, at, or before a Crucifix, relique, image, Rhemiſt. annot. Heb. 11. ſect. 9.

*Anſw.*1. It is not all one to worſhip God at or before a thing, as to worſhip and adore the thing: the Iſraelites worſhipped God, in, at or before the Tabernacle; yet did they not worſhip the Tabernacle, as you doe the Crucifix.

2 They might worſhip God before the Arke, becauſe they were commanded ſo to doe: but it is not lawfull to fall downe before a crucifix, becauſe all ſuch Images are flatly in the ſecond commandement forbidden.

*Argum.*2. The ſigne of the Croſſe appeared to Conſtantine in the ayre, he cauſed the Croſſe to be carried before him as an Enſigne in battaile: When the Jewes had leave of Iulian to build the Temple, there were Croſſes ſeene every where in their garments, and many ſuch apparitions have there beene of the Croſſe: Ergo, it is to be honoured and worſhipped, Bellarm. cap. 28.

Anſw. 1. What if Conſtantine cauſed the Croſſe to be carried before him, ſtamped it in his coyne, ſet up his picture with the Croſſe in his hand? all this we grant was done and may be done againe: It was but a civill, no religious uſe of the Croſſe: He worſhipped it not, unleſſe you will ſay, he ſet up his owne Image with the Croſſe in his hand to be worſhipped.

2 As for the apparitions of the Croſſe (though we thinke many of them to be forged) yet we denie not, but that the Lord hath, and may yet ſhew, what ſignes and tokens it pleaſeth him in the heaven, and the earth: yet it followeth not, that the ſigne of the Croſſe ſhould therefore be worſhipped, becauſe it was ſhewed to Conſtantine, no more than other ſignes and ſtrange ſights, that many times appeare in the ayre.

For the other apparition of Croſſes in the Jewes garments, we will requite it with another, and yet you ſhall gaine nothing by it. Anno 1505. under the reigne of the Emperour Maximilian, there appeared divers tokens of bloodie Croſſes, the nailes, the ſpunge, the ſpeare, and other ſignes of Chriſts paſſion, in the garments of men and women, yea in their rockes, while they were a ſpinning, reported by Francis Mirandula, Carion, Functius, Melancton, Placcius: But the Popiſh Chronologers make no mention of it, as Chriſtianus Maſſaus, and others of that profeſſion. As the Croſſes in the Jewes garments, that went about to eſtabliſh their ceremonies againe, did ſhew, that doe what they could, the Goſpell, that is, the preaching of his Croſſe, ſhould take place, as it did: ſo theſe ſignes in Germanie did portend, that the Goſpell in Germany ſhould be preached, though the Papiſts ſtrived never ſo much againſt it. But it is a farre fetcht concluſion to inferre hereupon, that the ſigne or Image of the Croſſe is to be adored.

The Proteſtants.

THe image of the Croſſe of Chriſt, is neither to be painted, carved, graven, for any religious uſe, nor to be adored or worſhipped: but men ſo doing doe fall into the grievous and high offence and ſinne of Idolatrie. And yet we grant, that the ſigne of the Croſſe is not to be deſpiſed, ſcorned or contemned: and therefore it was enacted by Theodoſ. that whoſoever did picture the Croſſe upon the ground, or pavement, that is, in contempt of it, ſhould be grievouſly puniſhed, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 11. leg. 1 The like is decreed Trul. Synod. can. 73. Likewiſe Honorius made a law, that the Jewes ſhould not burne the ſigne or picture of the Croſſe, lib. 1. tit. 12. leg. 10. but it followeth not, the ſigne of the Croſſe muſt not be deſpiſed, or contemned, therefore it is to be worſhipped: for though the image of the Prince be not of the ſubjects to be worſhipped, yet there is no good ſubject that will rend it in peeces, or deface it: wherefore that the ſigne of the Croſſe is not to be adored, thus it may appeare.

*Argum.*1. The Scripture never calleth the Croſſe, whereon Chriſt ſuffered, the holy Croſſe, as the Papiſts doe, but rather curſed: for S. Paul proveth that Chriſt became accurſed for us, becauſe he died upon the Croſſe, according to the Scripture, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree. How then is it now honoured, which was then accurſed? And if all Croſſes are worthie honour, becauſe of Chriſt his Croſſe, then why not all nayles, and ſpeares? for with them hee was pierced; all thornes alſo, becauſe of his crowne of thornes: yea, and all horſe-mangers too, becauſe hee was laid in a Cribbe?

Bellarmine anſwereth, that we worſhip all Croſſes, becauſe they are all Images of Chriſts Croſſe: ſo are not all ſpeares, and thornes, &c. *cap.*30.

Contra. As there were other ſpeares and thornes, &c. than thoſe wherewith Chriſt was crucified; ſo were there alſo other Croſſes, than that, upon the which hee ſuffered: for S. Peter and S. Andrew were crucified, and tormented upon the Croſſe: and S. Ambroſe ſaith, Alia cruces nihil mihi proſunt, ſola crux Chriſti mihi utilis eſt, &c. Other croſſes doe nothing profit me, only Chriſts Croſſe is profitable unto me, lib. 6. in luc. Therefore all Croſſes are not images of Chriſts Croſſe: ſo then hee hath anſwered juſt nothing.

*Argum.*2. They are uncertaine of what faſhion the Croſſe of Chriſt was, whether like the Greeke letter, Υ. or this letter, X. or the Greeke T A V. T. or of this faſhion, †. or of this, ✢. which is the uſuall forme of their Croſſes: how then dare they worſhip that which they know not, and are uncertaine of?

3 All thoſe reaſons which wee brought before againſt the worſhipping of Images, part. 1. *hujus quaſt. articul.*3. may be urged againſt the adoration of Crucifixes.

Concion.26.

Auguſtine thus writeth, Hanc intuentes ſalutiferam crucem, omne calumniantium ſuperborum virus expellimus: By beholding this helpfull, or healthfull croſſe, we are able to avoid the poyſon of all proud venemous cavillers. He ſpeaketh not of any Crucifix that they had in ſight, but of the frutfull meditation of the paſſion of Chriſt: as he ſaith a little before, Dum vigilantiſſima & diligentiſſima pietate Chriſtus crucifixus attenditur: When with diligent and watchfull and godly attention we conſider Chriſt crucified, Loe, this was Auguſtines Crucifix, to meditate upon the death of Chriſt.

Though the picture of Chriſt crucified have been uſed of ancient time, yet was it not then adored, but put onely to a civill uſe, to call to remembrance the ſtorie of Chriſts paſſion. Concil. Nicen. 2. *action.*2. Tharaſius the Preſident ſaith thus, Epiſtol. ad Antiochen. Epiſcop. Agnus, qui peccata mundi ſuſtulit juxta humanam effigiem configuratus erigitur, &c. The Lambe of God, which taketh away the ſinnes of the world, is figured in his humanitie, that wee may be drawne to the memorie of his incarnation, and may be led as by the hand, to thinke of his moſt holeſome death and paſſion.

*Action.*4 of the ſame Councell, Germanus writeth thus, Epiſtol. ad Thomam Epiſcop. Claudiopol. Apud Chriſtianos ſanctorum virorum imagines nihil aliud ſunt, quàm fortitudinis eorum delineatio, &c. Among Chriſtians the pictures of holy men are to no end elſe, but to deſcribe their fortitude and excellent vertue, and to admoniſh us to glorifie and praiſe God for them. Qua hiſtorica narratio per auditum docet, ea tacens pictura per imitationem oſtendit: That which in hiſtorie is taught by hearing, in picture is ſhewed by imitation, &c. Here is no mention made of any worſhipping of Images, Croſſes, or Crucifixes: but the uſe of pictures onely is to bring the hiſtorie to remembrance.

We have alſo the ſeale of Martyrs: Thomas Man condemned for that he ſaid he would not beleeve in the Crucifix, neither worſhip it, pag. 815. col. 2. artic. 7. Franciſcus San Romanus martyred at Burges in Spaine, anno 1540. for refuſing to doe homag to a wooden Croſſe, ſaying, it was not the manner of Chriſtians to worſhip wood, pag. 930.

1 We have ſeene the ancient judgement an practice of the Greeke Church, out of the 2. Nicen Councell.

2 The Æthiopians to this day will not have Jeſus Chriſt painted, as he was crucified, ſaying, that no man is worthie to ſee him in that paſſion.

4 Gregorie allowed images only for repreſentation, and hiſtoricall inſtruction: Aliud eſt picturam adorare, aliud per pictura hiſtoriam quid ſit adorandum addiſcere, &c. It is one thing to adore a picture, another by an hiſtoricall picture to learne what is to be adored.

Lib. 9. epiſt. 9.

The Third Article, of the ſigne of the Croſſe in the forehead, or made over any thing with the hand.

The Papiſts.

THey ſay, it is an holy and venerable ſigne, and meet to be uſed, to croſſe the forehead, and other parts, to bleſſe themſelves and their meats with croſſing and ſuch like, Rhemiſt. 49. Error.

*Argum.*1. Iacob croſſed his hands when he bleſſed his ſonnes, *Gen.*48.14. it is like our Saviour did lift up his hands in the forme of the croſſe, when he bleſſed. It is a convenient memoriall of the death of Chriſt: and therefore to be uſed, Rhemiſt. annot. Luk. 24. ſect. 5. The Doway tranſlators urge alſo the croſſing of Iacobs hands upon that place, pag. 146.

*Anſw.*1. Iacob laid his hands after that forme, becauſe of the preſent occaſion: for the younger ſonne that ſhould be the greater, was placed at his left hand, and the elder at the right.

2 Seeing the Scripture expreſſeth not in what manner Chriſt lifted up his hands, it is great preſumption for you to ſay, it was done in the ſimilitude of the Croſſe.

3 How can it be a convenient memoriall of Chriſts death, being neither ordained of Chriſt, nor taught by his Apoſtles ſo to be?

Ezech.9.4. *Argum.*2. *Ezech.*9.4. The Angell is commanded to ſigne with Tau, the foreheads of thoſe which mourned, &c. this, ſaith Bellarmine, was none other than the ſigne of the Croſſe, *cap.*29.

Anſw. Firſt, though the word Tau, there uſed, be the name of an Hebrew letter, yet it ſignifieth a ſigne, and is ſo tranſlated by the Septuagint, σημεῖον, give them, or mark them with a ſigne in their foreheads. Secondly, the Hebrew Tau, hath this forme ת, though in the Greeke language it hath another faſhion, yet this figure hath no affinitie with the ſigne of the Croſſe: wherefore they have gained nothing, though it be granted that they were marked with Tau. Thirdly, this ſigne, which the Angell maketh, none but the godly receive, and they are all delivered from deſtruction: but many a wicked and reprobate man is marked with the ſigne of the Croſſe: Ergo, this was no ſuch ſigne.

*Argum.*3. *Apocal.*7.3. Hurt not the earth, till we have ſealed the ſervants of God in their forehead: This is the ſigne of the Croſſe, Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. cap. 29. Apoc.7.3.

Anſw. It is the ſigne proper to Gods elect, and therefore not the ſigne of the Croſſe, which many reprobates have received. Let them heare their owne expoſitors; Bruno, in 2 *ad Timoth.*2. thus writeth; Deum ſuos conſignare, &c. That as a Captaine giveth his ſouldiers ſome ſigne, whereby they are knowne; ſo God giveth his a ſigne, which the devill ſeeing, leaveth them, as not appertaining to him. Hoc ſignum eſſe divinam electionem, &c. This ſigne is the divine election: and Anſelme upon theſe words, 2 *Timoth.*2. God knoweth who are his: Hoc cordi ſuo bonus impreſſum ſignum: let a man print this ſigne in his heart, and ſay to himſelfe, what doth it profit me, to ſeeme outwardly juſt, and be inwardly wicked? And then he further ſaith, Talis cogitatio eſt divini ſigilli impreſſio: Such a cogitation is an impreſſion of this ſigne: And this is the ſigne which the elect are marked with.

Our Doway countrimen come in here alſo with their verdict: Is not the forme of the croſſe as convenient a ſigne to put Chriſtians in minde how our Saviour redeemed us, as thoſe ſtones were to the Iewes, how God brought their fathers out of Iordan. Annot. in Ioſua. 4. 6.

*Anſw.*1. Thoſe ſtones were ſet up by Gods ſpeciall commandement: the like warrant cannot be ſhewed for the ſigne of the Croſſe. 2. Thoſe ſtones were uſed only for a remembrance of that benefit, and Croſſes alſo may have a civill uſe, to be ſet up in ſtreamers and banners, and ſuch like: but what is this to the adoration of the Croſſe, and putting of confidence in the externall ſigne?

The Proteſtants.

THough wee finde that the ſigne of the Croſſe hath been of ancient time uſed in Baptiſme, and is now in ſome reformed Churches without popiſh ſuperſtition: yet this ridiculous and ſuperſtitious abuſe of the ſigne of the Croſſe, which is common and uſuall among the Papiſts, to croſſe themſelves, their foreheads, their eyes, mouth, lippes, to croſſe themſelves going forth, and returning home, thinking thereby to be ſufficiently ſhended and preſerved from evill, wee doe utterly condemne, and have worthily aboliſhed.

*Argum.*1. This cuſtome of croſſing hath no warrant from Scripture, neither was practiſed by the Apoſtles: Yet S. Paul ſpeaketh of divers croſſes, as hee calleth the fruit and efficacie of Chriſts death

But it will be here replied, that this law ſpeaketh againſt the marking and marring of their faces, that were puniſhed and condemned to the mettall mines. Anſw. I grant it is ſo: but if there were ſuch vertue in the ſigne of the Croſſe, why might not a brand of the Croſſe in the forehead be as ſafe a defence, as the making of a croſſe with a finger? but this law ſpeaketh againſt all ſuch ſigning and marking of the forehead, with what markes ſoever.

Valentinus the Heretike was the firſt that made any great account of it, Irenæus lib. 1. cap. 1. therefore not to be uſed amongſt Chriſtians. Nos ab alienis noſtræ fidei demonſtrationes non recipimus: We therefore will not borrow demonſtrations of our faith from ſtrangers and aliens, Nicen. 2. action. 5.

1 The Muſcovites which follow the Greeke Church, doe much differ herein from the Latines: for as they abhorre all images though of the Crucifix being of their making : ſo alſo they uſe to croſſe themſelves after another manner : in formam crucis punctis tangunt, &c. they touch their forehead, then their breaſt, on the right ſide and on the left, with points, pricks or dots in the forme of a croſſe, and whoſoever ſigneth himſelfe otherwiſe with the croſſe, they count him an heretike. Thus variable are theſe ſuperſtitious croſſe-makers, in their fancies and toyes. Sacran. Elucid. cap. 2. & 7. Guagnin. de relig. Muſcov.

The fourth Article, of the Power and efficacie of the Croſſe.

The Papiſts.

THe ſigne of the Croſſe (ſay they) hath two notable and powerfull effects : one is to drive away devils and evill ſpirits, to heale and cure diſeaſes: the other is to ſanctifie and bleſſe creatures, as our meats and drinks, which is done by the ſigne of the Croſſe, Rhemiſt. 1 Tim. 4. ſect. 12. 13. Bellarm. cap. 30. 50. Error.

Argum. 1. That the ſigne of the Croſſe, even ex opere operato, as Bellarmine ſaith, by the very act, and making of the ſigne, yea by a Jew, Infidell or Pagan, hath power to drive away the devill, they would thus prove it : David by his Harpe drove away the evill ſpirit from Saul : the Angell did the like with the fiſhes liver, in the ſtorie of Tobie : Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, wee muſt have better Scriptures than Apocryphall ſtories to build our faith upon : The good Angels of God have power from God to drive away evill ſpirits, though they uſe no externall ſignes: yet it followeth not, that every man may doe that which is granted to the Angels, though we ſhould admit the ſtorie. Secondly, David not ſo much by the ſound of his Harpe refreſhed Saul, as by his godly ſongs and muſicke chaſed away the ſpirit : neither did the evill ſpirit depart from him, but hee for the while found ſome eaſe ; his phantaſticall and melancholy fits which Satan wrought upon, being by his pleaſant harmonie ſomewhat alaied. This alſo your owne gloſſe confeſſeth, Decr. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. cap. 60 Saul non poterat, &c. Saul could not returne to his right minde, Niſi coram eo David pſalleret, unleſſe David did ſing before him : It was not then the ſound, but the ſong that helped Saul. Thirdly, all this being granted, yet have they not proved by theſe examples, that Pagans and Infidels, by the ſigne of the Croſſe, may chaſe away evill ſpirits.

Argum. 2. That things are hallowed and bleſſed by the ſigne of the Croſſe, they alſo prove it, becauſe the Croſſe being an holy ſigne in it ſelfe, doth communicate holines unto the things ſigned with the Croſſe. Bellarm. cap. 30. 51. Error.

Anſw. Firſt, wee deny the ſigne of the Croſſe, as they uſe it, to be an holy, but rather a ſuperſtitious and deceiveable ceremonie. Secondly, though it were holy, yet being abuſed, it cannot transferre any holines to other things : for in the law the ſacrifices of the wicked, though they lay upon the Altar, were not thereby ſanctified, but were an abomination, being not offered in a right faith : Nay there is no outward ceremonie ſo holy, as that it can impart the holines to another thing ; as it is ſhewed Hagg. 2. 13. Though a man did beare holy fleſh in the skirt of his garment, yet was it not thereby holy.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, it is a deceitfull toy that they beare the people in hand : the devill at the ſigne of the Croſſe will flie away : For the weapons of our warfare (ſaith S. Paul) are not carnall ; but the ſigne of the Croſſe is an externall and carnall, no ſpirituall weapon, and therefore prevaileth not againſt ſpirituall powers. The devill would not give place when Ieſus and Paul were named, much leſſe at the ſigne of the Croſſe. 2 Cor. 10. 4. Act. 19. 15.

Anſw.*1. Iacob laid his hands after that forme, becauſe of the preſent occaſion : for the younger ſonne that ſhould be the greater, was placed at his left hand, and the elder at the right.

2 Seeing the Scripture expreſſeth not in what manner Chriſt lifted up his hands, it is great preſumption for you to ſay, it was done in the ſimilitude of the Croſſe.

3 How can it be a convenient memoriall of Chriſts death, being neither ordained of Chriſt, nor taught by his Apoſtles ſo to be?

Ezech.9.4. Argum.*2. *Ezech.*9.4. The Angell is commanded to ſigne with Tau, the foreheads of thoſe which mourned, &c. this, ſaith Bellarmine, was none other than the ſigne of the Croſſe, *cap.*29.

Anſw. Firſt, though the word Tau, there uſed, be the name of an Hebrew letter, yet it ſignifieth a ſigne, and is ſo tranſlated by the Septuagint, σημεῖον, give them, or mark them with a ſigne in their foreheads. Secondly, the Hebrew Tau, hath this forme ת, though in the Greeke language it hath another faſhion, yet this figure hath no affinitie with the ſigne of the Croſſe: wherefore they have gained nothing, though it be granted that they were marked with Tau. Apoc.7.3. Argum.*3. *Apocal.*7.3. Hurt not the earth, till we have ſealed the ſervants of God in their forehead: This is the ſigne of the Croſſe, Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. cap. 29.

Anſw. It is the ſigne proper to Gods elect, and therefore not the ſigne of the Croſſe, which many reprobates have received. Let them heare their owne expoſitors ; Bruno, in 2 *ad Timoth.*2. thus writeth; Deum ſuos conſignare, &c. That as a Captaine giveth his ſouldiers ſome ſigne, whereby they are knowne; ſo God giveth his a ſigne, which the devill ſeeing, leaveth them, as not appertaining to him. Hoc ſignum eſſe divinam electionem, &c. This ſigne is the divine election : and Anſelme upon theſe words, 2 *Timoth.*2. God knoweth who are his : Hoc cordi ſuo bonus impreſſum ſignum : let a man print this ſigne in his heart, and ſay to himſelfe, what doth it profit me, to ſeeme outwardly juſt, and be inwardly wicked? And then he further ſaith, Talis cogitatio eſt divini ſigilli impreſſio : Such a cogitation is an impreſſion of this ſigne : And this is the ſigne which the elect are marked with.

Our Doway countrimen come in here alſo with their verdict : Is not the forme of the croſſe as convenient a ſigne to put Chriſtians in minde how our Saviour redeemed us, as thoſe ſtones were to the Iewes, how God brought their fathers out of Iordan. Annot. in Ioſua. 4. 6.

Anſw. Firſt, wee muſt have better Scriptures than Apocryphall ſtories to build our faith upon : The good Angels of God have power from God to drive away evill ſpirits, though they uſe no externall ſignes: yet it followeth not, that every man may doe that which is granted to the Angels, though we ſhould admit the ſtorie. Secondly, David not ſo much by the ſound of his Harpe refreſhed Saul, as by his godly ſongs and muſicke chaſed away the ſpirit : neither did the evill ſpirit depart from him, but hee for the while found ſome eaſe ; his phantaſticall and melancholy fits which Satan wrought upon, being by his pleaſant harmonie ſome what alaied. This alſo your owne gloſſe confeſſeth, Decr. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. cap. 60 Saul non poterat, &c. Saul could not returne to his right minde, Niſi coram eo David pſalleret, unleſſe David did ſing before him. It was not then the ſound, but the ſong that helped Saul. Thirdly, all this being granted, yet have they not proved by theſe examples, that Pagans and Infidels, by the ſigne of the Croſſe, may chaſe away evill ſpirits.

Argum. 2. That things are hallowed and bleſſed by the ſigne of the Croſſe, they alſo prove it, becauſe the Croſſe being an holy ſigne in it ſelfe, doth communicate holines unto the things ſigned with the Croſſe. Bellarm. cap. 30.

51. Error.

Anſw. Firſt, wee deny the ſigne of the Croſſe, as they uſe it, to be an holy, but rather a ſuperſtitious and deceiveable ceremonie. Secondly, though it were holy, yet being abuſed, it cannot transferre any holines to other things : for in the law the ſacrifices of the wicked, though they lay upon the Altar, were not thereby ſanctified, but were an abomination, being not offered in a right faith : Nay there is no outward ceremonie ſo holy, as that it can impart the holines to another thing ; as it is ſhewed Hagg. 2. 13. Though a man did beare holy fleſh in the skirt of his garment, yet was it not thereby holy.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, it is a deceitfull toy that they beare the people in hand : the devill at the ſigne of the Croſſe will flie away : For the weapons of our warfare (ſaith S. Paul) are not carnall ; but the ſigne of the Croſſe is an externall and carnall, no ſpirituall weapon, and therefore prevaileth not againſt ſpirituall powers. The devill would not give place when Ieſus and Paul were named, much leſſe at the ſigne of the Croſſe.

2 Cor. 10. 4.

Act. 19. 15.

Auguſtine ſaith : Signum Chriſti expellit exterminatorem, ſi cor noſtrum recipiat ſalvatorem : The ſigne of Chriſt doth expell the deſtroyer, when our heart receiveth our Saviour : *Tractat.in Iohan.*50. So it is not the ſigne in the forehead, but the faith of the heart, that maketh Satan afraid: if ſometime he avoid when men ſigne themſelves, he is diſpoſed to play with them, that he may deceive them more ſtrongly.

1 Tim.4.5.

Secondly, wee know no ſuch meanes to ſantifie creatures by : They are bleſſed and ſanctified for our uſes (as S. Paul ſaith, by the word and prayer, 1 Tim.4. Prayer therefore without warrant of the word is but preſumption. The Greeke Scholia, by the Word, underſtand ſermonem, qui eſt in gratiarum actione, the thankſgiving uſed before meat, and by prayer, Fidelium precem, the requeſts of the faithfull, whereby meats are ſanctified : Here is no mention at all of the Croſſe. They therefore having no word for their ſuperſtitious croſſings, invocations, incantations, popiſh bleſſings, doe deceive themſelves and others, in thinking that the creatures in ſuch order are ſanctified unto them.

Nicen. 2. action. 6. tom. 3. this reaſon was uſed againſt Images, and it may very well ſerve alſo againſt the ſigne of the Croſſe : Neque precationem ullam, qua ſanctificari poſſet, imago habet, ſed manet communis & inhonorata ut pictor eam abſolvit : An image hath no forme of prayer appointed, whereby it ſhould be ſanctified, but remaineth prophane and unholy, as it commeth from the workemans hand, &c. ſo may we ſay of the ſigne of the Croſſe, that it cannot ſanctifie, unleſſe it be firſt ſanctified it ſelfe; it cannot be ſanctified without prayer of faith, and faith is built upon the word : ſuch ſanctification by prayer, the ſigne of the Croſſe hath none. Ergo.

Concil. Laodicen. can. 32. Non oportet hæreticorum benedictiones accipere, quia maledictiones magis ſunt, quam benedictiones : We muſt not receive the bleſſings of heretikes, becauſe they are curſes rather than bleſſings: yet Bellarmine ſaith, there is vertue in the ſigne of the Croſſe made by a Jew, Pagan, Infidell, or whoſoever : but this Councell ſaith, that the benedictions of ſuch are maledictions.

Wherefore we doubt not to conclude, that the ſigne of the Croſſe, as it is uſed by Papiſts, is a ſuperſtitious and idolatrous ſigne; and that as one Robert Cooper confeſſor of the truth ſometime ſaid, the bleſſing with a ſhooe ſole is as good as a Popiſh Biſhops bleſſing done no otherwiſe, than by croſſing, Fox pag. 1043. col. 2.

We confeſſe, when Paganiſme and heathen ſuperſtition yet prevailed in the world, and many both Jewes and Gentiles oppoſed themſelves to the croſſe of Chriſt, that the Lord might and did ſhew ſome extraordinarie ſignes that way.

Sozomen.lib.4 cap.5.

Sozomen. lib.5. c.2.

1 As for the converſion of Conſtantine and his further confirmation when hee was to fight againſt Maxentius, after earneſt prayer made unto God, whom his father Conſtantius worſhipped, Euſebius ſaith that he ſaw the ſigne of the Croſſe in the ayre, with theſe words appearing, In hoc ſigno vinces : Thou ſhalt overcome in this ſigne. Likewiſe it ſometime is ſaid to have appeared, as a prediction of the overthrow of the enemies of the Croſſe, as Gallus Conſtantius aſſociate in the Empire, ſaw a bright ſhining Croſſe in the ayre, which appeared to be in length fifteene furlongs, at what time he went to Antioch in the ſeventeenth yeere of Conſtantius reigne, when hee ſuppreſſed the Jewes, that made rebellion, and ſlew of them many thouſands. Likewiſe, ſometime it appeared for the confuſion of the enemies of the Croſſe, as Iulian the Apoſtata looking into the entrals of beaſts, after the manner of the Gentiles, to know what ſhould become of the Chriſtian religion, ſaw the ſigne of a Croſſe compaſſed about with a crowne : which the Maſter of his Divinations did interpret to ſignifie, that the Chriſtian religion ſhould be driven to a great ſtraight, as the Croſſe was encloſed with a circle : but the other Diviners gave their opinion, that the crowne ſignified victorie, and the circle being without beginning and end, the perpetuitie and continuance of the Goſpell. But all this while, wee ſee no vertue or power aſcribed to the ſigne of the Croſſe it ſelfe.

Ruffin.lib.2. cap.17.

Alvares de ſcrip.Æthiop. cap.ultim.

2 And in the African Church, the Chriſtians to bee diſcerned from the Pagans would make the ſigne of the Croſſe in their doores and windowes, as they did in Alexandria, in ſtead of the reliques and markes of Serapion their Idols of Gentiliſme : yet herein they aſcribed no vertue to the ſigne: it was but a cognizance and marke of difference to diſtinguiſh betweene the Chriſtians and Pagans. And if the Æthiopike Church at this day, did aſcribe ſuch vertue to the Croſſe, they would not wrap up ſuch monuments in corners, nor forbeare making the ſigne of the crucifix, as they doe.

Harm.ſect.16. pag.504.

3 Wittemberg, artic.29. As touching that which S. Paul ſaith, (The creatures are ſanctified by the word of God and prayer) he meaneth not, that creatures, as fleſh, ſalt, hearbs be conjured, that Satan by the uſe of them may be driven away, but that all creatures are by the word of God appointed to their outward uſe, which then ſerve for our good, when wee uſe them well by faith, and praying unto God, &c. Here then is no conjuring or hallowing by the ſigne of the Croſſe, as the Rhemiſts before inferred out of this place.

Alphonſ.lib.3. hæreſ. tit. baptiſm.

4 Claudius the Biſhop Taurinenſ. did hold, that it was no baptiſme unleſſe the ſigne of the Croſſe were made in the forehead of the partie baptized : but Alphonſus de Caſtro ſaith, it is manifeſtus error, a manifeſt error : and he giveth this reaſon, becauſe it is certaine, that Chriſt, when he inſtituted baptiſme, nunquam de ſigno crucis meminiſſe, did never thinke of the Croſſe, &c. But if there were ſuch vertue in the Croſſe, baptiſme ſhould be weakned by the want of it.

An

An appendix concerning the name of Jeſus.

The Papiſts.

THe name of Jeſus (they ſay) ought to bee worſhipped by capping and kneeling thereunto, by wearing it in their caps, and ſetting it up in ſolemne places: alleaging for their purpoſe that of S. Paul, that at the name of Jeſus all things ſhall bow. Yea, they ſay, that Proteſtants by aboliſhing the name and image of Chriſt, doe make a way for Antichriſt, Rhemiſt. annot. Philip. 2. ſect. 2. Apocal. 13.17. 51.Error. Phil.2.10.

The Proteſtants.

1 THe bowing at the name of Jeſus, as it is uſed in Poperie, to bend the knee at the ſound thereof, is not commanded in this place: which ſheweth eſpecially the ſubjection of all creatures, of Turks, Jewes, Infidels, yea of the devils themſelves to the power and judgement of Chriſt. Secondly, Proteſtants have onely taken away the ſuperſtitious abuſe of the name of Jeſus. Thirdly, the kneeling at the name of Jeſus is ſuperſtitiouſly abuſed in poperie: for the people ſtoop onely at the ſound, not underſtanding what is read, and ſo make an Idoll of the letters and ſillables, adoring and worſhipping the verie name when they heare or ſee it: And againe, in ſitting and not vailing at the name of Chriſt, Immanuel, God the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, and bowing only at the name of Jeſus, Fulk. ibid. Fourthly, due reverence may be uſed to our Saviour without any ſuch ceremony of capping or kneeling, Fulk. Neither doe wee binde any of neceſſitie to uſe this reverence to the name of Jeſus, as the Papiſts doe, which thinke that Chriſt cannot otherwiſe be honoured: neither doe we judge and condemne thoſe that doe uſe it, beeing free from ſuperſtition, and grounded in knowledge, & carefull not to give offence: for ſuperſtitious and offenſive ignorance is not in any caſe to be defended. Fifthly, this outward reverence to the name of Jeſus was firſt taken up amongſt Chriſtians, becauſe of all other names it was moſt derided and ſcorned of the Pagans and Jewes: and therefore they did the more honour it. But now there is greater danger of popiſh ſuperſtition in abuſing holy things, than of prophane Paganiſme in utterly contemning them: and therefore there is not ſuch neceſſarie and juſt occaſion of uſing this externall geſture now, as was in former times: It was not uſed of neceſſity then, much leſſe now.

Synod. Moguntin. c. 59. it was thus decreed: Pari religione ad nomen ſalvatoris noſtri D. Ieſu Chriſti, ſimiliter ad Evangelium, &c. Let men with like devotion at the name of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, as likewiſe at the Goſpell, the Magnificat, Benedictus, Nunc dimittis, Gloria in excelſis, Gloria patri, and other parts of the divine ſervice, ſo compoſe themſelves by bowing the knee, uncovering the head, and the like geſture of the whole body, as they may ſeeme to have their mind occupied in thoſe things that are done, &c. I note out of this decree three things: firſt, that they ſhould bow at the name of Chriſt, as well as when Jeſus is named. Secondly, that the like reverence ſhould be uſed when as other Pſalms are ſung, and when mention is made of the Father, and the holy Ghoſt, as in the Gloria patri. Thirdly, that this geſture ſhould not bee done in reverence to names, words, or ſillables ſo pronounced, but onely to declare our attention. Thus then wee ſee that this ſuperſtitious cuſtome in bowing to the name of Jeſus onely, is contrary even to their owne popiſh Canons and decrees. The like thing alſo was decreed Synod. Auguſtenſ. cap. 23.

To this effect alſo Gregor. 10. ſext. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 23. c. 3. Quandocunque recolitur, &c. Whenſoever that glorious name is rehearſed, cordis genua flectant, let them bow the knees of their heart, which at the leaſt let them teſtifie by the inclination of the head, &c. So then the reverence of the heart is more requiſite, when Jeſus is named, than the geſture of the body.

It is not then the name it ſelfe, which conſiſteth of ſyllables, but the power of Jeſus, who is named, that is to bee bound unto, & not the naming but the beleeving in Jeſus, worketh ſuch wonders, as 1. Euſebius ſaith: quis ignorat noſtræ eſſe conſuetudinis, ipſo Ieſu nomine puriſſimiſq; precib. omnium dæmonum vexationem abigere, ipſum verbum & doctrina nos inviſibili poteſtatis genere potentiores efficit, &c. Who knows not, that it is our cuſtome, by the very name of Jeſus, and our pure prayers to drive away the vexation of ſpirits: his word and doctrine hath made us mighty by a ſpirituall kind of power. Lib.3. demonſt. Evang.16.7.

2 So Origen anſwereth Celſus, that Chriſtians did not call out devils, by enchanted verſes, ſed precib. & ſine quadam adjuratione, nuncupato Ieſu nomine, &c. But by prayers & naming Jeſus without any adjuration, &c. The vertue and power was in the word of God, and their prayers, not the pronouncing of the ſyllables of the name Jeſus: and that the place objected Phil. 2.10. hath no ſuch meaning: Origen ſheweth giving this interpretation of it: Quæ genua ſpiritib. eſſe creduntur &c. flectere genua, ſubjecta eſſe cuncta, & cultui Dei obedire declarat, &c. What knees have ſpirits, to bow the knee then, ſignifieth, all things to be ſubject, and obedient to the worſhip of God, &c. Lib.1. cont. Celſum. Philip.2.10. Cōment. in c. 4. ad Roman. lib.9.

3 I will inſert the judgement of learned Pareus of this point: the bowing of the knee and uncovering of the head at the naming of Jeſus: ſi ut ritus indifferens præſtetur externa reverentia, nemo improbat, ſi ut neceſſarius & cultus præceptus, ſuperſtitio eſt reprehenſibilis, If this externall reverence be uſed as an indifferent rite, no man miſliketh it, if as a neceſſarie and commanded worſhip, it is a ſuperſtition worthy to bee reproved, &c. And he giveth this reaſon, becauſe this reverence done to Comment. ad Rom.14.v.11.

the comming of Jeſus, not of Chriſt, the ſonne of God, or any other name, which ſheweth that to the ſyllables and name, not to the perſon they yeeld this reverence.

The ſixth queſtion concerning Temples and Churches.

THis queſtion hath divers parts: Firſt, of the forme and ſituation of Churches. Secondly, of the end and uſe of Churches. Thirdly, of their ornaments. Fourthly, of the dedication of Churches. Fifthly, of things hallowed and conſecrated for Churches.

The firſt part of the ſituation of Churches.

The Papiſts.

52.Error. THe Churches and Temples of Chriſtians (ſay they) are moſt conveniently and have beene of ancient time builded toward the Eaſt, Bellarmine libro tertio, capite tertio, de ſanctis.

Gen.2.8. *Argum.*1. Paradiſe was built in the Eaſt, Gen. 2. 8. and therefore wee ought to pray that way, for deſire we have to our countrie.

Anſw. Firſt, Paradiſe was then Eaſtward unto Moſes and the Iſraelites beeing in the Wilderneſſe, when he wrote this ſtory: but it cannot be Eaſt to all Chrſtian nations: for Paradiſe being planted in Eden, which was part of Meſopotamia, muſt needs bee Weſt to the Perſians, South to the Scythians and Tartarians, North to the Æthiopians: wherefore this reaſon is not generall for all Churches in Chriſtian nations. Secondly, it ſkilleth not where that earthly Paradiſe is ſituate: our heavenly paradiſe is in heaven, which is every where open to all true beleevers.

*Argum.*2. Wee looke for Chriſt to come in the Eaſt to judgement, therefore wee pray toward the Eaſt: As the lightning ſhineth from the Eaſt to the Weſt, ſo ſhall the comming of the ſonne of man be, Therefore he ſhall appeare toward the Eaſt, Bellarm.ibid. Matth.27 24.

Anſw. Firſt, by that ſimilitude of the lightning, the ſuddennes of his appearing, not the place is declared. Secondly, it is great preſumption to define that which the Scripture hath not revealed; Chriſts comming is onely generally ſet downe, he ſhall come in the clouds. And wee ſhall bee caught up in the clowds. There is no particular deſcription of the place. Matth.24.30. 1 Theſ.4.17.

The Proteſtants.

TO us it is no matter, which way Churches are builded, we may turne our ſelves in prayer as well toward any one part of the heavens, as another: neither doe we refuſe to pray in Churches builded toward the Eaſt. But that our Oratories and places of prayer ought rather to be builded that way, than any other; out of the Scripture it cannot bee proved, and wee hold it as a meere ſuperſtitious opinion.

1 Tim.2.8. *Argum.*1. S. Paul exhorteth men every where to lift up pure hands, He ſaith, in every place, without exception, whether toward the Eaſt or the Weſt, or whereſoever.

*Argum.*2. If any place were more dangerous than other to pray in, it is not ſo ſafe, and perhaps more perillous to pray toward the Eaſt: for Idolaters were wont to turne them toward the Eaſt, and to worſhip the Sunne riſing. And for this cauſe, the holy place in the Tabernacle was toward the Weſt, Exod. 29. 26. And it was the cuſtome of the Jewes, to pray Weſtward, leſt they ſhould be entiſed to worſhip the Sunne riſing in his ſtrength. And therefore the Jeſuite maketh but a bad argument: The Jewes prayed toward the Weſt: Ergo, Chriſtians muſt pray toward the Eaſt: nay, rather contrary, becauſe they turned their backe to the Eaſt, for feare of idolatry; Chriſtians if any place were to be regarded more than other, ought upon the ſame ground alſo to follow the ſame cuſtome, for as much as all men by nature are prone to idolatry: and the reaſon of their ſo praying ſeemeth rather to bee morall, than ceremoniall. This I ſay not, as though I commended the Jewes ſuperſtitious praying toward the Weſt, but onely to ſhew that they have better reaſon for their cuſtome, than our adverſaries have for their ſuperſtitious turning toward the Eaſt. But to the chriſtiãs all places are alike. Ezech.8.17. Exod.16.27.

Auguſtine ſaith, Cum quis quærit orationem, collocat membra, ſicut ei occurrit: If any man bee deſirous to pray, he doth place his body, as occaſion ſerveth: he ſaith not toward the Eaſt, or toward the Weſt, *ad Simplician.lib.*2.*quæſt.*4.

Concil. Conſtantinop. 6. cap 7. Singulis diebus quiſque duabus vicibus oret, mane & veſpere, &c. Everie day let every man pray twice, mourning and evening: if he be in his journey, or in the woods, or fields, whereſoever the morning and evening houre findeth him, ſo let him doe: knowing that God is every were preſent, &c. If God be every where preſent, then as well in the weſt, or any other part of Heaven, as in the Eaſt: therefore it ſkilleth not which way a man turneth himſelfe in prayer.

Walter Brute holy confeſſour hath ſealed this truth, who ſaith; It is the cuſtome of Necromancers to turne their face to the Eaſt, as to a place more apt for their prayers: As Balaam being hired to curſe the Iſraelites, when he could not accompliſh his purpoſe in one place, removed to another ther, &c. Fox pag. 497. col. 2. It is not ſeemely therefore for Chriſtians in their prayers to imitate the ſuperſtitious manner of the Heathen, in preferring the Eaſt before the Weſt, or one place before another.

Pag.458.1.40.

Damaſcene alleageth many reaſons for praying toward the Eaſt: becauſe Chriſt is called the day-ſpring, Paradiſe was built toward the Eaſt: Moſes tabernacle had the vaile hanging toward the Eaſt: Iuda as the more honourable tribe was placed in the Eaſt ſide, Chriſt upon the Croſſe looked toward the Weſt, and we therefore ſhould looke toward him Eaſtward, he ſhall returne in the Eaſt to judgement: theſe ſlight reaſons Damaſcene uſeth: but he in the ſame place ſaith: antiquam patriam requirentes, &c. we ſeeking our ancient country (he meaneth Paradiſe, which was in the Eaſt) doe ſigh toward it, worſhipping God, &c. but our paradiſe is not now in earth, it is in heaven which is neither eaſt nor weſt, and therefore to heaven muſt we looke up: Againe he ſaith, wee doe worſhip, [illegible] ſuſpirantes, ſighing toward Chriſt, &c. but Chriſt is not hanging now upon the croſſe toward the Eaſt, but he is in heaven, thither we muſt turne our ſelves. And after he had heaped up all his reaſons, he concludeth that this is an unwritten tradition of the Apoſtles.

Damaſcene. lib.4.de fid. c.13. ἄγραφος ἡ παράδοσις

2 Athanaſius writeth that the Jewes at Berytum being converted to the Chriſtian faith did conſecrate a great ſynagogue unto Chirſt their Saviour: but their ſynagogues were built toward the weſt, not eaſtward.

Lib.de paſſ. imag.Chriſt.

In the temples at Antiochia in Syria, the alters were placed toward the weſt, not the Eaſt: Socrat. lib.5.c.22.

3 The latter confeſſion of Helvetia. chap. 22. Let theſe places where the faithfull meet together bee decent &c. let houſes be choſen for that purpoſe, or Churches that be large and faire, &c. If houſes may be uſed for Churches, where no other are, which are built indifferently any way, then it skilleth not in this judgement, which way oratories and places of prayer be built.

4 Their Binius writeth that becauſe of the Manichees which did worſhip the Sun praying toward the eaſt: Leo the firſt ordained, that to diſcerne catholikes from heretikes, when as in times paſt they prayed toward the eaſt, ad occidentem converſi Deum colerent, they ſhould worſhip God toward the weſt: to the ſame purpoſe alſo Baronius: But after this by the conſtitution of Vigilius the Prieſt ſtanding at the alter was preſcribed to pray toward the eaſt.

Binius tom.1. fol.932.and Baronius,an. 443.num.5. Durant.de ritib. lib. 5.c.2.

An appendix of this part, concerning the forme and faſhion of Churches.

The Papiſts.

THey would have their Churches to bee built as Salomons Temple was, which conſiſted of three parts: there was firſt the porch or court for the people; then the holy place where the Alter ſtood, and the Prieſts offered ſacrifice; and laſt of all the moſt holy place, where the Arke and Mercy ſeat was placed. So they have the Church porch, then the body of the Church, and above that, their ſanctuary, as they call it, or the Queere or Chancell, which was ſeparated from the reſt, by ſteps or ſtaires, hangings or curtaines, and other partitions: And here muſt ſtand their Altar, Bellarm. lib. 3. de cultu Sanctor. cap. 3.

53.Error.

The Proteſtants.

COncerning the faſhion and forme of Churches, and the diviſions and partitions within, wee will not much contend, ſo theſe conditions be obſerved; Firſt, that all ſuperſtition bee avoided, in making one place of the Church holier than the reſt, wherein the Papiſts mightily offend: for the Queere or Chancell was for their Prieſts and ſingers, the other part of the Church, for lay men, they were not to enter into that holy place: and thus according to the places, they divided the congregation: as though one part were more holy than the other. The people alſo were made to beleeve, that to be buried in the Chancell, but eſpecially under the altar, was more availeable for the dead, than to be buried in the Church. But where learne they that our Churches ought to have a Sanctuary as the Jewiſh temple had? that was an evident type, and is now accompliſhed in our Saviour Chriſt, who is now entred into the heavens, as the high Prieſt then entred into the holy place to make attonement for the people, Heb. 9. 24. This therefore is very groſſe, to revive and renew againe Jewiſh types and figures: as their owne ordinary gloſſe ſaith, De quatuor concilii primitiva Eccleſia. Externi ritus & caremonia legis, quia hac fuerunt umbra Chriſti tum venturi, & myſteriorum ejus, ideo adveniente veritate Evangelica, illicita facta ſunt & evanuerunt: The externall rites and ceremonies of the law, becauſe they were a ſhadow of Chriſt to come and of his myſteries, therefore the truth of the Goſpell being come, are made unlawfull, and vaniſhed away. Salomons Temple then, with the Sanctuary and prieſthood thereof, which were ſhadowes of things to come, are no preſidents or patternes for Chriſtians to follow.

Heb.9.24.

But if herein notwithſtanding they will imitate the building of Salomons Temple to have a ſanctuary, why doe they not alſo build toward the weſt, as the temple was? why bring they not their Altar down into the body of the Church? as the altar of burnt offring was placed at the dore of the tabernacle, not in the holy place. And indeed, altar we acknowledge none, as afterward ſhall be proved. But we ſee no reaſon why the communion table may not be ſet in the body of the Church, as well as in the Chancel, if the place bee more convenient and fit to receive the Communicants. But I pray you, why is your Altar rather ſet in your Sanctuary, than the Font or Baptiſterie? they are both Sacraments, as well Baptiſme as the Lords Supper: why ſhould one be preferred, as holier than the other?

Secondly, all things in the Church ought to bee done unto edifying; and therefore wee allow no ſuch partitions, as doe hinder the edifying of the people, and exclude them from hearing; as in popiſh Churches the Prieſt is pued or mued up by himſelfe a great way off, that his voice can hardly bee perceived of the people. The Miniſter is ſo to ſtand and turne himſelfe, as he may be beſt heard and underſtood of the people: as Ezra had a pulpit of wood to ſtand in when hee read the law. Nehem. 8. 4.

Nehem. 8. 4. Lib. 2. cont. Parmen. c. 7.

Auguſtine thus writeth, Cum Epiſcopus ſolus intus eſt, populus & orat cum illo, & quaſi ſubſcribens ad ejus verba, reſpondet, Amen; While the Biſhop or Paſtor prayeth within, the people both prayeth together with him; and ſubſcribing to his words anſwereth, Amen, &c. By this it appeareth that though in Auguſtines time the Miniſter had a place for himſelfe (as it is meet he ſhould) yet he ſo diſpoſed himſelfe, that his prayer was heard of all the people: for otherwiſe how could they pray with him, and ſubſcribe or give aſſent to his words?

This faſhion of building of Churches deviding them into 3 parts, the porch, body of the Church, and Chancell, if it be uſed as an indifferent thing, and for more fitnes and decencie, we miſlike not: but beeing urged as the moſt convenient, becauſe conformable, and anſwerable to Salomons temple, we except againſt it.

Lib. 3. de vit. Conſtantin.

1 Euſebius ſheweth that the Temples of the Gentiles were built in that very faſhion, beſide the bodie of the Temple, they had their veſtibula, porches, and conclavia & cellulas, their conclaves and cells, unto the which the profane and common ſort had no acceſſe.

Sozomen. l. 7. c. 15.

2 Theophilus patriarke of Alexandria demoliſhed an idols temple at Alexandria which was built in that manner, with many conclaves and inward parts, where he found myſticall and ſecret murders to have beene committed: if this faſhion had beene ſo convenient, the abuſe corrected, the temple might have beene uſed ſtill.

3 See in the former part, the judgement of the reformed Churches, which ſtand not upon any ſuch faſhion of their Churches, not refuſing houſes to that end, to be places of prayer.

Apolog. Bern.

4 Bernard whom the Romaniſts will acknowledge for their owne did reprehend in his time, oratoriorum immenſas altitudines & immoderatas longitudines, the exceſſive heights and immoderate lengths of the oratories, &c. ſuch as were built like to Salomons Temple.

The ſecond part, of the end and uſe of Churches.

THis part hath three ſeverall points. Firſt, whether the Churches of Chriſtians are built to offer ſacrifice in. Secondly, whether they bee in themſelves places more holy than others. Thirdly, whether they may be dedicated to Saints.

The firſt point or Article, whether our Churches are for ſacrifice.

The Papiſts.

54. Error.

THe principall end of Churches is for the ſacrifice of Chriſtians, and in that reſpect they are truly called Temples: they are not onely for prayer, the preaching of the word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments, but chiefly for the externall ſacrifice of the Maſſe, Bellarm. cap. 4.

1 Cor. 10. 21.

Argum. 1. The Churches of Chriſtians have Altars, therefore ſacrifices: that they have Altars, he thus proveth: Firſt, S. Paul ſaith, You cannot bee partakers of the Lords table, and the table of divels. By the table here is ment the Altar; for the table of the Heathen was their altar, wherein they ſacrificed to their Idols.

Anſw. Firſt, a table is one thing, an altar another: and very unproperly is an altar called a table: this place in any wiſe mans judgement makes more againſt them than with them. Secondly, S. Paul ſpeaketh not here of the ſacrifices of the Heathen nor of their altars, but of the feaſts which they made in their Idolatrous Temples, which was done upon tables, of ſuch ſacrifices as had beene offered to Idols: unto the which feaſts, S. Paul forbiddeth Chriſtians to come, as it appeareth in the reſt of the chapter, and more plainly, chap. 8. 10.

1 Cor. 8. 10. Heb. 13. 10.

Argum. 2. Heb. 13. 10. We have an altar, of which they have no power to eat that ſerve at the Tabernacle: that is, the altar whereon Chriſts body is offered, Bellar. Rhemiſt, in hunc locum.

Anſ. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh expreſſely of participation of the ſacrifice of Chriſts death, (as it is manifeſt in the two verſes next following) which is by a Chriſtian faith, and not in the Sacrament only, whereof none can be partakers that remaine in the ceremoniall obſervations of the Leviticall ſacrifices; For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly, verſ. 12. of the ſuffering of Chriſt without the gate. Chriſt therefore is the Altar, yea our Prieſt and ſacrifice to. Further, you abuſe this place to prove your materiall popiſh altars which are many: but the Apoſtle ſaith, wee have an altar, ſpeaking of one. This expoſition Richard Woodman holy Martyr hath ſealed, that Chriſt is the true Altar whereon everie true Chriſtian ought to come and offer, he proveth by the conference of theſe two places of the Goſpell, Matth. 5. 23. If thou bringeſt thy gift to the altar, and remember that thy brother hath ought againſt thee, &c. Likewiſe, Matth. 18. Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midſt: whereſoever then people are gathered together in Chriſts name, there is hee in the midſt; and where he is, there is the Altar; ſo that we may be bold to come and offer our gift, Fox, pag. 1991. col. 2.

Matth.5.23.
Matth.18.20.

The Proteſtants.

THe Churches of Chriſtians are the houſes of prayer made to that end, that they ſhould come together to heare the word of God read and preached, receive the Sacraments, and offer up their ſpirituall ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving: other externall ſacrifices or altars wee acknowledge none.

Argum. 1. The temple of the Jewes was called an houſe of prayer, that is, principally for prayer. Moſes was read and preached in their Synagogues; Much more are the Churches of Chriſtians appointed for preaching and prayer. The firſt day of the weeke, which is the Lords day, they came together to breake bread, and Paul preached unto them: Ergo, the adminiſtration of the Word and Sacraments with prayer, is the chiefe and onely cauſe of the holy aſſemblies of Chriſtians.

Mark.11.17.
Act.15.21.
Act.20.7.

Argum. 2. Altars we have none in our Churches: S. Paul calleth it the Lords table, where we receive the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt. And he calleth it bread which is broken: But bread is ſet upon tables, not ſacrificed upon altars.

1 Cor.10.21.
1 Cor.11.26.

Auguſtine alſo calleth it, Menſam Domini, the Lords table, Epiſt. 59. and Epiſt. 50. Hee ſheweth how cruelly the Donatiſts handled Maximian a Catholique Biſhop, beating him with clubs, even in the Church, lignis altaris effractis immaniter ceciderunt, and wounded him with the wood of the Altar which they had broken downe. Where though he improperly call it an Altar, yet was it a Communion table framed of wood, and made to be removed, not faſtened to the wall, as their popiſh altars were. And it is verie evident that it was a table, not an altar, whereon they received the Communion: as Eutropius the Emperours Chamberlaine having committed ſome grievous offence, fled into the Church, and ad ſacram menſam ſupplex jacet, lieth proſtrate before the ſacred table. Baſilicus the Emperour being ſuppliant in the Church, coronam Imperii ſacræ menſæ imponit, Did lay the crowne of the Empire upon the ſacred table.

Sozomen.lib.8.c.7.
Nicephor.lib.16.c.8.

Indeed ſometime they called it an altar, but it was the Communion table: as Chryſoſtome having ſo named it an altar, yet afterward ſaith, Ipſa menſa animæ noſtræ vis eſt, The table it ſelfe is the ſtrength of our ſoule. Auguſtine ſaith, the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt, in Dominica menſa præparari; To be prepared in the Lords table, yet afterward in the ſame place hee calleth it an altar: They ſo termed it an altar, uſing the phraſe of the old Teſtament, becauſe it was a commemoration of that ſacrifice which was offered upon the altar of the Croſſe, prefigured by the altars in the Tabernacle.

Commentar.1 Cor.11.
Tractat.26. in Evangel.Iohan.

Damaſus Epiſtol. 4. Chorepiſcopi miniſterio presbyterorum contenti ſint, atque menſa Domini participes tantummodo exiſtant: Let the locall Biſhops be content to miniſter as Prieſts, and to be partakers onely of the Lords table: He ſaith the Lords table, not the Lords altar.

And that Churches are ordained for the word of God, prayer, and the Sacraments, we have evident teſtimony of Councels. Synod. Moguntin. cap. 40. Templa orationis, divini cultus & Sacramentorum officinas, &c. They call our Temples or Churches, the ſhops of prayer, the divine worſhip, and the Sacraments.

Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 13. Conſecratur templum, &c. ut ab omnibus pariter convenientibus Deo laudes ſolvantur, divinum verbum audiatur, ac eccleſiaſtica ſacramenta miniſtrentur: The Church is conſecrate, that of all men aſſembled together, praiſe ſhould be rendred to God, the word of God heard, and the Sacraments of the Church miniſtred.

Yet further wee have the teſtimony of their owne law, decret. p. 1. diſtinct. 43. c. 5. Oratorium hoc ſit, quod dicitur, &c. Let the Oratorie bee that which it is called; neither let any thing elſe be there done, than that which agreeth to the divine Miniſterie: and in the ſame place, cap. 6. In Oratorio præter orandi & pſallendi cultum, &c. In the Oratorie beſide ſinging and praying, let nothing bee done, &c. decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 1. c. 21. Ioannes: Eccleſias Arrianorum, &c. The Churches of the Arrians, whereſoever you finde them, divinis precibus & operibus conſecrate, conſecrate to divine prayers and works, &c. By theſe Canons it appeareth, that Churches are eſpecially conſecrated and ordained for prayer.

Maſter George Wiſeheart holy Martyr: Churches ſhould bee ſuſtained and upholden, that the people ſhould be congregate unto them, there to heare of God: for whereſoever is true preaching of the word of God, and lawfull uſe of the Sacraments, undoubtedly there is God himſelfe. Fox, pag. 1270. col. 2. This then is the right and proper uſe of Churches, as we have ſeene.

ſteriis gratiarum actiones; Prayers, ſinging of Pſalmes, partaking of the myſteries, giving of thanks, and he writeth of Conſtantine, that hee in the congregation, cantare primus incepit, &c. was the firſt that did ſing, prayed together with the reſt, & conciones ſtans reverenter audiit; And heard the Sermons reverently ſtanding, and being deſired to ſit, he would anſwer, that it was not meet to heare the doctrine of God negligently. Chryſoſtome calleth the Church, Sedem doctrina, the ſeat of doctrine.

The ſecond Article, Whether Churches are more holy places in themſelves.

The Papiſts.

55. Error. God (they ſay) rather dwelleth and is preſent in Churches than elſewhere: and therefore it is more available for a man, even to make his private prayer in the Church.

1 King.8.38. Act.3.1. Argum. 1. The Temple of Salomon was ordained even for the prayers of private men: and Salomon prayeth unto God that they might be heard: So Anna prayed in the Tabernacle, 1 *Sam.*1. And the Apoſtles went up to the Temple to pray: Ergo, prayers made in the Temple are more available, *Bellarm. cap.*4.

Iohn 4.21. Anſwer. 1. See what Jewiſh arguments here are: becauſe the Lord gave an eſpeciall bleſſing to his Temple amongſt the Jewes, that was the onely place for ſacrifices, and alſo a peculiar privileged place for prayer: therefore he will binde and tye himſelfe to ſome certaine place now. But our Saviour ſaith cleane contrarie unto the woman of Samaria, The houre commeth when yee ſhall neither in this mountaine, nor in Jeruſalem worſhip my Father. The prayers and ſacrifices of Chriſtians are now no more tyed and limited to places. 2 That was but a type unto the Jewes, that as then God would bee onely heard in his Temple: ſo his name is now onely truly invocated and called upon in his Church.

3 It is falſly alleaged that the Apoſtles went up, onely to pray, to the Temple: they went up at the ninth houre of prayer, when the people were accuſtomed to goe unto the Temple, that they might preach the Goſpell unto them.

Dan.6.10. Luk.1.37. Argum. 2. Daniel prayed with his window open Eaſtward to Jeruſalem, where the Temple was, Dan. 6. Anna departed not out of the Temple, but gave her ſelfe to continuall faſting and prayer: Ergo, private prayers are more available in the Church; *Bellarm. cap.*4.

1 King.8.31. Malach.1.11. Anſwer. Firſt, the argument followeth not from the uſe of the Jewiſh Temple, to the practice of Chriſtians now: for wee deny not, but that there was an eſpeciall bleſſing promiſed to thoſe that prayed in the Temple of Salomon, according to the requeſt which hee made at the dedication of the Temple: If any man pray in this place, then heare thou in heaven: But now the prophecie of Malachy is fulfilled, that incenſe ſhould under Chriſt bee everie where offered unto God: this difference betweene the Temple of the Jewes and of Chriſtians, Origen maketh, *tract.*35. in Math. Vir quidem Iudaicus non dubitat de hujuſmodi, &c. A Jew doth nothing doubt of this, that is, that one place is more holy for prayer than another, but he that is departed from Jewiſh fables to Chriſts doctrine, doth ſay that the place doth not make one prayer better than another.

Secondly, Daniel openeth not his window to Jeruſalem, in reſpect of the holineſſe of the place, but to make it knowne that he prayed to God that was there worſhipped, and to ſhew his confidence in Gods promiſes for their returne thither: Anna alſo continued in the Temple, as being the fitteſt place for her widdowes ſtate and ſolitarie life, being ſequeſtred from all human encumbrances, and in reſpect of the helps of religion by the ſacrifices and common prayers; not in regard of any inherent holineſſe there.

Gen.46.1. Argum. 3. Our Doway Interpreters doe thus alſo reaſon for the holineſſe of Churches. 1 Iacob conſulted with God in Berſheba, where Abraham and Iſaack had confirmed by oath their league with the Kings of the Countrey, and erected altars, &c. whereupon they give this note, that God revealeth his will in holy places.

Exod.13.3. 2 Moſes was bid to put off his ſhooes, for the place was holy: whereupon they note in the margen, that reverence is to be ſhewed in going bare-foot to holy places, p. 160. and the ſame note they give, p.202.

1 King.8.30. 3 Upon theſe words, when they ſhall ſpread their hands in this place, &c. then heare thou in heaven, they inferre, that places dedicated to Gods ſervice are more acceptable to him, p. 879.

Anſwer. 1. Iacob conſulted with God in Berſheba, becauſe it was in the utmoſt border of Canaan, and in his way into Ægypt, ſhewing his hope to returne thither againe. 2 God heard him there, as in many other places, becauſe he faithfully called upon him, not for any holineſſe of the place.

3 We read not in *Gen.*21. and 26. of any altars there built, but of the league made with the King of that Countrey by an oath, which was but a civill tranſaction.

2 The place was holy, becauſe of Gods viſible preſence at that time, and therefore Moſes for reverence unto God put off his ſhooes: ſo Ioſhua being by Jerico, was bid to put off his ſhooes, becauſe there the Lord ſhewed himſelfe as a man of warre: but this place was holy onely at this time, for afterward Jerico was accurſed, both the Citie and the ground thereabout: for Eliſha long after healed the waters of their bitterneſſe by caſting in ſalt. Ioſu 6.26. 2 King.2.20.

3 To the third objection anſwer is made before in the third argument.

The Proteſtants.

WE preferre publike prayers made by the congregation in the Church before private prayers, not becauſe of the place, but in reſpect of the congregation, whoſe prayers joyntly altogether are more fervent and effectuall than the prayer of one man: But if wee compare publike prayer with publike, and private with private, wee doubt not but that the one and the other being made in faith, may as well be heard out of the Church as in it.

Argum. 1. The promiſe of our Saviour is generall, Whereſoever two or three are gathered together, I am in the middeſt amongſt them: So S. Paul, I will that men everie where lift up pure hands: Ergo, they may be heard praying in faith in any place. Matth.18.20. 1 Timoth.2.8.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of publike prayer which is done in the Church, as it may appeare by the beginning of the chapter, *verſ.*1. I exhort that ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions be made, &c. Which is underſtood of common and publike prayer; Bellar. cap. 4.

Anſwer. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not onely of publike, but of private prayer alſo: Firſt, becauſe Kings, for whom the Apoſtle would have interceſſions made, are not onely publikely, but alſo privately to bee prayed for. Secondly, the Apoſtle would have them pray everie where: but in everie place there is not a Church to pray in. Thirdly, it is the ſame with that the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, Pray continually: which is underſtood of private prayer. 1 Theſſ.5.17.

Argum. 2. So our Saviour ſaith, When thou prayeſt, enter into thy chamber: hee ſaith not, goe to the Church. Bellarmine ſaith, hee entreth into his chamber that prayeth without vaine glorie, whether he doe pray ſecretly or openly. Matth.6.6.

Anſwer. Our Saviours words are plaine without allegorie, for hee ſpeaketh of ſhutting the doore of the chamber: and there is a manifeſt oppoſition betweene the Phariſies praying in the corners of the ſtreets, and the frequencie of people, and the others praying in ſecret. And whereas Bellarmine objecteth, that the ſhutting of the doore cannot literally bee underſtood, becauſe that Chriſt himſelfe prayed in the mountaines often, but in his chamber wee doe not read that hee prayed: the anſwer is ready: firſt, by ſhutting of the doore Chriſt underſtandeth praying in ſecret, as it is in the text, God which ſeeth in ſecret ſhall reward thee openly: Secondly, no marvell if Chriſt is not read to ſhut the doore, for he had no houſe, nor place, where to reſt his head: Thirdly, in that Chriſt prayed in the mountaine, but in the temple hee prayed not, but preached, it teacheth us that everie where our prayers are acceptable unto God. Luk.21.37.

Argum. 3. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, that under the Goſpell, neither in that mountaine, nor in Jeruſalem God will be worſhipped, but in ſpirit and truth. Ergo, the worſhip of God is not tied to any place. Iohn 4.21.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Chriſt ſpeaketh not of the place, but of the manner of worſhip: that is, that henceforth God would not be worſhipped after the manner of the Samaritans and Jewes: for afterward the Apoſtles prayed in the temple at Jeruſalem, Bellarm. cap. 4.

Contra. Firſt, our Saviour ſpeaketh both of the place and manner: for ſo the woman propoundeth the queſtion of the place of worſhip, *verſ.*20. Our fathers worſhipped in the mountaine, and yee ſay that in Ieruſalem, &c. And our Saviour anſwereth her accordingly, fitly, and appertinently to the matter: for otherwiſe the anſwer ſhould not be fitting, if the woman ſhould aske one thing, and Chriſt anſwer another. Secondly, Bellarmine ignorantly diſtinguiſheth that which is not to bee diſtinguiſhed, for to be addicted to a certaine place of prayer, is of, or belonging to the manner of prayer: wherefore Chriſt comprehendeth both in one ſpeech, that though prayer afterward might be made both in the mountaine and at Jeruſalem, yet they ſhould not pray with that opinion of holineſſe in the place, as before; as the Jewes and Samaritans did.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quid ſupplicaturus Deo locum ſanctum requiris? &c. volens in Templo orare, in te ora: & ita age ſemper, ut Dei Templum ſis, ibi enim Deus exaudit ubi habitat: When thou art about to pray, what needeſt thou to go to any ſacred place? wouldeſt thou pray in the Temple or Church? ſee that thou be the Temple of God, and there the Lord will ſooneſt heare were he dwelleth. Lib. ſententiar. Auguſt. ſentent. 333.

Bernard hath an excellent ſpeech of this matter: Habet ſanctitatem, ſed propter corpora veſtra, &c. Your Churches are holy, becauſe of your bodies: as your ſoules are holy, becauſe of the ſpirit that dwelleth in you; your bodies holy, becauſe of your ſoules; ſo this houſe is holy becauſe of your bodies, &c. not in themſelves therefore are they holy, &c.

Concil. Conſtantin. 6. cap.7. Singulis diebus quiſque duabus vicibus oret, &c. Everie day let everie man pray twice, morning and evening; in the Church, if he be in the Church: but hee that is in his journey, or upon any occaſion in the woods or fields, whereſoever the morning or evening ſeaſon findeth him, let him pray there, knowing that God is everie where preſent. Everie place therefore hath Gods preſence, and therefore is alike in it ſelfe ſanctified for prayer.

Gangrenſ. Concil. in ſubſcriptione. Omnem locum ædificatum in nomine Dei honoramus, & congregationem in Eccleſia factam ob utilitatem communem recipimus: We doe honour everie place built in the name of the Lord, and do reverence or receive the congregation or aſſembly made in the Church, for the common utilitie,&c. Churches then are holy places and to be reverenced, becauſe of their holy uſe, and for the holy aſſemblies there made: the people aſſembled for divine exerciſes make the place holy, not the place the people. As it is ſaid of the Iſraelites, Non propter locum gentem, ſed propter gentem Dominus locum elegit: God did not chuſe the nation for the place, but the place for the nations ſake; Concil. Aquiſgran. lib.2. cap.24.

Likewiſe, Cod. lib.3. tit.43. leg.2. Locus, in quo ſepelitur corpus, efficitur religioſus: The place is made religious or holy for the buriall of the dead. If the preſence of the dead make the place holy, much more the aſſemblies of the living: wherefore the place is not holy of it ſelfe, but becauſe of the preſence.

Decret. p.2. cauſ.13. qu.2. c.15. Iuxta altare nemo ſepeliatur, That no man ſhould be buried neere to the Altar,&c. But if there were an inherent holineſſe in the Altar, it were an injurie to the dead to barre them from the more holy place.

I cannot here omit the notable ſentence of Origen: Locum ſanctum in terris non requiro poſitum, ſed in corde,&c. I doe not ſeeke an holy place in the earth, but in the heart: the holy place is rather ſo to be taken, quàm ſi putemus ſtructuram lapidum,&c. Than to thinke that the building of inſenſible ſtones is the holy place, Hom.5. in Levit.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: Chriſt taking away the difference of places, will bee worſhipped in everie place: Neither is there in his Kingdome one place holy, another prophane, but all places are indifferent, neither canſt thou more heartily & better beleeve, truſt, and love God in the Temple, at the Altar, in the Church-yard, than in thy barne, kitchin, vineyard, bed,&c.
Pag.1141. a.26. And to be ſhort, the Martyrs of Chriſt have honoured him in darke dungeons and priſons, Fox, pag.1254. col.1.

Hom.8. in 2. c. 1. Ep. ad Timoth. Hom.3. de incomprehenſib. Dei natur. Now further. 1 Chryſoſtome ſaith that Chriſtians, Minime alligatos ad certum aliquem locum: are not tied to any certaine place as the Jewes were, Sed omni loco orandum, But that they may pray everie where: Yet he preferreth the prayer in the Church, as being more effectuall than domeſticall and private prayers, he preferreth them not for the holineſſe of the place, but becauſe of the congregation there aſſembled.

Harm. ſect.15. pag.466. 2 See before Origen for the African and South Church. 3 And Bernard before of the Latine Church.

4 The latter Confeſſ. of Helvetia, c.23. We muſt not ſuperſtitiouſly tye prayer to any place, as though it were not lawfull to pray, but in the Church,&c.

The third Article, Whether Churches and Temples may be dedicated to Saints.

The Papiſts.

56. Error. THey nothing doubt, but as Churches may be conſecrated and dedicated to the honour of God, ſo they may be alſo unto Saints.

Argum. 1. The Temple of Salomon was not onely built for ſacrifices and prayer, but for the Arke of God alſo: as David ſaith to Nathan: Now I dwell in an houſe of Cedar trees, and the Arke of God remaineth within curtaines: But there is as great honour, yea and greater, due to the reliques of Saints: Ergo, it is lawfull to build temples unto them; Bellarmine capite quarto. 2 Sam.7.2.

Anſwer. 1. When you have a commandement to build Churches for reliques, as they had to build a Temple for the Arke, yee may be bold to doe it.

2 To build a Temple for the Arke was all one as to build an houſe for the Lord: for it was the Mercie-ſeat of God: it pleaſed the Lord to dwell betweene the Cherubims, there to ſhew evident tokens of his preſence. And whereas David conſulted to build an houſe for the Arke, the Lord doth thus anſwer him by his Prophet; Shalt thou build me an houſe for my dwelling? verſ.5. So the Temple was made in the honour of God, being made for the Arke. It was all one for the Arke to dwell there, and the Lord himſelfe to dwell there. This argument therefore maketh nothing for them.

The Proteſtants.

TO build Churches and religious houſes in the name and honour of Saints, and to make them Patrons and Protectors of thoſe places, and there to call upon them, and make prayers unto them, all which is defended by our adverſaries, we hold it utterly unlawfull, as tending to manifeſt impietie and idolatrie.

Argum. 1. No divine worſhip is to be given to Saints, therefore no Churches to be made in their names: for it is part of the divine worſhip to have Temples.

De Civitate Dei, lib.8. cap. ult. Auguſtine ſaith, Nos non Martyribus templa, ſacerdotia aut ſacra conſtituimus, quoniam non ipſi, ſed Deus eorum nobis Deus eſt: We doe not ordaine Temples, Prieſthoods, or ſacrifices for Martyrs:

for not they, but their God, is both their God and ours, &c. None therefore is to have a Temple but God. But marke, I pray you, their diſtinction: They ſay that religious houſes, as they are Temples, are onely conſecrated to God, but as they are Baſilicæ, palaces, ſumptuous buildings, the ſelfeſame Churches may be dedicate to Saints. Like as (ſaith he) one and the ſame altar of ſtone, as it is an altar is conſecrated to God: and it may be alſo the tomb of ſome Martyr, and ſo alſo dedicate to the remembrance of the Martyr, Bellarm. cap. 4.

Anſw. If one and the ſame Church may bee conſecrate both to God and to ſome Saint beſide, I pray you who is the principall Patron of that Church? God or the Saint? You will ſay, I am ſure, God is. But I will prove the contrarie, becauſe it hath the name of the Saint: It is called by the name of Saint Peter, Saint Paul, or ſome other, not by the name of God. Thus they are not contented to make Saints Gods fellowes, but will even thruſt him out of place, giving unto Saints the honour of Gods houſe.

Secondly, the inſtance or example of the altar, which hee alleageth, cannot ſerve his turne. Firſt, ſuch altars of ſtone to be ſacrificed upon are not agreeable to the times of the Goſpell, the Church having alwayes of ancient time uſed tables, not altars, as I have ſhewed before out of S. Auguſtine, Error 54. And Origen thus witneſſeth of his times, Veniente principe ſacerdotum, &c. The Prince of Prieſts being come, the Prieſt in figure ceaſed, &c. the Temple made of ſtones is deſtroyed, to give place to the Temple made of lively ſtones: effoſſum eſt altare, quod erat deorſum, &c. the altar below was broken downe, becauſe the heavenly altar had appeared, Tract. 11. in Matth. Wherefore if Communion tables were in uſe, not altars, they could not ſerve for tombs or ſepulchres. Secondly, the uſe of altars being admitted, yet they ought not to bee made places of buriall: Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 13. qu. c. 15. Prohibendum eſt ſecundum majorum inſtituta, &c. Wee forbid according to the decrees of our Elders, that none be buried in the Church, prope altare vero, but neere unto the altar in no caſe. Thirdly, though it were a lawfull place for buriall under the altar, yet cannot the ſame place be conſecrate to the honour both of God and the Martyr; ſeeing God will not part ſtakes with any, or divide his honour.

Thirdly, this ridiculous diſtinction betweene a Temple, and a Baſilica, or palace, is contrarie to antiquitie: Cod. lib. 8. tit. 12. leg. 20. Baſilicam inauratam nullius imaginis obumbratione fuſcari, &c. We forbid that the Baſilica be obſcured with the ſhadowing forth of any image. This law admitteth not the image of any in the Church; how then can the Church be conſecrate to any Martyr as Patron, whoſe image is not ſuffered to bee there? Here then Baſilica is taken for a Temple dedicate to the honour of God. And in the Councell of Wormes, Can. 48. it is forbidden, ut nulla baſilica, that no Baſilica, that is, Church, be dedicate in the name of the dead: Ergo, not of Saints departed.

See alſo what one of your owne writers ſaith: Loca publica, &c. oratoria, tum Dominica Latinis; tum baſilica & eccleſia Græcis: The publike places of prayer are called Oratories, and the Lords houſe of the Latines, of the Greekes Baſilica, &c. So that the one name of Temple is the Latine, the other of Baſilica is the Greeke, Eſpenc. in 1 Timoth. 39. b. Thus doth it appeare how full of trifling the Jeſuite is in his ſophiſticall diſtinctions.

Fourthly, and yet further let it be here remembred, that there were divers names given unto Churches, they were called either in reſpect of God to whoſe honour they were dedicated, templa, temples, as Auguſtine ſaith, Nos martyribus noſtris, non templa ut diis, &c. Wee doe not build temples to our Martyrs as unto Gods: or of the people there aſſembled, Eccleſia, Churches, as Chryſoſtome, Nemo in Eccleſia, &c. Let no man in the Church thinke of his family, &c. or of the exerciſes there uſed, προσευκτήρια, Oratories, places of prayer, as Euſebius: or of the largenes and greatnes, Baſilicæ, Baſilikes or Palaces, as Auguſtine ſpeaketh of a Baſilica, which a Catholike Biſhop recovered, quam Donatiſtæ invaſerant, which the Donatiſts had invaded: or of the memories of the Apoſtles it was called Apoſtolium, as a great Church at Conſtantinople, Nicephorus: or of ſome Martyr Martyrium, the Martyrie, as a temple built at Jeruſalem by Conſtantine was called the great Martyrie. Now the difference betweene Baſilica and the reſt, ſeemeth to be this: that the moſt ſpacious Churches and goodly buildings were called Baſilicæ, palaces, and the Martyrie might be a Chappell within it: as Auguſtine ſheweth, how the Martyrie of Stephen was within another temple: therefore Bellarmine is farre wide, to thinke that a temple, as it was called Baſilica, a palace, was dedicated to Saints.

Argum. 2. How names are to bee given to places, wee cannot better learne than of thoſe ancient founders of names, the holy Patriarks: As Abraham calleth the mountaine Iehovah-jireh, The Lord hath ſeene. So Iacob giveth holy names to the place where he met the Angels, and where he wreſtled with the Angell, verſ. 31. They, as we ſee, gave holy and reverent names unto places, not made peculiar for Gods ſervice, but onely for civill uſe for the places to bee called and knowne by: how much more ought Churches and houſes of God to be called by his name?

Geneſ. 32. 2.

We therefore conclude that Churches ought not to be erected in Saints names, to worſhip them thereby, and make them our Patrons, Mediators, and preſenters of our prayers: for this were great idolatrie: Even like as the Heathen called their temples by the names of their idols, Venus, Iupiter, Diana, and the like: Yet we refuſe not to call our Churches by the names of Saints, as they have been called of old, becauſe we are not inventors of names and termes, which inured by continuall cuſtome can hardly be left. Wee uſe them only as civill termes to diſtinguiſh places by: if any otherwiſe uſe them for any religious purpoſe, they doe amiſſe. And yet wee deny not, but that the names of holy men may be ſafely remembred, by thankſgiving unto God for ſuch excellent inſtruments, and ſetting before our eyes their good example. And concerning the names which have beene ſuperſtitiouſly given in times paſt unto Churches and other places (though it were to bee wiſhed that they never had been ſo given) yet now we uſe them (ſetting apart all ſuperſtition) as civill names of difference, as S. Luke deſcribed the ſhip of Alexandria wherein they were carried, whoſe badge (ſaith he) was Caſtor and Pollux. In a civill matter of deſcription, he refuſeth not to uſe the names of the heathen gods. Auguſtine alſo giveth a good rule concerning ſuch names. He ſpeaketh of the names of dayes, which were called after the names of heatheniſh Idols, as the fourth day in the weeke, which we call Wedneſday, was then called, and is yet in the Latine tongue, Dies Mercurii, Mercurie his day. Sic dicitur à Paganis, & à multis Chriſtianis, ſed nolumus ut dicant, & utinam corrigantur ut non dicant, &c. melius de ore Chriſtiano ritus loquendi eccleſiaſticus procedit: So is it called of the Heathen, and of many Chriſtians, but I would not have them called ſo, and I wiſh they were amended that they ſo ſpeake not, &c. for a Chriſtian kinde of ſpeaking beſt becommeth a Chriſtian. Sed ſi quem forte conſuetudo contraxerit, &c. ſciat illos omnes, &c. homines fuiſſe: But if cuſtome prevaile with a man ſo to ſpeake, let him underſtand that all they were but men whom the Heathen take for gods.

Act.28.11.

In Pſal.93.

So ſay we, it were to be wiſhed that we had names void of all ſhew of ſuperſtition: but ſeeing for our ſpeaking wee muſt be ruled by cuſtome, let us know that thoſe Saints, by whoſe names places are called, are no Gods, nor Gods fellowes, nor Patrons, or Mediators for us, nor any way to bee worſhipped: but they are the fellow-ſervants of all faithfull Chriſtians, to be reverenced with a Chriſtian dutie of love, not a religious worſhip of ſervice.

Let us ſee the conſent of antiquitie: Concil. Gangrenſ. can.5. Eccleſia, domus Dei, &c. The Church is called the houſe of God: Ergo, not of any Saint. And in the ſubſcription of the Councell: Omnem locum in nomine Dei ædificatum honoramus: Wee doe honour everie place built in the name of God. It was the generall uſe of thoſe times, onely to build Churches to the honour, and in the name of God.

Concil. Vormatienſ. can.48. Vt nulla baſilica ſub defunctorum conſtructa nomine dedicetur: That no Church built in the name of the dead, or departed this life, ſhould be dedicated. But the Saints were ſometime living, and now are dead to the world, &c.

The holy Martyrs have ſealed this truth: Iohn Lambert alleageth out of Auguſtine, that the Angels will not wee ſhould build any Churches in reverence of them, but would that with them wee ſhould honour the originall maker and performer of all, Fox, pag.1108.

Pag.1010.2.35.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr: To build a Church in the honour of our Lady, or any other Saint is in vaine, they cannot helpe us, Fox, pag.1247. col.2. artic.10.

Pag.1137.1.20.

Though when ſuperſtition began to encreaſe, Temples were dedicated to Saints, yet the more ancient uſe was to devote them to the honour of Chriſt.

1 As Conſtantinus built a Temple at Hieruſalem dedicated to the [a] Saviour of the world: there was [b] another built in memorie of the reſurrection.

2 [c] Athanaſius writeth how the Jewes at Berytum being converted to the Chriſtian faith, did conſecrate their greateſt Synagogue to the honour of Chriſt their Saviour.

3 [d] At Florence there was a Temple built in the name of the Saviour.

4 Confeſſion [e] of Wittemberg, they alleage that ſaying of Auguſtine ſubſcribing thereunto: Neither doe we conſecrate Temples, Prieſthoods, rites, ſacrifices unto the ſame Martyrs, ſeeing not they, but their God is our God.

The third part, Of the adorning and beautifying of Churches.

The Papiſts.

THe Temples and Churches of Chriſtians they would have built in the moſt ſumptuous and coſtly manner; yea, in beautie to exceed the palaces of Princes, with ſilver, gold, ſilke, velvet; to be decked and adorned, Bellarm. cap. 6.

37. Exod.

Argum. 1. The Tabernacle of the Jewes was of exceeding beautie: the curtaines thereof, of ſilke; the veſſels, even to the ſnuffers for the lamps, were of gold: the Prieſts garment had a breaſt-plate of gold, ſet about with precious ſtones: Therefore why ſhould not the Temples of Chriſtians bee in like ſort adorned and ſet forth? as Iſay propheſieth, that the glorie of Lebanon ſhall come, the Firre, Olive, and Box tree to beautifie my Sanctuarie, which is literally to bee underſtood, Bellarmine ibid.

Iſai.60.13.

Anſw. Firſt, if the Jeſuite had turned his argument and reaſoned thus: The Temple of the Jewes was gorgeous, and ſumptuous, and beautifull to the eye: therefore Churches of Chriſtians ought not to be ſo now; hee had reaſoned much better: for their ſerving of God was externall; now God will be worſhipped in ſpirit. All things were done unto them in types and figures: the outward glorie of their Temple was a lively figure of the ſpirituall beauty of the Church of Chriſt. Secondly, where you would have the Prophecie of Iſay to be literally underſtood, you have made a good argument for the Jewes : for then they ſhall have their Sanctuary reſtored againe, which the Prophet ſpeaketh of by name. Thirdly, if that place of Iſay have a literall ſenſe, why not that alſo, I will lay thy ſtones with Iſai.54.10. Carbuncle, and thy foundation with the Saphires : I will make thy windowes of Emeraulds, and thy gates ſhining ſtones ? Say alſo that this ſhall be literally performed : and ſo according to this groſſe ſenſe, the Prophecie of Haggie ſhall alſo be fulfilled ; The glory of the laſt houſe ſhall be greater than Hag.2.10. the firſt. But I think you never ſaw Church built in this goodly manner, in beauty ſurpaſſing the Jewiſh Temple nor never ſhall.

Argum. 2. The widow is commended for caſting into the offerings of God all ſhe had. The Luke 21.1. woman that beſtowed the precious ointment upon Chriſt, is ſaid to have done a good work : Ergo, by the ſame relation it is a good work to beſtow ſumptuouſly upon Churches, which are the houſes of God, Bellarm ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument doth not follow, for the body of Chriſt is more worth than ſtones, and the offerings of the Altar of more value, than the tiles of the Church : if extraordinarie coſt be fit to be beſtowed upon the one, it is not ſeemly for the other. Secondly, the widow caſt in all ſhe had, and would ye have men alſo to beſtow all they have upon ſtone wals ? Chriſts example is extraordinarie, and it was once done for his buriall : how then can you draw an extraordinary preſident to an ordinarie practice ?

The Proteſtants.

THat the Churches of Chriſtians, and places of prayer, ought decently to be kept ; yea, and with convenient coſt and ſeemly beauty to be built and repaired, and Church veſſels with other neceſſary furniture, to be of the beſt, not of the worſt ſort, we doe both commend it, and practiſe it : the Civill law ſaith, Ornare ſepulchrum, non eſt prohibitum : It is not forbidden to adorne a ſepulchre. Cod.lib.3.tit.43.leg.7. much leſſe a Church. And we learne by the example of our Saviour (that caſt Mark.11.15,16. out of the Temple ſellers of Doves and money changers, and would not ſuffer them to carry veſſels thorow it) that the houſe of prayer ought to be reverently regarded : but yet it followeth not, that ſuch immoderate and exceſſive coſt ſhould be beſtowed upon the wals of the Church and idols, to garniſh and beautifie idolatry, and poore people in the meane time to want. A Matrone ought to goe comely and decently apparelled, though not tricked up with the jewels and ornaments of an harlot.

Argum. 1. Our Saviour Chriſt reproveth the Scribes and Phariſees, becauſe they drew the people to be good unto the Altar, and to beſtow largely upon them, and ſo leave their parents helpleſſe. And Matth.15.5. he often doth inculcate that golden ſaying, I will have mercy and not ſacrifice : it is better to ſuccour the living temples of God, which are the bodies of his poore children, than to beſtow ſuperfluous coſt upon dead temples of ſtone.

Argum. 2. Chriſt alſo doth rebuke them, becauſe like hypocrites they did garniſh the ſepulchres of the Prophets, and yet perſecuted their doctrine. So all popiſh Phariſees are worthy of blame, that Matth.23.29. take greater care in garniſhing the Temples and Tombes of the holy Apoſtles and Martyrs, than they doe in ſetting forth their holy doctrine, and preaching the Goſpell, nay they doe contemne, perſecute, and hate that doctrine, for the which thoſe holy men died : ſo that this proverbe was very well deviſed of them ; In times paſt we had golden Prieſts and wooden Cups, now we have wooden Prieſts and golden Cups.

Argum. 3. Chriſt in the day of judgement ſhall condemne the wicked, for omitting the works of mercy, as Matth.25. becauſe they did not feed and clothe the poore, &c. he ſaith not, becauſe they did not beſtow gold and ſilver upon Churches.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the leſſe ſinners are there remembred, whereby it is gathered that the greater ſinners ſhall be much more puniſhed : Chriſt ſaith not, Goe into hell fire becauſe ye oppreſſed the poore, but becauſe ye did not cheriſh them : yet if this be a ſinne, the other much more ; ſo if he be damned, that gave no almes, much more he that did not build, or repaire the Church : cap.6. in fine.

Contra. Firſt, Is it true then in Popiſh Divinity, that he that buildeth not a Church, that is able, ſhall be damned ? if this were ſo, or men could be ſo perſwaded, we ſhould have Churches enow, and too many : and I think many a Pope-Catholike man amongſt themſelves, hath not beene a builder of Churches. Againe, it is moſt abſurd to ſay or think, that not to repaire a Church with ſuperfluous coſt, is a greater ſin, than not to refreſh a man ready to die : for the one is a living member of Chriſt, the other is but a dead ſtone : he may be aſhamed to broach ſuch ſtuffe. Thirdly, it is no ſinne at all not to beſtow princely coſt in garniſhing of a Church (for moderate and ſeemly coſt, we ſpeak not againſt) much leſſe a greater ſinne.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non dixit templum ſanctum tuum mirabile in columnis, mirabile in marmoribus, &c. He ſaid not thy temple is wonderfull in the pillars or marble, but in righteouſneſſe : in Pſal.64.

Bernard in his time much complained of the ſuperfluous coſt that was beſtowed upon Churches : Dominum Dei decet ſanctitudo, qua non tam politis marmoribus, quam ornatis moribus delectatur : & puras magis diligit mentes, quam ſuperauratos parietes: Holineſſe becommeth Gods houſe, which is rather delighted with unpolluted manners, than poliſhed marble: with pure wits rather, than painted and gilded wals: ad milites templi, cap. 5. Againe, ſaith he: Omitto oratoriorum immenſas altitudines, immoderatas longitudines,&c. I omit to ſpeak of the exceſſive height of their Oratories, the unreaſonable length, the ſuperfluous breadth, the curious paintings: Quæ dum orantium in ſe retorquent aſpectum, impediunt affectum, & mihi quodammodo repræſentant antiquum ritum Iudæorum: Which while they draw unto him the ſight or aſpect of him that prayeth, doe hinder his affection, and doe ſeeme to me to repreſent the old rite of the Jewes,&c. If Bernard had lived in theſe late popiſh times, I think, he ſhould have beene talked withall for his ſpeech: he ſaith contrary to Bellarmine, who untruly affirmeth, that the gorgeous ornaments of Churches doe ſtir up devotion, and not hinder it: whereas Saint Paul alſo ſaith, We walke by faith, not by ſight. Whereupon it may be inferred, that the ſight of the eye doth hinder the faith of the heart.

Apolog. Bernard.

2 Cor. 5. 7.

Zepherinus Biſhop of Rome thought he had done enough, when he brought glaſſe veſſels into the Church for the uſe of the Sacrament, in ſtead of wooden. But when Vrbanus after him, for glaſſe veſſels gave them ſilver, it was then thought, that nothing could be added: but now gold upon gold, pearles, precious ſtones, and all the coſtlineſſe that may be, is thought too little to adorne the popiſh Maſſe: Wherein they forget the ancient decree of Euſebius Biſhop of Rome, Non in ſerico panno, aut tincto, ſed puro lineo ſacrificium altaris conſecretur: That the ſacrifice of the Altar, (for ſo ſignificantly they call the Sacrament of the Lords body) ſhould not be conſecrate in ſilke, or ſtained or coloured cloth, but in pure and plaine linnen.

Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. leg. 17. Iuſt. It is made lawfull for the redeeming of captives, to ſell the ornaments, veſſels and veſtments of the Church: and this reaſon is given, Quia non abſurdum eſt, animas hominum quibuſcunque veſtimentis præferri: It is not abſurd to preferre the ſoules of men before veſſels and veſtments whatſoever: Ergo, it is a better work to clothe the naked, than to hang a Church,&c.

Likewiſe, Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 12. qu. 2. cap. 70. Aurum ſacramenta non quærunt. The Sacraments need no gold. Againſt ſuperfluous ornaments there is extant the decree of Clemens 5. Clementin. lib. 5. tit. 11. c. 1. Deus ad animum ſibi miniſtrantium reſpicit principaliter, non ad manum: God chiefly reſpecteth the minde of him that miniſtreth, not his hand: neither will he be ſerved with ſuch veſſels and inſtruments, as are not agreeable to the condition of thoſe which ſerve him, &c. Superfluity, coſtlineſſe, or curioſity in Church veſſels is not ſeemly,&c. Likewiſe, Extrau. com. lib. 1. tit. 5. c. 1. Ioannes 22. decreed againſt the begging Friers, Quod plures campanas, becauſe they had many bels in their Churches, that from henceforth, they ſhould have but one: yet of all other ſuperfluous ornaments, ſome ſuperfluous coſt in a ring of bels ſeemeth to be more tolerable.

Hagg. 1. 4.

Mark. 7. 11, 12.

Churches we grant are in decent manner to be maintained, not to be ſuffered to goe to ruine, or no better kept, than barnes or ſtables: the Iſraelites were reproved for making themſelves ſieled houſes, and to ſuffer Gods houſe to lie waſte: But notwithſtanding immoderate and exceſſive coſt is not commendable, to garniſh the Temple of ſtones with gold and ſilver, and ſo ſuffer the living members of Chriſt to want: as our Saviour reproveth the Scribes and Phariſees for moving the people to inrich their altars, while they ſuffered their parents to want.

Tom. 2. Homil. de Nativit.

Homil. 6. in 1 Timoth. c. 2.

1 Chryſoſtome miſliketh not, that coſt ſhould bee beſtowed upon the Church, as hee maketh mention of a manger made of ſilver at Conſtantinople, to repreſent the cratch where Chriſt lay, neque condemno eos, qui in templo fecerunt vaſa: neither doe I condemne thoſe which have made veſſels of gold, &c. yet he more commendeth almes to the poore, and therefore adviſeth every one before he goe to prayer, to ſet ſomewhat apart for the poore: and perſwadeth, non eſſe ſine eleemoſyna orationi vacandum, that one ſhould not give himſelfe to prayer without ſome almes. Epiphanius finding in a Church a picture in a cloth, counſelled it to be taken downe, and ſome poore mans body wrapped in it: Epiſt. ad Ioann. Hieroſoly.

Cauſ. 12. qu. 2. cap. 71. ex Hieron. ad Nepotian.

4 Beſide the teſtimony of Bernard, before alleaged, there is a moſt direct and pregnant place, which Gratiane hath collected out of Hierome: Multi ædificant parietes & columnas Eccleſiæ ſubſtruunt, marmora nitent,&c. Many doe raiſe wals, and ſet under the pillars of the Church, which ſhine with marble, the roofe gliſtereth with gold, the Altar with precious ſtones is garniſhed, and in the meane time there is no choice of the Miniſters of Chriſt: neither let any oppoſe the rich Temple in Judea, the Table, Candleſtick, Cenſors,&c. and other things made of gold: then thoſe things were allowed of God, when the Prieſts offered ſacrifices,&c. though all thoſe things went before in figure,&c. but now ſeeing pauper Dominus, our poore Lord, hath dedicated the poverty of his houſe, let us beare the croſſe, & divitias lutum putavimus, and wee ſhall think riches to be duſt.

Walfridus ſaith, Longe ſatius eſſe pauperibus ſubvenier,&c. It was better to helpe the poore, than to adorne Church wals: lib. de offic. & ritib. c. 14. Petrus de Aliaco complaineth of the multitude of Temples in his book of the reformation of the Church exhibited to the Councell of Conſtance,&c.

The fourth part of the Dedication of Churches.

The Papiſts.

THe ſuperſtitious Dedication of their Churches, with the annuall memories thereof, they would warrant by the example of our Saviour Chriſt, who was preſent at the feaſt of the Dedication, which was inſtituted by Iudas Macchabeus. Ioh. 10. 22. and by his preſence allowed it, Rhem. in eum loc. 58. Error. Iohn 10.22.

Iacob alſo conſecrated the Altar with oyle, before the times of the law, and called it the houſe of God: and under the law Moſes did conſecrate the Tabernacle, and the Altar with oyle, Exod.14. Bell. c.5. The ſame things are objected by the Doway tranſlators, as that of Iacob, P. 44. and of David, ſanctifying of things to the uſe of the Temple, 1 Chron.26.25.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, a thankſgiving to God for the reſtitution of the temple after the holy profanation thereof, is a thing approved by Gods law, but it is not neceſſary to keepe a yeerely memory thereof: for neither was there any ſuch inſtituted by Ezechiah, after the profanation of the Temple by Achaz and Vrias; nor by Ioſias, after the ſame had beene moſt horribly polluted by Manaſſes and Amon, nor by Zorobabel, Eſdras, or Nehemiah, after it was reedified, when it had beene utterly deſtroyed by the Chaldees.

Againe, it was moſt abſurd, that by the example of Iacob, and Moſes, he pleadeth for the reſtitution of Jewiſh Ceremonies: for Saint Paul ſaith, theſe were ſhadowes of things to come, but the body is in Chriſt. The body therefore being come, the ſhadow vaniſheth: he might by the ſame reaſon as well bring in Jewiſh ſacrifices, becauſe Iacob before the Law, & Moſes under the Law offered ſacrifices; but herein I refuſe not the triall of your owne law, Decret.part.2.cauſ.12.qu.2.cap.71. Tunc hæc probabantur à Domino, &c. Then theſe things were allowed of God (ſpeaking of the ornaments of the Tabernable) when as the Prieſts offered ſacrifice, &c. all theſe things went before in figure &c. So may we ſay of oyle, ſalt, ointment, hyſſope, with other ceremonies of the Jewes: what have we to doe with them now? they were as handmaids to wait upon the externall ſacrifices, which being aboliſhed, they alſo ſhould ceaſe. Coloſ.2.17.

Davids ſanctifying of theſe things, was but a dedicating of them to the ſacred uſe of the Temple; there is no mention of rites, ceremonies, curioſities uſed in this Dedication: and their owne marginall note ſaith no more: things are ſanctified by deſignation to holy uſe: and though they would have ſhewed here ſome ceremonious ſanctification, thoſe were the times of the Law, which would beare them out in ſuch obſervances, which beſeeme not the Goſpell.

Your popiſh hallowing of Churches hath nothing like unto it, but the name: for you uſe a number of fooliſh ceremonies, and many of them groſſe ſuperſtitions, in the Dedication of your Churches.

Firſt, there are twelve Croſſes painted round about in the Church, and twelve burning Lampes ſet over againſt every one of them, one againſt one: hereby (ſay they) the twelve Apoſtles are ſignified, that by the preaching of the Croſſe gave light to the whole world. 2 They uſe oile in anointing their Altar, and other veſſels, ſhewing hereby that they are conſecrate to holy uſes. 3 They ſprinkle water, burne incenſe, ſet up Taber light: this ſheweth (ſaith the Jeſuite) that the place is conſecrate to praier, and other holy actions. 4 They ſprinkle aſhes round about the Church, and write in the floore the Greeke and Latine Alphabet from one ſide of the Church to the other. This betokeneth (ſay they) the preaching of faith, which is the foundation and ground of all righteouſneſſe, which was firſt taught in the Greek and Latine tongue. 5 They beat upon the Church doore, and call upon Saints and Angels: that is, (ſay they) to command Satan to depart, Bellar.cap.5.

Firſt, they offend in the number of their fooliſh ceremonies, exceeding herein the manner of the Jewiſh dedication: ſo that unto them it may be ſaid, as Paul to the Galathians; how turne you again to impudent and beggerly rudiments? Galath.4.4.

Secondly, they have no warrant for their frivolous ſhadowes and ſignifications: which are but ſhadowes of things to come, but the body is in Chriſt: we have the body, what need any more ſhadowes? Chriſt will not now be worſhipped with croſſes, aſhes, characters, candle-light, and ſuch apiſh toyes. Coloſſ.2.17.

Thirdly, ſome of theſe ceremonies are impious, and ſacrilegious: the invocation of Angels and Saints, is a robbing of God of his honour, who onely is to be prayed unto.

Auguſtine ſaith of ſuch inventors of new rites and ceremonies, Ipſam religionem, quam pauciſſimis & manifeſtiſſimis celebrationum ſacramentis liberam eſſe voluit, &c. ſervilibus oneribus premunt: they cumber religion with burdenſome ceremonies, which the mercy of God hath made free with a few Sacraments. Epiſtol.119.

Neither hath this ceremonious rite of dedicating Churches, any ſuch ſignification as the Jeſuite ſetteth downe, to be applied to the materiall Church: but as Bernard ſaith: In nobis ſpiritualiter im- plet;

pleri neceſſe eſt, quæ in parietibus viſibiliter præceſſerunt: It muſt neceſſarily be in us ſpiritually fulfilled, which viſibly is done to the wals: de dedicat. eccleſ. ſerm. 1.

Concil, Colonienſ. part.9. cap. 11. Docendus eſt populus dedicatione eccleſiæ ſignificari dedicationem Eccleſiæ catholicæ, ac cujuſlibet hominis Chriſtiani, qua dedicatur Deo. The people muſt be taught, that by dedication of the Church is ſignified the dedication of the whole Catholike Church, and of every Chriſtian man, whereby he is conſecrate to God.

Euſeb.lib.4. de vit. Conſtanti. Athanaſ.Apolog.2. Sacran. Elucid. c.2.err.8. Athanaſ. Apolog. ad Cōſtāt. Harm.15.p.465

What was the ancient manner of dedicating of Churches, ſhall further appeare. Firſt, as when Conſtantine dedicated the Church of our Saviour at Jeruſalem, he diſtributed money and garments among the poore, and gave great gifts to the Church, the Biſhops precib. & concionib. decorarunt: did with prayers and preaching adorne that feſtivall aſſembly: the Muſcovites at this day make ſmall account of the Romane manner of conſecrating and hallowing of Churches.

2 Such was the faſhion alſo in the South Church, as Athanaſius writeth of Alexander Biſhop there, that he did celebrate the dedication of the Church, which he had made, per conventus laudes & gratias Deo canentes: by aſſemblies ſinging praiſe and thanks unto God.

3 Confeſſ. latter of Helvetia: c.22. As we beleeve that God doth not dwell in Temples made with hands, ſo we know, that by reaſon of the word of God, and holy exerciſes therein celebrated, places dedicated to God, and his worſhip are not profane, but holy, &c. they are conſecrated by the holy exerciſes therein uſed.

Tom.3.diſp.61. ſer.2.

4 Suarez a Jeſuite telleth us, poſſit interdum Oratorium per ſimplicem voluntatem, & Eccleſia per ſimplicem benedictionem, ſometime an Oratory by the ſimple intention of the will, and a Church by a plaine benediction, may be deſtined for the miniſtery of ſacred things.

The Papiſts.

59. Error.

THey maintaine their ſuperſtitious and popiſh bleſſing with the Croſſe, the hallowing of wax, fire, palmes, aſhes, holy bread, holy water, ſalt, oile, and ſuch like: which have power, as they would beare us in hand, to drive away diſeaſes and evill ſpirits, Rhemiſt. annot. 2 *Tim.4. ſect.*12,13. Bellarm. lib.3. cap.7.

1 Tim.4.5.

Argum. 1. Firſt, for the hallowing of theſe creatures to holy uſes, and making of them actually holy, they alleage that ſaying of Saint Paul: Every creature of God is good, and is ſanctified by the word of God and prayer: Ergo, theſe creatures may be ſanctified to holy uſes, as the water alſo in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Euchariſt: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not here onely of the common benediction of meats, but of a more high and exact applying of creatures to holy uſes, Rhemiſt.

Anſw. S. Paul here ſpeaketh onely of the common and ordinary uſe of Gods creatures, as of meats and drinks for every mans private uſe: and he ſheweth how they are ſanctified by the word of God, which permitteth unto the faithfull the free uſe of them; and by prayer: not that they are uncleane by nature, but by pollution of ſin; and by this meanes are made holy and cleane. Secondly, we confeſſe alſo, that ſome things ſet apart for the ſervice of God, are more ſpecially called holy, as the Arke, Altar, and Temple: but it is not lawfull to ſever what creatures we will from the common uſe, and conſecrate them to the ſervice of God, but ſuch as are appointed by his word; as water in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Lords Supper have the warrant of Gods word, as none of your popiſh trumpery have: neither are theſe creatures ſo conſecrate holy in themſelves, to conferre or impart their holineſſe to other things, but are ſo called in reſpect of the holy uſe, for the which out of the word of God they are appointed.

Argum. 2. For the efficacie and power of theſe hallowed things, they thus reaſon. The bitter water given to the adulterous woman cauſed her thigh to rot, if ſhe were guilty, otherwiſe it made her fruitfull. Eliſæus healed the bitter water with caſting in ſalt: the Apoſtles healed the ſick with anointing them with oile, Rhemiſt. Bellarm. ibid. Ergo, theſe ſanctified creatures may doe the like.

Anſ. Firſt, the bitter water of it ſelfe had not that power, but by vertue of that oath, with the which the woman was charged. Againe, it hath the warrant of the word, as yours have not. Secondly, Eliſæus and the Apoſtles had the ſpirit to work miracles, ſo have not you: and they might have done that they did without any ſuch meanes. Againe, it was common ſalt, and ordinary oile which they uſed, not bleſſed before, after your popiſh manner.

Argum. 3. Our Doway men doe here alſo come in with their part: and object the ſame place, Numb.5.22. giving this marginall note: *water ſanctified by ſpeciall acts, is called holy-water, and ſerveth to holy uſes, p.*332. Likewiſe by that place where the high Prieſt ſaith to David. I have no common bread at hand, but onely holy bread, they inferre the diſtinction of common and holy bread: ſo they would prove the ceremony of aſhes, becauſe the Lord ſaith to Adam: duſt thou art, Page 12. and pag. 32. and holy oile by Jacobs powring oile upon the ſtone, &c. Gen.28.18.p.90.

Anſw. Firſt, the ceremonies before and under the Law are no patterne for the rites to be uſed under the Goſpell: ſuch are the bitter water and holy bread, oile and the like, S. Paul giveth us a rule for ſuch ceremonies of the law: which are ſhadowes of things to come, but the body is Chriſt: the body then being come, there is no more uſe of the ſhadow. I would oppoſe againſt them their owne note: as upon the 11. of Leviticus p. 284. Chriſtians are not bound to the obſervances of the old Law, but to that which they ſignified: and againe upon Iohn 1.11. prepare ye victuals, they make this marginall note: they might beſide Manna, which yet ceaſed not, provide other meat, prefiguring, that in the Primitive Church, it ſhould be lawfull to uſe legall ceremonies, with Evangelicall rites for a time till the old Law were buried with honour: pag. 471. Themſelves then are witneſſes that now legall ceremonies ſuch as theſe be, are not to be uſed together with Evangelicall rites.

The Proteſtants.

First, we hold that no ſuch things ought to be ſeparated for holy uſes, becauſe they have not the warrant of the word of God: for all things that are ſanctified, are ſo ſanctified by the word of God and prayer, 1 Timoth.4.5. But they have not the word of God for their warrant, neither doe they uſe any prayer of faith, but a ſuperſtitious kinde of croſſing. Nadab and Abihu were conſumed with fire, becauſe they offered ſtrange fire, not taken from the Altar: that is, they preſumed of their owne authority, without Gods commandement, to conſecrate a ſtrange element to Gods ſervice, and were puniſhed, Ergo, it is dangerous without Gods word, to conſecrate any ſuch things.

Levit.10.1.

Interralig. Cæſarea in præfation. thus we reade: Siquidem ceremoniis ſuccreverit, ex quo ſuperſtitio cauſari poſſit, illud tollatur: If any thing have growne by the ceremonies of the Church, which may give occaſion of ſuperſtition, let it be removed. But ſuch are popiſh rites and ceremonies: Ergo, &c.

See the confeſſion of the holy Martyr: Iohn Fortune, being asked what he ſaid to the ceremonies of the Church: anſwered by the words of our Saviour Chriſt, All things that are not planted by my heavenly father, ſhall be plucked up. And againe, In vaine doe men worſhip me with mens traditions and commandements. Chriſt openly rebuked the Scribes, Phariſees, Prieſts, for making Gods commandement of none effect, to ſupport their owne traditions. The Biſhop of Norwitch replied; Thou lieſt, there is not ſuch a word in all the Scriptures, Fox pag. 1919. So cunning were theſe Popiſh Biſhops in Scripture.

Math.15.13.
Mark.7.7.

Concerning the ſprinkling and waſhing with holy water, Auguſtine thus writeth of the ſame or like cuſtome of waſhing: Ne ad ipſum Baptiſmi ſacramentum videretur pertinere, multi hoc in conſuetudinem recipere noluerunt: nonnulli de conſuetudine auferre non dubitarunt: Many would not receive that cuſtome, leſt it ſhould ſeeme to be another Baptiſme: and ſome have not doubted cleane to take it away.

Epiſtol.119. cap.18.

I will object againſt them a conceit of one of their Popes: Innocent. 3. who decreed, that, Oleum non conſecratum, &c. Oyle not hallowed or conſecrated may be mingled with hallowed oyle, in the dedication of Churches; Decret. Greg. lib.3. tit.40. c.3. Thus we ſee that they themſelves hold not alwayes the conſecrating of theſe toyes neceſſary.

Secondly, though ſuch things were rightly hallowed, yet have they no ſuch power: Chriſt ſheweth the way, whereby evill ſpirits are chaſed away; by prayer and faſting. And therefore to conjure creatures, to expell Satan, without the word of God, is no better than a kinde of Magick and enchantment.

Mark.9.29.

Synod. Moguntin. c. 39. Paſtores ſedulo doceant effectus, qui inde petuntur, non ipſarum rerum efficaciæ, ſed divinæ virtutis operationi, per fortiſſimi nominis Domini invocationem tribuendos eſſe: Let the paſtors diligently teach, that the effects (of theſe ceremonies of holy bread, holy water, &c.) are not to be aſcribed to the efficacie of the things themſelves, but to the working of the divine power, by calling upon the moſt powerfull name of God: Ergo, theſe hallowed things have no ſuch power of themſelves.

Thomas Haukes holy Martyr hath put to his ſeale: who upon theſe words, Act.19. God ſo wrought by the hands of Paul, that there went partlets and napkins from him, &c. which gave health; inferreth that it was God that wrought, not the ceremonies, Fox pag. 1588. If theſe ceremonies wrought not of themſelves warranted by the Apoſtles, much leſſe ſuch as are invented by men.

Concerning ſuch Jewiſh ceremonies, the ancient writers thus delivereth their opinions: 1 Baſil ſaith, corporalis legis obſervatio in adventu Chriſti abolita eſt, figuris ad veritatem tranſlatis: the corporall obſervations of the law are aboliſhed in Chriſts comming, the figures being tranſlated into the verity, &c. ſuch are the waſhing with water, which at this day the Muſcovites doe every day ſprinkle themſelves withall ritu Iudaico after the Jewiſh manner: and therefore the Romaniſts themſelves do note this as one of their errors: And they to requite the Latines againe, doe neither allow of chriſme nor any other thing, hallowed or conſecrated by them of the Latine Church, but hold that the Patriark onely of Conſtantinople, hath power to conſecrate ſuch things.

Pag.1443.1.18. Libr. de ſpirit. ſancto.
Append. error. Muſc. error.17.

2 In the South Church the ancient doctrine was, that of the precepts of the Law, ſome muſt bee kept corporally, ſome ſpiritually, corporally as thou ſhalt not commit adultery, thou ſhalt not kill, &c. but to circumciſe, to keepe the Sabbath, to kill a lambe, to eat unleavened bread, and ſuch like, tantum ſpiritualiter, onely ſpiritually: Maximus Alexandrin.

4. Platina ſaith that Pope Alexander, primus inſtituit, did firſt ordaine that water, which they call holy: tempered with ſalt ſhould be uſed, ad fugandos dæmones, to drive away devils: and Durant thinketh it was borrowed of the Jewes or Gentiles: And indeed the Gentiles had the very like cuſtome to ſprinkle thoſe which came into the Church with water.

The ſeventh queſtion, Of Pilgrimages and Proceſſions.

The Papiſts.

60. Error.

First, they hold that pilgrimages made to Jeruſalem and the Holy-land, as they call it, to Rome, and to the memories of Saints in other places, to aske and obtaine their helpe, are godly and religious, and to be much uſed of Chriſtians, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 25. *Bellarm. cap.*8. The halt and lame went up to Jeruſalem to be healed in the poole of Betheſda. Certaine Greekes came up to worſhip at the feaſt. The Eunuch went up in pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, Ergo, it is lawfull and requiſite, *Rhemiſt. Bellar. cap.*8.

John 5.4. Iohn 12,20. Acts 8.27.

Anſw. Firſt, when you can prove that ſuch miracles are wrought at the memories of Saints, as the Scripture teſtifieth of this poole, men may be bold to goe unto them for their bodily health, as we ſee there is reſort unto Bathes: but not for any religion. Secondly, the Grecians, that viſited Jeruſalem, were Jewes that dwelt among the Gentiles, or Proſelytes, which were bound to viſit the Temple at Jeruſalem. Thirdly, the Eunuch went not up in pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, but to worſhip: for there was yet no other knowne place of the world, where God was worſhipped.

61. Error. Matth.21.8.

Secondly, their ſolemne proceſſions, eſpecially upon Palme Sunday, with carrying the Sacrament about, ſtrewing of ruſhes, bearing of Palmes, ſetting up of boughs, hanging up rich clothes, the Quire and Queriſters ſinging: they would warrant by that action of our Saviour Chriſt, *Matth.*21.8. when he came riding to Jeruſalem, and the people ſtrewed their garments in the way, Rhemiſt. annot. Mat. 21. ſect. 1.

Anſ. Firſt, your proceſſions are horrible abuſings and profanations of the Lords inſtitution, who ordained his Supper to be eaten and drunk, not to be carried about in proceſſion like an heatheniſh idoll. Secondly, that which the people and Chriſts diſciples did, they had warrant for out of the Scripture: but who required this theatricall pompe at your hands? The riding of Chriſt upon an aſſe was before propheſied of, Zachar. 9. and the childrens crying out in the Temple, *Pſalm.*8. The cutting downe of Palme branches was a ceremony belonging to the feaſt of Tabernacles, truly accompliſhed by our deliverance in Chriſt. But you have turned the holy myſterie of Chriſts riding to Jeruſalem, to a May-game, and Pageant-play.

Zachar.9.9. Pſalm.8.2. Exod.3.5. 2 Chron.20.4.

Our Doway men alſo come in here with their part, by Moſes putting off his ſhooes, they would warrant devout going to holy places. *Pag.*160. and for that Iſrael in Iehoſaphats time came up from their cities to Jeruſalem to require of the Lord, *Pag.*899.

John 4.21.

Anſw. Firſt, that place where Moſes put off his ſhooes, was holy during the time onely of Gods viſible preſence there, neither went Moſes farre unto it, but God appeared in the place where Moſes was: and it were too hard to enjoyne their pilgrimes to goe all the way barefoot. 2 Jeruſalem was then the ſpeciall place of Gods worſhip: but now God chuſeth not one place more than another, Iohn 4. Neither did the people goe up for the holineſſe of the place, but to celebrate a publike faſt, neither went they out of their owne countrey, but to the chiefe city of the kingdome, whither the King called them.

The Proteſtants.

First, that no place ought to be frequented, or reſorted unto for religions ſake, or more holineſſe, or for the health of the ſoule: we prove it out of the word of God.

Acts 10.35. Iohn 4.

S. Peter ſaith, That in every nation he that feareth God is accepted with him, Ergo, one nation is as holy as another. And now our Saviour ſaith, That God will not be worſhipped at Jeruſalem, or in mount Garizim, but in ſpirit and truth. He therefore that ſeeketh places to worſhip God in, as though he were rather to be found in one place than another, hath left the ſpirituall worſhip.

Auguſtine thus writeth concerning pilgrimage; Hee wiſheth men to ſeeke them teachers and inſtructors, by whom they might be taught: Deerat in ea terra, quam incolebas? qua cauſa melius cogeret peregrinari? But is there no teacher in the countrey where thou dwelleſt? what better cauſe canſt thou have to travaile, and goe in pilgrimage to ſeeke one in other countreys? *De utilit. credend. cap.*7.

Thus he would have men to play the pilgrimes; not to run gadding to reliques and images, but to ſeeke for teachers and inſtructors.

Against this ſuperſtitious uſe of pilgrimages it was thus decreed: *Conc. Cabilonenſ. ſub Carolo, can.*44 can.44.45. Sunt presbyteri, qui negligenter viventes, in eo ſe purgari à peccatis putant, ſi præfata loca attingant, Romam ſcilicet ſeu Turonem: ſunt quidam laici qui ſe impunè peccare putant, &c. There bee Prieſts, who living diſſolutely, doe thinke themſelves purged from their ſins, by going to Rome or Turraine: there be certaine Lay men, which thinke they may ſinne without controulement, by reſorting to theſe places to pray: ſome mightie men, which under the pretence of going on pilgrimage do oppreſſe the poore: ſome poore men which doe it, ut majorem habeant mendicandi materiam, to beg more freely: Non attendentes quod aiit B. Hieronymus, Non Hieroſolymam vidiſſe, ſed Hieroſolymis bene vixiſſe, laudandum eſt: They marke not what Hierome ſayth, It is not praiſe worthie to have ſeene Jeruſalem, but to have lived well at Jeruſalem: which ſentence of S. Hierome is approved in their decrees, par. 2. cauſ. 12. c. 71. Wee ſee then much hurt, but little good to come by pilgrimages.

Let us heare the determination of one of their Popes: Innocent. 3. decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 34. c. 7. gloſſ. Quia jam impletum eſt verbum Dei dicentis, &c. Becauſe now the word of Chriſt is fulfilled, ſaying, The houre ſhall come, and now is, when neither in this mountaine, nor at Ieruſalem, yee ſhall worſhip the father, &c. Videri poterat, quod non minus in Eccleſia tua, quam Orientali terra proficeres piis orationibus: It might ſeeme, that you might as much profite by your prayers in your owne Church at home, as in the Eaſt Countrie: meaning, that which they call the holy land, &c. Here wee have the determination of a Pope againſt the neceſſitie of pilgrimages, and that warranted by Scripture.

See the Confeſſion of holy Martyrs: William Sweeting perſecuted to death, for ſaying to his wife, that it were better for her to keepe at home, and attend upon her buſineſſe than to goe on pilgrimage, Fox pag. 818. Iſabel Morwin, for ſaying, ſhee would goe no more on pilgrimage while ſhee lived, for all Saints (ſaid ſhee) are in heaven, pag. 827. col. 2. Thomas Geffrey perſecuted for ſaying, That true pilgrimage was barefoot to goe and viſite the poore, weake, and ſicke; for they are the true Images of God, pag. 827. col. 1. Miſtreſſe Coiſmore, for ſpeaking theſe words, That if ſhee went to her chamber and prayed there, ſhee would have as much merit, as though ſhee went to Walſingham in pilgrimage: and that folkes goe on pilgrimage more for the greene way, than any devotion, pag. 835. col. 2.

Secondly, as touching the Popiſh pompous proceſſions, they are both ſuperſtitious, in reviving and renewing the Jewiſh ceremonies, ſuch as the feaſt of Tabernacles was, which are all now aboliſhed as ſhadowes by the comming of Chriſt: and they are plainely idolatrous, for they carrie about their breaden God in proceſſion, and make an Idoll of a peece of baked wheat: but Paul ſaith, The Sacrament ought to be received with thankſgiving in the Churches and congregations of Chriſtians, not to be carried about to be gazed upon in the fields. Seemely proceſſions, void of ſuperſtition, which are uſed for civill purpoſes, as to maintaine the limits and bounds of townſhips, and withall by the ſight of Gods bleſſing upon the creatures to bee ſtirred up to thankfulneſſe, wee neither miſlike nor condemne. 1 Cor. 11. 33.

Conc. Colon. part. 9. cap. 8. Ut proceſſiones per agros & campos amplius non peragantur, &c. That proceſſions ſhould be no longer made through the fields, becauſe that by occaſion of ſuch walking, which was inſtituted for the appeaſing of God, many ſins are committed: Wherefore it ſeemeth better to us, that theſe and ſuch like ſupplications from henceforth ſhould be made within the compaſſe of the Church, &c. Popiſh proceſſions, as we ſee, are here by a Popiſh Councell abridged. This alſo hath beene the judgement of the holy Martyrs: Thomas Spicer, Iohn Deny, put to death, for refuſing to follow the Croſſe in proceſſion, p. 1912. col. 2. artic. 6. Ralfe Allerton for refuſing to carrie the Croſſe in proceſſion, p. 2018. col. 1.

Now yet further. 1 Gregorie Nyſſenus hath a whole oration of this matter againſt thoſe which goe a pilgrimage to Jeruſalem: ſome of whoſe pithie arguments, it ſhall not bee amiſſe here to ſet downe.

1 It is none of the precepts, which Chriſt hath preſcribed to make us bleſſed: Quod ergo beatum non efficit, &c. Why then ſhould one place his ſtudie in that, which will not make him bleſſed?

2 Then he objecteth the difficultie of the journey, ſpecially to weake women, and danger of their chaſtitie, Reprehenſionem nullo modo effugiat, &c. She cannot eſcape rebuke, whether ſhee travell with thoſe ſhe knoweth, or with ſtrangers.

3 They paſſe by many places of corrupt manners, and how can it be; Ut non afficiatur, qui affecto loco tranſgreditur, That he ſhould not be infected, that paſſeth by places infected?

4 Localis mutatio, ut Deus propior ſit, non efficit: The change of place maketh not God neerer: whereſoever thou art, God will come unto thee, if thy ſoule be fit to receive him: otherwiſe, if thy minde be unprepared, if thou were in mount Olivet, Et ſub ipſo monumento reſurrectionis; And in the very monument of the reſurrection, it ſhould not profit thee, and ſo he concludeth, A corpore ergo peregrinemur ad Dominum, non è Cappadocia in Paleſtinam: Let us then travell as Pilgrims out of the bodie to God, not out of Cappadocia to Paleſtina.

2 So Antonie the Ægyptian Monke, Let the Grecians follow tranſmarine ſtudies: we have no neceſſitie of paſſing over the Sea: In omni ſede terrarum conſtituta ſunt regna cœlorum: In every ſeat of the earth, the Kingdome of heaven is to be found: as our Saviour ſaith in the Goſpell, the Kingdome of heaven is within you. Vit. Antonii.

Harm. ſect. 16. pag. 487.

3 French confeſſ. attic. 24. Purgatorie is a fained thing comming out of the ſame ſhop, whence alſo have proceeded, monaſticall vowes, pilgrimages, &c.

4 See the decree of Innocentius, and the Councell of Colon before alleaged. Adde hereunto the teſtimonie of Vincentius a Spaniſh Monke, who lived about ann. 1454. whom the Romaniſts call a Saint: Homines & mulieres peregrinando, &c. efficiuntur pejores, &c. Men and women in going a pilgrimage become worſe, they goe forth chaſte, and returne ſtrumpets, therefore let our pilgrimage be ſpiritually done, as Saint Paul ſaith, Let us live in the ſpirit, walke in the ſpirit, &c. Ex Verger. de Idol. Lauretan.

An appendix, concerning the holy Land, and holy warres for the ſame, as they were called.

The Papiſts.

62. Error.

THey which are but a little acquainted with ancient ſtories, ſhall finde, that there were never in Chriſtendome ſuch bloudie warres, and for ſo long a time, as thoſe which were at the inſtigation of the Popes, taken in hand by Chriſtian Princes for the recovery of the holy land; in ſo much that they were made to beleeve, that it was a meritorious worke: Whereupon King Richard the firſt, calling to minde his rebellion and diſobedience to his father, in part of ſatisfaction, purpoſed a voyage into the holy land, as it was called, to redeeme Chriſts patrimonie from the Infidels, Fox pag. 235. For why? they ſay, it is an holy land: for if the places of Gods apparition are counted holy, much more the places of Chriſts nativitie, buriall, paſſion, and reſurrection. Saint Peter calleth the place where Chriſt was transfigured, The holy mount, Rhemiſt. 1. Tim. 4. Sect. 10.

Exod. 3. 5. Iohn 5. 15. 2 Pet. 1. 18.

Anſw. The places where God appeared in times paſt, were holy for that time onely of Gods preſence, not for ever after: and the mount is called holy in reſpect of the time, wherein the transfiguration was, not that the holineſſe of the place doth alwayes continue: for that place which Iacob called Bethel, the houſe of God, Geneſ. 28. is by the Prophet called Bethauen, the houſe of wickedneſſe, Oſe. 4. 15. becauſe of the idolatries there committed: What was now become of the holineſſe of the place? So the mount of Olives, which for the fruitfulneſſe thereof, was called Mons Miſhchah, the mount of oyle; was afterward termed Mons Maſhabith: the mountaine of corruption, becauſe of the idolatrie there committed.

Oſe. 4. 15. 2 King. 23. 13.

Hom. 6. in Ioſ.

This alſo is Origens judgement of the holineſſe of places, Nec ipſa Ierico locus erat ſanctus, &c. Neither was Jerico an holy place, but becauſe the Prince of Gods warfare was there, it was called holy: The place alſo where Moſes ſtood, was not holy of it ſelfe, but becauſe the Lord ſtood with Moſes, Præſentia Domini ſanctificaverat locum: The preſence of the Lord did ſanctifie the place. If then the holy preſence made thoſe places holy, they were no longer holy, than they had that prenſence.

Nicen. 2. action. 4. ex Leontio: Sion tanquam illius civitatem, &c. We reverence Sion, as his Citie: Nazareth, as his Countrie: Jordane, as his laver: not worſhipping the region it ſelfe, or the ſtones, but him that there appeared, and was converſant, even Chriſt our Lord, &c. The land therefore is not holy in it ſelfe, but it was holy becauſe of Chriſt, while he was converſant there.

The Proteſtants.

TO warre againſt the Turks upon juſt cauſe, as to ſeeke to defend our ſelves from their invaſions, and to maintaine the confines and bounds of Chriſtendome, to deliver Chriſtians unjuſtly and cruelly kept in ſlavery under him, we hold it lawfull: but to wage battaile with him, onely for a ſuperſtitious devotion to the land of Paleſtina, to recover it out of his hand, wee ſee no warrant at all for it.

Argum. 1. The evill ſucceſſe that Chriſtians have had againſt them, and the ſhamefull overthrowes that they have ſuſtained at their hands, doe evidently ſhew, that God was not pleaſed with thoſe ſuperſtitious warres. While Princes had a good quarrell, ſeeking onely to maintaine their owne, and to deliver Chriſtian Countries from the thraldome of the Turks, God proſpered them, as the famous victories of Scanderbeius, and Iohannes Hunniades obtained againſt Amurathes the 8. Turkiſh Emperour, doe notably teſtifie: but thoſe ſuperſtitious and Pope-holy warres, though ſometimes they had good ſucceſſe, yet in the end all went to wracke. And as their cauſe was not good, ſo neither were the meanes that they uſed: for they brought S. George, and S. Denys into the field againſt the Turks, and left Chriſt at home. If the Iſraelites could not be delivered from the Philiſtims by the preſence of the Arke, but thirtie thouſand fell before them, and all becauſe of their ſinnes: let not men thinke that Popiſh Saints can defend them, while their lives remaine unreformed at home.

Argum. 2. That the heathen are not to be provoked to warre, but upon juſt cauſe, that is, when they provoke us; it appeareth by the example of the Iſraelites, who as they came from Ægypt, ſent unto the King of Edom and Moab, that they might have leave to walke through their land: but they not granting ſo much, yet the people of God offered them no violence, but went a longer journey about, Iudg. 11. 17.

Iudg. 11. 17.

De Civitat. Dei lib. 19. cap. 7.

Auguſtine ſaith, Sapiens geſturus eſt juſta bella, &c. ſed multo magis dolebit juſtorum neceſſitatem extitiſſe bellorum: A wiſe man will take juſt warre in had: but it more grieveth him that he hath juſt cauſe to warre. And what he meaneth by juſt warre, he further ſheweth: Iniquitas partis adverſa juſta bella ingerit gerenda ſapienti : The iniquitie or injuries of the adverſe part doth give unto a wiſe man occaſion of juſt warre. Juſt warre therefore ariſeth when men are provoked by injuries.

In the Civill Law, the Citie of Rome is called ſacra Urbs, the holy Citie, and that under the heathen Emperours: Cod. lib. 4 tit. 33. leg. 2. Diocletian. Wherefore this title is not only proper to Jeruſalem.

Looke your owne decrees, part. 1. diſtinct. 40. c. 9. there you ſhall finde, that Gratia, non locus, ſalvat animam : Grace, and not the place, doth ſave the ſoule : Extra Paradiſum factus, &c. Man made without Paradiſe in an inferior place, was found better: and the woman made in Paradiſe in a better place was found worſe, &c. Wherefore it is in vaine ſo much to contend for the holineſſe of the place.

Lateranenſ. ſub Iulio 2. ex oration. Ægidii Viterbienſ. Epiſcopi : Freta initio ſuis armis Eccleſia Africam cepit, Europam obtinuit, &c. The Church in the beginning uſing her owne weapons, obtained Africa, Europa, Aſia, not by violence, or by ſword, but by religious acts : But ſince the ſpouſe hath changed the golden robe of the ſpirit, for the Iron weapons of mad Ajax, ſhee hath loſt Aſia, Jeruſalem, Africa, Ægypt, &c. Thus he ſpake in the hearing of the Pope, inſinuating thus much, that rather by religious acts the Turke might be wonne, than by forceable warre ſubdued.

1 Gregorius Nyſſenus beſido the reaſons before alleaged againſt going in pilgrimage, hath theſe two ſpecially againſt the opinion conceived of the holineſſe of Jeruſalem : 1 Quid plus habiturus eſt, qui locos illos adit ? What more doe they get than others, which goe to thoſe places ? as though God corporally is now to be ſeene in thoſe places? 2 As though the Spirit of God were tied to Jeruſalem, Ad nos autem tranſire non poſſit, and could not come to us ? 3 If there were more divine grace in the places at Jeruſalem, Illic viventium peccatum non tam frequens eſſet. ſinne would not ſo much abound there : whereas there is no kinde of wickedneſſe, murther, adulterie, theft, idolatrie, that is not common there.

2 Gregentius an Æthiopian Biſhop of Tephra among the Homerites thus ſaith : That holy Mountaine, is that mother Citie Jeruſalem, which is above : This Zion, which is ſeene, is not to be called, as I ſuppoſe, the holy mountaine, cum cinis & pulvis ſit, being aſhes and duſt. Diſput. Gregent. in Heiban. p. 105. χοῦς τῆς γῆς ὢν ϗ τέφρα.

David Emperour of Æthiopia, writing to Emanuel King of Portugall, wiſheth him not to give over, but to pray unto God, that he may recover the holy Temple at Jeruſalem : And in another Epiſtle to Ioannes King of Portugall, hee giveth this reaſon, why he forbeareth to warre againſt the Mahometanes, leſt they ſhould violate the Temple at Jeruſalem, and caſt downe other Temples in Ægypt and Syria, he feareth the hinderance rather of Chriſtian religion, than the loſſe of thoſe places, and hath care of other Chriſtian Churches, as well as of that at Jeruſalem.

The eighth queſtion, concerning holy and feſtivall dayes.

THis queſtion hath divers parts ; Firſt, of holy dayes in generall. Secondly, of the Lords day. Thirdly, of the feſtivall dayes of Chriſt and the holy Ghoſt. Fourthly, of Saints holy dayes.

The firſt part, of holy dayes in generall.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, they hold that holy and feſtivall dayes are in themſelves and properly and truly more ſacred and holy than other dayes are, Bellarm. cap. 10. propoſit. 2. Apocal. 1. 10. I was in the ſpirit (ſaith the Apoſtle) on the Lords day : God revealeth ſuch great things to Prophets rather upon holy dayes than prophane dayes : Ergo, ſome dayes holier than other, Rhemiſt. Apocal. 1. ſect. 6. 63. Error. Apocal. 1. 10.

Anſw. God giveth not his graces in reſpect of times, but according to his owne pleaſure. Times of prayer he chuſeth often, and of other godly exerciſes, not for the worthineſſe or holineſſe of the times, but for the better diſpoſition of his ſervants in ſuch exerciſes, to receive them : yet this was not perpetually obſerved ; for God appeared to Moſes keeping of ſheepe, to Amos following his heard. Exod. 3. 1. Amos 7. 14, 15.

Argum. 2. If holy dayes were not in themſelves holier than other dayes, then it would follow, that all feſtivall dayes ſhould be of the like holineſſe, not one more holy than another : but ſo are they not, for the Lords day is the chiefe of all the reſt : Ergo, Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 10.

Anſw. Firſt, wee grant, that as feſtivall dayes in themſelves are not holier than other dayes, but in reſpect of the uſe, ſo neither are they in the nature of the day more holy one than another ; yet in reſpect of the inſtitution one feſtivall may bee preferred before another : as the Lords day is more holy, becauſe it was inſtituted of God, than the other feſtivals of the Church ; and in reſpect of the religious uſe and obſervation thereof, being more ſtrictly to be kept, than any other feſtivall whatſoever ; but not in the nature of the day is it more excellent, for then it could not have beene changed : wherefore firſt the argument followeth not, as I have ſhewed.

Secondly, I am glad, that he giveth the Lords day the preeminence ; yet their Popiſh practice is contrarie : for whereas they divide their feaſts into duplex feſtum & ſimplex ; double feaſts and ſingle feaſts: they make foure kinds of duplex feſtum, principall double, more double, leſſe double, inferior double; yet the Lords dayes are none of this number, as may bee ſeene in the Calendar of their Maſſe-booke according to the uſe of Sarum.

Argum. 3. Chriſt in his Birth conſecrated the manger, where he lay; in his death the Croſſe whereon he ſuffered; riſing againe, the Sepulcher, where he was buried: why ſhould not the dayes as well of his birth, paſſion, reſurrection, be conſecrated, and before other dayes preferred? Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, we denie not, but that theſe Feſtivals of our Saviour are to be preferred before other dayes, but not as in their nature more holy, but in reſpect of the uſe, and commemoration of the holy acts of Chriſt. Secondly, the places of Chriſts birth, paſſion, reſurrection, were holy, not by any inherent or naturall holineſſe, but in reſpect onely, and during the preſence of Chriſt, ſo are the Feſtivals of Chriſt holy in regard of the commemoration of the holy actions of Chriſt, and not otherwiſe: Wherefore Bellarmine hath gained nothing by theſe reaſons.

The Proteſtants.

WE grant that the Lords day being commanded of God, and ſo diſcerned from other dayes, may be ſaid to bee holier than the reſt, in reſpect of the preſent uſe, but not in the nature of the day: for then could it not have beene changed from the laſt day in the weeke to the firſt: as water in Baptiſme is holier than other waters, becauſe of the ſacred uſe, not in it ſelfe, as by a qualitie of holineſſe inherent. And as for other feſtivall dayes, which have not the like inſtitution, they are appointed onely of the Church, for Chriſtian policie and orders ſake, for the exerciſe of religion: but this new Popiſh, and before time Jewiſh diſtinction of dayes, as being by their nature holier than another, is flatly againſt the Apoſtles rule, One putteth difference betweene day and day. Rom. 14. 5.

Anſw. Bellarmine anſwereth firſt, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of thoſe, whereof ſome thought good to faſt every day, ſome onely certaine dayes, and both of them did well; and this is the judging betweene day and day, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle maketh no mention at all of faſting, but of eating: wherefore this diſcerning of dayes was not in any ſuch reſpect of faſting, or not faſting. Secondly, verſ. 6. The Apoſtle maketh the obſerving, and not obſerving of dayes, and eating or not eating, to be two ſeverall things, and he bringeth them in as divers inſtances: wherefore it is not agreeable to the Apoſtles meaning to confound them into one, as Bellarmine doth. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaying, He that obſerveth, or obſerveth not the day; obſerveth, and obſerveth not unto the Lord, verſ. 6. approveth not the obſervation of dayes: But firſt we muſt conſider the times, when as yet ſome ceremonies of the Jewes remained, which the Apoſtles did for ſome while beare with, for feare to offend the weake. Secondly, the perſons muſt be reſpected, of whom the Apoſtle treateth, not ſuch as obſtinately maintained Jewiſh rites, but the weake in faith, verſ. 1. that did all of conſcience, whom the Apoſtle would have gently and charitably dealt with, and not rigorouſly to be condemned: as verſ. 15. Deſtroy not by thy meat, for whom Chriſt died: But what is this to theſe times, when as all Jewiſh ceremonies ought long agoe to be buried? or to the perſons of our adverſaries, who not of weakneſſe and conſcience, but profeſſedly and purpoſely maintaine the difference of dayes? Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaying, He obſerveth to the Lord, &c. he ſaith none other thing, than before verſ. 4. Why judgeſt thou another mans ſervant? he ſtandeth or falleth to his owne maſter: He obſerveth, or not obſerveth to the Lord, that is, he is left to Gods judgement.

Gal. 4. 10. 11. Coloſſ. 2. 16.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſaith, You obſerve dayes and moneths, times and yeeres, I am afraid of you, leſt I have beſtowed on you labour in vaine. And againe, Let no man condemne you in reſpect of an holy day, or of the new moone, or of the Sabbath, which are but a ſhadow of things to come, but the bodie is in Chriſt. From hence we reaſon thus, out of the firſt place; That which hindreth, and deſtroyeth the faith of the Goſpell, is to be avoided; but the obſervation of dayes cauſeth the Apoſtles labour to be in vaine, and ſo deſtroyeth the preaching of the Goſpell: Ergo. Againe, all figures ought to ceaſe, the bodie being come; obſervation of dayes was in figure, Chriſt is the bodie. Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the Jewiſh obſervation of dayes, and not of the feſtivals of Chriſtians: for S. Paul himſelfe obſerving the feaſts of Chriſtians, as of the Pentecoſt, Act. 20. did make difference of dayes. Act. 20. 16.

Contra. Firſt, the feaſt of Pentecoſt, which Paul obſerved at Jeruſalem, was a feaſt of the Jewes: for as yet the Jewiſh feſtivals were not aboliſhed, as it may appeare. 1 By the name, it being called the feaſt of Pentecoſt, that is, the feaſt of fiftie dayes, or the feaſt of weeks; which was a feaſt appointed in the Law. 2 Becauſe it is kept at Jeruſalem, whereas it was not ceceſſarie to keepe the Chriſtian feſtivals there. 3 Saint Paul commining to Jeruſalem, did other things according to the Law, as he purified himſelfe, Act. 21. 24. 4 The feſtivals of Chriſtians were not yet eſtabliſhed. Secondly, though we grant it was a feaſt of the Chriſtians, yet the Apoſtle made no ſuch difference of dayes, but onely for the holy uſe. Thirdly, theſe places ſerve as well againſt Popiſh, as Jewiſh obſervation of dayes, for there is no difference. Act. 21. 24.

Bellarmine would ſeeme to make a treble difference, betweene the Jewiſh feſtivals and theirs. Firſt, the Jewiſh feſtivals after Chriſt have a falſe ſignification, but ours have a true.

Contra. Firſt, the Jewiſh Sabbath hath a true ſignification yet in remembring the creation of the world. Secondly, ſome of yours have a falſe ſignification, as the feaſt of the aſſumption of Marie, which is a fable.

Secondly, the chiefe end of their Sabbath, was to ſignifie things to come; but the end of ours is to acknowledge Gods benefits.

Contra. 1. So alſo the Sabbath now is a Symbole of our everlaſting reſt, Hebr. 4. as theirs was a type of our reſt in Chriſt. 2 The Jewes alſo upon the Sabbath remembred Gods benefits, as of the creation, Exod. 31. 17. Heb. 4. 9, 10. Exod. 31, 17.

Thirdly, the chiefe part of their feſtivall, was to abſtaine from bodily labour: but the chiefe part of ours is to be occupied in divine ſervice, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, their Sabbath conſiſted not only in bodily reſt, but ſpirituall duties alſo, as in not doing their owne will, nor ſpeaking a vaine word. Secondly, your Sabbath hath no ſpirituall duties, but a ſuperſtitious and idolatrous ſervice, in worſhipping of Idols, invocation of Saints, and ſuch like: So then in the obſervation of dayes there is no difference betweene the Jewes and Papiſts. Iſay 58, 13.

Auguſtine ſaith, Nos dominicum diem & paſcha celebramus, &c. ſed quia intelligimus, quò pertineant, non tempora obſervamus, ſed quæ illis ſignificantur temporibus, Cont. Adimant. cap. 16. We keepe the Lords day and the feaſt of Eaſter, not obſerving the times, but remembring what is ſignified by thoſe times: that is, for what cauſe they were ordained: Ergo, obſervers of times are reproved.

Leonis Epiſtol. 4 cap. 4. Notum ſit dilectioni veſtræ univerſos dies Chriſti, &c. Be it knowne to your brotherhood, that all the dayes of Chriſt are conſecrate with innumerable vertues: yet if wee ſhould indifferently honour the memorie of all his acts, all dayes ſhould be holy, becauſe every one of them is full of his miracles, &c. Hence I gather, that dayes in themſelves are not one holier than another, in as much as they all and every of them were beautified and adorned with ſome miracle of Chriſt.

The ſcrupulous obſervation of dayes is forbidden by the Imperiall law of Theodoſ. Cod. lib. 6. tit. 30. leg. 17. and by the Canon law, part. 2. cauſ. 26. qu. 7 c. 17. Ad animæ periculum pertinent ſuperſtitioſa temporum obſervationes: Superſtitious obſervation of dayes bringeth danger to the ſoule, as the Apoſtle ſaith, I feare I have laboured in vaine amongſt you.

The Papiſts.

2 THey affirme the keeping and ſanctification of holy dayes to be neceſſarie, Rhemiſt. annot. Galath. 4. ſect. 5. and that wee are bound in conſcience to keepe the holy dayes appointed of the Church, although no offence or ſcandale might follow and enſue upon the neglecting of them. 64. Error.

Eſther 9. Mardocheus and Eſther appoint a new feſtivall day, not inſtituted of God, and bind every one to the obſerving thereof, that none ſhould faile to obſerve it, verſ. 27. Ergo, men bound in conſcience to keepe feſtivall dayes, Bellarm. cap. 10. So alſo our Doway men, pag. 1050. Eſther 9. 27.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, though we refuſe not ſome other feſtivall dayes, yet wee acknowledge none neceſſarie, more than are of the holy Ghoſts appointing in the Scripture. Secondly, wee denie that the conſtitutions of the Church for holy dayes doe binde Chriſtians, in reſpect of the dayes themſelves, in conſcience to keepe them, otherwiſe than they may give offence by their contempt and diſobedience to the wholeſome decrees of the Church: for it ſelfe in it owne nature is indifferent; neither can the Church make a thing neceſſarie in nature, which God hath left indifferent: nothing bindeth abſolutely in conſcience, but that which is warranted by the word: wherefore keeping of holy dayes, being not injoyned but left indifferent in the word, bindeth no otherwiſe than we have ſaid. Thirdly, the example of Eſther ſheweth that the Church hath authoritie to appoint for civill uſes, dayes of rejoycing: that feſtivall day, then begun, did binde the obſervers in conſcience, becauſe they were bound in all lawfull things to obey their governours, for their conſent was required, and they promiſed both for themſelves and their ſeed to keepe that day, Eſth. 9. 27. Eſther 9. 27.

Fourthly, Mardoche beſide his ordinarie authoritie, as a chiefe Governour, had alſo ſome Propheticall direction to inſtitute this day of rejoycing, (being held to have written alſo that booke of Eſther) which cannot now bee drawne to an ordinarie preſident: conſidering alſo, that thoſe were dayes of ceremonies, among the which their feaſts are numbred, ſo that their obſervation of dayes bindeth not now. Laſtly, it ſeemeth rather to have beene apponinted as a feſtivall day of rejoycing and thankſgiving, for the joyfull remembrance of that deliverance, than as a new holy day to be kept with the like ſtrictneſſe, as the holy dayes appointed by the law: for they kept it with joy and feaſting, and ſending preſents one to another, verſ. 19. like as now in the Church of England, the 5. of November is by act of Parliament appointed yeerely to be celebrated, as a memoriall of our deliverance from the Popiſh Gunpowder treaſon, not as a new holy day, with injunction of abſtinence from worke the whole day, but only to aſſemble together at morning prayer to give God thanks. But it will be objected, that this day was appointed by Mardoche to be kept with faſting and prayer, and therefore is a true holy day, verſ. 31. Anſ. 1 How could they keepe it both with feaſting, verſ. 19. and with faſting? neither did they uſe to celebrate dayes of rejoycing with faſting and mourning: as Ezra ſaid, in that great aſſemblie, after their returne from captivitie, Mourne not, neither weepe, &c. but goe and eat of the fat, and drinke of the ſweet, &c. 2 The words then are thus to be read, to confirme the dayes of purim, &c. the teſtimonies (Hebr. dibbrer, words) of faſting and their crying: that is, in remembrance of their faſting and prayers, by the which they obtained that deliverance: not, with faſting, for in the Hebrew Eſther 9. 31. Nehem. 8. 10.

there is no prepoſition, to ſignifie, with: the vulgar Latine readeth, faſts and cries, leaving out the word dibbrer.

Acts 15.10.

Argum. If Chriſtians were bound in conſcience to keepe all holy dayes which are enjoyned them in the Popiſh Church, their burthen ſhould be greater than the Jewes was, (ſeeing they have a great number of holy dayes more) yet the Jewes yoke was ſuch, as neither they, nor their forefathers were able to heare.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the yoke of the Jewes is heavier, in reſpect of the hard obſervances, as that it was not lawfull to ſeeth meat, to kindle a fire on the Lords day, thrice a yeere they went up to Jeruſalem, they were enjoyned to eat unſavourie and unleavened bread: it was not heavie in reſpect of the multitude of their feaſts, but of other ceremoneous rites, cap. 10.

Contra. Firſt, the popiſh yoke even in reſpect of their hard injunctions is more intolerable than the Jewes was: your pilgrimages to Rome, to Jeruſalem, to other remote places, are more than their going up to Jeruſalem: your preſcription to faſt bread and water is harder, than to eat unleavened bread, and yet you uſe that too: not to eat an egge in Lent is more than not to dreſſe meat upon the Lords day. Secondly, the heavineſſe of the Jewiſh yoke did much ſtand in the multitude of their feaſts, as Iſay 1. 14. if they were a burthen to the Lord, much more unto men: and therefore the Popiſh yoke enjoyning the keeping of many more holy dayes, is much more grievous.

Iſay 1.14.

De tempor. ſerm. 136. Pſal. 118.24.

Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Sabbath, ſaith thus: Hac eſt dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & letemur in ea: This is the day which the Lord hath made, let us rejoyce and be glad therein, Pſal. 118.24. This only holy day, he ſaith, is of the Lords making, and therefore of all other neceſſarie to be kept.

Synod. Moguntin. cap.61. Sanctorum celebritates in diem dominicum incidentes, cenſemus ſubmovendas, &c. Wee thinke it meet, that holy dayes falling within the Lords day ſhould bee removed, and tranſlated to the day before or after, that the ſolemnitie of them all may bee reſerved and referred to their Lord, &c. The Lords day we ſee, is preferred before the reſt, as being of neceſſitie onely to bee kept, and the reſt to give place to it.

This truth alſo hath beene ſealed: Ioane Iohn, the wife of Lewis Iohn, perſecuted for ſaying, That God commanded no holy dayes to be kept but the Sabbath day, Fox pag. 803. col. 2.

Apolog. 2. pro Chriſtian.

κοινῇ πάντες τὴν συνέλευσιν ποιούμεθα. Lib. 5. c. 22.

That feſtivall dayes appointed by the Church, are not in themſelves more holy than other, nor yet of neceſſity to be kept. 1 Iuſtinus Martyr ſeemeth to affirme, that the Chriſtians had but two times of publike meeting, one was uncertaine and extraordinarie, when any was converted to the Chriſtian faith and baptized, then the congregation met together to commend him in their prayers to God: the other was ordinarie upon the Lords day, then called Sunday, when all had a common aſſemblie together. The feſtivals of Saints were not then in uſe, nor were dayes of publike meetings.

Socrates ſpeaking of feſtivall dayes, Neque Servator, neque Apoſtoli hoc nobis lege aliqua obſervandum eſſe mandarunt: Neither our Saviour, nor the Apoſtles, did command this by any law to be obſerved. And a little before he ſaith, Nuſquam jugum ſervitutis illis imponunt: The Apoſtles no where did impoſe this yoke of ſervitude.

2 Origen ſaith, Non tantum diem Dominicum, ſed omnes dies feſtos eſſe Chriſtianis: That not only the Lords day, but all dayes are holy to Chriſtians: He held not one day holier in it ſelfe than another. Even Diogenes by the light of nature could reprove the curioſitie of a Lacedemonian, that did prepare himſelfe to ſolemnize a feſtivitie: What, ſaith he, an non vir probus quemvis diem feſtum cenſet? doth not an honeſt man thinke every day feſtivall?

Hieromes* age, beſide the Lords day, acknowledged few feſtivals: Nunc feriarum neque finis, neque modus: Now there is no end nor meaſure of holy dayes. Genebrard hath brought to light the Calendar of the Syrian, Greeke, and Latine Churches: and the Lord of Eſcales the Calendar of the Church of Æthiopia, by comparing whereof there appeareth great difference of feſtivals obſerved among them, which ſheweth, that they held no neceſſitie of them, nor thinke ſo great holineſſe to be tied unto them.

The ſecond part, of the Lords day.

The Papiſts.

CONcerning the Lords day, our adverſaries doe grant: firſt, that it is the moſt ancient of all Chriſtian feſtivals, Bellarm. cap. 11. Secondly, that it was inſtituted by the Apoſtles, ibid. Thirdly, that it ſucceeded in ſtead of the Jewiſh Sabbath, ibid. Fourthly, that it is the moſt excellent, and to be preferred before all other holy dayes, Bellarm. cap. 10. Theſe points are on both ſides condeſcended unto, and whatſoever elſe is affirmed agreeable to Scripture.

The ſeverall points wherein our adverſaries and wee doe differ about the Chriſtian Sabbath, are theſe:

First, the principall exerciſe of the Sabbath, ſay they is for the people to come to the Church and heare Maſſe, which their abominable and idolatrous ſacrifice they make the proper worke of the Sabbath, Catechiſm. Roman. pag. 649. 65. Error.

The Proteſtants.

THe Sabbath was ordained for the people to aſſemble together to heare the word read, Act. 15. verſ. 21. and preached; and to receive the Sacraments, Act. 20. 7. and to offer up their prayers: theſe were the proper exerciſes of the Sabbath: as for the Popiſh ſacrifice of the Maſſe, wee finde no mention at all there in Scripture.

Concil. Moguntiac. can. 34. Nunquam deſit diebus dominicis, aut feſtivitatibus qui verbum Dei prædicet: Let there be never wanting, upon the Lords dayes and other feſtivities, one that ſhould preach the word of God.

Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 9. Dies Dominicus à temporibus Apoſtolorum celebris, ut in unum omnes pariter convenirent, ad audiendum verbum Domini, ad audiendum quoque ſacrum & communicandum, &c. The Lords day hath beene obſerved ſince the Apoſtles time, that all might meet together to heare Gods word, to heare alſo and receive the Sacraments. Theſe then are the principall exerciſes of the Lords day. And yet more evidently it was thus decreed, Synod. Auguſtenſ. cap. 18. Evangelia & Epiſtolæ diebus dominicis lingua Germanica exponantur, eoque tempore nulla miſſa, ne populum ab auſcultatione diſtrahi contingat, celebretur: Let the Goſpels and the Epiſtles be expounded upon the Lords dayes in the Germane tongue, and at that inſtant let no Maſſe be celebrated, leſt the people be drawne away from hearing, &c. From hence we reaſon thus: That whereunto other exerciſes give place, is the chiefe exerciſe of the Lords day; but other give place, as the ſaying of Maſſe, to preaching and expounding of Scripture: Ergo, &c.

And for further evidence hereof: 1 Iuſtine Martyr ſheweth at large the exerciſes of the Chriſtians upon the Lords day: 1 When they are come together, the writings of the Apoſtles or Prophets are read. 2 Then the Preſident or Paſtor exhorteth the people to the imitation of that which they heard. 3 Then follow prayers. 4 Then panis offertur, et vinum et aqua, the bread and wine and water is offered unto them. 5 And laſtly, a contribution is made by the richer ſort to the poorer.

2 The ſame was the cuſtome of the South Church ſpecially to attend upon the preaching of the word upon the Lords day, as Athanaſius thus writeth: Ne ſine te propinqui populi paſchalis feſtum celebrent, quis enim eis reſurrectionis diem evangelizabit, ſi lateas, &c. Let not the people celebrate without thee the feaſt of the paſch at hand: for who ſhall preach unto them of the day of the reſurrection, if thou appeare not?

Zaga Zabo ſheweth how it is the manner of the Æthiopike Church to come together the third houre after Sunne riſe upon the Lords day: firſt, ad audiendum & legendum, &c. to read and heare the books of the Prophets, then ut ſanctum Evangelium prædicemus, that we preach the Goſpell, and ſacrumfaciamus, to make the Sacrament.

3 Former Confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 23. We thinke that holy meetings are ſo to be celebrated, that above all things the word of God be propounded to the people, &c.

4 Eſpenceus to this purpoſe alleageth a conſtitution of the Synode of Baſil, ſeſſ. 15. that they, to whom the care of ſoules is committed, diebus Dominicis aliiſq́; ſolennibus plebem ſalutaribus doctrinis inſtruerent, ſhould inſtruct the people upon the Lords dayes and other ſolemnities, with wholeſome doctrine: and long before that he urgeth the 25. of the Synode of Mentz, and the 14. c. and 15. of the Councell of Rhemes, that if the Biſhop chance to be abſent, ſicke, or otherwiſe letted, nunquam tamen diebus Dominicis deſit, &c. yet there ſhould not be one wanting upon the Dominicall and feſtivall dayes, which ſhould preach the word to the underſtanding of the people.

The Papiſts.

2 WE diſſent about the reſt of the Sabbath: they allow ſuch works to bee done upon the Sabbath, as ſhall be permitted by the Prelates and Ordinaries, and ſuch as by long cuſtome have beene uſed, Bellarm. cap. 10.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold, that as the Lords day was inſtituted of God, ſo the manner of celebrating and keeping it holy, is to be learned out of the word, and neither cuſtome nor authoritie ought to give libertie for ſuch works upon the Lords day, as are not warranted by the word.

Firſt, we grant that we are not ſo neceſſarily tied to the reſt of the Sabbath as the Jewes were: for thoſe things are aboliſhed which appertained to the Jewiſh Sabbath: Firſt, the preſcript of the day. Secondly, the ceremoneous exerciſes of the Sabbath in the ſacrifices and other rites of the Law. Thirdly, the typicall ſhadowes and ſignifications of their Sabbath, as firſt it betokened their reſt in Canaan; then the reſt and peace of the Church by Chriſt, Heb. 4. 3. 5. Fourthly, the ſtrict and preciſe reſt, wherein Chriſtians have more libertie than the Jewes had: and againe, they obſerved their reſt, as being properly and ſimplie, and in it ſelfe a Sabbath dayes dutie; but wee doe conſider it, as Heb. 4. 3. 5.

being referred to a more principall end: as making of us more fit for ſpirituall exerciſes.

Matth. 12. 11.
Matth. 12. 1. 3.

Secondly, wee allow theſe works to be done: Firſt, opera religioſa or pietatis, the religious works, and conferring to pietie: as the Prieſts did ſlay the Sacrifices upon the Sabbath, and yet brake not the reſt of the Sabbath; ſo the people may walke to their pariſh Church, though ſomewhat farre off: the Paſtor and Miniſter may goe forth to preach; yea, and preaching is of it ſelfe a labour of the bodie, to ſtudie alſo and meditate of his Sermon, to ring the bels to call the people to the Church: all theſe are lawfull, as being helpes for the exerciſes of religion. Secondly, opera charitatis, the works of mercie are permitted, as to viſite the ſicke, the Phyſitian to reſort to his Patient: yea, to ſhew compaſſion to brute beaſts, as to helpe the ſheepe out of a pit. Thirdly, opera neceſſitatis, the works of neceſſitie, as the dreſſing of meat and ſuch like. Our Saviour excuſeth his Apoſtles for plucking the eares of Corne, when they were hungrie. As for opera voluntaria, works of pleaſure and recreation, we have no other permiſſion to uſe them, than as they ſhall be no lets or impediments unto ſpirituall exerciſes, as the hearing of the word, and meditating therein, and ſuch other: otherwiſe they are not to be uſed.

In Pſal. 32. part. 1.
Nehem. 13. 16.

Auguſtine ſaith, ſpeaking of the Jewes, who did greatly prophane their Sabbath, in ſporting and daliance: Melius toto die foderent, quàm toto die ſaltarent: It were better for them to dig all day, than to dance all day: even ſo verily it were better for many poore ignorant people, that upon the Sabbath give themſelves to drinking, and quaffing, and gaming, if they ſhould goe to plough or cart all the day. But as for ſervile works, as to keepe Faires and Markets upon the Lords day, to travell themſelves, their ſervants, and beaſts upon the Sabbath, it is flat contrarie to the Commandement of God, and the practice of the Church, where there is no extreme and urgent neceſſitie: ſo that it is not to be doubted, but that as the keeping of the Lords day is a morall Commandement; ſo alſo the manner of the obſerving thereof in ſanctifying it, and reſting therein, is morall: the ceremonies of the reſt being aboliſhed, that is, the Jewiſh ſtrictneſſe thereof, and the opinion which they had of their reſt, as being ſimplie a part of the ſanctifying of the Sabbath. But we doe conſider it, as referred unto more principall duties, and obſerve it, not as of it ſelfe pleaſing God, but as making us more fit for ſpirituall exerciſes. Contrarie to theſe rules, we acknowledge neither power in Ordinaries, nor privilege in cuſtome, to diſpenſe with the ſanctification of the Sabbath.

Decret. part. 1. diſtinct. 86. cap. 24. Gregorie writeth ſharply to one Iannarius an old Biſhop, becauſe he preſumed upon the Lords day, Exarare alterius meſſem, to enter upon anothers harveſt, to ſpoyle it. By this we may ſee what great diſcretion Popiſh Ordinaries have, in preſcribing Sabbath day works.

Concerning ſuch ſanctification of the Sabbath as we ſpeake of, which conſiſteth partly in abſtaining from all corporall labours and worldly affaires, partly and chiefly in giving our ſelves to ſpirituall exerciſes, we have the full conſent of antiquitie.

Concerning the firſt: Concil. Aurel. 3. can. 27. Die dominico cum caballis, bobus, vehiculis itinerari non debere: That none ought to travell with horſe, oxen, carts upon the Lords day. Cabilonenſ. can. 18. Ruralia opera nemo facere præſumat: Let no man upon this day preſume to doe any countrie worke, as to ſow, to reape, to plough. Matiſconenſ. 2. can. 1. Nullus cauſarum actiones exerceat: That no man ſhould goe to law. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 10. Markets and Faires are forbidden to be kept. Moguntin. cap. 61. Tripudia, ſaltationes, profana ſpectacula non permittenda: Dancing, and leaping, and all prophane playes and fights muſt be forbidden.

As touching the affirmative part of this ſanctification, in ſequeſtring our ſelves to ſpirituall exerciſes, thus alſo it hath beene decreed: Trullan. can. 19. Vt omnibus diebus ſed præcipuè dominicis populum doceant pietatis eloquia: That upon all dayes, but chiefly on the Lords dayes the Paſtors inſtruct the people: preaching of the word is one chiefe worke of the Lords day: the receiving of the Sacraments is another, Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 9. Populus conveniat ad communicandum: the people muſt come together to communicate. Prayer is another Sabbath worke: Matiſconenſ. 2. cap. 1. Die dominico quiſq; ſeipſum precibus & lachrymis afficiat: Upon the Lords day let every man give himſelfe to prayer and teares. Giving of thanks and praiſing of God is proper alſo for the Lords day: Synod. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 9. Dies illa tantum orationibus, hymnis, Pſalmis tranſigatur: Let that day onely be ſpent in prayer, Hymnes and Pſalmes, and ſpirituall ſongs. Aurelianenſ. 2. can. 20. Vincti in carceribus, &c. Let the Biſhops viſit thoſe on the Lords dayes that are bound in priſon. Conſtantin. 6. cap. 8. Tantummodo vacandum eſt orationi, & celebrationi eleemoſynarum: Upon this day they muſt give themſelves only to prayer, and celebrating of almes. Here be other exerciſes of the Lords day. And thus, as we ſee, the ancient Canons doe teſtifie with us for the ſanctification of the Lords day.

To theſe Canons agree the Imperiall lawes: which bid, Omnium Iudicium & artium officia ceſſare, &c. Both the offices of Judges, & artificers ſhops to ceaſe & be ſhut up upon the Lords day, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 12. leg. 3. Theod. and that no playes or enterludes ſhould be kept upon that day, or any ſuch games, ibid. leg. 10. Leo, & Anthem. Yet works of neceſſitie are excepted, as in time of harveſt and ſeed time, leg. 3. and cauſa piſtoria, Bakers cauſes, as touching the making of bread, are excepted, leg. 5. Valentin. Likewiſe works of charitie, as in according and reconciling men, are tolerated, leg. 10. as alſo manumitting and ſetting bond-men at libertie, leg. 8. Valentin. Thirdly, works of pietie are excepted, as doing of juſtice in executing of malefactors and offenders, leg. 9. Honor. Theodoſ.

That the holy day of the Lord, is to be wholly ſpent in Divine exerciſes. 1 Damaſcene witneſſeth, ſpending the whole ſeventh day, In Pſalmes and hymnes, and meditation of the Scriptures, ceaſing ab occupatione circa materialia, from being occupied about materiall things.

4 Clictoveus: Non erat legis ſententia, &c. It was not the meaning of the Law to forbid ſuch works to be done with the hand, quæ ad Dei gloriam ſpectabant: which concerned the glorie of God, or the neceſſity and ſafety of mans life, ſuch were the circumciſion of Infants, and the offering of ſacrifices, &c. The chiefe cauſe of ſanctifying the Sabbath, was vacatio ad Dei obſequium, attendance upon our ſervice to God, which that it might be done more commodiouſly, the minde being ſequeſtred from ſecular buſineſſe, it was forbidden on the Sabbath to doe any worke with the hand, &c. This their learned writers opinion is, that no works ought to bee done upon the Sabbath, whereby Gods glorie and ſervice is hindred.

76. Error.

THey affirme that the Apoſtles altered the Sabbath day, from the ſeventh day to the eighth, counting from the creation; and they did it without Scripture, or any Commandement of Chriſt: ſuch power (ſay they) hath God left to his Church. This then they hold, that the Sabbath was changed by the ordinarie power and authoritie of the Church, not by any ſpeciall direction from Chriſt: thereupon it followeth, that the Church, which (they ſay) cannot erre, may alſo change the Sabbath to any other day in the weeke, Rhemiſt. Apoc. 1. ſect. 6.

The Proteſtants.

1. THe Apoſtles did not abrogate the Jewiſh Sabbath, but Chriſt himſelfe by his death, as he did alſo other ceremonies of the Law: and this the Apoſtles knew both by the Scriptures, the word of Chriſt and his holy ſpirit.

2 They did not appoint a new Sabbath of their owne authoritie: for firſt they knew by the Scripture, that one day of ſeven was to be obſerved for ever, for the ſervice of God and exerciſe of religion, although the preſcript day according to the Law were abrogate: for the Lord before the morall Law was written, even immediatly after the creation, ſanctified the ſeventh day, ſhewing thereby, that one of the ſeven muſt be obſerved ſo long as the world endured. Secondly, they knew there was the ſame reaſon of ſanctifying the day of Chriſts reſurrection, and the reſtitution of the world thereby, as of ſanctifying the day of the Lords reſt, after the creation of the world. Thirdly, they did it by the direction of the Spirit of God, whereby they were ſo directed and governed, that although they were fraile men by nature, and ſubject to error, yet they could not decline in their writings and ordinances of the Church, from the truth, which aſſurance of Gods ſpirit in the like meaſure the Church hath not now; but ſo farre forth is promiſed to be led into all truth, as ſhe followeth the rule of truth expreſſed in the Scriptures. Wherefore the Church hath no authoritie to change the Lords day, and to keepe it upon Monday or Tueſday, or any other day; ſeeing it is not a matter of indifferency, but a neceſſarie preſcription of Chriſt himſelfe, delivered by the Apoſtles: for the Lords day began in the Apoſtles time, and no doubt by their Apoſtolike authoritie directed by the ſpirit of Chriſt, was inſtituted, Act. 20. 7. Apocal. 1. verſ. 10. Neither can there come ſo long as the world continueth, ſo great a cauſe of changing the Sabbath, as the Apoſtles had by the reſurrection of Chriſt. Wherefore the Law of the Sabbath, as it is now kept and obſerved, is perpetuall.

Conſtantin. 6. can. 8. Diei dominici, quia in eo Deus lumen condidit, in eo Manna in eremo pluit, &c. tanta debet eſſe reverentia, &c. The Lords day muſt be had in great reverence, becauſe upon this day God created the Light, it rained Manna in the Wilderneſſe: Chriſt then vouchſafed to bee borne: on this day the ſtarre appeared to the Wiſe men: Chriſt fed five thouſand men with five loaves and two fiſhes: on this day he was baptized, roſe againe, ſent downe the holy Spirit upon his diſciples, &c. theſe are the reaſons why we doe now keepe the Lords day upon the firſt in the weeke: but greater reaſons than theſe, ſhall never fall out upon any other day: Ergo, the Lords day cannot be removed to any other day of the weeke.

4 Clictoveus ſaith, the day was changed, ob reſurrectionis dominicæ myſterium, for the myſterie of the Lords reſurrection, &c. therefore not to be changed, becauſe there cannot come ſo great a cauſe of altering it, as was the reſurrection.

Damianus de Morib. Æthiop.

That the Lords day is of divine inſtitution, and not grounded upon tradition. 1 We have the decrees of an ancient Councell of the ſecond Synod of Caſarea, under Theophilus the Biſhop there; who doe reſolve, that the Paſch ſhould be kept upon the Lords day, qui tot & talibus benedictionibus eſt ſanctificatus, which is ſanctified with ſuch and ſo great benedictions, as upon that day the light was created, the Iſraelites went thorow the read ſea, Chriſt roſe againe upon that day, whereof it is ſaid, Pſalm. 118. This is the day which the Lord hath made, &c.

2 Zaga Zabo ſaith, Iuſſu Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti, & ſanctorum Apoſtolorum eius ſervamus; We keepe it by the Commandement of Jeſus Chriſt, and of his holy Apoſtles.

3 Auſpurg artic. 7. The Apoſtles retained not the ſeventh day, but the firſt day of the weeke, &c. the day was changed by Apoſtolicall authoritie, directed by the ſpirit.

4 So Chemnitius noteth it was changed by the tradition of the Apoſtles, & ſpiritus ſancti edictione, and the inſtitution of the ſpirit.

August. de tempor. ſerm. 154.

WE grant, that the Sabbath may bee ſo applied, both to call to remembrance things alreadie, as upon that day done: as the reſurrection of Chriſt, and the deſcending of the holy Ghoſt. Some thinke alſo that Chriſt upon that day was baptized, upon that day turned water into wine, fed five thouſand with a few loaves, came unto his Apoſtles after his reſurrection the doores being ſhut, and that as upon this day hee ſhall appeare to judgement: but upon what ground I know not. Certaine it is, that upon this day Chriſt roſe againe, and that the holy Ghoſt came downe then upon his Apoſtles. Wee denie not but that the keeping of the Lords day holy, may fitly bring unto our remembrance theſe things: yea and that it may bee a type and ſymbole unto us in ſome ſort, both of things ſpirituall, as to betoken our ceaſing and reſting from the works of ſinne, as alſo of things to come, as the Kingdome of heaven is called a Sabbath.

Heb. 4. 10.
Esay 66. 32.

But we dare not, neither will affirme, that the Sabbath was ordained and conſtituted for any ſuch end: for the Commandement of the Sabbath now to us is onely morall, not typicall or ceremoniall, as the Jewiſh Sabbath was; but looke wherein the Sabbath was morall to the Jewes, ſo it is kept ſtill: As in theſe two points it was morall to them; firſt, to be a ſigne betweene them and the Lord, and to diſtinguiſh them from other people. And ſo alſo the right keeping of the Lords day is a notable outward marke of difference betweene the Church of God and all others. Secondly, that upon the Sabbath they ſhould reſort together, and heare the Law read and preached. And for this cauſe, namely, the exerciſe of religion, are Chriſtians chiefly bound to the Sabbath. It may (I ſay) fitly be drawne to reſemble heavenly and ſpirituall things: but that is not any end of the inſtitution. The Jewes had two kinds of types, typos factos, and typos deſtinatos, types made and applied, and types appointed and ordained of God to ſhadow forth ſome notable thing: as the Paſchall Lambe was typus deſtinatus, of our Saviour Chriſt: as they were not to breake a bone of the Lambe; ſo was it accordingly performed in Chriſt. They had alſo many types beſide, that were not deſtinated to ſignifie any certaine thing: of ſuch Saint Paul ſpeaketh, 1 Corinth. 10. 6. 11. So wee ſay of the Sabbath, that 6 THey ſay that we are not bound upon the Sabbath by any peculiar commandement to abſtaine from ſinne, more than upon any other day: neither that the internall act of religion appertaineth to the keeping of the Sabbath, but the externall: that any ſinne committed upon the Sabbath, is not thereby the greater: neither that we are more bound upon the Sabbath to ſeeke for internall grace than upon any other day, Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 10. propoſ. 4. 70. Error.

The Papiſts.

Argum. 1. Bellarmine reaſoneth thus, the internall act of religion is the end of this Commandement, but the meanes tending to the end, not the end it ſelfe, are commanded.

Secondly, the internall worſhip is preſcribed in the firſt Commandement: for this is the order: In the firſt precept, the worſhip of the heart: In the ſecond, the worſhip of the mouth: in the third, the worſhip or ſervice of God in our works is preſcribed.

Thirdly, it were dangerous to appoint ſo many holy dayes; for this were but to entangle mens conſciences, if ſinne be more grievous committed upon feſtivals, cap. 10.

Anſw. To the firſt we anſwer; Firſt, that it is untrue, that the meanes onely, and not the end is commanded: for love is the end of the Commandement, and yet is commanded, and one of the greateſt Commandements. So in the 7. Commandement the end is, not to commit adultery; the meanes tending to adultery, as chambering and wantonneſſe are likewiſe prohibited, ſhall we ſay therefore that adultery it ſelfe is not forbidden? ſo admit that the internall ſanctification of the Sabbath is the end, yet it may be and is commanded. Secondly, though it be the end, in reſpect of the meanes tending unto it, as the corporall reſt, and the externall exerciſes of religion; yet it is alſo as a meane referred to the principall end of all, which is the glorie of God; and therefore may be commanded, according to Bellarmines owne rule. 1 Tim. 1. 5. Matth. 22. 39. Rom. 13. 13.

To the ſecond, we anſwer: Firſt, though ſome internall act of religion be preſcribed in the firſt Commandement: Thou ſhalt have no other Gods; and as to love God, and feare him; yet that internall act, which is peculiar for the Lords day, is onely preſcribed in the fourth Commandement. Secondly, hee very fondly divideth the firſt table into three precepts, whereas it containeth foure; as Origen ſheweth by this reaſon: ſome men thinke, ſaith hee, that theſe two are one Commandement: Quod ſi ita putetur, &c. which if it bee ſo, then are there not ten Commandements, what is become then of the Decalogue? therefore the firſt Commandement is, Thou ſhalt have no other Gods: the ſecond, Thou ſhalt make no graven image, &c. thus farre Origen, hom. 8. in Exod. Thirdly, to make a graven image to worſhip it, is an externall act of religion, yet this is forbidden in the ſecond Commandement, which Bellarmine joyneth to the firſt, therefore his diviſion is not good, referring all externall acts of religion to this fourth, or as hee maketh it, the third Commandement.

To the third we anſwer; Firſt, that other holy dayes are not enjoyned with the like ſtrict precept of ſanctification, as the Lords day is, which is of Gods inſtitution onely; the other were ordained by the Church, ſome are the meere inventions of men, as Popiſh holy dayes: but the ſpeciall ſanctifying of a day to an holy uſe, dependeth upon Gods Commandement and inſtitution.

Secondly, it is Bellarmines owne poſition, that men are bound in conſcience to keepe the Feſtivals of the Church, cap. 10. prop. 3. whereas we doe not ſo affirme: therefore it is he himſelfe, and not wee, that doth lay ſnares by the ſuperſtitious obſervation of holy dayes, to entangle mens ſoules aud conſciences.

Thirdly, we yeeld unto him, that it is very hurtfull to appoint ſo many holy dayes; as they doe, which indeed is nothing elſe but to clog mens conſciences with a multitude of ceremonies, which are burdenous to the Church.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, we grant that all ſinne, as of theft, adulterie, and the like, are in their owne nature alike, at what time ſoever they are committed; yet they may be made more heinous by the circumſtances: as of the place, as ſacrilege is greater than common theft; ſo why not of the time?

Secondly, if that which is no ſinne upon the work-day, be a ſinne upon the Sabbath, as to dig, to plough, to cart; then that which is a ſinne of it ſelfe, as to ſteale, to commit adulterie, muſt needs be greater and more hainous being done upon the Sabbath: for beſide the ſinne, he alſo prophaneth the Sabbath, which is the breach of another Commandement. Thirdly, the internall act of religion, is properly commanded in the ſanctifying of the Sabbath: for it cannot be ſanctified by the externall act of going to Church, and hearing the word, unleſſe a man be inwardly in the devotion of his heart prepared for thoſe holy exerciſes. So inward grace is more ſought for upon the Sabbath, not in reſpect of that inward deſire which we have unto them, which ought alwayes to be alike fervent in us, if it were poſſible, but becauſe of thoſe outward meanes, of hearing the word, publike prayer, receiving the Sacraments, which are upon the Sabbath: for the which we ought more eſpecially to prepare and examine our ſelves.

Eccl. 4. 17. 1 Cor. 11. 18. Iſay 58. 13. The Prophet Eſay doth teach us, how the true Sabbath muſt be kept. If thou turne away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy will on my holy day, &c. and ſhalt honour the Lord, not doing thine owne wayes, nor ſeeking thine owne will, nor ſpeaking a vaine word, &c. Abſtinence from ſinne then is chiefly required upon the Lords day: we muſt not doe our owne wayes. So it is decreed, Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 10. Blaſphemiis ac perjuriis nomen Domini profanatur, ac Sabbatum, quod nos admonet, ut quieſcamus perverſe agere, & benefacere diſcamus, contaminatur: By blaſphemies and perjuries the name of God is prophaned, and the Sabbath, which teacheth us to leave doing perverſly, and to learne to doe well, is polluted.

Auguſtine ſaith, ſpeaking of the Jewiſh women: Quanto melius fœmina eorum lanam facerent, quam illo die in neomeniis ſaltarent, &c. ſpiritualiter obſervat Sabbatum Chriſtianus, abſtinens ſe ab opere ſervili, id eſt, à peccato: Tract. 3. in Iohan. Their women might be better occupied in ſpinning at home, than in dancing upon this day: for a Chriſtian doth ſpiritually keepe the Sabbath, in abſtaining from all ſervile worke, that is, from ſinne. They that doe obſerve the Sabbath onely in externall acts, doe but carnally keepe it.

Concil. Matiſcon. 2. can. 1. Eſtote omnes in hymnis & laudibus Dei corpore & animo intenti, die dominico quiſque ſeipſum lachrymis & precibus afficiat: Let every man, bodie and ſoule bee occupied in ſetting forth the praiſe of God: upon the Lords day, let every man give himſelfe in his affection to teares and prayers. Here is more than the externall act of religion required: intention and affection are inward things. Againe in the ſame Canon, Exhibeamus Deo liberam ſervitutem, non quia hoc à nobis Deus expetit, ut corporali abſtinentia diem Domicicum celebremus, ſed quærit obedientiam, per quam nos calcatis terrenis actibus ad cœlum uſque miſericorditer provehat: Let us yeeld unto God our free ſervice: for God requireth us not by bodily abſtinence to keepe the Lords day, but hee looketh for our Obedience, by the which we ſhould tread under our feet all earthly and carnall acts, and ſo be lifted up in meditation even unto heaven, &c. Obedience then is eſpecially required upon the Lords day.

1 Damaſcene ſaith: Sabbatum à peccatis ceſſatio, the Sabbath is a reſt from ſinne.

[illegible] lib. 4. c. 24. Homil. de ſement. 2 Athanaſius ſaith: In Sabbato convenimus, ut Dominum Sabbati Ieſum adoremus, We come together on the Sabbath to adore the Lord of the Sabbath, &c. But who is ignorant how much the publike ſervice of God is hindred by notorious ſins, which in this are more offenſive upon the Lords day, becauſe thereby Gods glorie and ſervice is hindred. Auguſtine ſaith further: Every Lords day come to the Church, et non rixas, vel ocioſas fabulas agatis, &c. and give not your ſelves to branling and talking, &c. He that is not afraid to prate in the Church, ſhall give account for himſelfe and others, dum nec ipſe verbum Dei audit, nec alios audire permittit, while he neither heareth the word himſelfe, nor ſuffer others to heare, &c. Hee then that diſordereth himſelfe upon the Lords day, ſhall anſwer for himſelfe and others in as much as he hindreth them from hearing the word.

Harm. ſect. 15. pag. 465. 3 Helvetia latter confeſſ. c. 21. Seeing places dedicate to Gods worſhip are not prophane, but holy, ſuch as are converſant therein, ought to behave themſelves reverently and modeſtly, as they which are in a ſacred place, and in the preſence of God and his holy Angels, &c. and afterward, the ornament of Churches conſiſteth in ſobrietie, godlineſſe, and the vertues of thoſe which are in the Church: as holy places, ſo holy times muſt be adorned with vertue.

The

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First, we grant that this opinion is very ancient, and that in Tertullians time it was received in many Churches: and they thought it as unlawfull to bow the knee upon the Lords day, Tertul. lib. de coron. Militic. Die dominico jejunare nefas ducimus, & de geniculis adorare: Wee count it unlawfull to faſt upon the Lords day, and to pray kneeling.

So likewiſe, Trullan. Synod. can. 90. Ne dominicis diebus genua flectamus: That wee bow not our knees upon the Lords day: but the Papiſts obſerve not the one, why then ſhould they bind themſelves to the other? Ignatius maketh faſting upon the Sabbath as great an offence, as the killing of Chriſt himſelfe, Epiſtol. ad Philip. But, I truſt, they will not ſay ſo.

Secondly, the reaſons why faſting is not to be uſed upon the Lords day, becauſe the Jeſuite ſetteth downe none, I will ſupply out of Auguſtine: firſt, Sentio (ſaith hee) ad ſignificandam requiem ſempiternam (ubi eſt verum Sabbatum) relaxationem, quàm conſtrictionem jejunii aptius convenire. I thinke that to ſignifie the eternall reſt, which is the true Sabbath, libertie rather, than the urging of faſting doth moſt fitly agree. But to this wee anſwer, that this ſignification of eternall reſt, is no eſſentiall part of ſanctifying the Sabbath, nor no end of the inſtitution, as we have ſhewed afore though it may have ſuch an application: and therefore this reaſon proveth not ſuch a neceſſitie of not faſting upon the Sabbath. Secondly, Die dominico jejunare magnum eſt ſcandalum: It is a great offence to faſt on the Lords day, becauſe the Manichees made choiſe of that day to faſt in. Per quod factum eſt, ut jejunium Sabbathi horribilius haberetur, By the which (ſaith hee) it came to paſſe, that the faſt of the Sabbath was more abhorred, Auguſtin. ibid. But this reaſon now bindeth not us, becauſe the name and hereſie of the Manichees is now worne out, and therefore there is no feare of any ſcandale to ariſe that way.

Epiſt. 86.

Thirdly, we grant that the Lords day is not the fitteſt time for publique faſts: firſt, becauſe it is a day of rejoycing: ſo we read that the people in Nehemiah his time, were forbidden to mourne and weep, after the law was read unto them by Ezra, becauſe it was a day of joy and mirth. Secondly, the day of ſolemne and publique faſting ought to be ſet apart from other daies, and to be proclaimed ſolemne, and to bee ſpent wholly in ſpirituall exerciſes, even as the Sabbath, with vacation and reſt from other bodily labours, as wee may read, 2 Chron. 20. 3. Nehem. 9. 1. And therefore any day is more fit than the Sabbath, becauſe that is a holy day already unto the Lord: but when we will humble our ſelves before the Lord by faſting and prayer, ſome day would only for that purpoſe be conſecrate unto God: that may be as a voluntarie ſacrifice: whereas we are bound of neceſſitie to keep the Lords day.

Nehem. 8. 11.
2 Chron. 20.
Nehem. 9. 1.

But concerning private and particular faſts, when men by themſelves have occaſion to give themſelves to prayer, whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh. Such private exerciſes may bee better performed upon the Sabbath, becauſe of the ordinarie exerciſes of the word, which are notable meanes to kindle and ſtirre up true devotion in him, which at that time will humble himſelfe; yea and publique faſts though not ordinarily, yet when there is juſt occaſion, may bee kept upon the Sabbath: as wee read Act. 20. 7. how that Paul continued his preaching till midnight: whereof Auguſtine writeth thus, Neceſſarius ſermo reficiendi corporis cauſa interrumpendus eſſe non viſus eſt profecturo Apoſtolo: The neceſſary preaching of the Apoſtle, hee thought not good, for the refreſhing of their bodies to breake off, being readie to depart. Wee conclude therefore, that it is lawfull to faſt upon the Lords day, though it bee not alwayes expedient. And Auguſtine very well determineth this matter: Ego in Evangelicis, & Apoſtolicis literis video praceptum eſſe jejunium: quibus autem diebus non oporteat jejunare, & quibus oporteat, pracepto domini, vel Apoſtolorum non invenio definitum: I find both in the Evangelicall and Apoſtolicall writings, that faſting is commanded: but upon what dayes wee ought to faſt, upon what we ought not, I doe not find it defined, Epiſt. 86. Wherfore to faſt or not to faſt upon the Lords day, or upon any other, being not determined in Scripture, is left as a thing indifferent to the Church of God.

Epiſt. 86.

Concil. Gangrenſ. can. 18. Si quis tanquam hoc continentia convenire judicans die dominico jejunaverit, aut in ejuſdem diei contemptum, anathema ſit: If any man doe faſt upon the Lords day, as judging it more agreeable to a continent life, or in contempt of the day, let him bee accurſed, &c. The Councell doth not ſimply forbid faſting upon this day, but that it ſhould not bee done ſuperſtitiouſly, with an opinion of greater holineſſe, nor in contempt of the day, which is to Chriſtians a day of rejoycing.

So likewiſe Carthaginenſ. 4. can. 64. Qui dominico die ſtudioſè jejunat, credatur non catholicus: Hee that of purpoſe doth faſt on the Lords day, let him bee counted not Catholique. A man may faſt then upon the Lords day, ſo it be not of a ſuperſtitious or wilfull purpoſe.

In their owne decrees it ſtandeth thus: Decret. par. 1. diſt. 76. cap. Utinam omni die jejunare poſſimus, &c. I would we might faſt every day, which in the Acts of the Apoſtles we read, that S. Paul did, and the reſt of the faithfull with him in the daies of Pentecoſt, and upon the Lords day.

1 Damaſcene ſheweth at large, that whereas the Iſraelites were commanded not to afflict themſelves upon the Sabbath, yet Moſes faſted twice fortie dayes, and Elias travailed 40. daies, faſting all that while, and Daniel faſted three weeks of daies, and the Jewes did faſt their great and ſolemne faſt, in humbling of themſelves, if it fell out upon the Sabbath.

De fid. Orthod. l. 4. c. 24.

2 Auguſtine is alleaged before, how S. Paul preached till midnight, and ſo they faſted upon the Lords day: and he addeth further, Ut ſciremus ſi neceſſitas aliqua oriatur, non eſſe urgentiori actioni prandium præferendum: That we ſhould know, if any neceſſity doe ariſe, that one repaſt muſt not bee preferred before a more urgent occaſion, &c. yet Auguſtine concludeth, that it were not ſafe in thoſe dayes, no not upon any ſuch occaſion to faſt upon the Lords day, becauſe of the Priſcillianiſts, that enjoyned a neceſſary feaſt upon that day, Ne majus malum incurratur è ſcandalo quam bonum percipiatur ex verbo; Leſt greater evill may fall out by the offence, than good received by audience, and hearing of the word, &c. But it is evident that Auguſtine ſpeaketh of publike and ſolemne faſts, which are not ſo fit upon the Lords day: for thus he ſaith, Farre be it from us ſo to take this, Tanquam ſolerent Apoſtoli ſolenniter die Dominico jejunare, As though the Apoſtles uſed ſolemnly to faſt on the Lords day. And Auguſtines reaſon was, why faſting was not fit upon the Lords day, becauſe the Priſcillianiſts, joyning therein with the Manichees and Marcionites, faſted upon that day, as making queſtion of the truth of the Reſurrection, as likewiſe they faſted upon the day of the Nativitie upon the ſame reaſon, Quaſi non fuerit vera, as though it were not in truth: as Leo ſaith: This hereſie being now baniſhed, there cannot ariſe the like offence by faſting upon the Lords day.

3 Helvetia, latter confeſſ. c. 24. Let every one faſt to this end, to deprive the fleſh of that which ſhould cheriſh it, and that he may the more zealouſly ſerve God, &c. A man then may very conveniently faſt upon the Lords day for his private exerciſe, and to enflame his zeale.

8 THe name Sunday is an heatheniſh calling, as all other weeke-dayes in our Language: ſome impoſed after the names of Planets, as in the Romans time: ſome by the name of certaine Idols, which the Saxons did worſhip: which names the Church uſeth not, but hath appointed to call the firſt day the Dominike, after the Apoſtle, the other by the name Feries, untill the laſt of the weeke, which ſhe calleth by the old name Sabbath, becauſe that was of God, not by impoſition of the Heathen, Rhemiſt. annot. Apocal. 1. ſect. 6.

Apoc. 1. 10.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, as the name of Sunday, and the reſt, is of the heatheniſh beginning, and therefore were better to be otherwiſe termed, as the firſt, ſecond, or third from the Lords day, as the Jewes called their dayes from the Sabbath: ſo your terme of Feries, is no leſſe heatheniſh, derived from the word feria, or feria, which were ſo called, à feriendis victimis, of ſtriking the heatheniſh ſacrifices, as Sextus Pompeius ſaith, Fulke ibid.

Auguſt. cont. Fauſt. 18. 5.

2 We have other names alſo that might be reformed, as of our moneths: as March is ſo called of Mars, June of Iuno, January of Ianus, which were Heathen Gods: July and Auguſt doe beare the names of men: yea, and if we might bee inventors of new names, the termes of Chriſtmas, Michaelmas, Candlemas, ſhould not ſtand in force, nor any more be uſed, which are as offenſive as the reſt: for as for the names of Heathen Idols, the moſt part are ignorant of them; but the vulgar terme of Maſſe, is too too well knowne, and too much loved of many of our Country-men. Now for the name Sunday, which is ſo great a mote in your eye, if there were no more but that, Auguſtine ſheweth how it might be favourably expounded, Dies magni ſolis celebramus, illius ſolis, de quo dicit ſcriptura, orietur vobis ſol juſtitia: We doe keep Sunday holy, namely, of that great Sun, whereof the Scripture ſpeaketh, the Sun of righteouſneſſe ſhall ariſe. So in the Civill law, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 12. leg. 3. it is called, dies ſolis, Sunday: though the other name, dies Dominicus, the Lords day, be preferred; as ibid. leg. 7. Valentin. Dies ſolis Dominicos rite dixere majores; the Sundayes, our anceſtors rightly called the Lords dayes.

In Pſal. 93.

3 We wiſh that all theſe termes might be laid downe, as Auguſtine ſaith, Nolumus ut dicam, & minime corrigantur ut non dicant: We would not have men ſo to ſpeake, and I wiſh they were reformed. But ſeeing by continuall cuſtome mens tongues are inured to ſuch termes, let them know, that they are uſed only as civill names, to call things by, not for any religion or myſterie in them contained or ſignified.

And here I doe commend Hieromes two rules concerning heatheniſh names, the firſt, where hee ſaith, Libr. de veſte ſacerdotal. in Iob, Arcturum & Orionem, &c. In Iob wee reade of Arcturus and Orion, and other names of the ſtarres, not that the Hebrewes doe ſo call them: Sed quod nos non poſſumus quæ dicuntur niſi conſuetis vocibus intelligere, But becauſe wee cannot underſtand what is ſaid but under the common termes, &c. So then, where uſe and cuſtome hath obtained to have things called by ſuch names, and they are knowne by no other, there neceſſitie doth diſpenſe with Heatheniſh names.

His other rule is this, that ſuch Pagan termes which have no neceſſarie uſe, but proceed of prophaneneſſe or wantonneſſe, ſhould be left. Abſit, ut de ore Chriſtiano ſonet, &c. God forbid, that a Chriſtian mouth ſhould ſound, Iupiter, Hercules, &c. quæ portenta ſunt magis quam nomina; Which are monſters rather than names. This is a good caveat for young Students, that they ſhould in their exerciſes, as declamations, diſputations, Comedies, Tragedies, avoid and decline thoſe monſtrous Heatheniſh names, which yet are too rife among them.

As we thinke other names fitter than that of Sunday for the Lords day, yet ſome have uſed it, which were farre from heatheniſh termes. 1 Iuſtine Martyr calleth it Sunday. 2 Auguſtines judgement is ſeene before, in what tollerable ſenſe it may be ſo called. 3 The reformed Churches doe moſt uſually call it by the name of the Lords day: and we take it to be the fitteſt name: ſee confeſſ. THe feaſt of Eaſter and Whitſontide, and other ſolemnities of Chriſt, were preſcribed (they ſay) by the Apoſtles, Rhemiſt. Matth. 15. ſect. 2. to be kept upon certaine dayes, and that Peter did appoint that Eaſter ſhould not be kept the 14. day of the firſt Moone, as the Jewes obſerved it, but the Lords day after. And of the feaſt of Pentecoſt mention is made: Ergo, theſe feaſts were inſtituted of the Apoſtles, Bellarm. cap. 12. 13.

73. Error.

1 Cor. 16. 8.

Bellarmine to prove the celebration of Eaſter, as it is now obſerved in the Latine Church, to be Apoſtolicall, alleageth the 8. Canon of the Apoſtles, which decreeth, That he which obſerved Eaſter before the vernall Equinoctium, whether Biſhop or Prieſt ſhould be depoſed.

Anſw. It is a cleere caſe that thoſe Canons are forged and falſly aſcribed to the Apoſtles: 1 In the laſt Canon the Goſpell of Saint Iohn is counted among the Canonicall books of the new Teſtament, which was not at that time written, when theſe Canons are ſaid to have been made by the Apoſtles aſſembled together: for S. Peter, a principall compoſer of theſe Canons, is brought in ſpeaking, Can. 28. who was put to death before S. Iohn writ his Goſpell. 2 Of what validity theſe Canons be, it appeareth in the Trullane Councell, Can. 12. where they forbid Biſhops after their conſecration to have ſocietie with their wives, directly contrary to the 5. Canon of the Apoſtles: and they give a reaſon thereof, Statum eccleſiaſticum in pulchriorem ordinem reducentes: Their meaning was to bring the ſtate eccleſiaſticall to a more beautifull order, whereas the Apoſtles in the beginning of the Goſpell, ad fidelium imbecillitatem ſe demittebant, did ſubmit themſelves to the imbecillity of the weake. But if they were the Canons of the Apoſtles indeed, what boldneſſe had this been, ſo lightly to reverſe their decrees? 3 In the laſt Canon there are three books of the Macchabees made Canonicall, whereas the Papiſts themſelves receive but two; why then doe they themſelves tranſgreſſe the Apoſtles Canons? 4 Gelaſius, decret. de Apocryphis, doth in direct termes make, Librum canonum Apoſtolorum, the booke of the Canons of the Apoſtles Apocryphall. The authoritie therefore of theſe forged Canons doth little move us.

Againe, Bellarmine urgeth a divine teſtimonie, as he calleth it, how that Paſchaſinus reporteth, that in Pope Zozimus time there being a queſtion about the time of the celebration of Eaſter: the Pope with the Weſt Church appointing the 25. of March, the Eaſt Church the 22. of April, it ſo fell out, that in a certaine Church in Sicily, a certaine fountaine, that uſed every yeere to fill it ſelfe againſt Eaſter day for thoſe that ſhould be baptized, was emptie upon the 25. of March, but was full the 22. of April: whereby the Pope and the Weſt Church, did perceive themſelves to be in an error, and the Eaſt Church in the right, Bellar. cap. 12.

Anſw. Firſt, if this tale beare any credit, it ſheweth, that the Eaſt Church was ſounder, concerning the celebration of Eaſter, than the Pope. Secondly, this miracle alloweth that Eaſter day ſhould be kept after the 20. day of April, contrary to the decree of the Nicen Councell: which limited the time for Eaſter from the 21. of March to the 20. of April, and no further. Thirdly, this fained miracle is of like credit to that viſion, which Pope Pius affirmeth to have been ſhewed to one Hermes: how that an Angell appeared unto him, commanding him to keep Eaſter upon the Lords day, decret. p. 3. diſt. 3. cap. 21. But if the celebration of Eaſter were grounded upon the inſtitution of the Apoſtles, they need not bring ſuch beggerly ſtuffe, by lying miracles and viſions, to make proofe of their matter.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, we grant that it is expedient for the Church to keep the memoriall of the Nativitie, Paſſion, Reſurrection, Aſcenſion of Chriſt, and of the comming of the holy Ghoſt; and the dayes inſtituted for the remembrance thereof, no doubt, ought to be had in greater account, than any other holy daies inſtituted by the Church. Secondly, it cannot be proved, that they were preſcribed by the Apoſtles; or if they were, but as indifferent ceremonies, which are ſubject to alteration, and in the which the religion or worſhip of God doth not conſiſt. Certaine it is, that before the time of Conſtantine the great, there were not many feſtivall dayes kept, in ſo much, that the feaſts of the Nativity of Chriſt, Eaſter, Pentecoſt, were not uniformally obſerved for many yeeres after, as appeareth by divers Councels. And before Conſtantines time, there was great contention betweene the Biſhop of Rome, and the Biſhops of the Eaſt, about the celebration of Eaſter; they alleaging the conſtitution of S. Iohn, the other of S. Peter: wherefore it is like that the Apoſtles appointed no ſuch certaine dayes: for then the Church would not have broken them.

Concil. Aurel. 4. cap. 1.

Tolet. 10. c. 1.

Thirdly, Pentecoſt, whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh, was the feaſt of the Jewes, which, with other ſolemnities of theirs, the Apoſtles obſerved not as a portion of Chriſtian Religion, but taking occaſion of the meeting of the Jewes in thoſe feſtivall dayes: and ſo doe we obſerve thoſe holy dayes for order and edification of Gods people, that uſe to aſſemble at ſuch times.

Fourthly, what cauſe is there, why Eaſter and Whitſontide ſhould be tied to the Lords day, and the Nativitie of Chriſt, which Bellarmine confeſſeth, was upon the Lords day, ſhould indifferently be kept upon any day? but that hereby we underſtand, that it is an indifferent matter, whether they ſhould be kept upon the Lords day, or any other, and whether upon any certaine day, or to be left to the diſcretion of the governours of the Church to be obſerved, as any other occaſion ſhall be offered, Fulk, annot. Apocalyp. 1. ſect. 6.

Laſtly, we ſhewed Auguſtines opinion, in the firſt part of this queſtion, how he underſtandeth that ſaying, Pſal. 118. This is the day which the Lord hath made, only of the Sabbath: thereby inſinuating, that other holy daies either were not inſtituted of God at all, or elſe not with the like neceſſitie.

Let us ſee further the conſent of antiquitie: that the obſervation of Eaſter is no Apoſtolicall conſtitution it appeareth: 1 Becauſe there was no uniforme order ſet downe for it before the firſt Nicen Councell, where, as Theophilus Alexandrinus witneſſeth, theſe three rules were made for Eaſter: the firſt, that it ſhould not be kept before the 21. of March, nor after the 20. of April, becauſe their Equinoctium did fall then upon the 21. of March, and Eaſter muſt in no wiſe be kept before the Equinoctium: The ſecond, that they ſhould waite for the 14. day of the firſt Moone from the 21. of March, till the 14. of April. The third, that they ſhould obſerve the firſt Lords day after the 14. of the firſt Moone, and ſo keep their Eaſter. This order was begun in the Nicene Councell, not by the Apoſtles: Ergo, it is not Apoſtolicall.

2 Neither after the Nicen Councell did this order hold: for in Pope Zozimus time, the West Churches kept Eaſter the 8. from the Calends of April, that is, the 25. of March: the Eaſt Churches the 22. of April: Leon. epiſtol. 61. Againe, Leo. epiſtol. 62. maketh mention how Theodoſius the Elder committed this matter to the Biſhop of Alexandria, to compoſe the cycle of the Paſch: who committed in his account a great error (as Leo ſaith) for in the 76. yeere of his order, Eaſter fell upon the 24. of April, whereas by the order of the Nicen Councell, it ſhould not exceed the 20. day. Further, the ſame Leo writeth, Epiſtol. 92. that whereas ſome appointed the next Eaſter then comming upon the 15. from the Calends of May, ſome upon the 8. he writ to the Emperor Marthan, who according to the order of the Eaſt Church, would have it kept the 8. day: and thereunto Leo conſented. This could not then be an Apoſtolicall decree, whereof there was no more certaintie.

But that the feſtivities of Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt are to be preferred before other holy daies, wee willingly grant: as Cod. lib. 3. tit. 12. leg. 7. by the conſtitution of the Emperors, Valentin. Theodoſ. Arcad. the feaſts of the Paſch, the Nativitie, and Epiphanie, are eſpecially authorized. And Decret. par. 2. cauſ. 7. qu. 1. c. 29. the Nativitie of our Lord, Epiphanie, the Paſch, and Pentecoſt, are reckoned up for the principall feaſts, and ſolemne daies, &c.

That the feſtivals of Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt, though not inſtituted by the Apoſtles, yet are to have the preeminence before the feſtivities and commemorations of Saints, thus further it is ſhewed. 1 Socrates evidently teſtifieth, ſpeaking of the Paſch, Nemo Apoſtolorum quicquam de illo ſancivit, None of the Apoſtles did ordaine any thing concerning it: yet the day of Chriſts Nativity, Paſſion, and the reſt were preferred before other feſtivals: as Chryſoſtome calleth the Nativitie of Chriſt, Omnium reliquorum feſtorum Metropolym. The mother feaſt of all the reſt: ſo Conſtantine, though hee would have other daies alſo reverenced, yet hee gave commandement unto all the ſubjects of the Roman Empire, Ut dieb. Servatori nuncupatis feriarentur: That they ſhould make holy day, that is, reſt and recreate themſelves upon the daies dedicated to our Saviour.

And thoſe holy daies of Chriſt have to this day in the South Church the preeminence: as Zaga Zabo, next after the obſervation of the Lords day, rehearſeth, novem dies in Chriſti memoriam celebrandos, Nine daies to bee celebrated in the memorie of Chriſt, the Annunciation, Nativitie, Circumciſion, Purification, Baptiſme, Transfiguration, Palmes, Aſcenſion, Pentecoſt, &c. beſide the Paſch, which he ſpeaketh of afterward: he further affirmeth, that all theſe they obſerve by the inſtitution of the Apoſtles, but thereof there is no more certaintie, than of that which he ſaith afterward: Ex inſtitutione quoq; Apoſtolorum duos dies celebrare tenemur, ſcilicet Sabbati & Dominici: By the inſtitution of the Apoſtles, we are bound alſo to keep two daies, of the Sabbath and Lords day, wherein it is not lawfull for us to doe any thing at all, &c. The fourth part, of the ſolemnities of Saints.

The Papiſts.

1 THey hold that holy daies may be dedicated unto Saints, for their honour and worſhip: as Chriſt promiſed that the charitable act of Mary Magdalen wrought upon him ſhould bee recorded and remembred. Hereby wee learne that the good works of Saints may be recorded to the honour of Saints in the Church, whereof ariſe their commemorations and holy daies, Rhemiſt. annot. Matth. 25. ſect. 1. 74. Error. Matth. 26. 13.

The Proteſtants.

THe good works of Saints may be remembred to the honour of God, without their holy daies and commemorations: Chriſt inſtituted no holy day of Mary Magdalen, nor commanded an image of her fact to be made, but a memorie of her in preaching the Goſpell. Secondly, we grant, that Chriſtian ſolemnities may bee kept, as things indifferent, which the Church may retaine or abrogate as it ſhall ſeeme beſt for edification, not obſerved of neceſſitie as a part of the worſhip of God, not conſecrate to the honour of Saints; ſeeing all divine worſhip is wholly to bee reſerved to God, not to bee given to any other: For times and ſeaſons, the Scripture ſaith, the Lord hath put only in his owne power: therefore he is only to have the honour of them. Act. 1. 7. Thirdly, what honour is due unto Saints, Auguſtine ſheweth: Colimus martyres eo cultu dilectionis, & ſocietatis, quo & in hac vita coluntur ſancti homines Dei: We doe honour Martyrs with the ſervice of love and fellowſhip, as holy men are honoured in this life. Contra Fauſt. lib. 2. cap. 21. But it is not lawfull to conſecrate times and daies to holy men living, therefore neither to Saints departed: for one and the ſame kinde of honour is due to them both.

Leon. 1. epiſtol. 4. c. 4. Notum ſit dilectioni veſtra univerſos dies Chriſti innumeris conſecratos fuiſſe virtutibus, &c. Bee it knowne to your brotherhood, that all the daies of Chriſt are conſecrate with his innumerable vertuous acts: yet if wee ſhould indifferently honour all the works of Chriſt, all daies ſhould bee holy daies, for they are all full of the miracles of Chriſt, &c. From hence we collect theſe two arguments againſt Saints daies. 1 The miracles of Chriſt are more forcible to conſecrate an holy day, than the acts of Saints; but all his miracles make not holy dayes: Ergo. 2 By the ſame reaſon, that all Chriſts acts have not their feſtivals, becauſe then all daies ſhould be feſtivall, we doe alſo exclude Saints daies, becauſe that if all Saints ſhould have their commemorations, the daies of the yeere would not ſuffice thereto: and we ſhould have none but feſtivals.

Cod. lib. 3. tit. 12. leg. 4. a law was made by Conſtantinus the Emperor, that none but the Prince, ſhould, ferias condere, erect daies of recreation for the people, &c. If civill holy daies muſt bee appointed only by the Emperor the Lord of the earth, in the Church holy daies ſhould be grounded upon the inſtitution of Chriſt Lord and King of his Church

1 Ieremie the Greeke Patriarke well ſheweth wherefore holy daies were inſtituted, Ad laudem Dei memoriamq́, eorum, qui illi à ſeculo placuerunt, referuntur, ad excitationem imitationemq́, virtutis: They are referred to the praiſe of God, and their memorie, who have pleaſed him in times paſt, and to ſtirre us up to the imitation of their vertues, &c. Saints memories then are to the praiſe of God, not to their honour. Cenſur. Oriental. p. c. 15.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, Deo, beneficiorum ejus feſtis diebus ſacramus memoriam, ne volumine temporum ingrata ſubrepat oblivio: We by feſtivall daies conſecrate the memorie unto God of his benefits, leſt ungratefull oblivion of them in the proceſſe of time might grow. Lib. 10. de civit, Dei cap. 4.

The Proteſtants.

THis is another principall fault, which we find and complaine of in their holy daies: that they have peſtred the Church with ſuch a number of Saints and Saints daies. Ex Tilemann. Loc. 28. Firſt, as we have partly ſhewed before, they appointed a ſeverall Saint almoſt for every purpoſe, as here we have ſet it downe.

Here we have twentie more: all theſe joyned together will make a round ſumme: we ſhall have very neere two hundred, play-daies enough: Of which number ſome are blaſphemous, as to keep the Conception of Mary, in remembrance that ſhe was conceived without ſin: ſome of them fabulous and forged, as the Aſſumption of Mary, in memory of her Aſſumption in body to heaven, which is of no certaintie: But all the reſt are idolatrous and ſuperſtitious, ordained for the honour and worſhip of creatures. And thus have they cumbred the people of God with their infinite obſervations. So that the Lord ſaith to them, concerning their feaſts, as unto the Iſraelites: They are a burthen unto me, I am wearie to beare them, Iſai. 1. 14.

Auguſtine ſpeaking of the feſtivals of Chriſtians, maketh mention only of the paſſion, reſurrection, aſcenſion of Chriſt, and of the comming of the Holy Ghoſt, concluding with this generall clauſe, Etſi quid tale occurrerit, quod ſervatur ab univerſis, &c. And if there bee any ſuch thing obſerved of the whole Church, &c. Epiſt. 118. c. 1. it ſeemeth then, that there were but few holy daies.

Bernard in his time complained of this multitude of feaſts: Patria eſt, non exilii frequentia hac gaudiorum, & numeroſitas feſtivitatum cives decet, non exules: This frequencie of mirth belongeth to our countrey, not to exile, and the multitude of feaſts becommeth citizens in heaven, not exiles upon the earth. To this purpoſe there is a notable ſaying, Opuſc. Tripartit. lib. 3. cap. 1. tom. 2. Concilior. Vulgare eſt, quod malæ mulieres dicunt, quòd plus lucrantur in uno die feſto de peccato ſuo, quam per totam ſeptimanam, &c. It is a common thing in the mouthes of naughtie women, that they gaine more by their ſin in one holy day, than all the weeke beſide, and ſo of other ſins: Et ideo videtur, quod acceptum eſſet Deo, quòd pauciora feſta eſſent in eccleſia: And therefore it ſeemeth to bee acceptable to God, that there ſhould be fewer holy daies in the Church, &c.

Cod. lib. 3. tit. 12. leg. 7. Valentin. Theodoſ. Beſide the feſtivities of Chriſt, as the Nativity, Epiphanie, Paſch: only, the feſtivals of the Apoſtles are enjoyned to be kept.

Likewiſe, Boniface. 8. though a corrupt Pope, yet herein not ſo ſuperſtitious as the reſt, enjoyneth, that the feaſts of the twelve Apoſtles, the foure Evangeliſts, and the foure Doctors of the Church, Gregory, Auguſtine, Hierome, Ambroſe, ſhould bee ſolemnly kept above the reſt: and in that decree there are no other holy daies particularly named: Sext. decret. lib. 3. tit. 22. cap. 1.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: The multiplication of holy daies, of feaſts of Corpus Chriſti, the viſitation of our Ladie, is a wicked face and colour, and indeed fooliſh, unprofitable, vaine, Fox pag. 1253. col. 1. Pag. 1141. 2. 40.

1 See before the law of Valentinian and Theodoſ. for the Greeke Church.

2 Athanaſius calleth the feaſt of the Annunciation, unum ex Dominicis feſtis, atque adeo primarium, one of the Dominicall feaſts, and that a principall one, &c. and he giveth this reaſon, quippe in quo de filii Dei è cœlis deſcenſu agatur, &c. becauſe therein the deſcenſion of the Son of God from heaven is treated upon, &c. Hee will have the feaſt of the Annunciation, not the Ladies, but the Lords feaſt: and alloweth them only as chiefe feſtivals, wherein the benefits and acts of Chriſt are treated on. Enarrat. The Papiſts.

THey enjoyne ſanctification and neceſſary keeping of all their feſtivities and holy daies: and ſo make no difference betweene the obſervation of holy daies appointed of God, and others ordained of men, requiring the like ſtrictnes in keeping of them all, Rhemiſt. annot. Gal. 4. ſect. 5. And Bellarmine alſo affirmeth, that men are bound in conſcience to keep all the feſtivals of the Church: cap. 10. prop. 3. 76. Error.

The Proteſtants.

THere are no daies neceſſarie to be kept, but thoſe that are of the Lords appointment: the reſt being void of ſuperſtition, may bee celebrated as indifferent: and therefore not to bee commanded with the like ſtrictnes, as is the Lords day. There is greater libertie upon holy daies for bodily labour, than upon the Sabbath: for bodily reſt upon the ſeventh day is commanded of God: bodilie labour, upon all other daies permitted, and may without offence of conſcience be uſed, when it is not by the lawfull authority of the governors of the Church upon juſt occaſion reſtrained, as during the time of publike prayers and faſts, hearing of the word, and ſuch like.

The reſt of the Sabbath, ſo farre as it helpeth our preparation and fitnes to ſpirituall exerciſes, and is a part of ſanctifying the Lords day, bindeth ſimply in conſcience, becauſe it is the commandement of God: but the reſt upon holy daies doth not in it ſelfe bind us, no otherwiſe than by reaſon of offence, that may ariſe by our contempt of the conſtitutions of the Church.

We find that Simon Iſlip, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, directed his letters patents to all Parſons and Vicars, wherein he ſtreightly charged them and their pariſhioners under paine of excommunication, not to abſtaine from bodily labour upon certaine Saints daies, which before were wont to be hallowed and conſecrated to unthriftie idlenes, Fox p. 393. Ergo, by their owne judgement, all the feſtivities of their Church are not to be kept alike.

Reformat. Ratiſpon. artic. 20. In minoribus feſtivitatibus liberum cuique facimus, &c. In the ſmaller feaſts, we give leave to every man, after he hath heard Maſſe, to returne to his labour, whereby hee may provide ſuſtenance for him and his.

Synod. Treverenſ. cap. 10. Uſque in meridiem in feſtis diebus feriari volumus, & ſacto ſacro, cuique ad labores & negotia ſecularia redire liceat: Wee will have men to keep holy day upon the feſtivals till noone, and then to returne to their labours and worldly buſines, having firſt ſerved God, &c. All feſtivals therefore are not with the like ſtrictnes to be obſerved.

This truth hath alſo been ſealed: Iſabel Tracher perſecuted, becauſe ſhe did worke upon holy daies, Fox p. 829. col. 1. William Wingrave, Thomas Hawkes, with other perſecuted for the like, for ſaying, That God biddeth us worke one day as well as another, ſaving the Sunday. pag. 985. col. 1.

Auguſtine maketh three degrees of feſtivall daies: In the firſt and higheſt degree hee placeth the Lords day: Quomodo Maria virgo, mater Domini, principatum tenet inter omnes mulieres; ita inter cæteros dies hæc omnium dierum mater eſt: As amongſt women the Virgin Mary, the mother of our Lord, is the chiefe; ſo this day is the mother and chiefe of all other daies: ſpeaking of the Sabbath of Chriſtians: De tempore Serm. 136.

In the next place or degree hee putteth the feſtivals of Chriſt, and the holy Ghoſt, as the commemorations of his Nativitie, Paſſion, Reſurrection, Aſcenſion: as in his ſermon upon the Aſcenſion day he thus ſaith, Conditoris baſilicæ hujus S. Leontii hodiè depoſitio eſt: ſed dignetur obſcurari ſtella à ſole: To day we have the commemoration of the diſpoſition or ſepulture of S. Leontius the founder of this Church: but let not the ſtarre thinke much to be obſcured of the Sun. So in the third ranke hee counteth the commemorations of holy men, which unto the feſtivities of Chriſt were but as the ſtarre to the Sun. We will adde a fourth place or degree, diſtinguiſhing betweene the commemorations of the holy Apoſtles, and other ſuperſtitious and popiſh Saints daies, which our Church hath worthily thruſt out at the doores.

Let us ſee their owne decrees: Decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 3. c. 1. Reliquas feſtivitates, &c. Upon other feſtivals, neq; cogendi ad feriandum, &c. men muſt neither be conſtrained to play, or ceaſe from worke, nor yet be forbidden: Therefore by this decree all their feaſts are not of neceſſitie to be kept. Againe, ibid. cap. 12. Gregor. Pervenit ad nos, &c. It is come to our eare, that certaine doe forbid to worke upon the Saturday, who are nothing elſe but the preachers of Antichriſt, &c. But the Papiſts forbid to worke upon Saturdaies being their holy dayes: Ergo, by the determination of Gregory, they are Antichriſts preachers.

1 Conſtantine decreed, ut diebus Servatori nuncupatis feriarentur, &c. that men ſhould keep holy day, or recreate themſelves upon the daies dedicated to our Saviour: other daies of Martyrs he would have honoured only, &c. So herein he would have a manifeſt difference betweene them and other dayes. Euſeb. lib. 4. de vit. Conſtantin.

2 The Æthiopians doe keep the old Sabbath, and the Lords day with ſuch ſtrictnes, that it is not lawfull for them thereon, rem aliquam facere, ne minimam quidem, to doe any thing, no not the leaſt matter, &c. Zaga Zabo: Other feſtivities they keep with more libertie. It is their error to keep the old Sabbath ſtill: but herein they agree with us in making difference betweene the feſtivals of Gods inſtituting, and thoſe which are by humane conſtitution. Ex Damiano de morib. Æthiop.

3 See the confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 24. The Lords day they affirme to have been kept ever ſince the the Apoſtles: the feſtivals of Chriſt they allow to bee kept, but with greater libertie: Saints daies they wholly diſclaime, being ordained to their honour.

4 See Gregories decree, and Simon Iſlips, and reformat. Ratiſpon. &c. before alleaged, &c.

An appendix to this part, of the vigiles and night-watches annexed to feſtivall dayes.

The Papiſts.

77. Error. 1 THey were wont upon Saints eeves to give themſelves to faſting, and watching. But their night vigiles or watches they doe not now ſo ſtrictly obſerve, becauſe of the great abuſes which did grow thereupon, Bellar. cap. 17. Yet they have not altogether left them, for they have their Nocturns or midnight Mattens, and their prime houres in the morning, Rhemiſt. annot. Act. 10. ſect. 6.

The Proteſtants.

THe Chriſtians in time of perſecution had their antelucanos hymnos, their early and timely ſongs and hymnes: they met together to worſhip God, before the Sun riſe, becauſe they could not ſafely, neither were ſuffered to aſſemble in the day time. But that is no reaſon, why now the Church ſhould uſe vigiles or nocturnes, ſeeing we now have free exerciſe of religion in the day time: no more than Pauls example is to be urged, that prayed by the rivers ſide with the people, and there preached unto them, becauſe in idolatrous cities they could have no places of meeting, that therefore we now ought to doe the like, having Churches and Oratories to aſſemble in.

Decretum Teleſphori: Ut nocte nativitatis domini miſſas celebrarent, reliquis verò temporibus non ante horam diei tertiam, &c. That Maſſe ſhould be celebrate the night before the nativitie of our Lord, at other times not before the 3. houre of the day, becauſe Chriſt was crucified at that houre, &c. Here vigiles are forbidden, except only one night in the yeere. This Canon is rehearſed, diſtinct. 1. cap. 48.

Synod. Colonienſ. ſub Adulpho, part. 1. cap. 7. Ne Canonici & Vicarii Cleri noſtri Colonienſis vigiliis defunctorum, &c. Leſt that the Canons and Vicars of our Clergie at Colon, ſhould bee hindred from frequenting more neceſſarie leſſons by the vigiles of the dead, which they were wont to performe at ſeven in the morning; we will, that from henceforth vigiles ſhall begin at two in the afternoone, that they may be finiſhed before evening prayer. Here vigiles and night-watches are cleane cut off, and turned to day-exerciſes.

And how well they kept their vigiles may appeare by that decree of Innocentius, decr. Greg. cap. 3. tit. 41. cap. 9. Dolentes referimus, &c. Wee ſpeake it with griefe, that certaine, not only inferiour prieſts, but prelates, ſpend the time in eating and drinking untill midnight, &c.

Auguſtine ſaith, Vigiliæ ſunt inutiles, cum qui vigilaverit circa cogitationes turpes, &c. Vigiles are unprofitable when one watcheth unto uncleane thoughts: De ſalutarib. Dominicat. cap. 47. and hee commendeth only thoſe vigiles, in nocte non opera noctis, ſed diei peregiſſe. Orat. cont. Iudæor. in the night to do the works of the day, not of the night, &c. as to ſing, to pray, to eat & drinke, to dance, &c.

It cannot bee denied, but that of ancient time, the Chriſtians had their nocturne aſſemblies, and night-watches, but they kept them not of any ſuperſtitious minde, as thereby thinking to merit, but they did give themſelves to watching and faſting, to make their prayers more earneſt, neither was it uſually done, but at ſome ſolemne times, as in the Paſch. 1 As Epiphanius ſaith, in dieb. paſchalib. apud nos ſunt humi dormitiones, &c. preces vigiliæ, jejunia, &c. in the day of the Paſch among us there is lying upon the ground, prayers, watchings, faſting.

Lib. 3. tom. 1. hæreſ. 75.

2 So alſo Tertullian of the African Church, ſpeaking of the inconvenience of the marriage of Chriſtian women with the Pagans: Quis ſolemnib. Paſchæ abnoctantem ſecurus ſuſtinebit? what huſband (hee meaneth a Pagan) will endure his wife to lie from him all night in the ſolemnities of the Paſch? But this inſtance of watching afterward was taken up ſpecially by Monks, who grew to bee immoderate and exceſſive in it, as Caſſianus reporteth of Moſes an Abbot, that was ſo given to watching, that he was faine to pray unto God to ſend him a little ſleep.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c. 27. they condemne the chaunting of canonicall houres, in ſome places in the night and in the day, without intermiſſion, making thereof a worſhip, &c. by the merit thereof to mitigate the wrath of God, &c.

Harm. ſect. 15. Pag. 477.

4 Eraſmus ſaith, vigilias nocturnas non placuiſſe eccleſiaſticis viris, &c. That night-watches pleaſed not eccleſiaſticall men, this ſheweth, that they were taken away by their authority, the name only remaining.

Eraſ. argum. in lib. Hierom. adverſ. Vigilãt.

The Papiſts.

2 THey have alſo another ſuperſtitious cuſtome, to ſet up wax candles, and Taper-light before Images, and upon the Altar, to carrie them about in proceſſion, and even at midday, and high noone: And Bellarmine would authoriſe this cuſtome by the continuall burning of the Lampes day and night, as he ſaith, in the Tabernacle among the Jewes. Bellarm. lib. 2. de reliqu. c. 3. §. nono.

78. Error.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, we ſay of this, as we did of the vigiles of the Church before: that Chriſtians in thoſe daies in their night aſſemblies uſed candle-light, as S. Hierome ſaith, anſwering thus to Vigilantius: Cereos non clara luce accendimus, Wee doe not burne candles at noone-day, as you doe falſely cavill: but thereby to temper, or qualifie the darkneſſe of the night, &c. But it followeth not, that the vigiles beeing now left, wee ſhould burne candles at noone-day: and that this was their cuſtome, to burne their Lampes only in the night, Auguſtine ſheweth, where hee ſpeaketh of thoſe that did vow ceram ad luminaria noctis, wax candles for the lights of the Church in the night.

Hier. advers. Vigilant.

De tempor. ſerm. 7.

Secondly, it is utterly untrue, that the Lampes in the Tabernacle burned all day: the contrary is prooved, that they were lighted in the evening, and ſo burned all night, for thoſe that kept the watch in the Temple, 2 Chron. 13. 11. and that in the morning againe they were put out. 1 Sam. 3. verſ. 3. The Prieſts ſhall ſet the Lampes on fire, inter duas veſperas, betweene the two twilights, that is, the evening and morning, Exod. 30. 8. And hee ſhall dreſſe them to burne from the evening to the morning, Levit. 24. 3. And S. Hierome upon thoſe words, 1 Sam. 3. before the lampe of God went out, &c. thus writeth: Intelligi oportet antequam lux diurna fieret: It muſt bee underſtood before it was day, when the lampe was put out. That therefore which the Jeſuite made for an argument for himſelfe, we will urge againſt him: that ſeeing the lampes amongſt the Jewes, who abounded in types and ceremonies, were burnt only in the night, and not upon the day: it is ſhame for thoſe that would be counted Chriſtians, in ſuperſtitious cuſtomes, to exceed and goe beyond them.

2 Chro. 13. 11.
1 Sam. 3. 3.
Exod. 30. 8.
Levit. 24. 3.
1 Sam. 3. 3.

Our Doway men, upon that place before alleaged. 1 Sam. 3. 3. give this note: this viſion happened early in the morning, before the time of dreſſing the lamps, when ſome were put out, and others light. If their meaning be that others were lighted to burne by day, as they note in another place, that God would not have darknes in his tabernacle by day nor night: it is an erroneous gloſſe, and contrary to the very text, where they fix this marginall note: Exod. 27. 21. where they thus tranſlate. Aaron and his ſons ſhall place it, that it may give light before the Lord, untill the morning: but in the originall it is from evening to morning.

True it is, that in the times of perſecution the Chriſtians had their antelucanos cœtus, their meetings before day, whereof Plinius Secundus maketh mention in an Epiſtle to Trajane and Tertullian in his Apologetic. and then it is like they uſed lamps and lights of neceſſitie to help the darkneſſe of the night, and afterward, lights were uſed in the day, not ad fugandas tenebras to chaſe away darkneſſe, ſed ad ſignum lætitiæ demonſtrandum, to ſhew foorth a ſigne of joy: as Hierome ſaith: but after this, a ſuperſtitious uſe of day lights crept into the Church.

Adverſ. Vigilant.

1 Tatianus teſtifieth, faces præferri ſolitas principibus, that lights were wont to be carried before the princes, in the feſtivals of their gods: it ſeemeth then that this uſe, being an heatheniſh cuſtome, was not then taken up among the Chriſtians: this Tatianus lived about anno 170. at that time when he wrote againſt the Gentiles, an Orthodox, but afterward he fell into hereſie.

Adverſ. Græc.

2 Tertullian directly ſpeaking againſt this uſe of Gentiliſme in burning candles by day: accendant quotidie lucernas quibus lux nulla eſt, &c. illis competunt teſtimonia tenebrarum, &c. let them ſet up lights daily which have no light, &c. the teſtimony or ſigne of darkeneſſe well agreeth unto them: and againe, quis philoſophum ſacrificare, aut lucernas meridie vanas proferre compulit? who ever compelled a Philoſopher to ſacrifice, or to bring forth vaine light at noone-day, &c. Hee complaineth that they urged Chriſtians to doe that, which they exacted not of their owne Philoſophes.

Lib. de idolat. Tertul. Apologetic.

3 This then having been taken up by the Heathen, is worſe to be liked of, than if it had been a Jewiſh ceremony: for certainely it is a leſſe fault to play the Iewes than the Heathen: confeſſ. of Sweveland, cap. 8.

4 Hereupon the ancient Eliberine ſynod in Spaine, miſliking the ſuperſtitious uſe of candle-light by day, decreed thus: cereos per diem placuit in cæmiterio non accendi: it ſeemeth good unto us, that candles ſhould not be lighted in Churchyards by day.

The ninth queſtion, concerning the Virgin Mary.

THis queſtion ſtandeth of many parts. Firſt, whether the bleſſed Virgin Mary were conceived without ſin. Secondly, whether ſhe vowed virginity before the Angell was ſent unto her. Thirdly, of the aſſumption of her body into heaven. Fourthly, of the dignity and preeminence that ſhee hath (as they affirme) above all other Saints, yea, and the Angels too. Fifthly, of the merits of the Virgin Mary and of the Ave Maria.

The firſt part, whether the Virgin Mary, were void of originall and actuall ſin.

The Papiſts.

79. Error. 1 ALl men are borne in ſin, Chriſt only excepted, and his mother for his honour: Rhemiſt. Rom. 5. ſect. 9.

Anſwer. It is no more honour for Chriſt to be borne of a ſinner, than to have taken his fleſh, and lineally deſcended, according to his humanity, of Thamar that committed inceſt with Iuda, and Rahab which was an harlot, Matth. 1. 3. 5. Secondly, it maketh more for the honour of God that Chriſt was borne without ſin of a woman which was a ſinner, and more ſetteth forth his power, than otherwiſe, leſt he ſhould be though to have derived his purity from his mother. Matth. 1. 3. 5.

80. Error. 2 They hold, that there was no actuall ſin in the Virgin Mary, no not in the leaſt and ſmalleſt ſins, which they call veniall, Rhemiſt. 1. Iohn. 1. ſect. 5. Shee was eſpecially protected, and preſerved from ſinning by the grace of God.

Anſw. That God is able cleerely to ridde his children from ſinne, and to preſerve them from falling thereinto, wee deny not: but, ſeeing you have no Scripture for this privilege, that ſhould bee beſtowed only upon Mary, to bee free from ſin: but rather the contrary is prooved out of Scripture, That all have ſinned, Rom. 3. 23. it is too raſh and bold an aſſertion, contrary to the will of God, to aſcribe any thing to his power. Hee is as able to exempt all from ſinning as one: unleſſe therefore you can ſhew ſome ſpeciall warrant out of Gods word, for Maries freedome, by your reaſon, all the children of God ſhall be freed from ſin as well as Mary, becauſe God is able to doe it. Rom. 3. 23.

Let us heare Bellarmines opinion: hee ſaith that men are ſtained three wayes with originall ſin. Firſt the whole poſterity of Adam may be ſaid to have ſinned potentially in Adam, being at that time in his loynes. Secondly, as ſoone as the body beginneth to have any being in the wombe. Thirdly, when as the ſoule is inſpired into the body: hee confeſſeth that the Virgin Mary was conceived as all other are, after the two firſt wayes: that is, if wee either reſpect her being in Adams loynes, or the firſt conception of her fleſh: but concerning the third, her ſoule was without ſpot of originall ſin, in the very inſtant of the infuſion thereof into her body. And this he ſaith is a godly and probable opinion, though it be not yet determined in their Church as a point of faith: De amiſſion. grat. lib. 4. cap. 16.

Anſw. This diſtinction, which the Jeſuite hath coyned, concerning theſe three kinds of conception in ſin, is both very frivolous and untrue: for the firſt is none at all: if all that were in Adams loynes, when hee ſinned, may bee ſaid to bee conceived in ſin, then our Saviour Chriſt alſo, which were blaſphemy to affirme. The other two kinds make indeed but one; for to bee conceived in originall ſin, implyeth a pollution both of body and ſoule: And the time of the conception is more properly referred to the beginning of the knitting of the fleſh in the wombe, than to the inſtant of the infuſion of the ſoule: as David in the Pſalme 51. 5. ſaith, In ſin hath my mother conceived mee: But the mother conceiveth only the fleſh: the ſoule is infuſed and inſtilled of God, as the Jeſuite alſo thinketh. Wherefore in granting that the Virgin Mary was in her fleſh conceived in originall ſin, hee affirmeth in a manner the ſame that wee doe: for how can the ſoule remaine unſpotted, comming into a body already infected with originall ſin? But let us examine ſome of his reaſons. Pſal. 51. 5.

Argum. 1. Adam was a figure, as S. Paul ſaith, of him that was to come, that is, of Chriſt: but Adam was created of the earth, before it was curſed: Ergo, Chriſt alſo muſt bee borne of the Virgin Mary void of curſe, and ſo free from originall ſinne: Bellar. cap. 15.

Anſw. Firſt, the Jeſuite knoweth that theſe are but weake arguments, that are drawne from types and allegories, and conclude not. Secondly, Adam was a forme or figure of Chriſt, but not in all things, neither in this, which the Jeſuite urgeth: but Auguſtine ſhall ſpeake for us both, wherein hee was a figure: Adam forma futuri eſt, i. Chriſti, &c. Adam was a figure of Chriſt to come, becauſe as he was cauſe of death by eating the forbidden meat, even unto thoſe of his linage, which did not eat of the tree: ſo Chriſt unto thoſe which are of him, although they have done nothing righteouſly in themſelves, hath given righteouſneſſe by his croſſe. Cont. Iulian. lib. 1. The words alſo of the Apoſtle doe carrie the ſame ſenſe, for in the ſame verſe he ſaith, That death hath reigned even over thoſe that ſinned not after the manner of the tranſgreſſion of Adam, verſ. 14. that is, over children: ſo that this muſt bee the meaning: That as Adams ſin extended to thoſe that committed it not, ſo Chriſts righteouſneſſe is applyed to thoſe that wrought it not: herein then is Adam a figure of Chriſt. 3 And yet if wee ſtretch this allegorie to this point, which the Jeſuite urgeth, it will only enforce the virginity of Mary, not her freedome from ſin: as Auguſtine elſewhere maketh this alluſion: Adam de terra virgine natus, Chriſtus de Maria virgine procreatus: As Adam was made of the Earth, being yet a Virgin that had brought forth none before; ſo Chriſt alſo was borne of the Virgin Mary.

De tempor. Serm. 77.

Argum. 2. Thou art all faire my love, and there is no ſpot in thee, Cantic. 4. 7. this is underſtood of the virgin Mary: Ergo, ſhe was without ſpot, Bellar. ibid.

Cantic. 4. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, S. Paul I thinke underſtood this place better than the Jeſuit doth; the Apoſtle applieth it to the Church of Chriſt, That he might make it to himſelfe a glorious Church, without ſpot or wrinckle, Epheſ. 5. 27. Secondly, Chriſt maketh it without ſpot by ſanctifying it and waſhing it in his bloud: this place therefore ſerveth not for any originall pureneſſe by nature.

Epheſ. 5. 27.

Our Doway doctors doe here alſo put in their verdit, thus gloſing upon that place, Geneſ. 3. 15. where they read thus corruptly, according to the vulgar Latine, ſhe ſhall bruiſe the head: our B. Lady refuſed all evill ſuggeſtions, &c. and ſo bruiſed the ſerpents head, in that ſhee quite vanquiſhed all manner ſuggeſtions of the wicked ſerpent, &c.

Doway tranſlation pag. 12.

Contra. 1. The Latine tranſlation which goeth under Hieromes name, appeareth herein evidently not to be his: for he readeth, ipſe conteret, he ſhall bruiſe, or it may be put in the neuter, it ſhall bruiſe, that is, the ſeed, as Pagnin, Montanus, Vatablus, Iunius read: in the Hebrew, the word is (Hu) which is not of the feminine gender: and Vatablus their own writer doth expound it of Chriſt, not of Mary. 2 That Mary refuſed all Sathans groſſe ſuggeſtions, that they came not into act wee doubt not, but that ſhee yeelded to none of his ſuggeſtions, is as much to ſay, that ſhe was without ſin, which Tertullian is ſo farre from yeelding unto, that he toucheth her with a ſpice of unbeleefe, hoc in loco apparet incredulitas eorum, &c. in this place appeareth their incredulity: when his mother and brethren ſent to ſpeake with him: and in the ſame place hee affirmeth, mater aquè non demonſtratur adhaſiſſe illi, &c. It is evident that his mother did not ſo much adhere unto him, as Martha and Mary.

Matth. 12.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Virgin Mary was both conceived in ſin, and was alſo ſubject to actuall ſins in her life, as other of the Children of God, thus out of the Scripture we doe declare it.

1 How elſe can the word of God be true, that ſaith, All have ſinned, Rom. 3. 23. and 5. 12? They will anſwer, that Mary had an eſpeciall privilege: then let them ſhew it out of the word of God, and we will beleeve it: otherwiſe the generall concluſion muſt ſtand, that all have ſinned: Againe, Mary her ſelfe in her ſong, calleth Chriſt her Saviour, Luke 1. 47. Ergo, ſhe was a ſinner: for how elſe could ſhe be ſaved from her ſins which ſhee had not? If they anſwer as they doe, that Chriſt was her Saviour only, becauſe he preſerved her from ſin; wee doe thus reply: Firſt, that a Saviour in Scripture is defined to be he that ſaveth the people from their ſins, Matth. 1. 21. not that preſerveth only. Secondly, if Mary were free from originall ſin, as they ſay ſhe was, ſhee needed not a Saviour to keep her from ſin, for ſhe might have preſerved her ſelfe.

Rom. 3. 23.
Luk. 1. 47.
Fox pag. 801.
Matth. 1. 21.

Argum. 2. Mary died: Ergo, ſhe was a ſinner: for ſin brought death into the world, Rom. 5. 12. If ſhe had had no ſin, ſhe had not died. Chriſt indeed, though he were no ſinner, yet hee bare our ſins, and therefore died for us.

Theſe places alſo may be urged: In whom, that is, in Adam, all have ſinned, Rom. 5. 12. As in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt we ſhall be made alive, 1 Cor. 15. 22. and Chriſt died for all, 2 Corin. 5. 15. Therefore the virgin Mary alſo ſinned, and was dead in Adam, and Chriſt died for her: Ergo, ſhee was a ſinner.

Rom. 5. 12.
1 Cor. 15. 22.
2 Cor. 5. 15.

Anſw. 1. Mary ſinned potentially in Adams loynes: and in that reſpect we confeſſe ſhe was redeemed by the blood of Chriſt: and though by nature ſhee had an ability to ſin, yet was ſhe prevented by grace, Bellar. cap. 16.

Contra. 1. If ſhe ſinned only as ſhe was in Adams loynes, then all that were in Adams loynes ſinned, ſo Chriſt ſhall be counted in the number of ſinners. 2 As wee ſinned in Adam, ſo wee are made righteous by Chriſt; but we are not potentially made righteous, but verily and indeed: Ergo, if Mary have life and righteouſneſſe in Chriſt, ſhee ſinned more than potentially in Adam. 3 Shee was prevented, you ſay, by grace, and kept from ſin, Ut ſimul eſſe, & juſta eſſe inciperet: That ſhee began to have her being, and to bee juſt at one time. How then is it true, as you confeſſe, that Mary was redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and that Chriſt dyed for her? For Chriſt died for us, while wee were yet ſinners, Rom. 5. 8. and reconciled us being enemies, verſe 10. Ergo, Mary was ſometime both a ſinner, and an enemy to God, if ſhe have any benefit by Chriſts death: for redemption and freedome purchaſed, betokeneth bondage and ſlavery before.

Iohn 2.4. Chriſt checked and rebuked his mother, Ioh. 2. 4. Woman what have I to doe with thee? Ergo, it ſeemeth ſhe was not without fault. Rhemiſt. Anſw. It was rather a doctrine to others, to teach them not to doe any thing for reſpect of kinred, againſt reaſon, than a reprehenſion to Mary. Wee reply: But I pray you, how could the Apoſtles learne to beware of that fault, if it had been no fault in Mary? How could they be admoniſhed in her, if ſhe were not firſt her ſelfe admoniſhed? And the manner of ſpeech ſheweth, it was a rebuke, Chriſt ſaluting her by no other name, than if he had ſpoken to any other woman.

Argum. 3. The Papiſts themſelves are in a ſtagger, and dare not conſtantly affirme, that Mary was conceived without ſin, but put in this clauſe (as many godly devout men judge) Rhemiſt. Rom. 5. ſect. 9. And Bellarmine ſaith, In majori parte Eccleſia pie credi: That the greater part of the Church doth ſo godly beleeve, yet he dare not determine upon it himſelfe, De cult. ſanct. lib. 3. c. 16. But why

Fox pag. 800. are they afraid to hold it as an undoubted truth, ſeeing Pope Sixtus hath cleerely determined that it was ſo, forbidding the Dominicke Friers to preach the contrary, and hereupon erected a new holy day of her Conception? Here then they are driven to a great ſtreight: for either they muſt abſolutely hold, that ſhee was not conceived in ſin, againſt the Maſter of ſentences, and Thomas Aquinas, with other Schoolemen; or elſe hold the contrary, and ſo confeſſe the Pope to have been in error.

I marvell that the Jeſuite is not aſhamed to ſay, that Pope Sixtus the fourth left this queſtion of the Virgin Maries conception undetermined; ſeeing hee erected an holy day in memory of her conception: and tooke part with the Franciſcanes, that held her pure and undefiled conception, againſt the Dominickes that maintained the contrary: yea and the ſame Pope upon this occaſion added this clauſe to the Ave Maria: Et benedicta ſit Anna mater tua, de qua ſine macula tua proceſſit caro virginea, And bleſſed be Anna thy mother, of whom thy Virgins fleſh proceeded without blot of originall ſin: granting alſo great Indulgence, and releaſe of ſins, to all thoſe that would invocate the bleſſed Virgin with the ſame addition. For all theſe evident and ſubſtantiall proofes, which make this matter as cleere as noone-day: yet Bellarmine would face us downe, that this Pope holy father concluded no ſuch thing, but left it as a matter indifferent, cap. 15. It was alſo thus determined, Concil. Baſilienſ. ſeſ. 36. Doctrinam illam diſſerentem glorioſam Virginem ſemper immunem fuiſſe ab omni originali & actuali peccato tanquam piam & catholicæ fidei conſonam definimus, nullique de cætero licitum eſſe contrarium prædicare, aut docere: This doctrine, that the glorious Virgin was free from all ſin originall and actuall, we define to be a godly doctrine and conſonant to the faith, and that no man teach the contrary. And extravag. commun. lib. 3. tit. 12. cap. 2. Sixtus 4. decreeth all thoſe to be heretiks, which affirme the Virgin Marie to have been conceived in originall ſin. How then is this matter left undetermined?

De ſanct. virginit. cap. 4. Auguſtine ſaith, Beatior Maria percipiendo fidem Chriſti, quàm concipiendo carnem Chriſti, &c. materna propinquitas nihil Mariæ profuiſſet niſi fœlicius Chriſtum corde, quàm carne geſtaſſet. Mary was more happy in perceiving the faith of Chriſt, than in conceiving the fleſh of Chriſt: neither had it profited her to bee the mother of Chriſt, if ſhee had not more happily borne him in her heart, than ſhee did in her wombe, &c. But what need had Mary to beleeve in Chriſt, if ſhe had been pure from her nativity, and had no ſins to be forgiven her?

In Pſal. 34. conci. 2. Auguſtine yet more plainely ſaith, Maria ex Adam mortua propter peccatum Adæ: Adam mortuus eſt propter peccatum, & caro domini ex Maria mortua eſt propter delenda peccata: Mary dyed being borne of Adam, becauſe of the ſin of Adam: Adam died becauſe of his owne ſin: Chriſt dyed in the fleſh to take away our ſinnes: Ergo, Mary by his ſentence was borne in the ſinne of Adam.

Auguſtine further ſaith, Quiſquis humanam, &c. Whoſoever contendeth, that humane nature in any age whatſoever, needeth not the Phyſitian the ſecond Adam, quia non eſt vitiata in primo Adam, &c. becauſe it was not corrupted in the firſt Adam, &c. Gratiæ Dei convincitur inimicus, is convinced to be an enemy to the grace of God.

Leo epiſtol. 91. cap. 9. thus writeth againſt the Priſcilianiſts that ſaid, the children of promiſe were borne of women, but conceived of the Holy Ghoſt: Quod catholicæ fidei repugnans, atque contrarium eſt, &c. Which aſſertion, ſaith he, is repugnant and contrary to the catholique faith, which confeſſeth that every man receiveth life in his mothers wombe, that contagion of ſin and mortality remaining, which is derived into the offſpring from the firſt parent: but they are regenerate and made the children of promiſe by the Holy Ghoſt in the Sacrament of Regeneration, not in the wombe of fleſh: but in the efficacie of Baptiſme, &c. Here this catholike Biſhop concludeth all men under originall ſin in the wombe, there is no exception made of the virgin Mary.

Origen ſaith; Solus Chriſtus ſine macula eſt, &c. Only Chriſt is without ſpot, who did no ſin, &c. hom. 1. in Levitic. and Saint Hierome. Concluſit Deus omnes ſub peccato, &c. God hath ſhut up all under ſin, to have mercy upon all, only hee is excepted, which did no ſin, neither any guile found in his mouth, Algaſ. queſt. If only Chriſt bee excepted, then not the virgin Mary.

See the teſtimony of Maſter Philpot holy Martyr: Praiſed bee God that hath given you this ſorrowfull heart in reſpect of righteouſneſſe, and I pray you let me be partaker of theſe godly ſorrowes for ſinne, which bee the teſtimony of the preſence of the Holy Ghoſt: did not the ſword of ſorrow pierce the heart of the elect and bleſſed mother of our Lord? did not Peter weepe bitterly for his ſinnes? &c. pag. 1833. Epiſtol. ad Ioan. Careleſſ. This holy Martyr confeſſeth, that the Virgin Marie was a ſinner, and that ſhe ſorrowed for her ſinne.

Pag. 1664. 1. 80.

And yet for further evidence. 1 Of the South and African Church, Tertullian ſaith directly, Soli Dei filio ſervabatur ſine delicto permanere: It was reſerved onely to the Sonne of God to remaine without ſinne: And againe, Solus Deus ſine peccato, & ſolus homo ſine peccato Chriſtus, quia & Deus Chriſtus: Onely God is without ſinne, and the onely man without ſinne is Chriſt, becauſe Chriſt is God: So Gregentius Biſhop of Tephra in Æthiopia: there is but one perfect Jeſus Chriſt, who was not ſubdued to the yoake of ſinne.

4 Salmeron the Jeſuite confeſſeth that ſome of their ſide alleage 200. ſome 300. writers of opinion, that the Virgin Marie was conceived in ſinne, and that Thomas Aquinas thinketh it too great a privilege for the Virgin Marie, for therein ſhe is made equall unto Chriſt.

Yet we doe willingly yeeld unto the Virgin Marie the title of bleſſedneſſe, becauſe ſhee was the choſen veſſell of God, dignified with the greateſt temporall bleſſing, to bee the mother of Chriſt, in whom ſhee found by faith in him everlaſting happineſſe: yea we refuſe not to call her the moſt pure Virgin, with ſome reformed Churches: that is, pure not from all ſinfull thoughts and acts, but onely in reſpect of her ſpotleſſe virginitie: as Gregentius calleth her πάναγνον, the moſt chaſte Virgin.

The ſecond part, Whether Marie vowed virginitie before the Annunciation.

The Papiſts.

THey would gather and conclude ſo much out of the anſwer of Marie to the Angell, who told her ſhee ſhould conceive and beare a ſonne, How can this be (ſaith ſhee) ſeeing I know no man? That is, ſhe plainly declareth ſhee could have no childe by knowing a man, becauſe of her vow, for otherwiſe ſhee needed not have asked ſuch a queſtion, how a woman might have a ſonne promiſed her, if ſhee had married to have carnall copulation, Rhemiſt. Luke 1. ſect. 13. Bellarm. de Monachis, cap. 22.

81. Error.

Anſwer. Firſt, Origen thinketh that this queſtion of the Virgin Marie (how can this be) proceeded from doubtfulneſſe, and ſome incredulitie or hardneſſe of beleefe: as thus he writeth, Homil. 1. in Geneſ. Si dixiſſet Scriptura, creſcite, &c. If the Scripture had ſaid, Encreaſe and multiply, not adding further, he made them male and female, he needed not have beene incredulous of this bleſſing, as the Virgin Marie was of the Angels bleſſing, ſaying, How can this be? Wherefore Bellarmine needed not ſo to take up Calvin, as the deviſer of a new fantaſie, in imputing ſome doubting to the Virgin; ſeeing this ancient father before him long agoe ſo affirmed.

Secondly, Ambroſe maketh this to be the cauſe why Marie ſo anſwered, ſhe had read the Prophecie of Eſay, that a Virgin ſhould conceive and bring forth a ſonne, and therefore knew verie well that this holy childe ſhould be otherwiſe conceived, than by the knowledge or help of man, Fulke ibid. Thirdly, as alſo the Angell delivering at once his whole meſſage, and ſhewing what manner of childe it ſhould bee, even the Sonne of the Moſt High, who ſhould ſit on the throne of David, and of his Kingdome there ſhould be no end: that is, that the childe ſhould bee the Son of God; ſhe ſtraightwayes conceived that ſuch a holy ſeed could not bee borne of man, and therefore asketh, How without man he might be borne. Sic Calvin. Beza.

Bellarmine replyeth, Firſt, that it is like the Virgin Marie was ignorant that Chriſt ſhould bee borne of a Virgin, lib. 1. de monach. cap. 22. And ſo it will follow, that ſhe underſtood not the Prophecie of Iſay, or knew it not.

Contra. Firſt, it is a wonder that they which doe in other things advance the Virgin Marie above the ſtate of a woman or creature, making her equall to the Angels, ſhould now ſo much depreſſe her, imputing unto the mother of Chriſt ſo groſſe ignorance, as not to know the moſt manifeſt Prophecies of Chriſt. Secondly, it is untrue that ſhee knew not the Prophets, as may appeare by her ſong, Luc. 2. verſ. 55. As he hath ſpoken to our fore-fathers, to Abraham and his ſeed.

Origen ſaith of the Virgin Marie, Habebat legis ſcientiã, & Prophetarũ vaticinia quotidiana meditatione cognoverat: Had the knowledge of the law, & knew the Prophets writings by continual meditation, &c. and therefore the Angels ſalutation ſeemed ſtrange unto her, not finding the like in all the

Hom. 6. in Luc.

Scriptures: yet Bellarmine is bold to tell us, that ſhe was ignorant of the propheſie, that the mother of the Meſſiah ſhould be a Virgin.

Secondly, ſaith he, ſhe was a moſt humble Virgin, and therefore would not curiouſly ſearch after the manner how this childe ſhould be borne, ibid.

Contra. First, it is no curioſitie to deſire to be further inſtructed for the confirmation of our faith, but godly ſimplicitie: as it was no curioſitie in Gedeon to deſire to be confirmed in his calling by the ſigne of the fleece, Iudg.6.36. Secondly, it proceedeth rather of pride and curioſitie, not to ſeeke to be confirmed, or to refuſe the meanes of our further ſtrengthening, as Ahaz is reproved, becauſe he would not aske a ſigne of the Lord for his further confirmation, Iſay 7.12.

Iudg.6.36.

Iſay 7.12.

The Proteſtants.

THat Marie, as ſhee was an entire Virgin before the birth of Chriſt, ſo that ſhee continued alſo a Virgin all her life after, we doe verily thinke, and condemne their opinion that hold the contrarie: but that ſhe vowed or purpoſed virginitie, before the meſſage of the Angell was brought unto her, it is raſhly without Scripture, nay rather againſt it affirmed.

Argum. 1. The text is plaine, that they had a purpoſe to conſummate their marriage: when as Marie was betrothed to Ioſeph before they came together, *Matth.*1.18. Ergo, there was a meaning to come together, if ſhe had not in the meane time beene found to be with childe of the Holy Ghoſt: for otherwiſe it ſhould ſeeme to have beene a mockerie on Maries behalfe, to promiſe marriage to Ioſeph, without any purpoſe to performe the dutie of marriage. But if it were done with both their conſents, then mocked they with God, who inſtituted marriage for ſome end and purpoſe, which could not be attained out of marriage; for they ſhould have married neither for avoyding fornication, nor for procreation, which are the two chiefe ends of marriage: as for the third, which is mutuall comfort, it ariſeth of the former.

Matth.1.18.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this vow of Marie was no hindrance to their marriage, in as much as ſhe knew by revelation, that Ioſeph would never exact marriage duties of her: Bellarm. lib.2. de monach.cap.22.

Contra. 1. Thus they build their fancies upon deviſed dreames and ſpeculations, Scripture they have none for Maries vow, and therefore they ground it upon their owne conceits. 2 If Marie had any ſuch revelation, it is like alſo it was revealed unto her, for what cauſe Ioſeph ſhould forbeare her company; but this is contrarie to the Scripture: for it appeareth by the annunciation of the Angell unto Marie, when ſhee muſed with her ſelfe, what manner of ſalutation that ſhould bee, Luk.1. verſ.28. that ſhe was not uſed or accuſtomed to ſuch revelations and viſions. Theophylact ſeemeth to affirme as much, that the Virgin Marie was not acquainted with ſuch viſions and revelations, giving this reaſon why the Virgin Marie was troubled at the Angels ſalutation, doubting thereof whether it were [illegible], ſuch as the ſalutation and ſollicitation is of wooers unto maids: and Eraſmus in his Annotations upon that place thereunto ſubſcribing, ſaith, Non conſtat an virgo ſic aſſueverit, It is not evident whether the Virgin was uſed to ſuch viſions of Angels. 3 Your Maſter of ſentences thinketh that Ioſeph alſo purpoſed virginitie, lib.4.diſtinct.30. If they both purpoſed virginitie, and yet contracted marriage, how was it not a kinde of mockerie, or deceit in them? 4 Your owne Doctors are uncertaine what to hold: Thomas Aquinas thinketh that Marie made not an abſolute vow before the eſpouſals; Scotus affirmeth ſhe did: wherefore agree firſt among your ſelves, and let us know your minde, and you ſhall have our anſwer.

Argum. 2. It was not the manner among the Jewes to vow virginitie, but it was rather a ſhame and reproch to remaine and dye a Virgin: and therefore Iephtahs daughter lamented her virginitie, *Iudg.*11.38. How then could Marie be induced contrarie to the cuſtome of the Church to vow virginitie? Yea Auguſtine confeſſeth as much: Hos mores Iſraelitarum adhuc recuſabant: The manners of the Iſraelites did not ſuffer it, *de Virginit.cap.*4. though he himſelfe elſewhere, and in the ſame place ſeemeth to incline to the contrarie opinion.

Againe, if Marie vowed virginitie, ſhe vowed alſo againſt the bearing of children, and ſo her vow ſhould have hindred the accompliſhment of that meſſage which the Angell brought unto her: for ſhe vowed not to be a mother, if ſhe vowed any thing, then had ſhe vowed againſt her ſelfe, who was choſen then to be the mother of our Lord.

The Arauſicane Councell ſaith: *Concil.2.can.*11. Nemo quicquam rectè Deo voverit, niſi ab ipſo acceperit, ſicut legitur, quæ de manu tua accepimus, damus tibi, 1 *Chron.*29. No man can rightly vow any thing to God, unleſſe hee have received it of God, as wee read, that which wee have received at thy hands we give unto thee: Marie therefore ſhould not have done well to have vowed virginitie, having not at that time received the gift, when ſhee eſpouſed her ſelfe to Ioſeph. It is ſufficient for us to know, that Marie was both before Chriſts Nativitie, and after ſo continued an undefiled Virgin: As Ambroſe ſaith, Synod. Tolenſ. Quæ eſt illa porta, quæ manet clauſa, & nemo pertranſibit per eam ſed ſolus Deus Iſrael? Ezech. 44. Nonne hæc porta Maria eſt, per quam in hunc mundum redemptor intravit? What is that gate which remaineth ſhut, and no man ſhall paſſe thorow it but onely the God of Iſrael? is not the Virgin Marie this gate, by the which the Redeemer came into this world?

Let us ſee their owne decrees: Part.2.cauſ.27.qu.2.cap.44. Inventa eſt habens in utero,&c. Marie was found to bee with childe of Ioſeph, who though hee did not touch her, yet knew almoſt all the ſecrets, uxoris futura, of her that was to be his wife. And cap 40. Licentia maritali. By the right and power of an husband Ioſeph found her to bee with childe, &c. This then being knowne to Ioſeph that ſhe was with childe, and not to others, ſheweth that ſhe was in ſubjection to Ioſeph, as his eſpouſed wife: and therefore no ſuch vowed virginitie.

S. Ambroſe alſo thus writeth: Ecce ancilla, apparatus eſt officii; contingat mihi, conceptus eſt voti. Behold thy handmaid, here is the yeelding of her dutie and obedience; be it unto me according to thy word, here is the conceiving of her vow, lib.2.in Luc. S. Ambroſe maketh this to be her vow, namely, that ſhe might beare this holy childe without the ſeed of man: and this vow taketh beginning after the Annunciation, not before, which was long after the eſpouſals.

Further. 1 Iuſtine Martyr ſeemeth not to thinke, that Marie vowed virginitie before the eſpouſals: for as Ioſeph (ſaith he) was ſaid to be the ſonne of Eli, not begotten of him, but borne onely of his wife according to the Law, So it ſeemed good unto God, of the wife of Ioſeph to give a ſonne unto Ioſeph, yet not naturally begotten of him: If Marie then were his wife, and Jeſus counted his ſonne, how could the eſpouſals of marriage follow after a vow, which is an impediment to marriage.

ἐκ τ̃ γυναικὸς. reſp. ad. 33. qu. ad Orthodox.

2 Gregentius the Æthiopian Archbiſhop thus applyeth that place of Iſay. The ſealed booke ſhall be given unto a man that can read, and hee ſhall ſay, I cannot read, for the booke is ſealed: This ſealed booke is the Virgin Marie (ſaith hee) the man that can read is Ioſeph, which in another marriage by another wife had children: now he could not read this booke, that is, he could not have carnall copulation with the Virgin, underſtanding by God that ſhe was ſhut up and reſerved for Chriſt, &c. If Marie had vowed virginity, it is like Ioſeph did ſo too: but he knew nothing of this ſecret till after the eſpouſals, by the revelation of the Angell.

Pag 44. diſput. cum Herban.

3 So Beza verie well expoundeth thoſe words, Matth.1.18. before they came together: that is, before Ioſeph tooke her home to his houſe: for it was a cuſtome among the Jewes, to have ſometime come betweene the eſpouſals and the marriage: not as Eraſmus tranſlateth, Priuſquam congreſſi fuiſſent, before they companied together: as though they had inhabited together before, but abſtained becauſe of the vow of virginitie: of the ſame judgement are Calvin. Bucer. in 1. c. Matth.

Matth 1.18. Bez annot. in hunc locum.

4 Gerſon alſo doth interpret it as Beza doth, of Ioſephs receiving Marie into his houſe, not of companying together, and thinketh that marriage was ſolemnized between them, &c. which it is like ſhould not have beene, if a vow had gone before: and hereupon Eraſmus taketh up Gerſon and refuſeth his opinion.

Eraſm. annot. in Luk. 1.59.

The third part, Of the Aſſumption of the Virgin Marie.

The Papiſts.

THey report the ſtorie of the death and departure of the Virgin Marie after this manner: At the time of her death after ſhe had lived ſixtie three yeeres, all the Apoſtles being diſperſed into divers nations, were miraculouſly brought together to Jeruſalem to ſolemnize her funerall. They buried her in Gethſemani, and for three dayes together the Angels were heard to ſing melodious ſongs: At three dayes end alſo Saint Thomas came, who being deſirous to ſee her body, and not finding it in the grave, they thereupon aſſuredly deemed that her body was aſſumpted into Heaven, Rhemiſt. Act.1. verſ.14.

82. Error.

Argum. 1. It is beſt agreeable to the privilege of the mother of God not to ſee corruption, Rhemiſt. ibid. Seeing alſo her ſonne was exempted from corruption, & natura Maria excipitur, the nature of Marie muſt bee excepted: Caro enim Ieſu eſt caro Maria, The fleſh of Jeſus is the fleſh of Marie. And ſeeing Chriſt came to fulfill the Law, which ſaith, Honour thy parents; it is verie like, Eum in morte ſpeciali gratia eam honoraſſe, That hee did honour her by ſpeciall grace in her death. Theſe reaſons and other are to be read in a forged booke amongſt Auguſtines works, bearing title, De aſſumptione Mariæ.

Anſwer. Firſt, there is no credit to bee given to the forged writings which paſſe under the name of Saint Denis and Athanaſius, out of whom they doe report the aſſumption of Marie, nay their owne leſſon which they read upon the Aſſumption day, doth controll and confute the other. Firſt, that ſtorie ſaith, that without doubt ſhee was taken up in body: but your leſſon leaveth it as uncertaine, whether ſhee were raiſed up in body or not. Secondly, the forged ſtorie ſaith, ſhee was buried in Gethſemani, which was in Mount Olivet: your leſſon ſaith, that the place of her buriall is in the midſt of the valley of Iehoſaphat, which is betweene Mount Olivet and the Citie, Fulk. ibid.

Secondly, it followeth not becauſe Chriſt tooke fleſh of the Virgin, that therefore ſhe ſhould alſo as well be exempted from corruption: for hee tooke fleſh alſo of David, and other his progenitors, who by the ſame reaſon ſhould be made immortall. And if ſhee were privileged by being the mother of Chriſt from ſeeing corruption; why not alſo from having any ſinne? for her ſonne after the fleſh ſaw neither.

Luk.2.51.

Thirdly, Chriſt alſo both did and might honour his mother as he was man, though ſo great a privilege bee not granted unto her. The reverence which was to be done to his mother was in regard of his manhood, and ſo was he obedient unto them, Luk.2.51. and ſo long as he lived in the fleſh: and therefore he did care for her even upon the Croſſe, commending her to the Diſciple whom he loved. But he neither was to honor her as he was God, and therefore not to free her from corruption, which had beene a worke of his Godhead: and the naturall affection and honour due unto parents ceaſeth after this life. It were then too groſſe a conceit, to thinke that Chriſt hath ſuch regard now of the Virgin Marie in Heaven, as he had of her, being his mother, in the dayes of his fleſh: for Chriſt, as he is not now knowne after the fleſh, 2 Corinth.5.16. ſo neither knoweth he any after the fleſh.

2 Cor.5.16.

The Proteſtants.

THis uncertaine report of the aſſumption of Marie, with other circumſtances thereof, wee hold to be a verie counterfeit ſtorie, and worthy of no credit.

De Sanct. Serm.35.

Argum.1. If it were a matter of ſuch weight as they make it, who have erected a new found holy-day of the aſſumption of Marie, ſurely the Scriptures would not have been ſilent therein: eſpecially S. Iohn (as Auguſtine ſaith) to whoſe charge ſhe was committed, would have left ſomewhat in writing of that matter: for (ſaith he) Nullus fidelius id narrare potuerit, for no man could more truly and faithfully make relation thereof.

Gen.3.19.

Argum.2. That generall ſentence pronounced upon Adam and all Adams ſeed, muſt needs alſo take place in the Virgin Marie, Thou art duſt, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne, Geneſ.3.19. Chriſt only is excepted, and that by the teſtimony of the word of God: wherefore unleſſe this privilege of the Virgin could be proved out of Scripture, as Chriſts is, wee muſt needs hold her ſubject to that generall law of corruption.

Auguſtine ſaith, Nulla catholica narrat hiſtoria, &c. How Marie was aſſumed no Catholique hiſtorie doth declare, and Apocryphall hiſtories the Church receiveth not, Serm.35. de ſanct.

Gelaſius decr. de Apocryphis: Liber qui appellatur tranſitus ſeu aſſumptio Mariæ, Apocryphus: The booke called the paſſage or aſſumption of Marie is Apocryphal: And in the end of the decree he doth anathematize this booke and other the like, cum ſuis authoribus hæreticis, with heretikes the authors thereof. Gelaſius thought ſome heretike to be the inventor of this fable of Marie her aſſumption.

There is a booke intituled, Of the aſſumption of Marie, bearing Saint Hieromes name, the author thereof ſeemeth to be more reaſonable concerning this point, than our new Maſters of Poperie: firſt, whereas the tomb where Marie is ſaid to have beene buried, was found emptie; the like (ſaith the author) many doe report of S. Iohn the Evangeliſts grave, that there was nothing but Manna found therein: Verumtamen, quid horum verius cenſeatur ambigimus; Wee are in doubt which of theſe ſhould be moſt true. Secondly, after the ſame manner divers learned doe thinke (ſaith hee) that they roſe for ever, that were ſeene in the Citie, out of their graves, at the reſurrection of Chriſt, and David amongſt the reſt: and therefore S. Peter durſt not ſay, whoſe body, but whoſe grave is with us, Act.2. For his body being riſen, the grave was emptie. Like to this fancie he thinketh the ſtorie of Maries aſſumption to be. Thirdly, hee thus concludeth, Melius Deo totum, cui nihil eſt impoſſibile, committimus, &c. It is better to leave this matter to God, to whom nothing is impoſſible, than to define of our owne authoritie that which we cannot prove. Thus farre that author.

Hæreſ.78.

1 It ſeemeth that in Epiphanius time it was not held, that the Virgin Marie was aſſumed & taken up to Heaven in body, for thus he writeth: Sive mortua eſt ſancta virgo, &c. Whether the holy Virgin were dead and buried, &c. or whether ſhe were taken away (by the ſword) as it is written, the ſword ſhall pierce thy ſoule, &c. or whether ſhe remained, for her end is knowne to no man, wee muſt not worſhip the Saints above that is meet, &c.

De Sanct. Ser.35.

2 Auguſtine, as before is alleaged, doubteth of the aſſumption of Marie, and thus concludeth: Reſtat ut homo mendaciter non fingat, apertum, quod Deus voluit manere occultum: It remaineth, that man doe not untruly faine that as manifeſt, which God would have remaine hid.

Harm.ſect.4. pag.78.

3 Confeſſ. of Saxony, artic.2. of originall ſinne: We ſay that all men ſince the fall of our firſt parents, which are borne by the coupling together of male and female, do together with their birth bring with them originall ſin, as Paul ſaith, Rom. 5. by one man ſin entred into the world, and by ſin death, &c. Their opinion is then, that as Marie was ſubject to originall ſin, ſo likewiſe unto death: and ſo was not exempted from the common condition of mortall bodies.

Annal.48. numer.24. Suares, tom.2. qu.37. artic,4.

4 Baronius himſelfe confeſſeth, that this narration of the Virgin Maries aſſumption is confirmed neither by Scripture, nor by the ancient Fathers. Suarez a Jeſuite ſaith, it hath eum gradum certitudinis, the ſame degree of certaintie, which the other opinion hath of her conception and ſanctification in her mothers womb, &c. which is none at all, as is ſhewed before: for thus many uncertainties there are. 1 Whether ſhee died and was buried, or was taken away by the ſword, as before is alleaged out of Epiphanius. 2 Some thinke ſhe was buried in mount Olivet, ſome in the valley of Ieboſaphat: as is alſo mentioned before. 3 Some ſay ſhe died, and after her death her body was found miſſing, and ſo ſuppoſed to be taken up: but Baronius holdeth, Marie unà cum corpore receptam, was taken up together with her body into Heaven: that is, ſoule and body together. 4 The common opinion among them is, that ſhe died at 63. yeeres of her age: but Volaterane at 51. Maſſæus at 49.

Volateran. lib.3. Maſſ. lib.8.

The fourth part, Of the honour and worſhip of the Virgin Marie.

The Papiſts.

83. Error.

THey doe aſcribe unto her a kinde of religious honour, more than to any of the Saints beſide: For whereas they call the worſhip of Saints, δουλεία, ſervice; the honour of the Virgin they terme ὑπερδουλεία, a higher kinde of ſervice, Bellarm. de Sanct. lib.2. cap.15. They call her Reginam mundi, Scala cœli, Thronum Dei, Ianua Paradiſi; The Queene of the world, the Ladder of Heaven, the Throne of God, and Gate of Paradiſe: yea, they give her juriſdiction over her Son, Iube natum, command thy Son; Iure matris impera filio, command thy Son by the right of a mother: Coge Deum, compell God to be mercifull to ſinners, Annot. Fulk. 1.15.

Againe, they ſay, ſhe is to be honoured with the feaſts of her Nativitie, Aſſumption, and Conception: for the other two, of her Purification and Annunciation, are not proper to the Virgin, but concerne Chriſt: the one his Conception, the other his Preſentation, Rhemiſt. actor. 1. sect. 7.

Argum. She her ſelfe propheſieth of all Catholike generations, that they ſhould bleſſe her in keeping her feſtivities and memorials: but if theſe feſtivities of her Conception and Aſſumption be not kept, ſhee ſhould have none at all: and ſo bee thought worthy of leſſe remembrance than any other Saint, Galat.4. sect.5. Rhemiſt.

The Proteſtants.

1. WE doe not celebrate any feſtivall dayes in the honour of creatures, neither of the Virgin Marie, nor any other Saint, but onely to the honour of God: and therefore the feaſts of the Annunciation and Purification may much better be received, becauſe they belong and are referred unto Chriſt, than the other feſtivities of the Aſſumption and Conception of Marie, the inſtitution whereof was moſt ſuperſtitious: the one for the fained aſſumption of her body, which your owne writers are uncertaine of; the other to maintaine the hereſie of the Franciſcans, that ſhe was conceived and borne without ſinne. As for the memorie of the Virgin Marie, it may better be kept than by ſuch feſtivities: as our Saviour Chriſt taught to keepe the remembrance of Marie Magdalen, by preaching the Goſpell, Math.26.13. Fulk. Annot. Act.1.7. And if they onely are Catholike generations, that call her bleſſed in keeping theſe feſtivities in her memoriall, then there were no Catholike generations for many hundred yeeres after, and ſo doe you condemne the age of the Apoſtles: for neither then, nor many yeeres after were theſe ſuperſtitious feſtivities heard of. But Marie ſaith in her ſong, From henceforth, even from this time forward ſhall all generations call mee bleſſed: ſo that if her bleſſedneſſe had conſiſted in the memorie of thoſe dayes, they ſhould immediately have beene kept, eſpecially the day of her nativitie.

2 Wee doe allow all praiſe given unto the Virgin, without the diſhonour of God and her Sonne and Saviour Chriſt: we doe acknowledge the honour that God vouchſafed her, not to bee a meritorious or principall efficient cauſe of our redemption, but only an holy veſſell, and inſtrumentall cauſe of the conception and birth of Chriſt, by whoſe onely merit and worthineſſe our redemption is perfited, as by a proper and principall, and only meritorious efficient cauſe thereof. And therefore thoſe are blaſphemous titles which are given unto her, to call her the ladder of Heaven, and gate of Paradiſe, and ſuch like: and ſo in a manner to make her our Redeemer. Auguſtine ſaith, Shee was more happie in that ſhe conceived the faith of Chriſt, than in conceiving the fleſh of Chriſt. If then theſe titles be unmeet for her, in reſpect that ſhee received the faith of Chriſt, which is common to all the children of God, then are they more unfit, in that ſhe conceived the fleſh of Chriſt.

De ſanct. virgine, cap.3.

3 It is great preſumption to thinke that the Virgin Marie may command her Sonne in Heaven, ſeeing ſhee had no authoritie to command him upon earth, in any thing pertaining to his office, Ioh.2.4. And now likewiſe that carnall reſpect of children to their parents ceaſeth in the Kingdome of God.

Ioh.2.4.

As for that ſuperioritie and higher kinde of honour which ſhe hath above all the Saints beſide, we finde no warrant out of Scripture. She is reſpected now in Heaven, not as ſhe bare the fleſh of Chriſt, but as ſhe lived by faith in Chriſt: ſhe alſo rejoyced in God her Saviour. The Scripture therefore maketh one condition and eſtate of all that ſhall bee ſaved: and ſaith generally of all, of others as well as the Virgin Chriſts mother, That they ſhall be as the Angels in Heaven, Matth.22.30. Yea, our Saviour ſheweth, that Whoſoever doth the will of God, is his ſiſter, brother, and mother, Matth.12.50. By the which wee learne, that other the faithfull ſervants of God may by their faith in Chriſt, bee as well accepted of God, as if they had borne Chriſt in the fleſh. Where then is that high dignitie which ſhe hath, as the mother of Chriſt above all Saints? Auguſtine ſaith, Tu concinis ſine fine choris conjuncta, Angelis & Archangelis ſociata: Thou (O Virgin) doeſt rejoyce being joyned unto the heavenly Quire, being aſſociated to Angels and Archangels, &c. Hee maketh her not Lady or Queene of Heaven, but onely a fellow companion of the Saints and Angels.

Matth.22.30.

Matth.12.50.

Serm.35. de ſanct. de aſſump. Mariæ.

Synod. Moguntin. cap.45. Sancti qui vita hujus curſum beato fine clauſerunt, &c. The Saints departed, as the moſt noble members of Chriſt, muſt be honoured of us with that dutie and worſhip of love and fellowſhip, which the Saints living are to be worſhipped withall, &c. If then the moſt noble members of Chriſt are no otherwiſe to be adored, than holy men upon earth, the Virgin Marie can have no greater honour: for more ſhe cannot be, than a moſt noble member of Chriſt.

This truth hath been ſealed: Helen Stirke perſecuted, becauſe lying in child-bed ſhe refuſed to call upon the name of the Virgin Marie, being thereto exhorted by her neighbours, but only upon God, for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, Fox, pag. 1267.

Saint Hierome hath this ſentence writing againſt Helvidius; Invocandus eſt Spiritus ſanctus, ut Maria virginitatem ſuo ſenſu, ore meo defendat, &c. The holy Spirit muſt bee called upon to defend the virginitie of Marie by my tongue, &c. the Lord Jeſus muſt be invocated to deliver from all ſuſpition the ſacred womb, &c. God the Father muſt be prayed unto, to declare the mother of his Son to be a Virgin, &c. And why, I pray you, doth he not alſo call upon the Virgin Marie to defend her owne virginitie, if ſhe be to be prayed unto?

And concerning the feſtivities of Marie, if you would indeed have them ſo ſolemnly kept above other holy dayes, what meaneth then your owne darling Boniface 8. to preferre the feaſts not onely of the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, but of the foure Doctors of the Latine Church, making no mention at all of Maries feſtivals? for theſe are the words of the Decree, Sext. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 22. cap. 1. Merito providit, Apoſtolos, Evangeliſtas & confeſſores in univerſali Eccleſia honorificentia majoris impendiis attollendos, &c. This See hath worthily provided that the Apoſtles, Evangeliſts and Confeſſors, ſhould thorow the univerſall Church be more highly extolled, that they be ſo much the more honoured of the Church, as they have more than others lightned the ſame. This decree preferreth the commemorations of Saint Ambroſe, Gregorie, Hierome, Auguſtine, before the memorie of the Virgin Marie.

Epiphanius writeth againſt the Collyridiani, ſo called becauſe they did offer certaine cakes which the Grecians ſo call, in the name of the Virgin Marie, and ſo kept a certaine ſet holy day to the worſhip of Marie: Re vera virgo erat, & honorata, ſed non nobis ad adorationem data: She was indeed an honourable Virgin, but not given us to be adored.

Matth. 12. 48. lib. de carne Chriſti.

2 Tertullian thus writeth of this ſaying of Chriſt, Matth. 12. Who are my mother and brethren? Non matris uterum & ubera negans, ſed feliciores deſignans qui verbum Dei audiunt: Not denying the womb and breaſts of his mother, but ſhewing them to be more happie which heard his word.

Origen reporting the mad conceits of the Heretikes called Ophiani, ſheweth how they make ſeven principall Angels keepers of the ſeven gates of heaven: and unto the keeper of the third gate called Aſtaphaon they thus pray: Redde me virginis ſpiritu mundatum; Make mee pure by the ſpirit of the Virgin: And to Elohiam the keeper of the third gate they thus pray: Exhibe me tua matris tibi ut deferam ſigna: Let me bring unto thee tokens from thy mother, &c. How much unlike are theſe to the popiſh prayers which are made to the Virgin Marie, to bid and command her Son?

Confeſſ. of Bohemia, cap. 17. Harm. p. 17.

3 We together with the reformed Churches give all due honour unto the bleſſed Virgin Marie: Firſt, that ſhe was ſanctified above all other of her ſex, to be the mother of Chriſt, and therein renowned as happie before all others of her ſex. Secondly, that ſhe was at all times, before her birth, in the ſame and after it, a true chaſte and pure Virgin. Thirdly, that ſhee was adorned with excellent gifts, noble vertues, and fruits of good works. Fourthly, that ſhe was through the price of her Sons death, dearely redeemed, and made a joynt heire of everlaſting life. Fifthly, they doe celebrate alſo holy dayes in the remembrance of her, to the praiſe and glorie of God. Sixthly, and to confirme themſelves they rehearſe thoſe great things, wherewith God had advanced her above all other women. Seventhly, and ſo much as lieth in them, they doe imitate and follow the holy life and manners of that Virgin, &c. All this we acknowledge to bee due to the bleſſed Virgin. But wee dare not pray unto her, to make her our Advocate or Interceſſor, becauſe God only is the ſearcher of the hearts: as the confeſſion of Wittemberg reſolveth out of Epiphanius, before alleaged: that ſhe was an honourable Virgin, but not propounded to us for adoration.

Wittemberg confeſſ. cap. 23. pag. 46.

4 We are therefore farre off from thoſe blaſphemous amplifications of the Virgin Marie, uſed by the Romaniſts: as that the glorie of the Son is the ſame with his Mother. [a] Viega: That we may appeale from Gods Court unto hers. [b] Bernardin: That God hath decreed to give nothing without her. [c] Ozorius the Jeſuite: That whatſoever floweth from that everlaſting fountaine downe to the earth, floweth forth by her. [d] Turſellin: They alſo in their Doxologies are not aſhamed to ſet Marie before Chriſt, Praiſe be to God and to the bleſſed Virgin Marie, alſo to Jeſus Chriſt: [e] *Gregor. de Valent. An Appendix or fifth part, Of the merits of the Virgin, and of the Ave Maria.

The Papiſts.

84. Error.

1. THey doe teach and hold, that ſhe only amongſt all women deſerved to beare the redeemer of the world, and ſo by her merits obtained that favour to be the mother of Chriſt.

Argum. The Angell ſaluteth her, and calleth her, Full of grace, which ſheweth the prerogative that ſhe had above other women, and the worthineſſe that was in her, Rhemiſt. Luk. 1. ſect. 12. 15.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. 1. WE acknowledge that herein ſhe was bleſſed above all other women, in that ſhe was choſen to be the mother of our Saviour, and that ſhe was indued fully with the graces of the holy Ghoſt: but thoſe graces ſhe had not of her ſelfe, but of the free gift of God, without her merits: and S. Hierome ſheweth how ſhe was full of grace, Sancta Maria, qui conceperat eum, &c. Holy Mary, becauſe ſhe conceived him, in whom the Godhead dwelled bodily, is ſaluted full of grace, tom. 4. ad Principium; ſhe was full of grace, becauſe ſhe was filled with Chriſt: and as S. Ambroſe ſaith, quia gratia replebatur authore, becauſe ſhe was repleniſhed with the Author of grace, lib. 2. in Luc. It was not then her owne grace, but the grace of Chriſt.

2 The word κεχαριτωμένη, ſignifieth freely beloved, not full of grace, as it is likewiſe taken, Eph. 1. 6. ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς, He hath made us accepted in his beloved Sonne. Epheſ. 1. 6.

3 She her ſelfe confeſſeth her ſelfe in her Song, to be of a low degree, poore in ſpirit, and hungry, whom God in mercy looked upon, Luke 1. 50. whereas God ſent away the proud and rich: as the proud Phariſee that thought himſelfe rich of good works, obtained nothing of God, Luke 18. Wherefore if ſhe had ſtood upon her owne deſerts, ſhe had made her ſelfe rich, not poore: neither ſhould ſhe have magnified the mercy of God, but his juſtice: for when a reward is given according to deſert, it is of his juſtice and not mercy. Luke 1. 50.

S. Ambroſe thus concludeth, Simul ancillam dicendo, nullam ſibi prærogativam tantæ gratiæ vendicavit, &c. And in calling her ſelfe handmaid, ſhe challengeth no prerogative of ſo great grace, for being to bring forth one, that was humble and meek, it became her alſo to be humble.

And S. Hierome upon theſe words, Luke 1. 48. From henceforth ſhall they call me bleſſed? Animadverte, quod beatam ſe eſſe dicit, non proprio merito, aut virtute, &c. Marke, that ſhe calleth her ſelfe bleſſed, not by her owne merit or vertue, but by the mercy of God dwelling in her, &c. Dialog. 1. adverſ. Pelag. Luke 1. 48.

Auguſtine thus commenteth upon the words of her Song, Magnificet anima mea Dominum, & recordetur, &c. quomodo nullis ſuis præcedentibus meritis, ſed ſola Dei bonitate ſit ab iniquitate ſalvata: Let my ſoule praiſe the Lord, and remember, how that not by any merits going before, but through the onely gracious goodneſſe of God, it is delivered from ſinne. De ſanct. virginit. ſerm. 35.

Bernard ſaith, Regina miſericordiæ dicitur, ut ſoli tribuamus divinæ miſericordiæ non meritis, quod ſuper omnem creaturam præcellens, &c. She is called the Queene of mercy, that we ſhould aſcribe it only to Gods mercy, not her merits, that ſhe is exalted above all other creatures, Serm. ſuper ſalve Regina: Ergo, Mary not ſaved by her merits, nor conſequently the mother of Chriſt by her merits, but only by the meere favour of God.

This truth alſo wanteth not the ſeale, Helen Stirke perſecuted becauſe ſhe affirmed in effect, that there was no merits in the Virgin, which procured her that honour, to be the mother of Chriſt, and to be preferred before other women, but Gods free mercy onely exalted her to that eſtate: Fox pag. 1267.

Concerning this point: 1 Theophylact is an evident witneſſe, who upon theſe words, for hee hath looked upon the low degree of his handmaid: Virgo plenius edocta, glorificat Deum, &c. The Virgin being fully inſtructed glorifieth God, aſcribing the miracle to him, not to her ſelfe, he hath looked unto me, I have not looked up to him, he hath had mercy on me, I ſought not him: from henceforth all generations ſhall call me bleſſed: and why ſhall they call me bleſſed? non propter meam virtutem, not for my vertue, but becauſe he that is mighty hath magnified me. Luke 2. 48. ἐπέβλεψεν ἐπ' ἐμοί, οὐκ ἐγὼ ἀνέβλεψα, &c.

2 Origen: Non eſt dubium, quin quæ tunc repleta eſt ſpiritu, propter filium repleta ſit, &c. It is no doubt, but that ſhe which was then filled with the ſpirit, was ſo repleniſhed, becauſe of her Sonne, &c. much more was it for her Sonnes ſake, that ſhe was choſen to be his mother. Hom. 7. in Luc.

3 Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap. 17. By her beſt beloved Sonne, through the price of his death, ſhee was dearely redeemed, &c. by the holy Ghoſt, through faith, &c. as by grace in Chriſt ſhe was ſaved, ſo by the ſame grace ſhe was made his mother. Harm. p. 27.

4 Eraſmus, upon theſe words of the Angel, Thou haſt found favour with God, addeth, Non eſt meriti tui, ſed favoris divini: It is not of thy merit, but of the divine favour: and for this ſaying, being accuſed of Lutheraniſme by a Divine of Paris, he thus fortifieth his former ſaying: Si promeruit, ubi eſt gratia quam prædicat Angelus? If ſhe merited, where is the grace which the Angell ſpeaketh of? And how hangeth that together, from henceforth all generations ſhall call me bleſſed? for no man is called happie for the things which he hath by his owne vertue prepared. Eraſm. annot. in Luc. 2. 48.

The Papiſts.

2 THey much commend the often uſing of the Ave Marie, which is done (ſay they) to the honour of Chriſt and our Lady. 85. Error.

Argum. They be the very ſumme and abridgement of the whole Goſpell: and therefore to bee uſed, Rhemiſt. Luc. 1. ſect. 11.

The Proteſtants.

1 YOu doe ſhamefully abuſe thoſe words, in making a prayer of them, which was but a forme of ſalutation uſed by the Angell: neither can you ſay them in that ſenſe they were uttered in by the Angell. Alſo you offend in the vaine repetition of them upon your beads, as the heathen did, Matth.6.7. and in committing idolatry, in the invocating of the Virgin, and praying unto her in theſe words: who is a creature, and not a God to be called upon.

2 What myſterie ſoever be contained in theſe words, yet the people underſtand nothing at all. And though we deny not but that the words are holy and myſticall, yet it followeth not that they ſhould be uſed for a prayer.

Fox p.800.

3 What great account they make of the Ave Mary, it may appeare by this: that they think they may alter and change it, and adde to it at their pleaſure: as by Pope Sixtus the fourth, there was a clauſe more added unto the common Ave Mary, in this manner: Haile Mary full of grace, the Lord is with thee, bleſſed art thou amongſt women, and bleſſed is the fruit of thy wombe Ieſus Chriſt, and bleſſed is Anna thy mother, of whom thy Virgins fleſh hath proceeded without blot of originall ſinne. What a fearefull thing is this, that they ſhould thus dare to adde unto the Scriptures? How can they now eſcape that judgement that is threatned againſt all thoſe that doe adde, or take ought to or from the word of God? Apocal.22.18.

Apoc.22.18.

That the Ave Mary is no prayer, nor to be uſed as a prayer, we have the glorious teſtimony of the holy Martyrs, Claudius Monerius Martyr, being asked whether it were not good to ſalute the bleſſed Virgin with the Ave Mary, made this anſwer: When ſhe was on earth, ſhe had then need of the Angels greeting, for then ſhe had need of ſalutation, as well as another: but now ſhe is bleſſed, that no more bleſſing can be wiſhed to her, Fox pag.905.col.1.

Benet Romaine, a French Martyr, becauſe he refuſed to ſay the Ave Maria, was tormented of the Friers, pag.826.col.2.

Pag.845.1.70.

Maſter Latimer bleſſed Martyr, moleſted and troubled for affirming that the Ave Maria was a ſalutation onely and no prayer, pag.1736.col.2.

Pag.1176.1.11.

Thus farre of ſuch queſtions and controverſies, as concerne the kingdome of Chriſt, which is his Church: of the which we have now entreated at large: firſt in generall of the whole, and then of the ſeverall parts and members thereof in order. Now follow thoſe controverſies, which belong unto the Prieſthood of Chriſt, the third excellent and glorious office of our Saviour: which his Prieſthood is partly ſeene in his interceſſion and mediation for us, partly in his ſacrifice, where we are to handle the great and weighty controverſies of the Sacraments, by the which the ſacrifice of his death is applied unto us.

Hæreſ.78.

Epiphanius ſpeaking againſt the ſuperſtition of certaine women which offered cakes in the name of the Virgin Mary, ſaith, ſit in honore Maria, &c. let the Virgin Mary be honoured, but the Father, Sonne and holy Ghoſt onely adored: Mariam nemo adoret, let none adore Mary, &c. but whoſoever uſe the Ave Mary as a prayer to the Virgin Mary, in invocating doe adore her.

Hom.6.in Luc.

2 Origen thinketh it is a ſalutation and no prayer: ſoli Mariæ hæc ſalutatio ſervabatur: only this ſalutation was reſerved to Mary, which is not found elſewhere in Scripture, &c. To what purpoſe then ſhould this ſalutation be uſed now to Mary, the myſterie of the incarnation being long ſince accompliſhed: and it is preſumption, for every one to aſſume into their mouthes, that forme of ſalutation, which that glorious Angell uſed in that heavenly meſſage.

Ephes.1.6.

3 Eraſmus agreeth, that it was a ſalutation, and that the word κεχαριτωμένη, ſignifieth not full of grace, but rather gratioſa, gracious, or freely beloved: as in the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtle uſeth, the active ἐχαρίτωσεν, he hath made us gracious, gratificavit, and ſo the vulgar Latine there readeth.

Harm.ſect.16. pag.485.

4 Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap.17. We doe make and ſing godly and Chriſtian ſongs of her, &c. but to the praiſe of God, as they ſay a little before, and to ſuch purpoſe, as is expreſſed before, err.83. they make no mention of ſaying the Ave Mary.

Certaine additions to this queſtion, concerning the bleſſed Virgin Mary.

AS namely: firſt, of the manner of that holy and bleſſed birth, whether Chriſt were borne, his mothers wombe being not opened. Secondly, whether Mary be any efficient cauſe in the work of our redemption. Thirdly, whether ſhe at any time wavered in faith. Fourthly, whether ſhe have power to helpe thoſe that doe invocate her. Fifthly, whether there be any vertue in her image.

Touching the firſt of theſe, there ſhall be occaſion offered to handle the ſame afterward, as Contr.13.error 12. Argum. Pag.2. and Controv.20.error 3. to the which places I referre the Reader: the reſt ſhall be conſidered here in order.

VVhether any part of the work of our redemption may be aſcibed to the Virgin Marie.

The Papiſts.

BEcauſe ſhe brought forth the Author of our redemption, whereby ſhe is the mother of mercie and grace, and life, and whatſoever goodneſſe we receive by Chriſt: Rhemiſt. Act. 1. *ſect.*7. in the end: And a little before: She is our hope, our refuge, our advocate, &c. And in the ſame place they inferre out of certaine teſtimonies by them wreſted, that both the ſexes common to our ſalvation, the man and the woman, Chriſt and our Lady, as Adam and Eve were the cauſe of our fall, though Adam more than his wife; ſo Chriſt more excellent than our Ladie: They have alſo this blaſphemous prayer unto the Virgin: Holy mother of God by thy godly intervention waſh away our ſinnes, that being redeemed by thee, we may be able to climbe to the ſeat of eternall glory, out of the office called Servitium Beatæ Mariæ. Error 87.

Argum. As S. Paul called the Theſſalonians his hope and glory, ſo the Church and her children may call the bleſſed Lady their hope, Rhemiſt. an. in 1 *Theſ.*2.*ſec.*1.

Anſw. The argument followeth not. 1 S. Paul and all faithfull Preachers have Gods promiſe to be rewarded for their faithfull labours in converting ſoules unto God: and therefore they are their joy as it is ſaid. They that turne many to righteouſneſſe ſhall ſhine as the ſtarres: but no ſuch promiſe is made for the obtaining of ſalvation by the Virgin Mary, or truſting in her, or in any other creature. Dan.12.3.

2 Here the benefit redounded to them who were the Apoſtles hope, but they which make the Virgin their hope, looke for benefit from her.

3 Theodoret upon this place, ſheweth the Apoſtles meaning, becauſe he likened himſelfe to a mother cheriſhing her children, he imitateth the words of mothers, which are wont to call their children their hope, their joy, &c.

The Proteſtants.

CHriſt onely was the efficient cauſe and meritorious worker of our redemption, the Virgin Marie was a choſen veſſell and inſtrument onely of his holy incarnation, not concurring, as any working cauſe or agent in the myſticall work of our redemption.

Argum. Thus the Prophet ſpeaketh: I have troden the wine-preſſe alone, &c. and I looked, and there was none to helpe, &c. therefore mine owne arme helped me: upon the which words Ambroſe thus inferreth: Chriſti paſſio ad omnium redemptionem adjutore non eguit: The paſſion of Chriſt for the redemption of all, needed no helpe, &c. ſuſcepit matris affectum, non quæſivit alterius auxilium: he tooke upon him the affection of his mother, he ſought not an helper: And Hieronym upon the ſame place: ſolus Dominus calcavit torcular nullumque adjutorem habuit: onely the Lord trod this wine-preſſe, wherein both puniſhments are trod forth to the evill, and rewards to the good: he had no helper: ex citation. Eſpencei. Iſay 63.3.5. Epiſt.82.ad Vercellenſ.

The ancient Fathers doe in divers points compare Eve and Marie together, making them in ſome things like, in ſome things unlike, but they make not Marie ſo the cauſe of redemption of mankinde, as Eve of their ruine and fall. Lib. de Chriſto Redemptor.c.13.

1 Iuſtinus Martyr, ſaith that Chriſt was borne of a Virgin, ut (qua via) à ſerpente inobedientia initium ſumpſit, &c. That by what way inobedience tooke beginning from the ſerpent, ſo by the ſame way it ſhould have diſſolution, &c. and ſo he proceeded to this effect: Eve being a Virgin, by conceiving the word of the ſerpent begat death: ſo Marie the Virgin, conceiving by faith at the meſſage of the Angel, by the overſhadowing of the holy Ghoſt brought forth the Sonne of God, who worketh deliverance from death. [illegible] &c. Iuſtin. dialog. cum Tryphon. Iudeo c. 156. printed by Commelin. an.1593.

2 To the ſame purpoſe Tertullian: in virginem adhuc Evam irrepſerat verbum ædificatorium mortis, in virginem æque erat introducendum verbum Dei extructorium vitæ &c. The word which edified unto death came upon Eve, yet being a Virgin, and ſo the word of God was to come into a Virgin, which ſhould build up unto life: that what by the like ſex did paſſe unto perdition, by the ſame ſex might be reduced unto ſalvation: Eve beleeved the ſerpent, and Marie beleeved Gabriel, quod illa credendo deliquit, hac credendo delevit, &c. That which ſhe in beleeving offended, the other in beleeving amended, &c. ſo in three things they were like; in their ſex and condition, both were Virgins; in the act of beleeving in generall; in the object, the word brought unto them: in three things they are unlike; in the author, the ſerpent ſpake from the devill to the one; the Angell from God to the other; in the quality of their act, the one did evill in giving credit, the other did well in beleeving, and ſo made amends for the others faults; in the divers effects, the one wrought death, the other brought forth him who is the Author of life: All this may ſafely be received, and yet Marie is but extolled as an inſtrument, not ſet forth as an agent. Tertul.lib.de carn.Chriſti.

Origen ſaith: ante Ioannem prophetat Elizabeth, &c. Elizabeth propheſied before Iohn, and Marie before the death of our Saviour, & quomodo peccatum cœpit à muliere, &c. That as ſinne began from the woman, and ſo came unto man; ſo the beginning of ſalvation à mulieribus habuit exordium, had the originall from women, &c. He aſcribeth not an efficiencie, but a priority onely in the myſterie of ſalvation to women, and to Elizabeth in this behalfe as unto Marie.

3 Former confeſſion of Helvetia: We doe with our whole heart beleeve that Chriſt alone is our atonement, redemption, ſanctification, expiation, protection and deliverance, ſimply receiving all manner of our life and ſalvation beſide this Chriſt alone.

Error.88. Annot. in Luc. 2.35. THe common opinion of popiſh Divines is, that there was not at any time the leaſt doubting in the myſterie of ſalvation to be found, in the bleſſed Virgin Marie, as Eraſmus reporteth their opinion: and that in the Paſſion of Chriſt the true faith was onely in her: as Alexander Aleuſ. 3. part. 4. ultim. art. 2. Ioannes de Turrecremata lib. 1. de eccleſ. 1.30. & lib. 3. c. 61.

Luke 2.19. Argum. The Rhemiſts ſeeme to inferre ſo much upon theſe words of the Evangeliſt: Marie kept all theſe ſayings, and printed them in her heart: Our Lady (ſay they) knew all theſe myſteries and wiſely noted, &c. All theſe things which were done and ſaid about Chriſt, from the firſt houre of his conception, till the end of his life and aſcenſion. Whereupon it will follow that having ſuch perfect knowledge ſhe had not the leaſt doubt at all.

Luke 2.50. Contra. Though the bleſſed Virgin were a woman of great underſtanding, yet that ſhe knew not all the myſticall words and acts of Chriſt at the firſt, is evident by that place, verſ. 50. of the ſame chapter: they underſtood not that ſaying which he ſpake unto them: and they themſelves uſe thus to ſing in an Antheme: Venter puella bajulat ſecreta quæ non noverat: The wombe of the maid did beare the ſecrets which ſhe did not know.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe not derogate from the due praiſes of the Virgin Marie, neither will diminiſh or impaire the weight and worth of the great graces which were in her, yet from all kinde of doubtfull and perplexed thoughts concerning Chriſt, ſhe by warrant of Scripture is not altogether freed and exempted, though they prevailed not, neither long continued.

Luke 2.35. Hom. 17. in Luc. Theophyl. in hunc locum. Qu. veter. & nov. testamen. q. 73. Matth. 12.48. Lib. de carne Chriſti. Argum. 1. Simeon propheſieth of Marie, the ſword ſhall pierce thy ſoule: which Origen underſtandeth of ſome doubtfulneſſe wherewith Marie ſhould be perplexed: pertranſibit infidelitatis gladius & ambiguitatis mucrone ferieris, &c. the ſword of unbeleefe ſhall paſſe thorow, and thou ſhalt bee ſmitten with the blade point of ambiguity, when thou ſhalt ſee him whom thou heardeſt to be the Sonne of God, &c. to bee crucified: ſo alſo Theophylact underſtandeth it, either of the griefe of the paſſion, vel de ſubdubia cogitatione, or of ſome doubtfull thought, ſeeing him crucified, that had done ſuch great miracles, &c. Likewiſe Auguſtine affirmeth that this is ſo ſaid: Quia Maria, &c. in morte Domini dubitaret, becauſe Marie doubted in the death of Chriſt: all theſe Fathers thus expound this text: yet that other ſenſe of Theophylacts, of the griefe which Marie ſhould conceive by the paſſion of Chriſt, is more fit: notwithſtanding they all agree that Marie was not without ſome doubting: and Tertullian directly ſaith, alleaging the words of Chriſt, who is my mother and brethren: hoc loco apparet incredulitas eorum, in this place their unbeleefe appeareth, meaning, of his mother and brethren.

Matth. 26.31. Argum. 2. Our Saviour ſaith: all ye ſhall be offended by me this night: Origen includeth here the Virgin Marie, putamus quod ſcandalizatis Apoſtolis, doe we thinke that the Apoſtles being ſcandalized, that the mother of our Lord was free from ſcandall? Auguſtine alſo in the place before noted, doth here comprehend the Virgin Marie. Thus we have the conſent of the writers both of the Greek and South Church for this point: And Eraſmus, one that is theirs rather than ours, ſeemeth to concurre with him in the place before alleaged.

Of the Image of the Virgin Marie, and the vertue aſcribed thereunto.

The Papiſts.

THey tell us of great vertue, and many miracles wrought by and iſſuing from the Image of the Ladie of Lauretto in Italy, which they preferre before all other images of our Lady in the whole world, both for that the ſame houſe wherein the Angell ſaluted the Virgin Marie was tranſlated thither, firſt into Illyricum, and from thence into Italy by the miniſtery of Angels: Suarez. Ieſuite; as alſo for that there is continuall concourſe thither from all parts of the world, and there are quotidiana ſanationum miracula, miracles ſhewed dayly in healing: Baronius Turſalin.

Argum. The Rhemiſts urge that report of Euſebius of the image of a woman in braſſe kneeling unto another image made for Chriſt, repreſenting the hiſtory of the woman which was healed of her bloudy iſſue by touching the hem of Chriſts garment: in memory of which benefit, ſhee made that monument: where alſo there grew a ſtrange herbe, which as ſoone as it touched the skirts of the image, had vertue to heale all manner of diſeaſes: which image Iulian cauſed to be demoliſhed, and his owne to be ſet up, which was caſt downe by lightning, Euſeb. lib. 7. c. 14. Rhemiſt. annot. in matth. 9. ſect. 9.

Anſ. 1. Laſicius in his conſultation of the anſwer of the Duke of Muſco to Robite thinketh that it might pleaſe God by ſuch ſenſible meanes to allure the Gentiles to the faith: but now the faith of the Goſpell being diſperſed, talibus hamis minime eſt opus, we need not ſuch hookes. 2 But it is better anſwered, that Euſebius, concerning the images, which remained to his time, ſaith that they were erected συνηθείᾳ ἐθνικῇ, by an heatheniſh cuſtome, for the manner of the heathen was to make ſuch monuments of them from whom they received any benefit: but touching the miraculous healing wrought by the herb, hee writeth uncertainly by report onely. 3 It was juſt, that an example ſhould be ſhewed in the defacing of the tyrants image: for God miſliketh all profaneneſſe, ſhewed even toward ſuperſtitious monuments of an irreligious minde: for the contempt of all religion is an injury to God: as ſtories make mention how Breanus with all his hoſte was deſtroyed, when he would have ſpoiled the temple of Apollo at Delphos.

Anſwer to Rohite.c.13. 4 But concerning that report of the Lady of Lauretto: we hold it to be of like credit, with the fabulous report of the peremptory Duke of Muſcovia, of three images of our Lady, one made by divine power without mans hands, in a temple made by the Apoſtles, at the dedication whereof Marie met the Apoſtles, and ſeeing her image, ſaid, gratia & virtus mea huic adſit, my grace and vertue be here preſent: a ſecond was made of it ſelfe in a temple built by Ienaus, who was cured by Peter and Iohn: a third was made by S. Luke, and brought to the Virgin Mary, who ſaid likewiſe unto it, my grace and power be with this my image: which image is ſtill kept, ſaith this reporter, in the Kings palace in Muſcovia, and thereby Chriſtianity is preſerved among them, &c. Thus whereas they have no Scripture for their ſuperſtitions, they run unto fables: for how many unlikelihoods are here couched together. Firſt, that the Apoſtles ſhould build a temple, whereas in thoſe times Chriſtians were not ſuffered to have their Churches. Secondly, that God ſhould make an image without hands, againſt his owne commandement, that images ſhould not be made to be adored. Thirdly, that S. Luke ſhould be a Painter: he is called the beloved Phyſician: but of his art of painting we read not. Fourthly, that the Virgin Mary ſhould transferre her vertue to a dead image.

The Proteſtants.

We hold it a ſuperſtitious and ungodly practice to ſet up the images of Saints to be adored in Churches: and they being themſelves but lying vanities, we hold all theſe miracles ſaid to be wrought by ſuch images, and namely of the Virgin Mary, to be either the forgeries of deceitfull men, or the impoſtures of lying ſpirits.

Argum. God forbiddeth images to be made, with an intent to be adored in the ſecond commandement: but to give power of miracles to an image, is to make a way to the adoration of them: therefore God cannot deny himſelfe, or be contrary to himſelfe, in giving grace to that thing which hee forbiddeth, and abhorreth: the Prophet Habakuk calleth an image a teacher of lies, and ſaith, Woe unto him that ſaith to a dumbe ſtone ariſe: that is, that looketh for any helpe from it, as they doe which come thither to be healed. Habac.2.19.20

Iſay 42.8. 1 Tertullian denieth any vertue to be in images, upon that text: my glory will I not give to another, nor my praiſe to graven images: ut omnes cum ſuis figmentis ethnicos excludat & hereticos, probans Deum non eſſe, qui manu artificis factus ſit, nec qui ingenio heretici fictus: to exclude all heathen and heretikes with their fictions: proving him to be no God, that is, either framed by the artificers hand, or fained by the head of heretikes, &c. Againe he ſaith, idolum tam fieri quam coli Deus prohibet: God forbiddeth an idoll as well to be made as worſhipped, &c. Othniel* is called a Saviour: Act.7.35. Moſes a Deliverer or Redeemer: and all this without derogation to him, that in more excellent manner is the only Saviour of the world: Ergo, there may be alſo many mediators, in an inferiour degree to that ſingular Mediator, to offer up our praiers, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſwer. 1. If Chriſt be ſufficient to procure all grace and mercy unto us, what need then the mediation or invocation of Saints? for wee muſt either doubt of his power, in joyning other helpers with him, or make queſtion of his good will and readineſſe to helpe us, in making other mediators unto him.

2 They make other mediators and interceſſors beſide Chriſt, even in that high and ſingular degree: for not onely Chriſt by their doctrine, by his merits procureth grace, but other Saints alſo by their merits, are our mediators: as it is plaine to ſee in that Popiſh prayer, Tu per Thomæ ſanguinem, &c. By the blood of Thomas, which for thee he did ſpend, make us, Chriſt, to climbe, whither Thomas did aſcend. In this blaſphemous prayer and many ſuch like, they pray onely to Chriſt as God, not as Mediator; men departed, and many of them no Saints, they make their onely Mediators by their owne proper merits. See Fulke ibid.

Againe, their Saints are not only interceſſors for grace, but conferrers of grace and help, which is the higheſt degree of mediation. They appoint ſeverall Patrons amongſt the Saints for all purpoſes: S. Apollonia for the toothach; Saint Rooke for the peſtilence: Saint Petronil for the ague: S. Gregory for Schollars: S. Morris for Souldiers: S. Luke for Painters: Saint Criſpin for Shoomakers: S. Nicholas for the Sea: Saint Iodocus for corne: Saint Urbane for wine. And thus doe they not only (as they bear us in hand) pray for theſe graces and bleſſings, but they have power themſelves to beſtow them.

3 Concerning the name and title of Saviour and Redeemer, we anſwer: firſt, men are called in the Scripture Deliverers and Saviours, in reſpect of ſome temporall deliverance, not of the ſpirituall or eternall redemption, which belongeth only to Chriſt: but you make your Saints mediators of eternall redemption. Secondly, they whom the Scripture calleth Redeemers and Saviours, were appointed by God for ſuch temporall deliverance: but you cannot ſhew the like appointment for Saints to be mediators of eternall ſalvation, though in an inferiour degree to Chriſt. Thirdly, ſeeing the name of God and Chriſt is given to men in the Scriptures, as to Princes and Prophets: why may you not as well ſay, that there may be many Gods and Chriſts properly, though in an inferiour degree to him which is onely God and Chriſt, as to appoint other inferiour Redeemers, Saviours and Mediators?

See more of their arguments for the mediation of Saints againſt the only mediation of Chriſt, contr. 9. qu. 3. par. 2.

Deut.5.5. Our Doway men doe here alſo play their part, and reaſon thus for the mediation of Saints.

Pag.416. 1 Moſes ſaith, I was arbiter and mediator betwixt our Lord and you at that time, &c. whereupon they give this note, The title of Mediator lawfully aſcribed to Gods Lieutenant in earth.

Iudg.3.9. 2 Againe, Iudg.3.9.They cried unto our Lord who raiſed them up a Saviour, and delivered them, to wit Othniel, &c. Hence they inferre in their marginall note, that the title of Saviour is given to men, as the ſervants and officers of God, &c.

Pag.921. 3 Upon theſe words, Iob 42.8. Iob ſhall pray for you, they thus comment: as the mediation of one man for another, did not derogate from Gods benigne mercy in the law of nature, &c. nor now from Chriſts mediation in the law of grace, 2 Cor. 1. 11.

Pag.1110. Anſwer. 1. That place is not well by them tranſlated: for neither doth the Latine read, ego fui mediator, I was a mediator, but, medius, I was or came betweene: but in the originall, the word is ghomed, I ſtood betweene God and you. Moſes yet alive knowing the wants of the people, and by Gods appointment, and by way of intreatie, did mediate for his people: doth it therefore follow, that they which are dead, which are ignorant of our ſtate, and are not thereunto in Scripture appointed, ſhould be interceſſors for the living, and that by a right of mediatorſhip?

2 There is great difference betweene a Saviour and deliverer in temporall things and ſpirituall: and thus ſhall wee have Saints alſo not onely mediators, but Saviours, deliverers, patrons: what preeminence now ſhall be left for Chriſt? let them alſo ſhew, where the Saints departed are called and appointed to bee Saviours of the living, and that in ſpirituall things, as thoſe deliverers of Gods people were raiſed of God in their life time.

3 It followeth not from the mutuall prayers of the living one for another, that Saints departed may likewiſe mediate for the living. 1. The one is commanded, ſo is not the other. 2. The one is a mutuall worke of charitie, in that one prayeth for another, as the Corinthians for Paul, and he for them: but there can be no ſuch entercourſe betweene the living and the dead: the Saints need not our prayers, neither doe know our neceſſities. 3. Wee pray one for another, not as mediators to bee ſupplicated unto, but moved in charitie, but Saints they ſet up as Mediators to bee ſupplicated and adored.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge but one onely Mediator as well of interceſſion as redemption, even Jeſus Chriſt our Lord: to whom and through whom all our prayers and ſupplications ought to bee made: to him wee onely pray, as being one God with the Father and the holy Ghoſt: by him and through him we onely pray, as being the onely Mediator betweene God and man.

1.Tim.2.5. Argum. 1. S. Paul ſaith, There is one Mediator of God and man, the man Ieſus Chriſt. Hence wee doe frame this argument: The Mediator betweene God and men, muſt himſelfe bee both God and man: but ſo is none but Chriſt: Ergo, hee is the onely Mediator. Bellarmine here anſwereth making a diſtinction of Mediators, whom at large with his ſophiſticall diſtinction ſee confuted, Contr.9.qu.3.part.2.argum.Proteſtan.3.

Argum. 2. Hee is only the Advocate and Mediator for our ſinnes, that is the propitiation for our 1 Iohn.2.1. ſinnes. Chriſt onely is the propitiation for our ſinnes; Ergo, the onely Mediator.

I will adjoyne other arguments for the ſole mediation of Chriſt out of the fathers, grounded upon the Scriptures.

Argum. 3. If any were joyned with Chriſt in the office of mediation, the Angels are moſt like, being the next in dignitie to the Trinitie, of all Gods creatures: but the Angels are not our Mediators: for S. Paul ſaith, Galath. 3. The law was given by the Angels in the hand of a Mediator: wherefore Angels are not Mediators. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Quem invenirem, qui me reconciliaret tibi, an eundum mihi ſit ad Angelos? Whom ſhould I find to reconcile me unto thee? ſhould I goe to the Angels? &c. lib. confeſſ. 10. cap. 42.

Argum. 4. There is one and the ſame Mediator, both of the Law and Goſpell, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Galath 3.19. The law was given in the hand of a Mediator, that is Chriſt, Galat. 3. 19. Thus Origen, Chryſoſtome, with moſt of the Greeke interpreters, expound this place: but the Saints could not bee Mediators of the law, being not yet borne: Ergo, neither are they Mediators of the Goſpell.

Argum. 5. There is the ſame Mediator of the recreation of man, and redemption, which was of the creation: as Athanaſius ſaith, Ut creaturæ exiſterent, opus fuit mediatore: A Mediator was neceſſarie, that the creatures might have a being, Epiſtol. de ſynod. Nicen. decret. But Chriſt onely was Heb.1.2. the Mediator of the creation of man, Heb. 1. 2. by him he made the worlds: Ergo, onely of the redemption.

Argum. 6. He is the onely true Mediator, as Auguſtine ſaith, Pro quo nullus interpellat, ſed ipſe pro omnibus: For whom no man prayeth, but hee prayeth for all. But the Saints had one need of anothers prayers, Chriſt onely needeth the interceſſion of none: Ergo, he is the onely Mediator.

Cont. Parmen lib.2.c.8. Auguſtine thus further writeth upon this place: Si Apoſtolus ita diceret, &c. If the Apoſtle had ſaid thus: If any man ſinne, you have me a Mediator with the Father, and I doe by my prayer obtaine pardon for your ſinnes (as Parmenianus in a certaine place maketh the Biſhop a mediator betweene the people and God:) Quis ſicut Apoſtolum Chriſti, & non ſicut Antichriſtum intueretur? Who would behold him as an Apoſtle of Chriſt, and not as Antichriſt? It is then Antichriſtian doctrine, in Auguſtines judgement, to make any other mediators or interceſſors beſide Chriſt.

Decretal. Gaii. Licet in conſpectu Domini pretioſa mors juſtorum, nullius tamen inſontis occiſio redemptio fuit mundi: Although in the ſight of God, precious be the death of his Saints; yet the ſlaying of no Innocent (but Chriſt) is the redemption of the world. Againe, Non eſt redemptio captivitatis humanæ, niſi in ſanguine ejus qui dediſſe redemptionem pro omnibus, ibidem. There is no redemption of mans captivitie, but in his blood, that gave himſelfe a redemption for all: Ergo, there are no more Saviours, Redeemers, or Mediators, but Chriſt.

Likewiſe, Extrav. commun. lib. 3. tit. 11. c. 1. Ioan. 22. Expediens, immo neceſſarium æſtimamus, ut ad illum qui ad dextram Patris reſidet in excelſis, &c. We thinke it expedient, yea neceſſary, that to him that ſitteth at the right hand in the higheſt, whom both the windes and Sea obey, wee lift up our heart with our hands, &c. This Canon maketh no mention of any invocation of Saints, but of praying unto Chriſt, as not onely expedient, but neceſſary.

This doctrine hath beene ſealed: Richard Feuréus a French Martyr; I beleeve, as in the word of God is teſtified, Jeſus Chriſt to be the onely Mediator and Advocate for all ſinners: albeit the Virgin Mary be a bleſſed woman, yet the office of an advocate belongeth not unto her, Fox. p. 912. col. 1.

Pag. 852. 1. 88.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: The Scripture uſeth to ſpeake but of one Mediator, which ſignifieth a maker of peace or attonement betwixt God the Father and man, 1. Tim. 2. there is one God and one Mediator, &c. Fox. pag. 1109. reſponſ. ad articul. 15.

Pag. 1013. 2. 25.

Herein that Chriſt is the onely Mediator betweene God and man; 1. Chryſoſtome ſhall ſpeake for the Greeke Church, thus writing upon that place, There is one God and one Mediator, &c. Mediator debet utrinſq; quorum mediator eſt, eſſe particeps, &c. A Mediator muſt be partaker of both thoſe, betweene whom he is mediator: but if he be joyned to the one and ſeparated from the other, Iam mediator dici non poteſt, Hee cannot now be called a mediator, &c. So alſo Epiphanius, Hee is mediator of God and man, Quoniam in medio utrorumq; eſt, Becauſe he is in the midſt betweene both: that is, communicating of both their natures: Chriſt then, in their judgement is onely the Mediator, becauſe none but hee, is both God and man. This was the ancient faith of the Greeke Church, though it bee now much declined. Ieremie Patriarke ſaith: Mediatores facimus omnes ſanctos. Wee make all the Saints our mediators, &c. And yet a little before he ſheweth how they profeſſe thus in their prayers to God, Alium præter te in tribulationib. noſtris adjutorium non habemus; We have no other helper beſide thee in our tribulations, &c. but how can any be our mediator, unleſſe our helper alſo? if then Chriſt onely be our helper, hee onely is our Mediator: the like contradiction there is in the Muſcovites divinitie, who follow the ſuperſtitious rites and doctrines of the Greeke Church, and are rather worſe: for the great Duke confeſſeth thus: This is the ſumme: Et Ieſum Chriſtum unicum eſſe noſtrum interceſſorem, That both Jeſus Chriſt is our onely interceſſor, and yet hee immediately addeth, as having forgotten himſelfe, Et hujus caſtiſſimam matrem ſua interceſſione opitulari, &c. And wee beleeve his moſt chaſte mother to helpe all Chriſtians by her interceſſion.

Likewiſe, Non potes perfecte bonum oſtendere, à quo non perfecte liberatus: Thou canſt not ſhew him to be perfectly good, of whom thou art not perfectly delivered, &c. If Chriſt then have perfectly delivered us, his mediation is ſufficient. Origen of the Alexandrian Church, ſaith, Orationes & vota per ſolum pontificem Ieſum ad Deum defert omnipotentem: Hee that is a mans Angell, doth through one onely high Prieſt Jeſus, offer up prayers and vowes to God almightie, &c.

Lib de Chriſto Mediator, c. 1. in fine.

Here follow ſuch Controverſies as concerne the Sacraments of the Church.

OF the Sacraments then wee muſt firſt intreat in generall, and afterward handle them in particular.

THE ELEVENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF THE SACRAMENTS IN GENERALL.

THis Controverſie containeth divers queſtions: firſt, of the nature and definition of a Sacrament. Secondly, of the efficacie and vertue of the Sacraments. Thirdly, of the number and order of the Sacraments, the difference and preeminence amongſt them. They thus follow in their order.

The firſt queſtion, of the name, nature, and definition of a Sacrament.

Firſt, of the name of a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

92. Error. Firſt, concerning the name, Sacrament, they doe enforce it, as neceſſarie, and would derive this word taken in this ſpeciall ſignification for myſticall rites of the Church, out of the Scriptures, Bellarm. lib. 1 de Sacram. cap. 7.

Epheſ. 5. 31. Argum. Epheſ. 5. verſ. 31. Saint Paul calleth Matrimonie a Sacrament, This is a great Sacrament, &c.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, This is a great myſterie, but I ſpeake concerning Chriſt and his Church: So then this myſterie is not in the conjunction of man and woman, but in the ſpirituall uniting of Chriſt and his Church: as S. Ambroſe alſo expoundeth this place; Sacramentum grande in unione viri & foeminæ. He ſignifieth that there is a great Sacrament, or myſterie, in the union of man and woman: then it followeth, Nec hoc prædixit, ſed aliam cauſam flagitat, &c. But the Apoſtle allegeth not this, but requireth a greater cauſe, that is of Chriſt and his Church. Secondly, if it ſhall be anſwered, that the ſpirituall union of Chriſt and his Church, is ſignified in Matrimonie, which is the externall ſigne or Sacrament thereof: Wee grant, that there is ſuch a myſticall ſignification in Matrimonie; but it followeth not, that it is therefore a Sacrament, as Baptiſme and the Euchariſt are: for it being inſtituted in Paradiſe, cannot be a Sacrament of the Goſpell. Thirdly, they doe not well to tranſlate, Sacramentum, ſeeing the Greeke word is myſterion, which ſignifieth a ſecret and myſticall thing, which name, as they well know, is given to many things in Scripture, which are no Sacraments. Wherefore this place ſerveth no ſuch ſpeciall uſe of this word Sacrament.

The Proteſtants.

THis word Sacrament, being the Latine of the Greeke word, μυστήριον, wee refuſe not to uſe, being fitly applied to the myſteries of Baptiſme and the Lords Supper, though in this ſpeciall ſenſe and ſignification, it cannot bee found uſed in Scripture: the name (myſterie) is diverſly read in the Scripture, taken ſometime in the good part, as Rom. 16. 25. 1. Tim. 3. 16. The Goſpell is called a myſterie: ſometime in the evill, as 2. Theſſ. 2. 7. The myſterie of iniquitie: Apoc. 17. 5. The whore of Babylon is called a myſterie: yet as a ſpeciall name for the Sacraments of the Church, wee find it not expreſſed in Scripture: yet notwithſtanding we doe receive it as a fit terme, to ſignifie the myſteries of religion.

Rom. 16. 25.
1 Tim. 3. 16.
2 Theſſ. 2. 7.
Apoc. 17. 5.

Argum. Like as the Church of God in the diviſion of Arrius, uſed the name, homouſion, though it were not read or found in Scripture, to expreſſe one and the ſelfe ſame ſubſtance of the Trinitie: the Arrians objected, that the word was not to be uſed, becauſe the Scriptures had it not: Saint Ambroſe anſwereth, Quaro ſi ita credi liceat, ſi nominari non liceat: I aske, if it bee not lawfull ſo to beleeve, though not to uſe that name: If wee may beleeve ſo, why not alſo profeſſe, or name it ſo? de fide orthodox. cap. 3. So we ſay, that this word Sacrament being agreable to the Scriptures in this ſenſe, which we uſe it, we ſtand not ſo much upon the very accepcion of the word in Scriptures. But as Saint Hierome ſaith, Non eſt nobis cura de vocabulo, cum ſenſus ſit in tuto: Wee care not much for the word, agreeing upon the ſenſe: adverſ. Lucifer.

SECONDLY,

Secondly, of the definition of a Sacrament.

WE thus define a Sacrament, to bee an outward viſible ſigne, repreſenting an holy, inward, ſpirituall grace, inſtituted of Chriſt, to be uſed in that manner hee hath appointed, to ſeale unto us the promiſes of God, and to aſſure us of the remiſſion of ſinnes, by the righteouſneſſe of faith in Chriſt, *Rom.*4.11. Rom.4.11.

Some things there bee in this definition, that are agreed upon betweene us and our adverſaries : as that the Sacraments are outward ſignes of ſpirituall and holy graces, and that there muſt bee a conveniencie and agreement betweene the ſigne and the thing ſignified : that not every thing may be repreſented by a Sacrament, but an holy and ſpirituall grace : that a Sacrament ought to bee inſtituted by a divine not an humane authoritie, *Bellarm.de Sacram.in gener.lib.*1.*cap.*9.

The ſeverall points then wherein wee diſſent from them, and which they miſlike in this definition, are theſe : Firſt, concernimg the authoritie of inſtituting a Sacrament, which wee affirme to be derived onely from Chriſt, and manifeſtly to bee proved out of the Scriptures. Secondly, of the forme and matter of the Sacraments. Thirdly, of the inſtrumentall or miniſteriall cauſe, which is the Miniſter. Fourthly, of the uſe and end of a Sacrament, whether it be a ſeale of the promiſes of God, and inſtituted for that end.

The firſt part, of the efficient cauſe, that is, the author or inſtitutor of a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

THey doe willingly grant, that neither the Apoſtles then had, nor the Church now hath authoritie to inſtitute Sacraments : but that this power is onely in Chriſt, and that the Apoſtles did but declare and deliver that which they received of Chriſt ; yet for the triall of this, they refuſe to be judged by the expreſſe word of God, but flie unto their traditions, which they call the word of God not written. *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de Sacram.cap.*14.& 23. 93. Error.

Argum. The ſacrament of Baptiſme, and of the Euchariſt, were inſtituted without expreſſe warrant of Scripture : for at that time the new Teſtament was not written, when Chriſt ordained thoſe myſteries : Ergo, for the other Sacraments wee need not the expreſſe commandement of Scripture : *Bellarm. lib.*1.*cap.*14.

Anſw. Firſt, the traditions of our Saviour given unto the Apoſtles concerning thoſe two Sacraments, were afterward written by the Apoſtles, and expreſly ſet downe in Scripture : and therefore wee doubt not, but that they were of Chriſts inſtitution. But your traditions being not committed to writing, concerning your other forged Sacraments, are juſtly ſuſpected, ſeeing the Apoſtles ſhould have as well beene charged with all the Sacraments, if Chriſt had inſtituted them, as with onely two. Secondly, how followeth it, the word of God was ſometime unwritten, therefore it is ſo ſtill ? or Chriſt, who was the author of the word written, might inſtitute Sacraments without expreſſe Scripture : Ergo, the teſtimonie of Scripture is not neceſſary now ?

The Proteſtants.

WE hold no Sacraments to bee of Chriſts inſtitution, but thoſe onely which the Scripture teſtifieth to have beene commanded by Chriſt, as Baptiſme, Matth. 28. 19. the Lords ſupper, Luk. 22.20. The other which have no teſtimonie of Scripture, were not appointed by Chriſt. Matth.28.19. Luke 22.20.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, That the Scripeures are able to make the man of God abſolute and perfect to every good worke, 1 Timoth. 3. 17. But how can the Miniſter of God bee perfectly furniſhed and prepared for the worke of the Miniſterie, if hee have not ſufficient direction out of the Scriptures concerning the Sacraments of the Church ? for how can he abſolutely execute every part of his office, if he faile in the right uſe of the Sacraments ? Ergo, ſeeing the Scriptures are able to make him perfect, from thence he receiveth ſufficient inſtruction for the Sacraments. 1 Timoth. 3.17.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſaith, ſpeaking of the Sacrament, I have received of the Lord, that which I have alſo delivered unto you, 1 Cor. 11.23. Wherefore no Sacraments ought to bee delivered to the Church, but ſuch as have beene received of Chriſt : and what is received of Chriſt, cannot bee ſhewed but out of the Scripture. Wherefore their opinion is more reaſonable amongſt the Papiſts, that denie all the Sacraments to have beene inſtituted of Chriſt, as Hugo, and Peter Lumbard, with other, becauſe they cannot find all their Sacraments in Scripture, than Bellarmines aſſertion is, who granteth, that all the Sacraments are of Chriſts inſtitution : but for the proofe thereof, he runneth from Scripture to tradition. 1 Cor.11.23.

Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus ſacramentis numero pauciſſimis, obſervatione facillimis, &c. Chriſt hath joyned his people together by the Sacraments, few in number, eaſie in obſervation : ſuch are Baptiſme, and the partaking of his body and blood. Then it followeth : Et ſi quid aliud in ſcripturis ca- nonicis commendatur : And if any other Sacrament bee commanded in the Canonicall Scripture, Epiſt. 118. Ergo, wee muſt attend upon the Scripture and written word of God, if wee will be inſtructed aright concerning the Sacraments.

Concil. Florentin. ſeſſ. 7. Andreas Coleſſen. Velim à vobis ampliſſimi patres doceri, &c. I would gladly learne of you (honourable fathers) whether the moſt ſacred Goſpell doe not containe the moſt certaine doctrine of our religion : I thinke, you will not (ſuch is your godlineſſe) make other anſwer, than that the moſt abſolute knowledge of our faith is there comprehended, &c. If the Goſpell then doe teach the perfect rule of faith, and religion, then it muſt needs inſtruct us concerning the Sacraments, without the which our religion is not perfect.

Hierome ſaith, Ergo ut ad inſtitutionis plenetudinem, verbum Domini, hoc eſt evangelium, &c. For the fuller inſtitution, I pray you diligently read the word of the Lord, that is the Goſpell : let us in no wiſe reſt upon our owne judgement, &c.

Maſter Philpot holy Martyr : Our Saviour ſaith, Verbum quod locutus ſum, &c. The word that I have ſpoken ſhall judge you in the latter day ; if the word ſhall judge us then, much more ought it to be a judge of our doings now : Fox pag. 1805. Ergo, we ought to enterpriſe nothing in religion, without the warrant of Gods word in Scripture.

Pag.1838.2.60.

And for further evidence, that for the Sacraments, and other ſuch points of Chriſtian inſtitution, wee are to relie upon the credit of the Scriptures : 1. We have the evident teſtimonie of Tertullian and Cypriane of the Africane and South Church. Tertullian ſaith, Nihil de eo conſtat, quia ſcriptura non exhibet : Nothing is extant thereof, becauſe the Scripture exhibiteth nothing. And againe, Quod à Domino permiſſum non invenitur, id agnoſcitur interdictum : That which is not found permitted of our Lord, is acknowledged to bee interdicted and forbidden : Negat Scriptura, quod non notat : The Scripture denieth that, which it noteth not.

Lib.2.epiſt.3. ad Cæcil. diſtinct. 8. c. 9.

2 And of the Greek Church, wee have the imperiall conſtitution of Gratianus, Valentinianus, Theodoſius : Omnes ſciant nemini quicquam, niſi quod ſcriptis probaverit, eſſe credendum : Let all know, that no more is to be credited in any, than that which he proveth by writing, &c. The law ſpeaketh of the Princes mandate, which muſt be proved by writing : ſo the precept and mandate of Chriſt is not extant but in the Scriptures. Ieremie Patriarke ſaith directly : Quæ quidem omnia ſacramenta ſacra ſanciuntur ſcriptura : All which ſacraments are conſecrated by the ſacred Scripture.

The ſecond part, of the forme of a Sacrament, and the manner of conſecration ; and of the matter : firſt of the forme.

The Papiſts.

94. Error.

THe Sacrament is not conſecrated (ſay they) by all the words of the inſtitution, but by a certaine forme of ſpeech to bee uſed over the elements : as theſe words to bee ſaid over the bread, This is my bodie : and the like over the wine, This cup is the new teſtament, &c. And in Baptiſme theſe : In the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt. Theſe are the formes of the Sacrament, and very words of conſecration, though ſpoken in a ſtrange tongue, without further invocation of the name of God, or giving of thankes, or without a ſermon, which wee require (as they ſay) as neceſſary to the eſſence of a Sacrament, Rhemiſt. 1. Cor. 11. ſect. 11. 15. Bellarm. lib. 1 de Sacrament. cap. 19.

Argum. Saint Paul ſaith, The cup of bleſſing which we bleſſe, 1. Corinth. 10. 16. The Apoſtle referreth the benediction or bleſſing to the cup or Chalice, which is nothing elſe but the conſecration thereof, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, wee denie not, but that to bleſſe here doth ſignifie to ſanctifie or conſecrate : but that is not done by a magicall murmuration of words over the Sacrament, but by the whole action according to Chriſts inſtitution, in diſtributing, receiving, giving of thankes : as the Apoſtle afterward ſaith in the ſame verſe, the bread which wee breake, &c, which wee breake, ſaith hee, as before of the cuppe, which wee bleſſe, ſhewing thus much, that the benediction conſiſteth not onely in the pronouncing of the words, but in the whole action, of taking, receiving, breaking, diſtributing, giving of thankes, &c. Secondly, as for the words which Chriſt uttered in the inſtitution, wee rehearſe them not, as a magicall charme to bee ſaid over the bread and wine to convert their ſubſtance: but to declare what they are made to us by force of Chriſts inſtitution, namely, his body and blood.

Bellarmine alſo affirmeth, that the words of the inſtitution do not ſerve at all for the inſtruction of the people, but onely to conſecrate the elements; and therefore they may bee as well repeated in Latine, ſaith he, as in the vulgar tongue, becauſe God underſtandeth all languages, cap. 19.

95. Error.

Argum. The words to be uſed in Baptiſme: In the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holie Ghoſt, are words of invocation or benediction, not of inſtruction. Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, doth he thinke, that in theſe words there is no inſtruction? how then ſaith the Apoſtle, whatſoever is written, is written for our learning and inſtruction, Rom. 15. 4. If theſe words then be written in the Scripture, they are for our learning. Againe, when the whole Trinitie is named, is it no point of inſtruction to the people to know in whoſe name they are baptiſed? which certaine diſciples of Epheſus were ignorant of, that had not heard, whether there were an holie Ghoſt, Act. 19. 2.

Rom. 15. 4.
Act. 19. 2.

Secondly, it is no good reaſon, that the Sacraments may bee celebrate in any tongue, becauſe God underſtandeth: for ſo it ſhould not bee neceſſarie to uſe any tongue, becauſe God underſtandeth the thoughts: the Prieſts intention then by this reaſon might ſerve without any words at all. Againe, if the words containe a prayer and invocation, it is fit the people ſhould underſtand it, that they may give conſent and ſay Amen to the prayer.

The Proteſtants.

B*ellarmine* chargeth us with three great untruths: firſt, that we hold, that the words of inſtitution are not neceſſary in every Sacrament, but Baptiſme onely. Secondly, that wee ſay, a ſermon is of the eſſence of the Sacrament. Thirdly, that the words of inſtitution doe not ſerve at all towards conſecration, or benediction of the elements: but our opinion is this; Wee doe not hold, that it is an eſſentiall part of the Sacrament, alwayes to have a ſermon before it, as they underſtand a ſermon; which notwithſtanding were moſt convenient, and alwayes to be wiſhed: but this we affirme, that the Sacrament cannot bee rightly miniſtred, unleſſe there bee a declaration, and ſhewing forth of the Lords death, not onely in the viſible action of breaking and diſtributing the elements: but alſo in ſetting forth the end of the Lords death out of the word of God, with an exhortation to thankfulneſſe, which is alwayes obſerved amongſt us in the dayly celebration and receiving of the Sacrament. Concerning the words of the inſtitution, wee alſo grant, that they are neceſſarily to bee uſed in the celebration of the Sacrament; but not as the Papiſts uſe them: For firſt, they make them not all of one value, but out of the whole inſtitution, picke out certaine conſecratorie words, as they call them: as, This is my body, This is the cup; whereas the other words, Take yee, eat yee, drinke yee, doe this in remembrance: doe as well belong to the inſtituion, as the other. Secondly, they ſay, that the words of inſtitution doe not ſerve any thing at all for the inſtruction of the people, to ſhew them the right uſe of the Sacrament, but onely for benediction and conſecration of the elements, Bellarm, cap. 19. Thirdly, they doe hold, that onely by the pronouncing of thoſe words, the elements are conſecrated: whereas by the whole action, and celebration of the Sacrament, the giving, receiving, invocation, thankſgiving, according to Chriſts inſtitution, the conſecration is performed upon the elements: Fulk. 1. Corinth. 10. ſect. 4.

Argum. 1. That the words of inſtitution rehearſed, doe helpe as well to admoniſh and ſtirre up the people to a thankfull remembrance of the death of Chriſt, as to conſecrate and bleſſe the elements, it is manifeſt: whereas Chriſt ſaith, as the words are uſually rehearſed, Doe this in remembrance of mee: And S. Paul ſaith, That by receiving the Sacrament, wee doe ſhew forth the Lords death, 1 Cor. 11. 26. Ergo, the people are by the words pronounced, inſtructed and admoniſhed, and taught the right uſe of the Sacrament.

1 Cor. 11. 26.

Argum. 2. That the words of inſtitution doe helpe toward the benediction or conſecration of the element, wee denie not, but not by them alone, but prayer alſo and thankſgiving, and the whole action beſide of receiving. To the conſecration or ſanctifying of any creature, two things are required: the word of God, and prayer, 1. Timoth. 4. 5. Neither the word ſanctifieth without prayer, nor prayer without the word: Ergo, to the ſanctifying and conſecrating of the Sacrament, the bare rehearſall of the inſtitution ſufficeth not, without invocation and prayer.

1 Tim. 4. 5.

Auguſtine ſaith, Accedat verbum ad elementum, & fit Sacramentum: Let the word bee joyned to the element, and it is become a Sacrament. And in another place, hee ſheweth what word hee meaneth: Niſi faciente verbo, non quia dicitur, ſed quia creditur, hoc eſt verbum fidei, quod prædicamus: Whence is this vertue of the water to touch the body and waſh the heart, but that the word effecteth this, not becauſe it is ſpoken or uttered, but becauſe it is beleeved: this is the word of faith, ſaith the Apoſtle, which we preach: Thus farre Auguſtine tract. in Iohan. 80. Wherefore it is not the muttering of a few words in a ſtrange tongue, after the manner of inchaunters, that by any ſecret force given unto them hath power to conſecrate: but the underſtanding, hearing, and beleeving the inſtitution of Chriſt, with calling upon the name of God, and thankſgiving before him.

Alſo one of your great Maſters Innocent. 3. thus decreeth: That two things are required in Baptiſme, the word and the element; Iuxta quod de verbo veritas ait, &c. Out of the word the truth thus ſaith, Goe and preach the Goſpell to every creature, baptiſing them. Here hee underſtandeth by the word, the word preached: Decret.Greg.lib.3.tit.42.c.5.

Origen. in 15. Math. Origen thus writeth; Quod ſanctificatur per verbum Dei & obſecrationem, non ſuapte natura ſanctificat utentem, &c. That which is ſanctified by the word of God, doth not of it ſelfe ſanctifie the uſer, or receiver: for ſo it ſhould ſanctifie him that eateh unworthily, &c. therefore then the bread of the Lord is profitable to him that eateth, when with a pure conſcience, and unpolluted mind hee is made partaker, &c. Wee ſee then that conſecration and benediction conſiſteth in the whole action of prayer, thankſgiving, and faithfull receiving, not in the pronouncing of certaine words.

Synod. Auguſtenſ. c.15. Volumus populum, quid in cujuſque ſacramenti collatione agatur in concionibus & ſacramentorum adminiſtratione frequenter doceri: Wee would have the people, when any Sacrament is conferred, to bee taught in Sermons, and in the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, what is there done, &c. We ſee then that the words uſed in the diſtribution of the Sacraments, ſerve not onely to conſecrate, but to teach and inſtruct the people.

Cenſur. Oriental. cap.13. Adde hereunto, the practice of the Greeke Church: Ieremie Patriarke ſaith, Præparationem & conſecrationem tanti operis eſſe putamus, utpote preces, Pſalmodias, ſacrarum literarum lectionem, &c. Wee hold to be as a preparation or conſecration of ſo great a worke, namely prayer, ſinging of Pſalmes, reading of the ſacred Scripture.

Confeſſ. of Bohemia, chap. 10. Amongſt thoſe, who by reaſon of their age are able to uſe their underſtanding, it is of neceſſitie, that the preaching of the Goſpell goe before the receiving of the Sacraments.

An Appendix of this part, whether the forme of words in the inſtitution of the Sacraments may not be by ſome addition, or other alteration changed.

The Papiſts.

96. Error. THe words of inſtitution may bee changed two manner of wayes: either ſubſtantially, when the ſenſe is alſo altered with the words: or accidentally, when the elements, or ſyllables are onely changed, but the ſenſe remaineth the ſame. If there be a change in the ſubſtance of the words, the Sacrament is imperfect: if the alteration be of the forme onely of words, and not of the ſenſe, the Sacrament is not deſtroyed: but hee ſinneth that doth ſo alter them. Wherefore it is not lawfull any way at all to alter or change the forme of words, Bellarm.cap.21.lib.1.

Argum. 1. It is not lawfull to adde or take, to or from the words of Scripture, much leſſe to change the words appointed to be uſed in the Sacrament, Bellarm ibid.

Anſw. To adde or detract to or from the word of God, with a purpoſe and intent to wreſt it to a contrarie meaning, and deſtroy the true ſenſe thereof, cannot be done without great impietie: and ſuch is the manner of all heretikes: But to alleage Scripture, in keeping ſtill the full ſenſe, though we miſſe of the words, is not to bee counted ſo hainous a ſinne: we ſee the holy Apoſtles in citing texts of Scripture, doe not alwaies bind themſelves to the very words, Act.7.43. Hebr.10.5. The Apoſtle ſaith, A bodie thou haſt given mee: In the Pſalme we read, Pſal.40.6. Mine eares haſt thou opened: divers words, yet the ſame ſenſe: and in other ſuch places many.

De doctrin. Chriſtian. lib 4. cap.5. Auguſtine ſaith very well, they that underſtand the Scripture, though they keepe not alwaies the words, are better than they that read and underſtand not: Sed utriſque ille melior, qui & cum volet, ea dicit, & ſicut oportet, intelligit: But hee is better than both, that both remembreth the words, and keepeth the ſenſe too: yet hee alſo deſerveth prayſe, that beareth the ſenſe in mind, though hee cannot the words.

Argum. 2. To change the matter of the Sacrament, as the water in Baptiſme, &c. is unlawfull, for this were to deſtroy the Sacrament: Ergo, neither the words are to be changed. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, how then can your ſelves be excuſed, that in the Euchariſt, take away the one part of the matter, namely the Wine, and when you uſe it, you mingle it with water; what is this elſe, but to change the matter of the Sacrament? Secondly, there is not the like reaſon of the words and the matter, for the element cannot be altered or changed without corruption of it, but ſome alteration in the words may be, and yet the ſenſe remaine whole and ſound ſtill: where from the change of words, to the change of the things, the argument followeth not.

The Proteſtants.

NO ſubſtantiall change (wee confeſſe) is to bee admitted in the forme of inſtitution, which may alter the ſenſe: neither is any particular man by himſelfe to make any accidentall change, and bring in a new forme of words, but the publike and uniforme order of the Church muſt be kept; yea, and the Church likewiſe is bound both to retaine the true ſenſe, and, as neere as may bee, the very words: but where occaſion ſerveth, to make ſome ſmall accidentall change of the words, the ſenſe being nothing diminiſhed, it is not condemned as an unlawfull and ſinfull act.

Argum. 1. The Evangeliſts report not all the ſame forme of words, which ſhould bee uttered by our Saviour, neither yet S. Paul fully accordeth with them, in the preciſe and ſtrict forme of inſtitution: as by comparing of them together, it may be ſeene:

*Matth.*26.*verſ.*27.	*S.Luke.cap.*22.
Take, eate, This is my body.	This is my body which is given for you, doe this in remembrance of me, *verſ.*19.	S.Paul. Take, eate, this is my body which is broken for you, doe this in remmebrance of me, 1. Cor. 11. 24.
*Verſ.*28. This is my blood of the new teſtament, that is ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſinnes.	This cup is the new teſtament in my blood which is ſhed for you.	This cup is the new Teſtament in my bloud: this doe as oft as you drinke it in remembrance of mee.

If it had beene a ſinne, to have miſſed in ſome termes and ſyllables, no doubt the ſpirit of God would not have ſuffered theſe holy writers to have made the leaſt ſcape. It is to bee thought a ſinne in the Church, which in ſtead of Take yee, eate yee, in the plurall number, hath appointed the Sacrament to bee miniſtred particularly in the ſingular number, to every of the communicants, ſaying, Take thou, eate thou, drinke thou? Wherefore all accidentall change of words carrieth not with it a guilt of ſinne.

Argum. 2. In the other Sacrament of Baptiſme, the preſcript words are to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, *Matth.*28. yet your owne Canons allow ſome change, and alteration in them: as *decret. part.*3. *diſtinct.*4. *c.*24. Nicholaus alloweth Baptiſme pronounced onlie in the name of Chriſt: *cap.*30. Pelagius approveth Baptiſme celebrated onely in the name of the Lord: *cap.*86. Zacharias determineth the Baptiſme of a certaine Prieſt, that ſpake falſe Latine, ſaying, in nomine patria, filia, & ſpiritu ſancta, to be good Baptiſme: the Maſter of ſentences alſo alloweth of Baptiſme onely in the name of Chriſt, lib. 4. diſtinct. 3. b. wherefore in their owne judgement the words may be altered.

Auguſtine indeed ſaith, Certa ſunt verba evangelica, &c. The words of the Goſpell are certaine, whereby baptiſme is conſecrated; But yet he ſaith elſewhere, In ipſo verbo aliud eſt ſonus tranſiens, aliud virtus manens: In the word ſpoken, the ſound which paſſeth, is one thing, the vertue or ſenſe of the words which abideth, is another. &c. It is then the ſenſe of the words, not the ſound or ſyllables, that is certaine and permanent. Contr. Donat. de baptiſ. lib. 6. cap 25. Tractat. in Iohan. 80.

Againe, Auguſtine ſaith, Si non ſanctificatur aqua, &c. If the water bee not ſanctified, when ſome words unskilfully are pronounced, many as well good, as bad men ſhould not baptize at all, &c. and this ſentence is rehearſed in the decrees, part. 3. diſt. 4. *c.*72. If a change proceeding of error may bee tollerated, much more a change tending to edifying may be admitted, as when for Take yee, eate yee, we ſay in the ſingular, Take and eate. Côtr. Donat. de baptiſ. l.6. c.25.

Dominicus a Soto, their owne darling, is of opinion, that the Greekes doe truly baptize, ſaying thus, baptizetur ſervus, let the ſervant of Chriſt bee baptized in this water: and yet the Latine Church uſeth to ſay, Ego baptizo, I baptize thee: Wee ſee then that there may bee ſome alteration. Qu. [illegible]

Latter confeſſion of Helvetia c. 19. Wee cannot allow of them which attribute the conſecration of the Sacraments to I know not what ſyllables, to the rehearſall of certaine words pronounced by him that is conſecrated, &c. they place not the force of conſecration, in a certaine preciſe number of words: ſee before, the judgement both of the Greeke Church, and of Auguſtine for the Africane Church, and of the decrees from the Romane Church. Harm. ſect. 12. p. 382.

Of the matter of the Sacraments.

The Papiſts.

FOr the matter of the Sacraments, they hold it not neceſſarie to bee a viſible and plauſible element, but it is ſufficient, ſay they, if it bee any way ſenſible, as to the eares if it bee but audible onely: for in pennance, they have no materiall part, but the ſound of the words: Bellarm. cap. 14. lib. 1. 98. Error.

Argum. The ſenſe of hearing in the Sacraments ought not to be excluded, ſeeing they are the moſt excellent ſignes, that are perceived of that ſenſe. Bellarmine ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, which is the moſt excellent, and fitteſt ſenſe for the Sacraments, it is not left to us to determine, but therein wee muſt follow the inſtitution of Chriſt. Secondly, the ſenſe of hearing is not excluded in the uſe of the Sacraments, ſeeing that hearing is of the word, Rom. 10. 17. which accompanieth the Sacraments. Rom. 10. 17. Thirdly, though hearing bee the moſt excellent ſenſe for inſtruction, for faith commeth by hearing, Rom. 10. yet the ſight of the eyes ſerveth moſt fitly to confirme the weak, as it may appeare in Thomas, Iohn. 20.25. And that which we have by heare-ſay, is made more evident by ſight; as Iob ſaith, 42.5. I have heard of thee, by the hearing of the eare, but now myne eye ſeeth thee. Iohn 20. 25. Iob. 42. 5.

The Proteſtants.

WEe define a Sacrament onely to be a viſible and tractable ſigne, object to the eye, taſte, and feeling, not to the eare, or any other ſenſe.

Argum. Our reaſon is this; Chriſt hath inſtituted onely two Sacraments, Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt: the Scripture in the new Teſtament maketh mention of no more; but the matter of theſe Sacraments is onely obiect to the ſenſes of ſeeing, taſting, handling: Ergo, to this purpoſe S. Iohn, that which our eares have heard, which we have ſeene with our eyes, and our hands have handled of the word of life, &c. 1 Iohn 1.1. Theſe are the three ſenſes, wherewith Chriſt is received, and perceived of us; the word wee doe heare with our eares; with our eyes and hands, wee ſee Chriſt, and feele him in the Sacraments. 1 Iohn 1.1.

Dionyſius calleth them, *viſible Sacraments, de eccleſiaſtic. hierarch. c.*2. Auguſtine making but two Sacraments of the new Teſtament, ad Ianuar. epiſt. 18. c. 1. De doctrin. Chriſtian. lib. 3. c. 9. which hee expreſly nameth to bee baptiſme, and the celebration of the body and blood of Chriſt; muſt bee alſo of the ſame mind, that the matter of the Sacraments is viſible. Origen, it is a ſigne, cum indicatur aliquid per hoc quod videtur, when ſomewhat is ſhewed by that which is ſeene, in 4. cap. ad Roman. Harm. p. 396.

So the confeſſion of Bohemia, c. 2. defineth Sacraments to bee earthly and viſible ſignes conſecrated by the word of God. Coſterus their owne writer ſaith, that a Sacrament is externum & viſibile ſignum, &c. an outward viſible ſigne of a divine and inviſible grace: Coſter. enchirid.

Bellarmines evaſion is very idle, that even the words may bee ſaid to be viſible, as wee ſay, ſee how it ſoundeth, &c. The ſenſe of ſeeing, ſaith hee, may be applied to all the other ſenſes. c. 13. for in this ſpeech, either wee underſtand the inward facultie of diſcerning, or Seeing is taken generally, for any kind of perceiving: but when we ſay, the Sacrament is a viſible ſigne, we ſpeake properly of the ſenſe of ſeeing, and the peculiar obiect thereof.

The third part, of the inſtrumentall cauſe of the Sacraments, that is, the lawfull Miniſter.

Some things are yeelded unto of both ſides: Firſt, that no man ought to take upon him to adminiſter the Sacraments, unleſſe hee bee thereunto lawfully called and ordained by the Church, ſaving that they make exception of Baptiſme, which in caſe of neceſſity, as they teach, may bee given by the hands of lay-men or women: but of this matter wee ſhall have fitter occaſion afterward to conſider. Secondly, it is agreed, that the efficacie or vertue of the Sacrament dependeth not of the faith or honeſty of the Miniſter; but a faithfull man may receive the Sacrament worthily, even at the hands of an unworthy Miniſter.

The Papiſts.

The point of difference betweene us, is this: They doe teach that the efficacie, perfection, and being of the Sacrament, doth neceſſarily depend of the intention of the Miniſter, ſo that they hold it to be no Sacrament, if the Miniſter have not Intentionem faciendi quod facit eccleſia, A full purpoſe and intent in miniſtring the Sacrament, to doe that which the Church doth, that is, to conſecrate the elements, and to make a Sacrament, Trid. Conc. ſeſſ. 7. can. 11. Bellar. c. 27. So that by this rule, if the Miniſters intention be not wholly upon the buſineſſe he hath in hand, it ſhall be no Sacrament.

Argum. If the Miniſters intention were not neceſſary to make a Sacrament, when it chanceth that the Goſpell is read at the table by a Miniſter, there being both bread and wine ſet before him, and he in reading ſaith, This is my body, and This is my blood, ſtraightwaies all that bread and wine ſhould be conſecrate, and become a Sacrament; but becauſe his intention is wanting, it is none, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. But what if the Miniſter ſhould have a fantaſticall conceit and intent, as hee readeth to conſecrate all the bread and wine upon the table, then it ſhould ſeeme by your rule, that it muſt needs bee a Sacrament, which were even as abſurd a thing as the other? Secondly, there are other lets and impediments, from having a Sacrament at the table, than the intention of the Miniſter being wanting or kept backe; for the elements are not conſecrated, nor the Sacrament made by the bare pronouncing of the words; but the whole inſtitution ought to be obſerved: there muſt be eating, drinking, taking, and doing, all in the remembrance of the death of Chriſt: there muſt be diſtributing, receiving, invocation, thankſgiving; the whole action in the Sacrament, is the conſecration thereof; theſe things then being wanting, there can be no Sacrament.

The Proteſtants.

If the Sacrament bee adminiſtred aright according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, whatſoever the Miniſter be, howſoever affected, be hee never ſo prophane in his heart, without any godly purpoſe or intention, yet to the worthy receiver it ceaſeth not to be a Sacrament, Calvin. in antidot. concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ. 7. can. 11.

Argum. 1. The word of God, with what intention ſoever it be preached, yet may have his effect, and worke faith in the hearer. So Chriſt be preached (ſaith S. Paul) whether under pretence, or ſincerely, I therein joy, Philip. 1.18. Ergo, the Sacraments alſo may have their efficacie, without the intent of the Miniſter, Argum. Lutheri. Philip. 1.

He alleageth alſo how Alexander B. of Alexandria ratified and confirmed the baptiſme which Athanaſius being a child, conferred in ſport upon other children.

Bellarmine anſwereth to the firſt : 1. that there is not the ſame reaſon of the word and the Sacraments : for the word hath not a Sacramentall effect, neither doe the Sacraments ſerve to beget or revive faith, as the word doth, and therefore the word may profit without an intention, ſo cannot the Sacraments.

Contra. Though the word and the Sacraments worke not the ſame particular effect, becauſe in the Sacraments our ſenſes are more lively touched, yet they tend both to the ſame generall end, that as the word preached begetteth faith ; ſo the Sacraments increaſe and nouriſh it (as it followeth in the next ſection to be proved :) wherefore if the word, though the preachers intention bee wanting, may beget faith, why may not the Sacraments likewiſe without the Miniſters intention nouriſh faith?

2. The Jeſuite diſtinguiſheth, Aliud eſt intendere non concionari, aliud intendere concionari, ſed ad malum finem : That it is one thing to intend not to preach, another to have an intention to preach, but for an evill end : of the latter (ſaith hee) ſpeaketh S. Paul, and ſo hee truly is ſaid to baptize, that hath an intention ſo to doe, though to an evill end : cap. 28. reſpon. ad argum. 1.

Contra. 1. It is not likely that a man that is ſober minded, of diſcretion, and well in his wits, ſhould not intend to doe that thing which hee doth : what intention then call you this when a man preacheth, or miniſtreth the Sacraments, to intend not to doe it, whereas the action proceedeth from the intention : and therefore this diſtinction is frivolous. 2. The Miniſter muſt have an intent to doe that which the Church doth : but the Church doth baptize to a good end, therefore his intention by their owne learning, will not ſerve to baptize, unleſſe it bee for the right end. Whereas therefore he anſwereth, that Athanaſius had an intent to baptize indeed, though for a wrong end, namely for ſport : it is both falſe, that he had ſuch an intent to make a Sacrament, being a child, and ſporting himſelfe among his companions ; and if he had, it ſhould have beene inſufficient, becauſe hee propounded not to himſelfe the right end. Wherefore no ſuch intention is neceſſary.

Argum. 2. If the effect of the Sacrament conſiſteth upon the intention of the Miniſter, then ſhould every man be uncertaine whether any thing be wrought in him, or hee have received any benefit by the Sacrament, becauſe hee knoweth not the intent of another mans heart, and ſo ſhould hee be deprived of the ſpirituall comfort, which he might reape by the Sacrament, Calvin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that wee may have a certaine morall and humane, that is, a conjecturall certitude of the Sacrament, though it depend of the Miniſters intention, ibid.

Contra. The Sacraments muſt worke not a conjecturall, but an infallible certitude in us : as it is thus ſhewed : To have Chriſt dwelling in us is a ſacramentalll worke, Iohn 6. 56. as the Papiſts under- John.6.56.
ſtand that place of the Sacramentall eating, but we ought to be ſure of Chriſts dwelling in us : 2. Cor. 2.Cor.13.5.
13. 5. Know yee not your ſelves how that Chriſt Ieſus is in you, &c. Ergo, wee muſt bee ſure of the ſacramentall worke.

Auguſtine ſaith : Sacramentum (Baptiſmi) tam ſacrum eſt, ut nec homicida vel ebrioſo miniſtrante Tractat.5.in.
polluatur : The Sacrament of Baptiſme is ſo holy, that it cannot, either by a murtherer or drunken per- Iohan, ſon miniſtring it be defiled, &c. And I pray you, is it not like to be a good intention, that ſhould enter into the hearts of ſuch leaud and wicked men? Therefore without any good intention, even by the hands of ſuch, may the Sacraments be given.

Synod. Colonienſ. Gratia ſacramentorum non ex ipſa externarum rerum virtute, nec ex merito miniſtri, ſed ex interna & divina operationis virtute æſtimanda eſt : The grace of the Sacraments muſt not bee eſteemed by the vertue of things externall, or the worthineſſe of the Miniſter, but by the inward vertue of the divine operation, &c. But the intention of the Miniſter is no divine thing : Ergo, &c.

We have further evidence from their owne writings : Innocent. 4. cap. Si quis puerum, &c. affirmeth that it is a Sacrament, etiamſi non gerat in mente facere quod facit eccleſia, although the Prieſt doe not thinke in his mind to doe that which the Church doth.

Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. cap. 7. Innocentius decreeth againſt thoſe, qui ſuppreſſis verbis, which ſuppreſſing the words of conſecration, per hoc, quod intendit, &c. doth thinke, by that which hee intendeth, not to provoke God, &c. From whence wee may reaſon thus ; Intention being preſent maketh not a Sacrament ; therfore being abſent, it deſtroyeth it not.

Catharinus a learned Papiſt holdeth no ſuch intention to bee requiſite, Opuſcul de intentione Miniſtri : and he alleageth Thomas in 4. diſtinct. 6. qu. 1. art. 2. q. 1. Non requiri mentalem intentionem Miniſtri, ſed ſufficere expreſſionem verborum, &c. That an intention of the mind is not neceſſary in the Miniſter, but only an expreſſing of the words, wherein is contained the intention of the Church. Of the ſame mind alſo is the Maſter of ſentences, lib. 4. diſt. 13. b.

This doctrine alſo is ſealed : Maſter Bland holy Martyr ; It is a great abſurditie that the intent of the Miniſter conſecrateth, and not the word of God : for ſo ſhould mans intent be ſtronger than Gods word. Againe, becauſe the Sacrament is not the ſame to an unbeleever, which it is to a beleever, the beleever muſt needs have ſomewhat to doe in the conſecration, ſo that all is not in the Miniſters intention : Fox. pag. 1671. col. 2.

Cenſur. orientall.c8. For the Greeke Church, Ieremie the Patriarke ſhall ſpeake, Deus non omnes ordinat, ſed per omnes operatur, ſalutem populi moliens, non illorum intuens merita: Nam ſi per aſina os, &c. God doth not ordaine all, but hee worketh by all, endevouring the ſalvation of his people, not looking to their merits: if God ſpeake by the mouth of an aſſe, and by wicked Balaam to his people, much more for his peoples ſake, will hee ſpeake by an evill Prieſt, &c. If a Prieſt then have no more intention than Balaams aſſe, in his opinion, the ſacred action may have the effect, if it bee miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution.

Harm.ſect.12. pag.389. Confeſſion of Bohemia, c. 11. The vertue and efficacie of the ſacraments doth neither depend on him which doth adminiſter them, whatſoever hee bee, or doth receive them, but it conſiſteth in the inſtitution, &c.

The fourth part, whether the Sacraments be ſeales of the promiſes of God.

The Papiſts.

98.Error. THey utterly deny that the Sacraments bee pledges and ſeales unto us of the promiſes of God, or that thereby our faith is nouriſhed and confirmed, and we aſſured of free remiſſion of ſinnes by the death of Chriſt: neither that the Sacraments were ordained for any ſuch end. Bellar. lib. 1. de Sacram. cap. 14.

Argum. 1. If the Sacraments confirme unto us the promiſes of God in his word, then muſt they of neceſſitie bee more evident, and better knowne unto us, than is the word of God: for that which is leſſe knowne, and not ſo notorious, cannot perſwade us of that, which we have better knowledge of. But ſuch are the Sacraments, which are not ſo evident, being called myſteries of religion, as are the words of God: Ergo, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it is ſtrange to ſee, that you ſhould now contend for the evidence, and plainneſſe of Scripture, which you have locked up from the people, with no other pretence, than becauſe they are hard and obſcure, and dangerous to bee read of the ſimple. Secondly, you doe not well in comparing the word and the Sacraments together: for they cannot bee divorced or ſeparated: for the word giveth life to the Sacraments, the Sacraments againe give lively teſtimonie and witneſſe to the truth of the word. But let this be the queſtion, not whether the writing by it ſelfe, and the ſeale by it ſelfe, are of greateſt force; but whether an inſtrument with a ſeale bee not of greater evidence and ſtrength, than without it: So the word of God, which doth but beat upon the ſenſe of hearing, muſt of neceſſity, not in it ſelfe, but in reſpect of us, worke more effectually, being ſealed by the Sacraments, where we receive inſtruction by two other ſenſes of ours, the ſight, and the taſte.

Argum. 2. If the Sacraments are appointed to bee ſeales of the promiſes of God, for the increaſe and ſtrengthening of our faith, then children ſhould not be baptized at all, becauſe they have no faith to be ſtrengthened, Bellarm. cap. 14. Argum. 4.

Contra. 1. This argument taketh away onely this uſe of the Sacraments in children, ſo that it holdeth notwithſtanding in all other. Secondly, although in children the ſeale goeth before, and righteouſneſſe of faith followeth after, as Circumciſion was to Iſaac, as Auguſtine ſheweth, and they as yet, when they are baptized, have no faith to make preſent uſe of the Sacrament; yet when they come to yeeres of diſcretion, they are provoked and ſtirred up, by the remembrance of the ſeale of faith given in Baptiſme: which was indeed received but once, but the uſe and benefit thereof remaineth all the life long: ſo that this notwithſtanding the Sacraments are ſeales of faith, whether the ſeale goe before faith, or follow after.

Argum. 3. If the Sacraments be ſeales of the grace of God, to every one that receiveth them, then they ſhould many times bee falſe ſignes, when as many unworthy receivers are not made partakers of grace, nor of the promiſes of God, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, yet notwithſtanding are the Sacraments true and certaine ſeales on Gods behalfe, the obſtacle and impediment is in thoſe that beleeve not: The Sunne is a true light to the world, yet to him that wilfully ſhutteth his eyes, it giveth no light: yet is it a true light notwithſtanding. Secondly, by this reaſon, they may make Chriſt a falſe Redeemer of the world, as they make the Sacraments falſe ſeales: for every one is not redeemed by the death of Chriſt, but onely thoſe which beleeve: wherefore faith is required in them, which by the Sacraments will be aſſured of Gods promiſes.

Bellarmine replieth, Fides eſſe debet certa, Faith muſt be certaine, and dependeth not of this condition, ſi homo credat, if a man beleeve: faith muſt be abſolute, not conditionall.

Contra. Firſt, he ſpeaketh moſt abſurdly, that faith muſt not have any ſuch condition, if a man beleeve: as though faith could bee without beleefe: for what is beleefe, but an act of faith? Secondly, faith indeed is not conditionall, but abſolute: but faith is the condition it ſelfe, for ſalvation is not promiſed in Chriſt to any, niſi ſub conditione fidei, but under the condition of faith: as Philip anſwereth to the Eunuch, who ſaid, What letteth me to be baptized? If thou beleeveſt (ſaith he) with all thy heart, thou mayeſt, Acts 8. verſe 37. Here Baptiſme is granted with the condition of faith. Act.8.37.

The

The Proteſtants.

THat the Sacraments are ordained of God, to bee pledges and ſeales of his promiſes made unto us in Chriſt, that as verily as the externall elements are applied to the outward man, ſo our ſoules ſpiritually are refreſhed with an aſſured hope of the remiſſion of our ſinnes in Chriſt, and ſo the Sacraments to be ſeales only of the righteouſneſſe of faith, and not givers or workers of grace in us: it is evident out of the Scripture.

Argum. 1. Abraham received the ſigne of circumciſion, as the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith. Circumciſion then was to Abraham a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, that is, that he was juſtified by faith: Ergo, ſo are all other Sacraments. Rom 4.11.

Rhemiſt. Indeed Circumciſion was a ſeale to Abraham, for he was juſt before, and received this Sacrament, as a ſeale thereof afterward. But it followeth not that it was ſo in all: for in Iſaac his ſon, and ſo conſequently in the reſt, the Sacrament went before, and juſtice followed, annot. Rom. 4 ſect 8. So anſwereth Bellarmine alſo, that unto Abraham onely circumciſion was a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, Lib. 1. de Sacram. cap. 17. And he further ſaith, that the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, and of Gods promiſe or covenant, are not all one.

Anſwer. Firſt, the promiſe of God, and the righteouſneſſe of faith, in effect are all one: for on Gods behalfe, it is a promiſe or covenant, on our part it is called the righteouſneſſe of faith: and thus the Apoſtle taketh them for the ſame, Rom. 4. 13. The promiſe was made to Abraham through the righteouſneſſe of faith. And verſ. 14. If they which are of the law, be heires, faith is made void, and the promiſe of no effect: the nullitie of faith, and of the promiſe is all one. Rom.4. 13,14.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſetteth forth the example of Abraham, to ſhew how all men are juſtified before God, and what is the uſe of the Sacraments in all men: and therefore it is no extraordinary or exempt caſe, but the common caſe of all the faithfull, that righteouſneſſe (ſaith the Apoſtle) might bee imputed to them alſo, Rom. 4. 11. Rom 4 11.

Thirdly, although Iſaac with many other were firſt circumciſed, and after juſtified: yet this is perpetuall, they were no more juſtified by circumciſion, than Abraham, who was juſtified before he was circumciſed, but by faith onely: and therefore the Sacraments are ſeales of the juſtice of faith, whether the juſtice of faith goe before, or follow after.

So Auguſtine ſaith, In Iſaac, qui octavo die circumciſus fuit præceſſit ſignaculum juſtitia fidei, & quoniam patris fidem imitatus eſt, ſecuta eſt in creſcente ipſa juſtitia, cujus ſignaculum in infante præceſſerat: In Iſaac, who was circumciſed the eight day, the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith went before: and becauſe he did follow his fathers faith, as he grew, juſtice it ſelfe followed, the ſeale whereof went before in his infancie: Ergo, circumciſion was a ſeale as well to Iſaac as to Abraham, and ſo conſequently to all. De Baptiſm. contr. Donatiſt lib 4.c.24.

Argum. 2. Geneſ. 17. 11. Circumciſion is called the ſigne of the covenant betweene God and Abraham: but Baptiſme is ſucceeded in the place of Circumciſion: Ergo, it alſo is a ſigne of Gods covenant. Gen.17.11.

Bellarm. It was a commemorative, not a confirmative ſigne; it brought to their memorie the covenant of God, it confirmed not their faith.

Contra. Firſt, verſ. 9. The Lord ſaith, Thou ſhalt keepe my covenant, thou, and thy ſeed after thee &c. Circumciſion then was a ſigne of keeping Gods covenant: but the covenant is not kept by memorie, but by faith: wherefore Circumciſion was not a ſigne to ſtirre up the memorie onely, but alſo to helpe their faith. Secondly, the Apoſtle expounding this place, Rom. 4. 11. ſaith, It was a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith: Ergo, it ſerved not for memorie, but for faith. Your owne Maſter alſo doubteth not to call Circumciſion, ſignaculum juſtitia fidei, the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, lib. 4. diſt. 1. g. Rom.4.11.

Argum. 3. S. Peter ſaith, that in Baptiſme the ſtipulation or taking to witneſſe of a good conſcience before God ſaveth us by the reſurrection of Chriſt, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Whereby we do gather, that Baptiſme is a ſeale unto us of Gods promiſes in Chriſt, being a lively repreſentation of his reſurrection, and a pledge unto us and aſſurance of the remiſſion of ſinnes, without the which our conſcience cannot bee quieted before God, as here the Apoſtle affirmeth.

Bellarmine replieth: firſt, that there is great difference betweene the teſtimonie and covenant of God, and the teſtimonie of a good conſcience: Baptiſme is here ſaid onely to ſeale or confirme the teſtimonie of our conſcience, cap. 17. reſponſ. ad argum. 5.

Contra. To ſeale unto us the promiſe of God, and to ſeale or confirme the peace of conſcience, tend both to the ſame end: for wee cannot bee at peace with God, unleſſe wee bee juſtified by faith, Rom. 5. 1. and faith is an apprehenſion of Gods promiſes. Wherefore in Baptiſme wee cannot have peace of conſcience by the inward worke of the ſpirit, unleſſe by faith wee bee aſſured of Gods promiſes. Rom.5.1.

Secondly, Baptiſme is here ſaid, not to ſeale unto us our juſtification, but actually indeed to ſave and juſtifie us, as the Arke did actually ſave Noah from the deluge. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, if he will ſo ſtrictly urge the figure of the Arke, then it muſt follow, as then Noah was not in hope only, but in act ſaved from the waters, ſo we alreadie are not only aſſured by faith in Baptiſme, but actually ſaved indeed from everlaſting deſtruction, which is contrarie to the Scriptures, which teach that the ſpirit of promiſe, wherewith we are ſealed, is the earneſt peny of our inheritance, untill the redemption: Ephes.1.13. ſo that our deliverance and redemption is not yet accompliſhed, but onely in hope and aſſurance. Secondly, Baptiſme is ſaid to ſave us by the reſurrection of Chriſt, becauſe by faith confirmed in Baptiſme, we have an infallible aſſurance in the death of Chriſt, of our ſalvation: John 5.24. as our Saviour ſaith, Ioh. 5.24. He that beleeveth is paſſed from death to life: hee is as ſure therof by faith, as if it were alreadie done. Wherefore this place of S. Peter, notwithſtanding his objections, doth prove directly that remiſſion of ſinnes is ſealed unto us in Baptiſme: firſt, becauſe it is a lively repreſentation of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, whereby we have remiſſion of ſinnes. Secondly, becauſe we have peace of conſcience before God, as the Jeſuite expoundeth this place, which cannot be without remiſſion of ſinnes.

Rom. 4.11. Theophylact. comment. in hunc locum. For further evidence. 1. Theophylact thus expoundeth that place, Rom. 4.11. Abraham received the ſigne of circumciſion as the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, &c. he received the ſigne of circumciſion for a ſeale, Quo & obſignaret, & prædicaret ſuam ex fide juſtificationem. &c. Whereby he ſealed and profeſſed his juſtification by faith. Censur. Oriental. c.13. Ieremie Patriarke ſheweth the ſame to be the opinion of the moderne Greeke Church: In the divine myſteries God doth not anew inſert theſe bleſſed affections, but preſerveth, reneweth and increaſeth them, Et in fide firmiores, in pietate & charitate ferventiores facit, And maketh us more firme in faith, and in pietie and charitie more fervent, &c.

2. Origen ſaith, Per iſtud ſignaculum juſtitiæ fidei, &c. judicatur: By this ſeale the righteouſneſſe of faith, which Abraham was meet to receive being in uncircumciſion, is ſignified: The Sacraments then ſerve to ſignifie, ſeale and confirme juſtification by faith.

Harm. 1. lect. pag 377. 3 Thus alſo the reformed Churches: latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, c.19. 4 Synod. Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 2. Excitanda eſt fidelium fides & devotio in Deum, ut credentes, ac divinum myſterium intelligentes, ad Dei ac Salvatoris noſtri gratiam participandam accedant: The faith of the faithfull, and their love toward God muſt bee ſtirred up, that beleeving, and underſtanding the divine myſterie, they may come to bee partakers of the grace of God our Saviour, &c. Here wee ſee that by occaſion of celebrating the Sacraments, our faith is more lively ſtirred up.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Iohn Careleſſe Martyr; A Sacrament being miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, is a viſible ſigne of an inviſible grace, and hath the promiſe of Gods mercie annexed to it, Fox. p. 1928. The Sacraments then of the Goſpell are ſeales of Gods promiſes.

The ſecond queſtion, of the efficacie and vertue of the Sacraments.

THis queſtion alſo hath divers parts: Firſt, whether the Sacraments doe give or conferre grace by the worke wrought. Secondly, of the difference of the Sacraments of the old and new Teſtament. Thirdly, whether the Sacraments of the new law doe imprint a ſigne or character in the ſoule, that can never be put out. Fourthly, of the neceſſitie of the Sacraments.

The firſt part, whether the Sacraments of themſelves doe give or conferre grace.

The Papiſts.

99. Error. THe Sacraments give grace, ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, that is, by force and vertue of the worke and word done and ſaid in the Sacrament, Rhemiſt. Act. 22. ſect. 1. So that not faith onely juſtifieth, but the Sacraments alſo, and other workes of religion, Rhemiſt. Rom. 6. ſect. 5. The Sacraments then are immediate inſtruments and efficient cauſes of our juſtification, not mediately, as they nouriſh and increaſe our faith, but properly and in themſelves: Faith in the receiver giveth no efficacie to the Sacrament, but onely taketh away the lets and impediments which might hinder the efficacie of the Sacraments: as the drineſſe of the wood maketh it to burne the better, yet is it no efficient cauſe of the burning, which is the fire onely, but onely a helpe. Thus they compare the Sacrament working of it ſelfe, to fire that burneth, and faith is as the drying of the wood, but a diſpoſing and preparing of the heart, Bellarm. lib. 2. de Sacram. cap. 1.

Act. 22.16. Argum. 1. Be baptized and waſh away thy ſinnes, in calling on the name of the Lord, Act. 22. ver. 16. The Sacrament of Baptiſme doth of it ſelfe waſh away ſinnes, Rhemiſt. And we ſee in S. Iames, that remiſſion of ſinnes is annexed to the unction with oyle, Rhemiſt. 1 Timoth. 4. 14. Ergo, the Sacraments give and conferre grace.

Anſwer. 1. To the firſt wee anſwer, that the text joyneth with the Sacrament, the invocation of the name of God, to the which ſalvation is promiſed, Rom. 10. 13. Whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaved: Wherefore that place maketh nothing for your purpoſe. Secondly, in the other place health of body is promiſed by the gift of miracles, but remiſſion of ſinnes is ſaid to bee obtained by the prayer of the Elders. The prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke, Iam. 5. 15.

Rom.10.13.
Iam.5.15.

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, He hath cleanſed his Church, by the laver of water in the word, Epheſ. 5. 26. Ergo, Baptiſme is an inſtrumentall cauſe of our juſtification; Bellarmine.

Epheſ.5.26.

Anſwer. 1. It is not unuſuall in the Scripture to call the ſigne or Sacrament by the thing ſignified: as Exod. 12. 11. the Paſchall Lambe is called the Paſſe-over, whereas it was but a ſigne and memoriall thereof. So Baptiſme is called, The laver of regeneration, Tit. 3. 5. becauſe it is a ſure ſigne of our regeneration by the holy Ghoſt. Secondly, the Apoſtle in this place expoundeth himſelfe: for hee ſaith, that we are waſhed by water in the word: that is, the outward element doth ſend and referre us to the word and the promiſe of God, whereof it is a ſeale.

Exod.12.11.
Tit 3.5.

Argum. 3. Marke 16. 16. Hee that ſhall beleeve, and be baptiſed, ſhall be ſaved. Here ſalvation is aſcribed to Baptiſme, and not to faith ſealed or confirmed by Baptiſme, for it were very prepoſterous, to put the effect before, and the cauſe after. Bellar. lib. 2. cap. 3. argum. 2.

Matth.16.16.

Anſwer. Firſt, beleefe is ſet before Baptiſme, becauſe they which were then to bee baptized, were adulti, men of ſufficient yeers, in whom faith and confeſſion of their ſinnes was firſt required: as Matth. 3. 6. They were baptized, confeſſing their ſinnes. Secondly, that ſalvation dependeth of faith, not of Baptiſme, it may appeare, Iohn 5. 24. He that beleeveth, is paſſed from death to life: he that beleeveth ſhall be ſaved: and it followeth in this place, Hee that ſhall not beleeve, ſhall bee damned; Hee ſaith not, hee that ſhall not be baptized: Baptiſme is joyned notwithſtanding to beleefe, that no man ſhould neglect or deſpiſe the ordinance of God.

Argum. 4. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith; Except a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, hee cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven, Iohn 3. 3. Here water in Baptiſme is made the cauſe of regeneration and newneſſe of life. Bellarm. ibid.

Iohn 3.3.

Anſwer. Though it bee admitted, that by water here wee may underſtand the Sacrament of Baptiſme, which notwithſtanding doth receive a more fit and proper interpretation, as ſhall afterward be declared more fitly in the queſtion of the neceſſitie of Baptiſme; yet this place enforceth not any thing for the element, ſeeing that the ſpirit is joyned, which giveth efficacie to the water; as Auguſtine ſaith, to whom the Maſter of ſentences ſubſcribeth: Viſibilis ſanctificatio, qua fit ſacramento tenus, ſine inviſibili prodeſſe non poteſt, cùm illa ſit omnis illius utilitas: The viſible ſanctification, which is in the Sacrament onely, doth not profit without the inviſible, wherein conſiſteth all the utilitie of the other. Mag. lib. 4. diſtinct. 4. d.

The Proteſtants.

THe Sacraments have no power to give or conferre grace to the receiver: neither are they immediate inſtruments of our juſtification: inſtrumentall meanes they are to increaſe and confirme our faith in the promiſes of God: of themſelves they have no operation, but as the ſpirit of God worketh by them, our internall ſenſes being moved and quickened by thoſe externall objects. Neither doe wee ſay, that the Sacraments are bare and naked ſignes of ſpirituall graces: but they doe verily exhibit and repreſent Chriſt to as many as by faith are able and meet to apprehend him. So to conclude, looke how the word of God worketh being preached, ſo doe the Sacraments; but the word doth no otherwiſe juſtifie us, but by working faith at the hearing thereof: So Sacraments doe ſerve for the increaſe of our faith: Faith is not as the drineſſe of the wood to the Sacraments as the fire, but rather as the kindling of the fire, which inflameth the wood: ſo faith giveth life to the Sacraments, whereby it ſelfe is inflamed and more increaſed.

Argum. 1. Rom. 1. 17. The juſt ſhall live by faith: Ergo, he liveth not, that is, he is not juſtified by any worke wrought, as by the Sacraments, but only by faith: faith therefore giveth life and efficacie to the Sacraments.

Rom.1.17.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle ſaith not, the juſt onely liveth by faith; wherefore, although he live by faith, he may alſo live by the Sacraments, and other workes.

Contra. Firſt, if life be by faith, and beſide the life of the ſoule, other things are ſuperfluous; then all other meanes to life are ſuperfluous beſide faith: for what elſe is to be deſired but to live? but life is by faith, therfore faith is of it ſelfe ſufficient, becauſe the effect of faith, which is life, is ſufficient: wherefore no other helps are requiſite unto life. Secondly, to live by faith, and for Chriſt to live in us, are all one, as Galath. 2. 20. Thus I live, not I now, but Chriſt liveth in me; and that I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Sonne of God, &c. Wee reaſon thus: The juſt liveth onely by Chriſt; but Chriſt liveth in us onely by faith: for the Apoſtle ſaith, In that I live, I live by faith. Ergo, there is no life but by faith.

Galath 2.20.

Argum. 2. The Apoſtle ſheweth, Rom. 4. 10, 11. that righteouſneſſe was imputed to Abraham by faith, before hee was circumciſed, and that circumciſion was added afterward as a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith: Ergo, as Abraham was not juſtified by circumciſion, but by faith, no more are we by the Sacraments.

Rom.4.10,11.

Bellarmine hath nothing elſe to anſwer, but that this onely was a privilege granted to Abraham, to have circumciſion as a ſeale and teſtinonie of his faith, reſp. ad argum. 3.

Contra. The Apoſtle ſaith contrary, verſ. 11. that he ſhould be the father of them that beleeve, not being circumciſed, that righteouſneſſe might bee imputed to them alſo: the father and the ſonnes are juſtified one and the ſame way: Abraham was not juſtified by circumciſion, but by faith: Ergo. And verſ. 23. it was not written for him only, &c. but for us, &c.

1 Pet. 3. 21. Argum. 3. S. Peter ſaith, Baptiſme ſaveth us, not the putting away the filth of the fleſh, but in that a good conſcience maketh requeſt unto God, by the reſurrection of Chriſt, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Ergo, it is faith in the reſurrection of Chriſt, which worketh in us peace of conſcience, and not the outward waſhing, that ſaveth or juſtifieth.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by the reſurrection is not underſtood faith in the reſurrection, but mention is made thereof, becauſe when we are baptiſed, we doe repreſent the reſurrection of Chriſt, and by Baptiſme doe riſe up to newneſſe of life.

Contra. Firſt, if by the reſurrection of Chriſt nothing elſe were ſignified but the repreſentation of Chriſts reſurrection in Baptiſme; it were an improper ſpeech to ſay, Baptiſme ſaveth by the reſurrection, that is, Baptiſme ſaveth by Baptiſme: wherefore ſeeing that the reſurrection of Chriſt giveth life and efficacie to Baptiſme, it is our faith in the reſurrection of Chriſt, which ſaveth us in Baptiſme. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, not the waſhing of the fleſh ſaveth: Ergo, not the externall act of the Sacrament, but the teſtimonie of a good conſcience; what is that elſe, but the aſſurance of faith, wherby the conſcience is ſettled, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Rom. 5. 1. Rom. 5. 1.

Epheſ. 5. 29. Argum. 4. The Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 5. 26. That he might cleanſe it and ſanctifie it, by the waſhing of water through the word. Here our cleanſing and ſanctifying is not aſcribed to the water, but to the word of God, that is, his gracious promiſe in Chriſt, apprehended by faith, which elſewhere the Apoſtle calleth the word of faith, Rom. 10. 8.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by the word here is not underſtood the word preached, that begetteth faith, but the word of conſecration in the Sacrament, reſp. ad argum. 5.

Rom 10 8. Contra. Firſt, neither doe wee underſtand in this place the word preached, as though there could bee no Baptiſme without a Sermon, nor yet the word of conſecration: for though the conſecratorie word joyned to the element doth make it a Sacrament, yet doth it not make it alwaies a cleanſing and ſanctifying Sacrament, to preſent the receiver without ſpot and blameleſſe, as it followeth in the ſame place, but onely in the faithfull and beleevers. Secondly, the word therefore that cleanſeth, is the word of faith, whereby our hearts are purified, Act. 15. 9. which is begotten in us by the preaching of the word, and confirmed by the Sacraments. Act 15. 9.

In 1. c ad Roman. ſerm. 2. 1. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Nulla prorſus re liberamur niſi per fidem; Wee are delivered by nothing but through faith, &c. The Sacraments then availe not without faith: Ieremie Patriarke ſaith, Fides tua ad omnia valet, &c. Thy faith is availeable for all things: neither can a juſt man profit thee, unleſſe thou beeſt faithfull: Non poſſunt, quæ Deus largitur, veluti ſacerdotali munere perfici, &c. The things which God giveth, cannot bee perfited by the prieſtly function, &c. But the act or marke of the Sacrament dependeth upon the prieſtly function, &c. Cenſur. Oriental. c. 48.

Tractat. 6 in epiſtol. Iovin. 2 Auguſtine thus writeth: Aliud eſt aqua ſacramenti, aliud aqua quæ ſignificat ſpiritum Dei: aqua viſibilis eſt, &c. & abluit corpus, & ſignificat quid ſit in anima: per illum ſpiritum anima mundatur & ſaginatur. The water of the Sacrament is one thing, the water that ſignifieth the ſpirit is another: the one is viſible, and waſheth the fleſh, and ſignifieth what is done in the ſoule: but by the ſpirit the ſoule is cleanſed, &c. The Sacrament of Baptiſme then, by this Fathers ſentence, and ſo all other Sacraments, doe not give grace, but ſignifie only and repreſent grace.

Damianus a Goes Indor. legat. The moderne Africane Church in Æthiopia, though in many things they are very ſuperſtitious, yet herein they thus hold, that their children are upon the ſeventh day baptized and circumciſed: Nullo aut meriti aut fiduciæ reſpectu: Yet with no opinion or reſpect of merit, or any confidence therein.

4 Synod. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 13. Quod præter preces, aſperſiones, & unctiones, aliarumq; rerum ſolennia adhibentur, &c. In that beſide prayer, we uſe ſprinkling, anointing, with other externall rites, therein lieth a myſterie, not that theſe dead things are capable of grace, but when theſe things are viſibly done, Chriſtians are admoniſhed, that God worketh by the inviſible vertue of his ſpirit. The externall things therefore worke not, but are ſignes of the inward working of the ſpirit.

We want not the witneſſe of their owne decrees: Decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 4. c. 145. Melior Centurio nondum baptizatus, Simone baptizato, &c. The Centurion being not yet baptized was better than Simon baptized: for hee before Baptiſme was repleniſhed with the holy ſpirit; the other after Baptiſme was poſſeſſed with an uncleane ſpirit,&c. How then is grace annexed to the Sacrament, when as both hee that wanteth the Sacrament, may have grace; and he that hath the Sacrament, wanteth grace?

Heare alſo an evident teſtimonie of one of your owne writers: Conſtat in omni ſcriptura, jejunam eſſe & languidam operam noſtram, etiam Apoſtolicam, etiam Chriſti, &c. It is apparent throughout the whole Scripture, that our outward indevour is weake, and of no force, yea the labour of the Apoſtles, and of Chriſt himſelfe, unleſſe it bee helped by the inward worke of the ſpirit, &c. *Eſpenc. in 2. The ſecond part, of the difference of the old and new Sacraments.

The Papiſts.

THe ſacrifices and ceremonies of the old law were ſo farre from giving ſpirit, grace, remiſſion, juſtification, and thereupon the entrance into the joyes of heaven, that they were but meere ſhadowes, obſcurely repreſenting the graces of the new Teſtament: whereas the Sacraments inſtituted by Chriſt, containe and give grace, and juſtification, Rhemiſt. Hebr. 10. ſect. 3.

100. Error.

Our country-men of Doway doe give a preeminence to Baptiſme beyond Circumciſion in vertue and efficacie: Baptiſme as an inſtrumentall cauſe remitteth ſinne and juſtifieth, Circumciſion was only a ſigne that grace was given. Againe, Baptiſme imprinteth a character in the ſoule, the other leaveth a marke only in the fleſh: finally, Baptiſme openeth the gate of heaven in vertue of Chriſts paſſion now paſt, which Circumciſion could not before Chriſt ſuffered death,&c. but ſeeing Chriſt was the Lambe of God which was ſlaine from the beginning of the world, heaven was opened to all beleevers in him from the beginning of the world: Let us ſee ſome of their arguments.

Annot. in 17. Geneſ.v.10.

Apoc.13.8.

*Argum.*1. They were but ſhadowes of good things, not the image of the things themſelves, Hebr. 10.1. They were but ſhadowes and repreſentations of the Sacraments of the new Teſtament: Ergo, they had not the ſame efficacie or power, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Heb.10.1.

Anſw. 1. Their Sacraments were onely ſhadowes of Chriſts ſacrifice, not of our Sacraments, though theſe come in the place of the other, and are anſwerable and correſpondent unto them. Secondly, neither doe the Sacraments of the new Teſtament give grace or juſtification, but are onely lively teſtimonies of grace and reconciliation, wrought by the death of Chriſt. Thirdly, their Sacraments were as effectuall to aſſure the Fathers of grace and remiſſion of ſinnes by Chriſt, as our Sacraments are to us.

Argum. 2. The Sacraments of the new law or Goſpell doe give grace or juſtification, ſo did not the Sacraments of the old law: Ergo, there is not the ſame efficacie of them both. Againe, S. Paul calleth them impotent and beggerly rudiments, Galath. 4.9. ſo are not the Sacraments of the Goſpell: *Ergo.Bellarm.lib.*2.de Sacram. cap. 14. *argum.*4.

Galath.4.9.

Anſw. 1. The Sacraments of the new law are no more able by any efficacie in themſelves to juſtifie us, than the Sacraments of the old: it is the propertie of faith onely to juſtifie us, Rom. 3.28. and chap. 5.1. Being juſtified by faith, wee are at peace with God: Where it cannot be anſwered, that faith juſtifieth but in part, for that is perfect juſtification which worketh peace of conſcience in us, but faith bringeth ſuch juſtification: Ergo, it juſtifieth perfectly. Therefore in this reſpect, the Sacraments differ not, becauſe neither of them juſtifie, but are ſeales only of the righteouſneſſe of faith, Rom. 11.4.

Rom.3.28.c.5.1.

Rom.11.4.

To the ſecond place wee anſwer: firſt, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the Sacraments of the law, but of other ceremonious rites, as the obſervation of dayes, moneths, yeers. Secondly, he reſpecteth that preſent time, when ſuch ceremonies ought of right to have ceaſed and given place, the Goſpell being now revealed, and therefore he calleth them beggerly, becauſe of the ſuperſtitious uſe of them, not having in this ſpeech any relation to the originall and firſt inſtitution. Thirdly, they are ſaid to be impotent, not in reſpect of our Sacraments, (and yet we denie not, but that as our Sacraments have a more cleer ſignification, and lively repreſentation of holy things; ſo the other being herein compared, may bee called more impotent) but as they are ſet againſt juſtifying faith: in reſpect whereof our Sacraments are weak and impotent: as S. Paul ſaith, That neither circumciſion is any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but faith working by love, Galath. 5.6. where faith is ſet againſt all other things whatſoever, as being of no value, but weak and impotent to juſtifie, whether appertaining to the circumciſed or uncircumciſed (as there are no Sacraments but belong to either of theſe orders.) Wherefore only faith is availeable and ſtrong to juſtifie, all other things impotent and weak.

Galath.5.6.

Argum. 3. Coloſſ. 2.11. In whom (ſaith the Apoſtle) yee are circumciſed with circumciſion made without hands, &c. through the circumciſion of Chriſt, in that you are buried with him through Baptiſme, &c. Here circumciſion made with hands is oppoſed to circumciſion made without hands, that is Baptiſme: ſo that which could not bee wrought by Circumciſion, is wrought by Baptiſme: Ergo, there is not the ſame effect of Circumciſion and Baptiſme, Bellarm. loc.7.

Anſw. Firſt, Baptiſme is not the circumciſion made without hands, for as much as in Baptiſme there is the miniſterie of the hands of men, as well as in circumciſion: but by circumciſion without hands the Apoſtle underſtandeth, the ſpirituall circumciſion of Chriſt, as hee himſelfe expoundeth it. Secondly, as the externall circumciſion of it ſelfe profited not, ſo alſo the Apoſtle ſaith of Baptiſme, that we are buried with him in Baptiſme, &c. through the faith of the operation of God, &c. So it is faith by the operation of God, not the outward act of Baptiſme: wherefore out of this place no difference can be gathered.

Iſay 1.11. Rom.4.10.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine heapeth up many places together; as Iſay 1.11. What have I to do with the multitude of your ſacrifices? Rom. 4.10. Abraham was counted juſt being uncircumciſed: Galath. 4. they are called beggerly elements: Coloſſ. 2. the ſhadowes of things to come: Ergo, the Sacraments of the old law did not conferre grace.

Anſw. Firſt, the Prophets did not ſimply condemne the ſacrifices, but becauſe they were offered in ſinne and hypocriſie: and therefore the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 1.16. waſh you, make you cleane. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the times of Chriſt, when as the old ſacrifices and ceremonies were out of date: the figures were to ceaſe, the body being come. Thirdly, they are called impotent and weake, not in reſpect of the Sacraments of the Goſpell, but being compared to faith, which is the complement both of their Sacraments and ours. Fourthly, wee grant, that the ſacrifices of the law did not conferre grace, no more doe the Sacraments of the Goſpell: wherefore he hath ſaid nothing, unleſſe hee had proved, that our Sacraments doe conferre grace, which theirs did not.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe hold and conſtantly affirme and teach, that the Fathers in the law received no leſſe the truth and ſubſtance of Chriſt by faith in their Sacraments, than wee doe in ours: although in reſpect of more cleere and lightſome ſignification, our Sacraments doe farre exceed theirs, and ſo alſo may more lively ſtirre up our faith: yet the ſubſtance and effect both of their Sacraments and ours was all one and the very ſame.

1 Cor.10.3.

Argum. 1. S. Paul ſpeaketh plainly, that the Iſraelites did all eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, and all drinke of the ſame ſpirituall rock, and the rock was Chriſt, 1 Cor. 10.3, 4. Therefore Chriſt was exhibited as well to them in their Sacraments, as he is in ours.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, they did all eat the ſame ſpirituall meat amongſt themſelves, not the ſame together with us. So alſo ſay the Rhemiſts, that they amongſt themſelves did all feed of one bread, and drinke of the ſame rock. The Apoſtle ſaith not, that they and we doe eat and drinke of the ſelfeſame meat and drinke, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſw. 1. Yes the Apoſtle ſaith ſo in effect, that there is one and the ſelfeſame ſpirituall meat and drinke to us all, both to them and us: for what doe wee eat and drinke but Chriſt? and ſo do they: The rocke, ſaith the Apoſtle, was Chriſt. Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith ſo expreſly, that they did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, and drinke the ſame ſpirituall cup that we doe: Quicunque in Manna Chriſtum intellexerunt, eundem, quem nos, cibum ſpiritualem manducaverunt: De utilitat. pœnitent. c. 1. They which in the eating of Manna did underſtand Chriſt, did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat that wee doe: Ergo, Chriſt was as well preſent by faith to them in their Sacraments, as he is to us in ours.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Auguſtines meaning is, that their Sacraments and ours had not the ſame efficacie, but the ſame ſignification only, becauſe both theirs and ours doe ſignifie Chriſt.

Contra. 1. He hath not anſwered to this place of Auguſtine, wherein he affirmeth, that they did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat with us: and if they did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, then not in ſignification onely, but in vertue and efficacie their Sacraments are equall with ours. 2. That Chriſt gave the ſame vertue and efficacie to both Sacraments, Bernard plainly affirmeth, Serm. de cœna Domini, or who elſe under his name: Chriſtus pro ſalute mundi ſemel factus eſt hoſtia ſalutaris: omnibus ſacramentis tam precedentibus quam ſubſequentibus virtutem dedit & efficaciam, ut tanta & tali hoſtia ſanctificarentur omnes liberandi per illam: Chriſt to ſave the world was once made an acceptable ſacrifice; to all the Sacraments both going before and following after he gave vertue and efficacie, that all might bee ſanctified with this worthy ſacrifice, for whoſe deliverance it was appointed.

Secondly, Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Manna is called a ſpirituall meat, either in reſpect of the cauſe, which was heavenly and ſpirituall, it being wrought by a miracle; and ſo alſo the water: and therefore the rocke is ſaid to bee Chriſt, becauſe Chriſt was the author, or the efficient cauſe to bring the water out of the rocke: or elſe in reſpect of the ſignification only, not becauſe it had any ſpirituall effect. His reaſons are theſe:

First, the beaſts and birds did drinke of the ſame water, therefore it was not ſpirituall. Secondly, we read of no ſpirituall promiſe made to thoſe that did eat Manna, or drinke of the rock; ſuch as are annexed to the Sacraments. Thirdly, our Saviour ſaith, Your fathers did eat Manna, and are dead, and Moſes did not give you bread from heaven, Iohn 6. Wherefore it was a corporall food onley, not ſpirituall. Iohn 6.32.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, they did all eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, that is, both amongſt themſelves and with us, as wee have ſhewed: but to us it is ſpirituall meat, not in reſpect of the author only, but in regard of the ſpirituall efficacie; therefore it was ſo unto them: And in that the Apoſtle ſaith, they did drinke Chriſt ſpiritually, this betokeneth not the ſignifying only, but the exhibiting alſo of Chriſt unto them: for this were a ſlender eating and drinking of Chriſt, to have him ſignified only and ſhadowed forth, unleſſe they ſhould verily be made partakers of him.

Secondly, we anſwer to his reaſons: to the firſt, that it letteth not the rock to bee ſpirituall drinke, becauſe the cattell alſo did drinke thereof: for your ſelves denie not, but that your conſecrated hoſt may be devoured of mice and dogs: And againe, the cattell alſo and beaſts went thorow the red ſea as well as the Iſraelites, yet was it a Baptiſme to the Iſraelites, though not to the other: and Sacraments are ordained for men, and not for beaſts.

To the ſecond: the Apoſtle ſaith, they dranke of the ſpirituall rock, which rocke is Chriſt: they therefore did ſpiritually drinke Chriſt: but to thoſe that eat and drink Chriſt, ſpirituall promiſes are made, as Ioh. 6. 54. Whoſoever eateth my fleſh, &c. hath eternall life, &c. Wherefore ſo many of them, as by faith did ſpiritually in Manna eat Chriſt, and in the rock drinke Chriſt, were made partakers of this ſpirituall promiſe.

John 6.54.

To the third we anſwer: that Moſes indeed gave but the materiall Manna, but Chriſt concurring with Moſes outward miniſterie, gave himſelfe the true bread from heaven: like as in the Euchariſt, the Miniſter giveth the externall elements, Chriſt working together giveth the ſpirituall grace. Wherefore our Saviour ſaith not, that the Iſraelites had not the true bread, for elſewhere hee teſtifieth, that Moſes wrote of him, Ioh. 6. 46. but that beſide the materiall Manna, whereof their fathers did eat, and yet dyed, there was another ſpirituall and heavenly bread exhibited to all beleevers both of the old and new Teſtament: for unleſſe they alſo under the law had eaten the fleſh of Chriſt and drunk his blood, they could not have had life, as our Saviour ſaith, verſ. 53. but ſome of them had life: Ergo, they did eat the true bread of heaven.

John 6.46.

Argum. 2. In Circumciſion, which was a Sacrament of the old law, there was promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes and of life everlaſting, as there is in Baptiſme: Ergo, there is the ſame vertue and efficacie both of the old and new Sacraments.

That to Circumciſion was annexed the promiſe of life eternall: firſt it appeareth, Gen. 17. 7. where the Lord maketh this covenant with Abraham, whereof Circumciſion was a ſigne, I will bee thy God, and the God of thy ſeed, that is, thy God for ever, not onely in this world, but the next: for our Saviour expoundeth it, Matth. 22. 32. I am the God of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob: he is not God of the dead, but of the living. Secondly, Epheſ. 2. 12. the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Gentiles being uncircumciſed, were ſtrangers from the covenant of promiſe, and had no hope, and were without God in this world: therefore circumciſion was a covenant of Gods everlaſting promiſes.

Gen. 17. 7.
Matth. 22. 32.
Ephes. 2. 12.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that Abraham was reputed righteous and juſt before Circumciſion: Ergo, to him in Circumciſion there was no promiſe made of remiſſion of ſinnes, which hee had alreadie.

Contra. Wee ſay not, that Circumciſion cauſed remiſſion of ſinnes: for then the effect could not goe before the cauſe; but that it was a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 4. 11. and of remiſſion of ſinnes: and ſo it may bee, whether righteouſneſſe goe before circumciſion, as in Abraham, or follow after, as in Iſaac. So wee read, Act. 10. 47. that the holy Ghoſt went before, and then Baptiſme followed: the thing ſignified appeared firſt, and then the ſigne or ſeale was added: Can any man forbid water (ſaith S. Peter) that theſe ſhould not bee baptized, which have received the holie Ghoſt, as well as we?

Act. 10. 47.

Secondly, ſaith Bellarmine, the Lord in ſaying, I will be thy God, and of thy ſeed, maketh no promiſe of everlaſting ſalvation, but of temporall protection peculiar to that people, both to the good and bad: and the ſaying of Chriſt, hee is not God of the dead, &c. doth but implie that God is God not of thoſe that are not, but of thoſe that are, whether they be good or bad.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle by ſeed underſtandeth Chriſt: hee ſaith not, to thy ſeeds, as ſpeaking of many, but to thy ſeed, as of one, even Chriſt, Galath. 2. 16. wherefore this promiſe, I will be thy God, and of thy ſeed, hath a ſpirituall relation to Chriſt. Secondly, this covenant appertained not to the wicked, but is applied onely by the Apoſtle to the faithfull, Hebr. 13, 5. He hath ſaid, I will not leave thee, nor forſake thee. Thirdly, to be God of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, is to bee God not onely of thoſe which are, but, that are living with God: for if God bee not God of the dead in reſpect of this life, how much leſſe of thoſe that are dead eternally? and the Apoſtle ſpeaketh evidently, Epheſ. 2. 15. of whom is named the whole familie in heaven and earth, that God doth onely name and call himſelfe by thoſe, whether living or departed, that are of his familie.

Galath. 2. 16.
Heb. 13. 5.
Epheſ. 2. 15.

Thirdly, it was not the want of Circumciſion, but the want of faith, that made the Gentiles ſtrangers from the covenant: for Iob and Cornelius were not circumciſed, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. So may it be ſaid of Baptiſme, that many which have it not among the Turkes and Jewes, if the contemne it not, may by Gods extraordinary mercy be ſaved, if they beleeve; yet Baptiſme hath the promiſe of life eternall: ſo though ſome uncircumciſed might beleeve, yet ordinarily the circumciſion had the promiſe of life and ſalvation in Chriſt.

Argum. 3. Levit. 5. verſ. 12, 13. He ſhall bring his offering to the Prieſt, &c. who ſhall make attonement for him, as touching his ſinne, and it ſhall bee forgiven him: Ergo, the ſacrifices of the law had

is Baptiſme : ſo that which could not bee wrought by Circumciſion, is wrought by Baptiſme : Ergo, there is not the ſame effect of Circumciſion and Baptiſme, Bellarm. loc. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, Baptiſme is not the circumciſion made without hands, for as much as in Baptiſme there is the miniſterie of the hands of men, as well as in circumciſion : but by circumciſion without hands the Apoſtle underſtandeth, the ſpirituall circumciſion of Chriſt, as hee himſelfe expoundeth it. Secondly, as the externall circumciſion of it ſelfe profited not, ſo alſo the Apoſtle ſaith of Baptiſme, that we are buried with him in Baptiſme, &c. through the faith of the operation of God, &c. So it is faith by the operation of God, not the outward act of Baptiſme : wherefore out of this place no difference can be gathered.

Iſay 1.11. Rom.4.10. Argum. 4. Bellarmine heapeth up many places together ; as Iſay 1. 11. *What have I to do with the multitude of your ſacrifices? Firſt, the Prophets did not ſimply condemne the ſacrifices, but becauſe they were offered in ſinne and hypocriſie : and therefore the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 1. 16. waſh you, make you cleane. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the times of Chriſt, when as the old ſacrifices and ceremonies were out of date: the figures were to ceaſe, the body being come. Iohn 6.54.

To the third we anſwer: that Moſes indeed gave but the materiall Manna, but Chriſt concurring with Moſes outward miniſterie, gave himſelfe the true bread from heaven: like as in the Euchariſt, the Miniſter giveth the externall elements, Chriſt working together giveth the ſpirituall grace. Wherefore our Saviour ſaith not, that the Iſraelites had not the true bread, for elſewhere hee teſtifieth, that Moſes wrote of him, Ioh. 6. 46. but that beſide the materiall Manna, whereof their fathers did eat, and yet dyed, there was another ſpirituall and heavenly bread exhibited to all beleevers both of the old and new Teſtament: for unleſſe they alſo under the law had eaten the fleſh of Chriſt and drunk his blood, they could not have had life, as our Saviour ſaith, verſ. 53. but ſome of them had life: Ergo, they did eat the true bread of heaven.

Iohn 6.46.

Argum. 2. In Circumciſion, which was a Sacrament of the old law, there was promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes and of life everlaſting, as there is in Baptiſme: Ergo, there is the ſame vertue and efficacie both of the old and new Sacraments.

That to Circumciſion was annexed the promiſe of life eternall: firſt it appeareth, Gen. 17. 7. where the Lord maketh this covenant with Abraham, whereof Circumciſion was a ſigne, I will bee thy God, and the God of thy ſeed, that is, thy God for ever, not onely in this world, but the next: for our Saviour expoundeth it, Matth. 22. 32. I am the God of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob: he is not God of the dead, but of the living. Secondly, Epheſ. 2. 12. the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Gentiles being uncircumciſed, were ſtrangers from the covenant of promiſe, and had no hope, and were without God in this world: therefore circumciſion was a covenant of Gods everlaſting promiſes.

Gen. 17. 7.
Matth. 22. 32.
Epheſ. 2. 12.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that Abraham was reputed righteous and juſt before Circumciſion: Ergo, to him in Circumciſion there was no promiſe made of remiſſion of ſinnes, which hee had alreadie.

Contra. Wee ſay not, that Circumciſion cauſed remiſſion of ſinnes: for then the effect could not goe before the cauſe; but that it was a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 4. 11. and of remiſſion of ſinnes: and ſo it may bee, whether righteouſneſſe goe before circumciſion, as in Abraham, or follow after, as in Iſaac. So wee read, Act. 10. 47. that the holy Ghoſt went before, and then Baptiſme followed: the thing ſignified appeared firſt, and then the ſigne or ſeale was added: Can any man forbid water (ſaith S. Peter) that theſe ſhould not bee baptized, which have received the holie Ghoſt, as well as we?

Act. 10. 47.

Secondly, ſaith Bellarmine, the Lord in ſaying, I will be thy God, and of thy ſeed, maketh no promiſe of everlaſting ſalvation, but of temporall protection peculiar to that people, both to the good and bad: and the ſaying of Chriſt, hee is not God of the dead, &c. doth but implie that God is God not of thoſe that are not, but of thoſe that are, whether they be good or bad.

Contra, Firſt, the Apoſtle by ſeed underſtandeth Chriſt: hee ſaith not, to thy ſeeds, as ſpeaking of many, but to thy ſeed, as of one, even Chriſt, Galath. 2. 16. wherefore this promiſe, I will be thy God, and of thy ſeed, hath a ſpirituall relation to Chriſt. Secondly, this covenant appertained not to the wicked, but is applied onely by the Apoſtle to the faithfull, Hebr. 13, 5. He hath ſaid, I will not leave thee, nor forſake thee. Thirdly, to be God of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, is to bee God not onely of thoſe which are, but, that are living with God: for if God bee not God of the dead in reſpect of this life, how much leſſe of thoſe that are dead eternally? and the Apoſtle ſpeaketh evidently, Epheſ. 2. 15. of whom is named the whole familie in heaven and earth, that God doth onely name and call himſelfe by thoſe, whether living or departed, that are of his familie.

Galath. 2. 16.
Heb. 13. 5.
Epheſ. 2. 15.

Thirdly, it was not the want of Circumciſion, but the want of faith, that made the Gentiles ſtrangers from the covenant: for Iob and Cornelius were not circumciſed, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. So may it be ſaid of Baptiſme, that many which have it not among the Turkes and Jewes, if the contemne it not, may by Gods extraordinary mercy be ſaved, if they beleeve; yet Baptiſme hath the promiſe of life eternall: ſo though ſome uncircumciſed might beleeve, yet ordinarily the circumciſion had the promiſe of life and ſalvation in Chriſt.

Argum. 3. Levit. 5. verſ. 12, 13. He ſhall bring his offering to the Prieſt, &c. who ſhall make attonement for him, as touching his ſinne, and it ſhall bee forgiven him: Ergo, the ſacrifices of the law had promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes by the force of Chriſts death repreſented in the ſame.

Levit. 5. 12, 13.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the ſacrifices did purge the offerers ſinnes onely in reſpect of the temporall puniſhment, and ſome legall uncleanneſſe, but they did not cleanſe them ſimply before God in reſpect of everlaſting puniſment: and this may appeare, for that the ſacrifices were not ordained for all ſinnes, but of ignorance only committed againſt the ceremonies of the law. Bellarm. cap. 17. reſp. ad argum. 2.

Levit.6.2,3. Contra. Firſt, it is falſe, that the ſacrifices ſerved only to purge ſinnes of ignorance, for Levit.6.2.3. there are ſacrifices preſcribed for the ſinnes of deceit, robberie, oppreſſion, falſe ſwearing, which were voluntarie ſinnes, and not of ignorance.

Secondly, it is alſo untrue, that the temporall puniſhment was onely pardoned, and not the ſinnes truly remitted. Firſt, where the Prieſt is ſaid to make attonement, the word is כפר caphar: which ſignifieth to reconcile, to remove wrath: and it is uſed,

Pſal.79.9. Pſal. 79. 9. Be mercifull unto our ſinnes, &c. will he now ſay, that the Church here prayeth onely for the mitigation of temporall puniſhment? wherefore if the Prieſt made attonement for them, and Gods wrath was appeaſed for their ſinne, then was Levit.5.5. it verily remitted. Secondly, there is confeſſion of ſinne required, Levit. 5. 5. and reſtitution, Levit.

Levit.6.4. 6. 4. but where there is confeſſion, and reſtitution, there is repentance; and where repentance is, there is remiſſion of the ſinne it ſelfe before God.

Coloſſ.2.11. Argum. 4. Coloſſ. 2. 11. S. Paul ſaith, In whom ye are circumciſed by circumciſion made without hands, by putting off the ſinfull body of the fleſh, through the circumciſion of Chriſt, &c. Here the Apoſtle affirmeth, that the ſpirituall circumciſion, which did accompanie the ſacramentall circumciſion, in them that did beleeve, was effectuall to the putting off the body of ſinne: Wee ſay not, that the externall act of circumciſion only had this effect, but the inward grace in the circumciſion of the heart in all true Iſraelites working with the circumciſion of the fleſh, was available to the remiſſion of ſinnes:

Rom.2.28. as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 2.28. He is not a Iew, which is one outward, neither is that circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh, &c.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that in circumciſion not the whole body, but one part onely was circumciſed, and therefore it did not ſerve to the putting off the whole body of ſinne.

Contra. Neither when Chriſt waſhed Peter, did hee waſh any thing but his feet, though Peter Iohn 13.10. would have had his hands and head alſo waſhed: yet was the waſhing of his feet ſufficient, Iohn 13. 10. ſo though in circumciſion the outward ſigne only touched one part, yet the inward circumciſion thereby repreſented, was ſufficient to purge the whole inward man.

Catech.10. 1 Cyril by that place of the Apoſtle, they dranke of the ſpirituall rocke, and the rocke was Chriſt, proveth that Chriſt appeared and was preſent with Moſes: and he inferreth, Cernis, quod & Prophetæ tuus videbant Chriſtum: You ſee, that even the Prophets did ſee Chriſt, &c. and the people did alſo drinke of Chriſt: for the rocke was Chriſt, whereof they dranke.

Lib.10.in 15. 2 Origen ſaith, Spiritualem potum biberunt, bibentes de ſequente Petra, quæ erat Chriſtus: They cap.ad Rom. did drinke ſpirituall drinke, drinking of the rock which followed them, which rock was Chriſt. Yet more evidently in another place he ſaith: Quamvis nec illis potuerit defuiſſe perfectio veniens ex fide: Although that neither perfection comming of faith was wanting unto them: for the things which we beleeve to have beene done, they with greater expectation did beleeve more to come: there-

Hom.2. in Cantic. fore as ſince the comming of Chriſt the faith of things paſt doth confirme us; ſo the faith of things to come brought them ad ſummum perfectionis, to the height of perfection, &c.

Harm. p.307. 3 Latter confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 17. They are all joyned (both in the old and new Teſtament) under one head, and by faith are all partakers of one and the ſame ſpirituall meat and drinke.

4 Wee want not here their owne witneſſe againſt themſelves, Decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 2. cap. 81. Inquit Apoſtolus (omnes eandem eſcam ſpiritualem manducarunt) &c. The Apoſtle ſaith, they did all eat the ſame ſpirituall meat: the ſame ſpirituall meat indeed, but another corporall, becauſe they did eat Manna, and wee ſome other thing: and hee addeth, and they all dranke the ſame ſpirituall drinke; they one thing, and we another; ſed ſpecie viſibili, but in outward ſhew; quod tamen idem eſt virtute ſpirituali, which is notwithſtanding the ſame in the ſpirituall vertue. This Canon affirmeth, that they did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, not amongſt themſelves, but with us, which though it were in ſhape divers, yet in vertue is the ſame: Ergo, there is the ſame efficacie and vertue, both of the old and new Sacraments.

The Maſter of ſentences alleageth thus out of Gregorie: Quod apud nos valet aqua Baptiſmi, hoc egit apud veteres, vel pro parvulis ſola fides, &c. That which the water of Baptiſme is to us, faith only was in time paſt to children, and to the elder ſort, the vertue of the ſacrifices, &c. or the myſterie of Circumciſion, lib. 4. diſtinct. 1. g. If Circumciſion was availeable then, as Baptiſme is now, then the vertue and ſubſtance of the Sacraments was the ſame.

Likewiſe Innocentius 3. thus decreeth, Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 42. c. 3. Originalis culpa remittebatur per Circumciſionis myſterium, & damnationis periculum vitabatur: Originall ſinne was remitted by the myſterie of Circumciſion, and the perill of damnation avoided, &c. Here is an evident teſtimonie of one of their moſt learned Popes, that remiſſion of ſinnes was had by the Sacraments of the old law.

Further, it is the opinion of ſome of their beſt Schoolemen, that circumciſion did conferre juſtification, ex opere operato, by the very worke that was wrought; which efficacie the reſt of theirs aſcribe only to the Sacraments of the new Teſtament; thus holdeth Alexander, Bonaventure, Scotus, Gabriel: ſo that in their opinion, betweene Circumciſion a Sacrament of the old Teſtament, and the reſt of the Sacraments of the new, there was no difference: yea, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, it is Communis ſententia Theologorum, the common ſentence of Popiſh Divines, that the old ſacraments did onely juſtifie ex opere operantis, by the worke of the doer, that is, the faith and devotion of the receiver: and the new Sacraments doe no more; for though we truly hold that wee are juſtified onely by faith, not by the Sacraments, yet by them is juſtifying faith confirmed; and without the faith of the receiver, they are altogether unprofitable: for S. Paul biddeth every man to examine himſelfe before, 1 Cor. 11.28. which examination is to prove whether they be in the faith, 2 Cor. 13.5. Wherefore neither old nor new Sacraments are profitable without faith. 1 Cor 11 28. 2 Cor.13 5.

See alſo this doctrine ſealed: Iohn Frith holy Martyr; They did all eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, and did drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, all one ſpirituall thing, but not all one corporall matter: for they did eat Manna, and we another thing, but the ſelfe ſame ſpirituall thing, that we doe, Fox. pag. 1033. P 942.2.50.

The third part, of the Character or badge, which (as they ſay) is imprinted in the ſoule by the Sacraments.

The Papiſts.

First, there is a certaine ſeale and ſpirituall marke or badge imprinted by the Sacraments in the ſoules of the receivers, which can never bee blotted out, neither by ſinne, apoſtaſie, or hereſie. 101. Error. Secondly, but it perpetually remaineth for the cogniſance of their Chriſtendome, and diſtinction from others, that were never of Chriſts fold, by which alſo they are conſecrated and deputed to God. Thirdly, this indeleble Character is given by three Sacraments onely, Baptiſme, Confirmation, Orders; which is the cauſe they are not reiterable, nor ever to bee received but once, Rhemiſt. annot. 2. Corin. 1. ſect. 7. Trident. Concil. ſeſſ. 7. can. 9. Bellar. lib. 2. de ſacram. cap. 19. So they of Doway ſay that Baptiſme imprinteth a Character in the ſoule. Annot. in 17. Gen. 5. 10.

Argum. 1. 2 Corinth. 1.22. He hath ſealed us, and given the earneſt of the ſpirit into our hearts. Likewiſe, Epheſ. 1.13. Ye were ſealed with the holy ſpirit of promiſe. Epheſ. 4.30. Grieve not the ſpirit of God, by whom yee are ſealed againſt the day of redemption. This ſealing is nothing elſe, as they ſay, but an imprinting in the ſoule of this indeleble marke or character.

Anſw. First, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly of the ſpirituall and inward ſeale of the ſpirit of God, whereby the promiſes of God are ſealed and aſſured unto us, whereof Baptiſme is an outward ſeale in our bodies. Secondly, it is an abſurd thing to hold, that hee that hath utterly and maliciouſly renounced Chriſtianitie, and blaſphemed Chriſt himſelfe, ſhould ſtill retaine this Character of Baptiſme, as cogniſance of his Chriſtendome. Thirdly, Baptiſme is not reiterable, that is, to bee iterated or repeated, not becauſe it leaveth an indeleble character in the mind of the baptized, which is but a meere device and fancie: but becauſe, as it ſufficeth once to bee borne in the fleſh, ſo once to bee borne againe, and to be regenerated by the ſpirit, (of the which regeneration, Baptiſme is a ſeale and pledge) it is ſufficient. As for confirmation, and orders, we acknowledge them to be no Sacraments, and therfore to have no ſuch indeleble character. 2 Cor.1.22. Epheſ.1.13. Epheſ.4.30.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that theſe places cannot bee underſtood of the ſealing or aſſuring of Gods promiſes by his ſpirit in our hearts in the Sacrament: firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, he hath ſealed us, not ſealed the promiſes.

Contra. First, in the ſecond place, the Apoſtle ſaith, wee are ſealed with the ſpirit of promiſe: to bee ſealed with the promiſe, and to have the promiſe ſealed unto us, are all one. Secondly, in the firſt place, where he ſaith, he hath ſealed us, a little before, he ſaid, in him the promiſes of God are yea, and Amen, verſe 20. What is that elſe, but the promiſes are ſealed in him?

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, after you beleeved, you were ſealed, Epheſ. 1. that is, in Baptiſme, which commeth after faith, Bellar. cap. 20.

Cont. First, here Bellarm. leaveth the Vulgar text, which readeth, credentes, beleeving, and preſſeth the Greeke word of the preter tenſe, πιστεύσαντες, having beleeved: ſo inconſtant are they, ſometime preferring the Latine, ſometime the Greeke. Secondly, though Baptiſme came after faith then, it is miniſtred before faith now. Thirdly, it followeth not: this ſeale was after faith: Ergo, in Baptiſme: for upon their very beleeving they were ſealed. Fourthly, wee denie not, but that Baptiſme is a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as S. Paul ſpeaketh of Circumciſion, becauſe thereby the Promiſes are ſealed to us: yet there is no ſuch character in Baptiſme, as there was in Circumciſion.

Now further, that theſe places cannot bee underſtood of any ſuch character, or marke, or infuſed, inherent, or imprinted qualitie in the ſoule by their three Sacraments, it may thus appeare.

Firſt, 2 Cor. 1.22. As wee are ſaid to bee ſealed, ſo alſo are wee anointed: but our anointing, or 2 Cor.1.22.

1 Iohn.2.20. ointment, is the holy Ghoſt, 1 Iohn 2. 20. as the Rhemiſts themſelves expound it; Ergo, the ſame is alſo the ſeale.

Secondly, Hee hath ſealed us, and given the earneſt of his ſpirit in our hearts: the ſame is both the ſeale, and the earneſt, the ſpirit of God is our earneſt untill the day of redemption: Ergo, alſo the ſeale.

Epheſ.4.30. Epheſ.1.14. Thirdly, Epheſ. 4. 30. We are ſealed to the day of redemption: which is not in Baptiſme, as Bellarmine fondly expoundeth, taking of for in, and redemption for Baptiſme: for this ſeale none have, but they for whom the inheritance is purchaſed, Epheſ. 1. 14. but all that are baptized ſhall not be ſaved: Ergo, there is no ſuch ſeale in Baptiſme.

Iohn 1.33. Fourthly, as we are ſealed, ſo doe we ſeale: Iohn 1. 33. He that receiveth his teſtimonie, hath ſealed that God is true: If by being ſealed wee receive a Character, then by ſealing wee give a character: theſe places then ſerve not his turne.

Acts 19.4,5. Argum. 2. They which were baptized with Iohns baptiſme, were afterward baptized againe, Act. 19. 4, 5. And this was the reaſon thereof, becauſe Iohns baptiſme did not imprint an indeleble character in the ſoule, as Chriſts baptiſme did, Bellar. cap. 22. reſp. ad 3. ration.

Anſw. Firſt, it cannot bee proved, that the Apoſtles baptized thoſe that had received Iohns baptiſme, neither hath that place, Acts 19. 5. any ſuch meaning: ſee the full anſwer for this afterward, Contr. 12. of Baptiſme, qu. 7. arg. 2. Papiſtar. Secondly, though that after Iohns baptiſme they had beene baptized againe, it followeth not that it was becauſe of any ſuch character. Hierome giveth another reaſon: Ioannis baptiſma imperfectum, &c. Iohns baptiſme was imperfect, and did not give remiſſion of ſinnes, therefore they were baptized againe with Iohns baptiſme, adverſ. Luciferian. Though this be an error alſo, yet it is againſt them.

The Proteſtants.

THat by Baptiſme and ſome other ſacraments, there is imprinted in the ſoule a marke, or character, which can never bee blotted out, no not by Apoſtaſie; and that this is the cauſe why Baptiſme cannot be iterated, we hold it to be a meer device, and invention of men.

Heb.6.6. Argum. 1. Where the end and fruits of Baptiſme are utterly extinguiſhed, there cannot remaine any character, or badge, or ſigne of Baptiſme: The fruits of Baptiſme are repentance, and regeneration by the ſpirit: But it is poſſible for theſe, in ſome that are baptized, to be utterly loſt, as in them that fall away by Apoſtaſie, they cannot bee renewed by repentance. Hebr. 6. 6. Therefore in ſuch there is not to be found any character, badge or ſigne of Baptiſme, which they have utterly renounced: onely the memoriall thereof is kept before God, they being ſo much worſe than they which were never baptized, becauſe they have wilfully rejected their profeſſion.

Why Baptiſme is not iterated. Argum. 2. The cauſe why Baptiſme is but once to bee given, is not as they alleage, becauſe it leaveth ſuch a ſure marke behind, ſo deeply died in the ſoule, that it cannot bee blotted out. There are other cauſes that come neerer the truth: Firſt, as God is but one, who maketh a covenant with us in Baptiſme; and the faith but one, into the which we are entred by that Sacrament: ſo Baptiſme is one and the ſame, Epheſ. 4. 5. and as it ſufficeth once to be borne in the fleſh, ſo once to bee regenerated by the ſpirit in Baptiſme. Secondly, the inſtitution of God is another cauſe, who hath appointed the other Sacrament often to be received, 1 Corinth. 11. 25. But for the iteration of Baptiſme, wee have no ſuch commandement. Thirdly, Baptiſme commeth in the place of Circumciſion: as that was but once miniſtred, ſo likewiſe it muſt bee in the other. Fourthly, in Baptiſme God maketh a perpetuall covenant with us, which he alwaies remembreth; and therefore need not to bee put in mind, by the often uſing of that Sacrament. Theſe and the like reaſons may be alleaged, why Baptiſme is not often to be required: and not that, which by them without any ground is pretended.

Epheſ. 4 5. 1 Cor.11.25.

Lib de Baptiſ. Tertullian ſheweth another reaſon, why Baptiſme is not iterated: ſemel lavacrum inimus, ſemel delicta diluuntur, quia iterari, &c. non oportet, ceterum Iſrael quotidie lavat, quia quotidie inquinatur; Wee once come to the lavacre, ſins are once waſhed away, becauſe they muſt not be iterated, but Iſrael waſhed daily, becauſe they are dayly polluted, &c. Baptiſme then is not repeated, to ſignifie that they which are baptized ſhould not returne to their old ſinnes: Clictoveus giveth another reaſon, why baptiſme is not to bee iterated, quia typum gerit mortis Chriſti, quam ſemel pro nobis pertulit, becauſe it beareth a type of Chriſt, which he once only ſuffered for us.

Anuot. in Damaſcen. lib. 4. de fid. c. 5

Bellarmine thus objecteth againſt the former firſt reaſons: Againſt the firſt, that Baptiſme is not iterated becauſe it is our ſpirituall birth: Firſt, ſaith he, wee are alſo borne by the word, yet ſermons are often repeated. Secondly, though our carnall birth cannot be iterated, yet our ſpirituall may, as in the reſurrection: for as the bodily death is but once, the ſpirituall often; ſo the ſpirituall birth may bee renued, as the carnall cannot.

Rom.10.17. Tit.3.5. Contra. Firſt, though faith be begotten by the word, Rom. 10. 17. and we by faith are made the children of God, yet becauſe Baptiſme is a ſeale and confirmation of this faith, it is properly called in Scripture, the lavacre of regeneration or new birth, Tit. 3. 5. Secondly, the reſurrection is a regeneration of the bodie, not of the ſoule, and therefore improperly alleaged. Thirdly, as the bodie dieth but once, no more doth the ſoule, when it finally falleth away from God, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh Hebr. 6. 6. That if they fall away, they cannot be renued by repentance: but as the body once borne, may be in danger of death by ſickneſſe, and not die; ſo the ſoule may be weakned and decay by ſinne, and ſo be renewed: as the Apoſtle ſaith, our inward man is renewed daily, 2 *Corin.*4 16. but the ſoule once begotten unto God, cannot die by ſinne, becauſe his ſeed remaineth in him, neither can he ſinne, that is, unto death, becauſe he is borne of God, 1 Iohn 3. 9. Here the Apoſtle evidently ſpeaketh, that the ſpirituall birth cannot be loſt.

2 Cor.4. 6.
1 Iohn 3 9.

To the ſecond he objecteth, that as in Scripture it is not written, that Baptiſme ſhould be iterated; ſo neither it is found that it ſhould not.

Contra. Firſt, in that the often receiving of the Euchariſt is commanded, 1 Cor. 11. 25. but no ſuch charge given of Baptiſme, it is evident that the holy Ghoſt in this reſpect hath ſet a difference betweene them: if the Scripture had beene ſilent as touching both, there had beene ſome colour in Bellarmines objection, but now there is none. Secondly, it is untrue that the Scripture forbiddeth not Baptiſme to be iterated: for Iohn 13. 10. our Saviour ſaith, that hee which hath his feet waſhed, that is, is regenerate in his affections, whereof Baptiſme is a ſeale, need not to be waſhed, but more evidently, Hebr.6.6. He that falleth away, cannot be renued by repentance: that is, as the Rhemiſts expound it, it is impoſſible to be baptized againe. Annot. in hunc locum.

Iohn 13 10.
Hebr 6.6.

Leo alſo in his decree proveth thus out of Scripture, that Baptiſme is not to be iterated: Lavacrum ſemel initum nulla iteratione violetur: The lavacre once entred unto muſt not by any iteration bee violated, the Apoſtle thus ſaying, one God, one faith, one Baptiſme: decr.p.2.cauſ.1 q 1.c.51.

Thirdly, he objecteth that circumciſion was therefore not repeated, becauſe it left a character or ſcarre in the fleſh, as Baptiſme doth in the ſoule, which print of circumciſion was a cogniſance betweene the Jewes and the Gentiles, Bellarm.cap.22.

Contra. The outward marke in the fleſh by circumciſion, was not that marke whereby the Jewes were diſcerned, but the circumciſion of the heart: Firſt, becauſe circumciſion was a ſigne betweene the Lord and them, Gen. 17. 11. But the Lord looketh to the heart, 1 Sam. 16.7. not to the outward appearance. Secondly, the women amongſt the Jewes were counted among the circumciſed, and diſcerned from heathen women: but they were not circumciſed in the fleſh, therefore it was the inward circumciſion whereby they were ſanctified, as by their faith: this your Maſter confeſſeth, lib. 4. diſtinct. 3. g. Thirdly, the marke in the fleſh, being in the ſecret parts, and remote from the eye, could bee no cogniſance to know a Jew by: If the fleſhly marke were any thing, it ſhould have beene in the hand, or forehead; as the Angell is commanded, to marke them in the foreheads, Ezech. 9.4. Fourthly, the Apoſtle ſaith, hee is not a Jew, that is one outward: neither is that circumciſion which is in the fleſh, Rom. 2.28. wherefore the fleſhly marke was no cauſe of the not iterating of circumciſion.

Geneſ.17.11.
Rom.2.18.

Fourthly, to the firſt reaſon he objecteth, that the perpetuitie of Gods covenant made in Baptiſme can be no cauſe why it is not iterated: Firſt, becauſe God maketh no covenant in Baptiſme, for a covenant is made betweene two conſenting: but children in Baptiſme being without faith cannot conſent. Secondly, God covenanteth as well with us in the word, and in the Euchariſt; yet that is often preached, the other often received. Thirdly, Gods covenant is alwaies conditionall; ſo to him that keepeth not the condition it is not perpetuall.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmines firſt reaſon is ridiculous: for though children in their owne perſon cannot conſent, yet are they within the covenant, which God maketh to us and our ſeed, Gen. 17. Otherwiſe Gods covenant ſhould bee weaker than the covenant of men, who do make covenants for themſelves and their ſeed: as David and Ionathan, 1 Sam 20.42. And againe, if circumciſion were a ſigne of Gods covenant, how much more Baptiſme which is more excellent? and S. Peter perſwadeth the Jewes to be baptized, becauſe *the promiſe was made to them and their ſeed, Act.*2.39. therefore it is great boldneſſe in him to deny ſo manifeſt a truth, that there is no covenant made in Baptiſme.

1 Sam 20 42.
Acts 2.39.

Secondly, there is difference betweene the writing of a covenant, and the ſealing, as Nehem. 9.38. the people make a covenant with God, they both write it and ſeale it: ſo the word of God is as the writing of the covenant, and therefore is repeated; Baptiſme is as the ſure ſeale that remaineth inviolable: Likewiſe God covenanteth with us in the Euchariſt: but it is a divers covenant from that in Baptiſme: for this is the covenant of adoption, which once ſufficeth; the other of continuall feeding and preſervation, and therefore may bee often uſed; as in circumciſion there was a covenant made, whereby the Iſraelites became his people, in the paſſeover a promiſe and covenant of protection and preſervation, Exod. 12.27.

Nehem.9 38.
Exod.12.27.

Thirdly, Gods covenant in it ſelfe remaineth ſtedfaſt, though men be deceitfull: and therefore it is called a covenant of ſalt, 2 Chro. 13. 5. ſo that God doth not make a new covenant, when men returne unto him, but remembreth the old, as Exod. 31. 13. Remember Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob, to whom thou ſwareſt, &c. And Saint Paul thus reaſoneth, Epheſ. 4. 5. One Lord, one faith, one Baptiſme, from the conſtancy of God, to the ſtableneſſe of Baptiſme: wherefore Bellarmine hath babbled much, and ſaid little: other arguments might alſo bee adjoyned, as theſe.

2 Chron.13.5.
Exod.31.13.
Epheſ 4.5.

Argum. 3. Circumciſion under the law was the ſame in effect which Baptiſme is under the goſpell: ſo the Maſter of ſentences confeſſeth, lib. 4. diſtinct. 4 g. but circumciſion left no indeleble character in the ſoule, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, cap. 19. propoſ. 7. Ergo, neither doth Baptiſme.

Argum. 4. There was no character imprinted in the ſoule of Chriſt by Baptiſme: confeſſed by

Bellarmines

Bellarmine. cap. 19. propoſ. 8. but we are baptized with the ſame baptiſme that Chriſt was baptized with: unleſſe they will ſay, that the head and members are baptized with divers baptiſmes; which were moſt abſurd, and contrarie to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, There is one Lord (that is Chriſt) and one faith (that is in Chriſt) and one Baptiſme (that is in the name of Chriſt;) but if Chriſts Baptiſme were divers, there ſhould not be one Lord, one Baptiſme.

Ambroſe alſo ſaith, ſerm. 41. Ergo fratres tingi debemus eodem fonte, quo Chriſtus &c. Therfore brethren, wee muſt bee dipped in the ſame fountaine with Chriſt, that wee may bee the ſame that Chriſt is.

Catechiſ. 4. σφραγίζω. Cyrillus Hieroſolymit. ſaith that the holy ſpirit in the time of Baptiſme doth ſet a ſeale upon the ſoule: it is not then the externall act of the Sacrament, but the inward operation of the ſpirit, which ſealeth the ſoule, &c. Catecheſ. 17. Harm. p. 388. And againe he ſaith, that the ſpirit did print a ſeale in the ſoule of Paul, when he was baptized, and made it a choſen veſſell: but every one which hath their character, is not an elect and choſen veſſell.

2. Confeſſ. Bohemia c. 11. the Sacraments (of themſelves) cannot give any ſuch grace, &c. nor inwardly quicken or regenerate any mans ſpirit.

3. Wee have alſo their owne witneſſe againſt them: Durandus ſaith, that this character is but reſpectus rationis, a relation or reſpect unto the Miniſter, no permanent or infuſed qualitie, in 4. diſt. 4. qu. 1. Scotus holdeth, that it cannot be proved by any manifeſt teſtimonie of Scripture, diſt. 6. q. 9. Gabriel doubteth, whether the Church hath defined it, ibid. qu. 2.

Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 42. c. 3. Innocent. 3. ſaith, that they which are baptized being mad, or aſleep, characterem non ſuſcipiunt, doe not receive this character: Ergo, Baptiſme doth not alwaies imprint a character.

4. Auguſtine is flat againſt them, for the iteration of confirmation: Manus impoſitio non ſicut baptiſmus repeti non poteſt: Quid enim eſt aliud, niſi oratio ſuper hominem? The impoſition of hands is not as Baptiſme, never to be iterated againe: for what is it elſe, but prayer over a man? de Baptiſ. cont. Donat. l. 3. c. 16. Confirmation in his opinion may be iterated, and therfore imprinteth no ſuch character.

Neither doth Orders leave any ſuch character behind it: Concil. Agathenſ. can. 50. Clericus falſum teſtimonium dicens, &c. A Clergy man bearing falſe witneſſe, let him be depoſed from his office: Et laicam tantummodo communionem accipiat: Let him communicate onely as a layman. What is now become of your indeleble character?

See the teſtimonie of Walter Brute holy confeſſor: The Pope ſaith that in the adminiſtration of every Sacrament hee doth imprint a certaine character or marke into the ſoule of him that receiveth, &c. I know that in a Sacrament are two things: the ſacramentall ſigne which is given to man of man, the ſpirituall grace given of Chriſt.

P. 460. a. 6. 20. In giving of Orders the Biſhop doth imprint the corporall markes, but of the ſpirituall marke I know none, &c. pag. 500. The reaſon is, that man in the miniſterie of the Sacrament conferreth only the externall things, but this inviſible character is internall, and therefore not conferred by man.

The fourth part, of the neceſsitie of the Sacraments.

101. Error. THey willingly grant, that no Sacraments are abſolutely neceſſary in their nature, but in reſpect of the inſtitution and commandement of God; for he is able to worke without Sacraments, as with them: In this point we are agreed: the points of difference are theſe.

The Papiſts.

1. THeſe three Sacraments are abſolutely and ſimply neceſſary, as they are inſtituted of God: Baptiſme unto all: penance to thoſe that fall after Baptiſme: Orders ſimply neceſſary to the whole Church. And thus they underſtand neceſſary, that without the which a man cannot be ſaved: without the reſt of the Sacraments men may bee ſaved, ſo there bee no negligence or contempt, Bellarm. lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 22. yea, hee is bold to ſay, that the Sacraments are more neceſſarie than faith; his reaſon is, becauſe without the Sacraments, as Baptiſme, or the deſire thereof, none, neither children nor others, can be ſaved: but without faith children are ſaved, Bellarm. lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 22. ſect. at qui hac, &c.

Luk. 10. 42. Anſw. Firſt, he doth apparently contradict the Scriptures: for our Saviour ſaith, One thing is neceſſarie, Luke 10. 42. ſpeaking of Maries diligent hearing of the word, whereby faith is obtained, Rom. 10. 17. ſo that faith comming by the hearing of the word, is the onely or chiefe neceſſary thing. Mark. 16. 16. Againe, Marke 16. 16. our Saviour ſaith, He that ſhall beleeve and be baptized ſhall be ſaved; but he that beleeveth not, ſhall be damned: hee ſaith not, he that is not baptized, but he that beleeveth not: therefore Faith is more neceſſary than Baptiſme.

Secondly, it is untrue that none can bee ſaved, no not children without baptiſme; ſeeing that 2 Sam. 12. 18. Davids childe dying the ſeventh day before it was circumciſed, 2 Samuel 12. 18. was ſaved, as David himſelfe ſaith, verſ. 23. I ſhall goe to him: and there was as great neceſſitie of circumciſion then, as of baptiſme now: Likewiſe the children which Herod ſlew, from two yeeres and under, ſome of them being but newly borne, were neither circumciſed, nor baptized, yet we hold them all to bee innocents.

Thirdly, children are not capable of faith, as they are of Baptiſme, and therefore in them there can bee no compariſon betweene faith and Baptiſme: ſeeing one is required in them, and not the other.

Fourthly, this argument may better be returned upon his owne head: that ſeeing children without baptiſme may be ſaved, as they are an holy ſeed, 1 *Cor.*7. 14. and ſo under the covenant of the which Sacrament they are capable; but none can be ſaved without faith that are capable of faith, that therefore faith is more neceſſarie than Baptiſme.

1 Cor.7.14.

The Proteſtants.

THough the Sacraments being appointed for our comfort are neceſſarie and profitable as wholeſome meanes to be uſed for the increaſe of our faith, and much to be deſired and ſought for: yet God hath not laid ſuch a neceſſitie upon any of them, as that the want of them ſhould cauſe hazard of ſalvation. The theefe upon the Croſſe was ſaved both without Baptiſme and Penance: I pray you what penance did Peter after his thrice deniall of Chriſt, but that hee wept bitterly, and earneſtly repented him of his fall? as S. Ambroſe ſaith, Lacrymas Petri lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I read of Peters teares, not of his ſatisfaction. Such repentance we hold to bee neceſſarie, but a Sacrament of penance we acknowledge none. So the ordaining of Miniſters to preach, is the ordinarie meanes to beget men unto the faith: yet many have beene called without ſuch preaching: as Paul was converted by the voyce of Chriſt from heaven, Nabuchadnezzar was called by the great miracle of the preſervation of the three children in the fierie Oven.

So Auguſtine ſaith, Undique vocat nos Deus ad pænitentiam, vocat per lectorem, vocat per tractatorem, vocat per intimam cogitationem; vocat per flagellum correptionis, vocat per miſericordiam conſolationis: God calleth us every way to repentance; he calleth by the reader, by the preacher, by the inward thought, by the ſcourge of correction, by the mercy of conſolation: in Pſalm. 102. God therefore may call and inſtruct us by more wayes than one, he is not tied to any.

The Papiſts.

2. THe Sacraments of the new law are neceſſarie to ſalvation, that is, it is impoſſible to obtaine the grace of juſtification by faith alone, without the celebrating of the Sacraments, Sine ſacramentis aut eorum voto, or at leaſt, having a will, purpoſe, and deſire to celebrate and uſe them; Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 7. can. 4.

103. Error.

The Proteſtants.

A Neceſſitie of the Sacraments wee grant, as alſo of other profitable meanes, as of preaching the word, of prayer, and the like: but no ſimple or abſolute neceſſitie, as we have ſaid: neither are the Sacraments neceſſarie at all to any ſuch purpoſe (being ordained for no ſuch uſe) as to be a meanes to apply the grace of juſtification unto us: but our juſtification is only applied and apprehended by faith, as S. Paul concludeth, Rom. 3. 28. that a man is juſtified by faith only, without workes of the law: yea, all workes whatſoever are excluded, as deſtroying grace, Rom. 11. verſ. 6. The Sacraments are profitable inſtruments to ſtirre up the gift of faith, and other graces in us, but not by their proper worke to juſtifie us.

Rom.3.28.

Auguſtine ſaith, Primò fides catholica Chriſtiano neceſſaria eſt, &c. per ipſam renaſcimur in baptiſmate & ſalutem æternam impetramus: Firſt of all, the Catholike faith is neceſſarie for a Chriſtian, by the which in Baptiſme we are borne againe and obtaine eternall ſalvation. He ſaith not that Baptiſme, but that faith is neceſſarie, and that it is faith which giveth life to the Sacrament: it worketh not by it owne proper act: which is contrarie to Bellarmine, who ſaith, that fides non tribuit vim ſacramentis, that faith doth not adde any force to the Sacraments, lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 22. whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, that he which eateth the bread, and drinketh the cup of the Lord unworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, 1 Cor. 11. 27. ſo that the worthy receiving conſiſteth in the examination of our ſelves, verſ. 28. and to examine our ſelves, is to prove whether wee are in the faith, 2 Corinth. 13. 5 Wherefore by faith wee are made worthie receivers, and the Sacrament is unto us to life, which was before unto death.

De tempor. Serm.53.

1 Cor.11.27.

Bernard alſo ſaith, Nos ſi ſanguinis teſtimonium non habemus, id eſt, Martyrii, &c. If wee have not the witneſſe of blood, that is, of Martyrdome, let us have the witneſſe of the ſpirit and water: for without the ſpirit, neither blood, nor water ſufficeth: yea, if we have the ſpirit without both blood and water, the witneſſe thereof is ſufficient, &c. Baptiſme then is not neceſſarie, and if it be not, none is.

Synod. Trullan. can. 59. In oratorio privato baptiſmus nullatenus peragatur, ſed ad catholicas eccleſias accedant: ſi quis contrà fecerit, Clericus deponatur, Laicus excommunicetur: In a private oratorie, Baptiſme muſt in no caſe be adminiſtred: but they muſt goe to the common Church: if any man doe contrarie, if a Clergie man, he ſhall be depoſed; if a lay man, excommunicate.

It ſhould ſeeme that Baptiſme was not in thoſe daies counted ſo neceſſarie, ſeeing they forbade it to be kept in private houſes.

And for further evidence. 1. Socrates ſheweth, that in Theſſalia by reaſon of deferring Baptiſme till Eaſter, it happened that many, yea the moſt died without Baptiſme, &c. which ſheweth, that the Church then had no ſuch opinion of the neceſſitie of this Sacrament, for then they would not have deferred it to the danger of ſo many.

Hiſtor. Eccleſ. lib.5.c.21.

2 Tertullian granteth, that before the paſſion of Chriſt, Per fidem nudam ſalus fuerit, ſalvation was had by bare faith without the Sacrament, but after his paſſion, Obſtrinxit fidem ad neceſſitatem baptiſmi: He tied faith to the neceſſitie of baptiſme: Itaq; omnes exinde credentes tingebantur: From thence-forth all that beleeved were baptized: ſo he ſeemeth to make it neceſſarie, not to infants, but to beleevers: for in them it ſhall be a contempt, if they be not baptized..

Lib de baptiſm.

Harm.p.387.

3. Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c.11. If a man doe wholly and truly beleeve the Goſpell, he may by that faith be ſaved, although he have not the uſe of the Sacraments, &c.

Lib.2.de baptiſm.c.4.

4. Bellarmine affirmeth Cajetanus, Gabriel and other of their ſide to hold, Alienum eſſe à miſericordia Dei, That it is farre from the mercy of God, that all which die without baptiſme, ſhould periſh, &c.

The third queſtion, of the number and order of the Sacraments.

The firſt part, of the number.

The Papiſts.

104 Error.

THeir generall ſentence and opinion is this, that there are ſeven Sacraments, neither more or leſſe: Baptiſme, the Euchariſt, Confirmation, Penance, Matrimonie, Orders, extreme Unction. If any man ſay that any of theſe are not truly and properly Sacraments, or that they are not all of Chriſts inſtitution, let him be anathema or accurſed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.7.can.1.

Argum. 1. The number of ſeven is myſticall, propheticall, perfect: the Prophets commanded Naaman to waſh himſelfe ſeven times, 2 King.4. The Altar muſt be cleanſed ſeven dayes, Exodus 29.37. Iob offered ſeven bullocks and ſeven rammes for his friends, Iob 42. So in the Apocal. ſeven Churches, ſeven Angels, ſeven Starres, ſeven Candleſticks, ſeven Thunders, and the like: And why not alſo ſeven Sacraments? Bellar.lib.2.cap.26. Rhemiſt. annot. Apocal. 1.ſect.3.

Apoc.17.8.

Anſwer. Firſt, the number of ſeven is ſometime applied to deſcribe myſteries of wickedneſſe, as well as of godlineſſe: As the beaſt with ſeven heads, Apocal.17.8. is called a myſterie, or as your vulgar Latine hath it, a Sacrament. And with greater reaſon may wee conclude, that this beaſt with ſeven heads is Antichriſt with his ſeven Popiſh Sacraments, than you out of Naamans ſeven times waſhing, can pick out ſeven Sacraments. But if you will needs make a myſterie of ſeven, it may as well be a myſterie of iniquitie as of godlineſſe, even the myſterie of the beaſt with ſeven heads, as wee have ſaid. Secondly, what though the number of ſeven, and of ſome other numbers be ſometime myſticall and ſignificative, when it pleaſeth the Lord in his word ſo to applie and appoint them? doth it therefore follow that men upon their owne heads may ſuperſtitiouſly apply numbers to Sacraments, prayers, faſtings, times, as though there were any religion in numbers, or that the Lord had the rather reſpect unto ſuch things, becauſe of the number?

Argum. 2. Man hath ſeven wounds to be healed or cured: Ergo, there ought to bee ſeven Sacraments as remedies againſt the ſame: Baptiſme is a remedie againſt originall ſinne, Penance againſt actuall, extreme Unction againſt the reliques of ſinne, Confirmation againſt infirmitie of faith, the Euchariſt againſt malice, Matrimonie againſt concupiſcence, Orders againſt ignorance: *Bellar.lib.*2. *cap.*26.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Sacraments are not properly of themſelves remedies againſt ſinne: no otherwiſe than they are tempered with faith, from whence they have their whole ſtrength and vertue. Secondly, if they were ſuch remedies, what need ſo many? as though one medicine may not heale divers diſeaſes. Thirdly, the Jeſuite hath not well matched the diſeaſes and remedies together: firſt the efficacie of Baptiſme, which ſetteth forth our ſpirituall waſhing by the blood of Chriſt, ſerveth as well againſt actuall, as originall ſinne: ſeeing we are cleanſed from both by the blood of Chriſt. Secondly, if Baptiſme ſerve againſt originall, and Penance againſt actuall ſinne, what other ſinne remaineth to be helped by the other remedies? Thirdly, if Matrimonie bee available againſt concupiſcence, why doe ye forbid your luſtfull and belly-fed Prieſts to marrie? and if Orders helpe ignorance, how commeth it to paſſe that you have ſo many doltiſh and ignor ant Maſſe-Prieſts?

Bellarmine hath other arguments, ſhewing in particular that every one of their ſeven are Sacraments, which ſhall be anſwered in their ſeverall places.

The Proteſtants.

THis word or name, Sacrament, may be taken two waies: firſt, generally for any myſticall ſigne or ſymbole, which may repreſent an holy thing: and ſo we will grant, that there may be not only ſeven Sacraments, but ſeven and ſeven; which are more properly ſymboles and ſignes than Sacraments; As the covering of the head in the woman is a ſymbole of ſubjection, 1 Cor.11.10. the Sabbath day is a ſymbole or Sacrament of the heavenly reſt, Heb.4. In this ſenſe Auguſtine calleth the myſterie of the Trinitie a Sacrament: yea he ſaith the Sacrament of fire, becauſe therein in ſome ſort, by the undivided and inſeparable properties thereof, the heat, light, and ſhining brightneſſe; the Trinity ſaith he, is ſhadowed forth. Wherefore every ſigne or ſymbole of a holy thing, that hath a ſpirituall ſignification either found in Scripture, or deviſed by men, is not by and by a Sacrament.

De ſymbol. lib.3,cap.9.

Secondly, if we will take a Sacrament in the ſtrict and proper ſenſe, there are eſpecially three things required thereunto. Firſt, that they doe not onely ſignifie, but exhibit and repreſent unto us after a lively manner, the ſpirituall things which are ſignified. Secondly, they muſt have the inſtitution and perpetuall commandement of Chriſt. Thirdly, the Sacraments of the new law muſt ſucceed in the place of the olde. Hereupon wee will inferre, that there are but two Sacraments in the new Teſtament, Babtiſme, and the Lords Supper.

Argum. 1. These two alone are not onely ſignes of heavenly things, but ſeales and pledges unto us thereof, whereby our faith is ſtrengthened, and our hope confirmed in the promiſes of God: as the remiſſion of ſinnes is repreſented in Baptiſme, Act. 2.38. the death of Chriſt ſhewed forth in the Euchariſt, 1 Corinth. 11.26. The like commendation is not given of any other of their Sacraments. Act. 3.38. 1 Cor. 11.26.

Argum. 2. Chriſt onely cammanded theſe two Sacraments to bee uſed for ever in his Church: to ſuch ſpirituall purpoſes, as Baptiſme is inſtituted and cammanded, Matth. 28. 19. the Lords Supper likewiſe, Matth. 26. Many other ceremonies Chriſt uſed himſelfe, as lifting up of hands, the tempering of clay and ſpettle, his Apoſtles impoſition of hands, and annointing with oyle: But hee hath not laid his commandement upon theſe ceremonies, injoyning us perpetually to keepe them, as he hath charged us with the other two. Matth. 28.19.

Argum. 3. The Sacraments of the new Teſtament ſucceede in the roome of them of the olde: Baptiſme ſtandeth in ſtead of Circumciſion, the Lords Supper is come in place of the Paſchall Lambe. But they cannot ſhew what olde Sacraments, thoſe five other newly invented, Confirmation Orders, Penance, Matrimonie, extreame Unction, doe ſucceede and ſupply: Ergo, they are none. And beſide, if all theſe ſhould be Sacraments, and ſo ſeven in all: we ſhould have more in number than the Jewes had, which is not to be admitted: for they had but two ordinarie Sacraments, Circumciſion, and the Paſchall Lambe: two extraordinarie, as their baptiſme in the red Sea and the cloude, and their eating of the Manna, and drinking of the rocke. 1 Cor. 10.2.3. So they ſhould have but foure Sacraments, for your ſeven. Other legall rites, ceremonies, and ſacrifices they had, and many typicall ſhadowes and ſignifications, but no more Sacraments than we have heard.

Other arguments we have in particular againſt their five Sacraments, which I referre to their ſeverall places, which being proved to be no Sacraments at all, they muſt needes faile of their ſeven.

Auguſtine yeeldeth to have no more Sacraments than onely two: As Eve was made out of Adams ſide as he was aſleepe: Sic ex latere domini dormientis in cruce, &c. ſacramenta eccleſiæ profluxerunt: So out of the Lords ſide ſleeping upon the Croſſe, the Sacraments of the Church iſſued: that is, water and blood: by the which he underſtandeth the two Sacraments. Tract. 15. in Evangel. Joan.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that though Baptiſme bee fitly underſtood by water, and the Euchariſt by blood, which iſſued out of Chriſts ſide, yet are not the other Sacraments excluded: as Heb. 6.2. there is mention onely made of Baptiſme and impoſition of hands, yet were there more Sacraments, Bellarm. cap. 27. Heb. 6.2.

Anſwer. Firſt, we doe not greatly urge this analogie, to prove two Sacraments: but onely ſhew what Auguſtines judgement was herein: neither can the proportion hold, if there ſhould bee more Sacraments than two: for as out of Adams ſide onely Eve was made, ſo out of Chriſts ſide the Sacraments iſſued, whereof the Church conſiſteth: if this collection be good, there can be no more but two Sacraments: unleſſe they can ſhew, that ſomewhat elſe beſide water and blood was ſhed from Chriſts ſide. Secondly, that place to the Hebrewes is not like: for the Apoſtles purpoſe is not to ſet downe there all the Sacraments of religion, but onely ſuch principles as young beginners were to learne, who after theſe beginnings were admitted to the Euchariſt.

Now laſtly in defence of this truth, that Chriſt hath left onely two Sacraments to his Church, many holy Martyrs have given their lives: As Thomas Whittle, Bartlet Greene, with five other, condemned for denying the ſeven Popiſh Sacraments, Fox pag. 1844. Likewiſe thirteene holy Martyrs burned at Stratford the Bow for the ſame cauſe, pag. 1914. Pag. 1674. 2. 30. Pag. 1737. 2. 62.

1 Cyrill of Jeruſalem ſaith, That not the leaſt of the divine Sacraments of the faith muſt be delivered (without the divine Scriptures) but ſo are not their ſeven Sacraments delivered by warrant of Scripture. ἄνευ θείων γραφῶν. Catech. 4.

2 Suarez their Jeſuit confeſſeth, that this veritie, that Chriſt inſtituted, ſeven Sacraments is grounded upon eccleſiaſticall tradition, &c. they have then no Scripture to warrant them. Tom. 3. diſput. 12. ſect. 1.

3 Tertullian maketh mention but of two Sacraments, lib. 4. contra Marcionem: nor yet Auguſtine, epiſt. 118, ad Ianuar. and lib. 3. de doctrin. Chriſtian. c. 9. the moderne Chriſtians of Æthiopia hold neither confirmation nor extreame unction to be Sacraments: but the moderne Greeke Church receiveth ſeven Sacraments, as the Romaniſts doe. Damianus a Goes de morib. Æthiop. Cenſur. Oriental. eccle. c. 7. Harm. pa. 380.

4 Confeſſ. of Helvetia, latter c. 19. For circumciſion, we have baptiſme, and for the Paſchall Lambe and ſacrifices the Supper of the Lord. So alſo Baſil artic. 5. p. 386. Belgia artic. 33. p. 391. French confeſſ. artic. 35. p. 401. Wittemberg. artic. 35. p. 537. with other reformed Churches, doe acknowledge onely two Sacraments of Chriſts inſtitution.

The ſecond part of the order and decree of the Sacraments among themſelves.

The Papiſts.

105. Error. IF any man ſhall ſay, that theſe ſeven Sacraments are of equall dignitie, and not one in ſome reſpect to be preferred before the other, let him be accurſed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 7. can. 3. In divers reſpects one Sacrament may excell another, as Baptiſme excelleth the reſt, becauſe of remiſſion of ſinnes thereby effected, or, as we ſay, repreſented. Orders excell, in reſpect of the Miniſter, becauſe they are onely, ſay they, conferred by a Biſhop. Matrimonie excelleth, in reſpect of the ſignification, the conjunction of Chriſt and his Church. But ſimply the Euchariſt exceedeth all, becauſe of the ſubſtance of the Sacraments, the reall and bodily preſence of Chriſt, Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 28.

Anſwer. Firſt, that Baptiſme and the Euchariſt exceede all the other, wee doe eaſily admit : for we hold the reſt to be no Sacraments : and therefore we ſtand not upon their ſeverall privileges. Secondly, neither Baptiſme is more excellent than the Lords Supper, becauſe it repreſenteth the remiſſion of ſinnes : for that alſo is inſinuated in the other : for how can wee ſhew forth the Lords death, which is done in that Sacrament, unleſſe we call to minde the benefits purchaſed by his death, as remiſſion of ſinnes ? Neither doth the Euchariſt goe beyond Baptiſme in regard of a more full preſence of Chriſt : for he is not otherwiſe preſent in one Sacrament, than in the other, preſenting himſelfe in both ſpiritually to be apprehended of the worthie receiver ; as for that carnall and groſſe preſence of the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, we acknowledge none : as afterward it ſhall more fully appeare, when we come in order to that queſtion.

De diverſ. Serm. 9. Auguſtine ſheweth, that Chriſt is no otherwiſe preſent in the Euchariſt, than in the preaching of the word, for the manner of his preſence : Euchariſtia panis noſter quotidianus eſt, &c. & quod vobis tracto, panis quotidianus eſt, & quod in eccleſia lectiones quotidie auditis, panis quotidianus eſt : The Euchariſt or Sacrament of thankſgiving is our daily bread, that which I handle and preach to you, is our daily bread; that which you heare read daily in the Church, is our daily bread, &c. If Chriſt then bee no more really preſent in the Sacrament than in the word, what is become of the preeminence, that the one Sacrament in that reſpect ſhould have above the other?

Annot. in Exod. 16. The Doway Diſciples to ſet forth the eminencie of the Euchariſt, doe compare it in twelve ſeverall points with Manna : all with miracles, ſay they, are more eminent in the bleſſed Sacrament.

1 Manna was made by Angels, the (Sacrament) was conſecrated by the mervailous power of Chriſts word, which is now communicated to the Prieſt.

2 That came from the ayre, not from the earth, or water: this is done in the militant Church.

3 How faſt or ſlowly ſoever any man gathered that, every one had the ſame meaſure: in the leaſt particular of the accidents Chriſt is whole and entire, and in innumerable places at once.

4 In the 6. day they had double portions to other daies, ſo this giveth abundance of grace in this life, for the glory of the next life.

5 There fell no Manna on the Sabbath : and there ſhall bee no uſe of Sacraments in the next life.

6 If Manna were kept all night, in the reſt of the weeke it putrified : and whoſoever will make a temporall commoditie of this heavenly foode, it periſheth unto him, &c.

7 The ſame meaſure was ſufficient for every one : and ſo this availeth to every one, as their ſoule is diſpoſed.

8 The Sunne melted Manna, yet it indured the heat of the fire : though heat of perſecution take the Sacrament away in the field of the world, yet no power can extinguiſh it in the Church.

9 That taſted to every one, what they deſired : this yeeldeth all comfort to ſpirituall deſires.

10 That ſeemed to the evill minded loathſome : this to the incredulous Capernaites ſeemeth unpoſſible.

11 Part of that was kept in the Arke, and was not corrupted many hundred yeeres : this received into our mortall bodies, remaineth in incorruptible effect, whereby the body ſhall bee raiſed from death.

12 That extraordinarie proviſion remained fortie yeeres, till the Iſraelits came into the promiſed land : and this is our wayfaring proviſion in the pilgrimage of this life, &c. till wee come to the kingdome of heaven, &c.

Anſwer. We acknowledge the holy Euchariſt to be a moſt heavenly myſterie, and a moſt precious treaſure of the Church, being ſo farre more excellent than Manna, as Chriſt is more fully revealed and manifeſted in the Goſpell, than under the law : but theſe points of comparative difference betweene them we except againſt in this manner.

1 They both had the ſame Author and efficient cauſe, the word of Chriſt, that made the one, and ordayned the other : herein then is no difference : the Sacrament wee granted was inſtituted by a greater power, then of Angels, and ſo is Baptiſme alſo : as Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of the wonderfull worke of regeneration in Baptiſme, ſaith: Angeli affuerunt, & viderunt, ſed nihil operati ſunt, &c. The Angels were preſent and ſaw, but did nothing, but only the Father, Sonne, and holie Ghoſt, &c. Neither is there any ſuch power communicated to Prieſts to make the body of Chriſt: as Chryſoſtome againe: Non ſunt humana virtutis hac opera, &c. ipſe nunc quoque operatur, nos miniſtrorum ordinem tenemus, &c. Theſe workes are not of humane power, &c. Chriſt himſelfe now worketh, wee are but the miniſters; but hee that doth change and ſanctifie theſe things is Chriſt himſelfe, &c.

Homil.24.in 3.caput Ioann.

Homil.83.in 26.cap.Matth.

2 The true bread, whereof both the Manna then, and the Sacrament now is a type, or rather ſeale, indeed commeth from heaven: as Auguſtine ſaith, hic eſt panis, qui de cœlo deſcendit, &c. This is the bread, that came from heaven, &c. that is Jeſus Chriſt the bread of life: but the externall elements not from heaven, it is bread made of corne, which groweth from the earth: as Auguſtine addeth in the ſame place: hee that eateth thereof ſhall not die: ſed qui pertinet ad virtutem ſacramenti, non qui pertinet ad viſibile ſacramentum: but he which belongeth to the vertue of the Sacrament, not to the viſible Sacrament, &c. the viſible Sacrament, for the materiall part is not from heaven, yet Manna was from heaven: herein then is no preeminence before Manna.

In Ioann. tract.26.

3 That Chriſts body ſhould bee whole in every particular accident, and in innumerable places at once, is an unreaſonable ſaying, contrarie to philoſophie, which placeth accidents in the ſubſtance, not the ſubſtance in accidents: and maketh a materiall bodie onely in one place at one time: and againſt Divinitie, he is riſen, ſaith the Angell, he is not here: which had not been a good argument, if the bodie of Chriſt were here and there at one time: but herein this analogie holdeth well, that is, every one, howſoever he gathered, had the ſame meaſure of Manna: ſo as Theodoret ſaith, Illius omnes ſunt aque participes, &c. All men are equally partakers thereof, both rich and poore, maſters and ſervants, Princes and ſubjects, &c.

Matth.28.3.

In 1.Epiſt.ad Corinth.c.11.

4 True it is, that by this Sacrament we are nouriſhed unto everlaſting life: it is not the externall participating in the Sacrament, but the ſpirituall vertue, that ſo nouriſheth us: as Auguſtine ſaith, that we eat not the bodie of Chriſt, tantum in ſacramento, quod & multi mali, only in Sacrament, as many evill men doe, ſed uſque ad ſpiritus participationem, but unto the participation of the ſpirit: it is not then the carnall eating of Chriſts fleſh, which they yeeld unto the wicked that is availeable.

In Ioann. tractat.27.

5 Neither ſhall there be any uſe of Sacraments in the next life: but we ſhall ſee Chriſt face to face, and behold his glorious bodie with immortall eyes: therefore his bodily preſence is not now in the Sacrament: Chryſoſtome ſaith, ut terra nobis cœlum ſit facit hoc myſterium, this myſterie maketh the earth to be heaven: we now by faith communicate the body of Chriſt, which then we ſhall have fruition of by ſight: this note therefore maketh flatly againſt their carnall preſence.

1.ad Corinth. c.11. Hom.24.

6 As Manna kept contrarie to the commandement putrified: ſo doth the Euchariſt ſuperſtitiouſly reſerved by the Papiſts, corrupt, and is ſubject to other changes: Herein then is the agreement, as the Manna was not to be reſerved till the next day, ſo, as Clemens decreed, if any reliques remaine of the Sacrament, in caſtrina non reſerventur, &c. let them not bee kept till the morrow, but let them with reverence be conſumed of the Clergie, &c.

7 It is well you confeſſe a diſpoſition in the ſoule of the receiver neceſſarie to make his receiving fruitfull: we have been hitherto borne in hand, that faith is not neceſſarie to the due receiving of the Sacrament, but it conferreth grace by the very act which is wrought: but the truth is, that the heart muſt be prepared by faith: as Auguſtine, nolite fauces parare ſed cor, prepare not your chaps but your heart: and he eateth the bodie of Chriſt, qui manducat corde, non qui premit dente, which eateth in his heart not preſſeth it with his teeth.

In Ioann. tractat.26.

8 Their fellow Rhemiſts diſſent from them: who affirme, that under the reigne of Antichriſt all publike entercourſe of the faithfull ſhall ceaſe, &c. ſaving the practice thereof in ſecret: and ſome of their Catholike writers affirme, that in the times of Antichriſt the true faith ſhall periſh through the world: but theſe ſay, that no power can extinguiſh it in the Church. But herein the analogie better holdeth, that as Manna melted with the heat of the Sunne, but indured the heat of the fire at home: ſo they which eat unworthily, are judged and melt away as it were, but they which receive it by faith, are confirmed: as by an inward and domeſticall fire: as Auguſtine ſaith, Qui non mutat vitam, ad judicium accepit vitam, & magis ex ipſa corrumpitur, quam ſanatur: He that changeth not his life, receiveth life to his judgement, and is rather corrupted, than healed by it.

Sermon Dominic. Advent.

9 Wee acknowlege that the holy Sacrament yeeldeth all comfort to ſpirituall deſires; but as it is a ſpirituall food: the body of Chriſt is then ſpiritually, not corporally or carnally eaten: as Auguſtine ſaith, then the body and blood of Chriſt ſhall be life unto every one, if that, which in the Sacrament is viſibly received in ipſa veritate ſpiritualiter manducetur, Bee in the truth it ſelfe ſpiritually eaten, and ſpiritually drunke. And thus Chriſt being ſpiritually received, yeeldeth all ſpirituall comfort, as Ambroſe ſheweth upon thoſe words of the Pſalme, taſte and ſee how ſweet the Lord is: Si ſanari vis, medicus eſt, ſi febribus æſtuas, fons eſt, &c. If thou wilt be healed, he is thy Phyſition; if thou burneſt with a feaver, he is a cooling fountaine; if thou art laden with iniquitie, he is thy juſtice; if thou wanteſt helpe, he is thy ſtrength; if thou art afeard of death, he is life; if thou deſireſt heaven, hee is the way; if thou ſeeke for meat, he is thy food, &c.

Ioh.6.63.
Ioh.5.24.

10 They are not incredulous Capernaites, which held that the body of Chriſt muſt be ſpiritually, not carnally eaten: but they which doe thinke, that with their mouth and teeth they doe eat the fleſh of Chriſt: as Tertullian ſheweth what the miſtaking of the Capernaites was: they thought his ſpeech to be hard and intolerable: quaſi vere carnem ſuam illis edendam determinaſſet: as though hee had determined, that his fleſh ſhould verily be eaten, &c. And our Saviour in ſaying, the words that I ſpeake are ſpirit and life: ſheweth that he ſpeaketh of the ſpirituall, not carnall eating of his fleſh: as Tertullian maketh this ſaying agreeable unto that, Ioh.5.24. Hee that heareth my word, and beleeveth in him that ſent me, hath eternall life: and ſo hee concludeth, that the word of Chriſt, which before he called his fleſh, is devorandus auditu, ruminandus intellectu, fide digerendus; muſt bee devoured by hearing, ruminated by underſtanding, digeſted by faith, &c.

11 1. Manna indeed remained uncorrupted, having the word of God for the preſerving thereof: but ſhew if you can, any of your conſecrated hoſts to have continued the tenth part of that time without putrefaction. 2. That the Sacrament of Chriſt received by faith is of incorruptible effect, we grant: but that part of the Sacrament, which is received into the body, corrupteth in and with the body, as all other meats doe: did you ever ſee in any of your houſled ſicke, the Sacrament which they received to remaine ſound, the reſt being fallen to duſt? 3. Neither is it the bodily participation of the Sacrament, but the ſpirituall communion which we have with Chriſt, that ſhall raiſe our bodies at the laſt day: as the Apoſtle ſaith, He that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortall bodies, becauſe that his ſpirit dwelleth in you: it is not the being of the Sacrament in our mouthes, but the dwelling of the ſpirit in us, that ſhall raiſe us up: ſo our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, Whoſoever eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternall life: and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day: he ſpeaketh not of the ſacramentall eating, but of communicating by faith; as he ſaid before, this is the will of him that ſent me, that every man which ſeeth the Sonne, and beleeveth in him, ſhould have everlaſting life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day: and divers of their owne learned writers, (as Bellarmine confeſſeth) as namely, Gabriel Cuſanus, Cajetane, Ruardus Tapper, Heſſelius, Ianſenius, denie this place, Ioh. 6. to be underſtood of the ſacramentall eating. In this ſenſe Chryſoſtome is to be underſtood: Ipſa menſa animæ noſtræ vis eſt, nervi mentis, fiducia vinculum, &c. ſi hinc hoc ſacrificio muniti migrabimus, maxima cum fiducia ſanctum aſcendemus veſtibulum, &c. This table is the force of our ſoule, the ſinewes of our mind, the bond of our confidence, the foundation, hope, health, light, of our life: if we paſſe hence furniſhed with this ſacrifice, we ſhall with great confidence aſcend to the porch of heaven, as covered round with golden garments, &c. Hee ſpeaketh of the ſpirituall food of the ſoule in the Sacrament, not of the corporall eating.

12 1. If the Sacrament be our wayfaring proviſion till wee come to the heavenly Canaan, which we denie not, then is it not corporally and carnally the bodie of Chriſt: for wee ſhall enjoy the ſight and preſence thereof in heaven for ever. 2. The word of God and the Sacraments are then the ſpirituall food of our ſoules in the pilgrimage of this life; not corporally digeſted, but ſpiritually received: as Auguſtine ſaith of the Sacrament received fideliter faithfully: Viaticum tibi ſaluberrimum, redemptionis precium, redemptoris monumentum, redempti munimentum: It is thy moſt wholeſome wayfaring food, the price of thy redemption, (namely which is there repreſented) the monument of the redeemer, the muniment and defence of the redeemed, &c. If the Sacrament be but a monument of the redeemer, then it is not his very bodie: for then it were the Redeemer himſelfe, not a monument of him: for monuments are remembrances of things abſent, not preſent: So Gelaſius ſaith, Certainly the Sacrament which we receive of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, is a divine thing, by the which we are made partakers of the divine nature: & tamen eſſe non deſinit ſubſtantia vel natura panis & vini: and yet it leaveth not to be the ſubſtance and nature of bread and wine, &c.

Homil.7.in Exod.c.15.

Now if wee will apply the Manna given to the Iſraelites to the times of the Goſpell: the applications which Origen maketh are to bee preferred before theſe Doway conceits.

1 As Manna began to fall then upon the firſt day of the weeke, which now is the Lords day: ſic in noſtra Dominica ſemper Dominus pluit Manna de cœlo: ſo in our Dominicall the Lord alwaies raineth Manna from heaven.

2 As manhu ſignifieth, what is this: ſo when thou heareſt the law of God rehearſed, inquire and aske of the teachers, quid eſt hoc, what is this?

3 As Manna was like the hoare froſt, but in taſte as honey; ſo the word of God habet aliquid rigoris, is ſometime rigorous, but as ſweet as honey.

4 As they gathered upon the ſixt day double, that they might have to eat on the Sabbath: ſo what good thou doeſt in this life, hoc erit tibi in futuro ſeculo cibus, this ſhall bee they meat in the next world.

5 As the Manna if it were kept contrarie to Gods commandement, grew full of wormes: ſic non aliunde fiunt in nobis vermes, niſi ex verbo Dei: wormes, that is, vices, breed in us by the word of God, that is, being not rightly heard.

The Proteſtants.

THat the one Sacrament ſhould bee ſo much extolled above the other, namely, the Lords Supper to be preferred before Baptiſme, as the more worthy and excellent Sacrament, wee find no ſuch thing in the word of God: but that both of them are of like dignitie in themſelves, and to bee had equally and indifferently in moſt high account: thus it is proved.

Argum. 1. They are both commanded and inſtituted by the ſame authoritie of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: as Baptiſme, *Matth.*28. 19. the Lords Supper, Luke 22.19. Doe this in remembrance of me: neither is one by the firſt inſtitution advanced above the other. Secondly, there is the ſame matter and ſubſtance of both Sacraments, Chriſt Jeſus with all his benefits, as Baptiſme is ſaid to ſave us by the reſurrection of Chriſt, 1 Pet. 3. 21. and the cup, and the bread in the Euchariſt are a communion of the body and blood of Chriſt, 1 Corinth. 10.16. Thirdly, one and the ſame end of them both, which is the increaſe and ſtrengthening of our faith in the promiſes of God: as *Rom.*6 5. we are ſaid to be graft in Baptiſme to the ſimilitude of Chriſts death and reſurrection: and 1 *Corinth.*11.26. the receiving of the Communion is a ſhewing forth of the Lords death: Ergo, they are both of equall dignitie and worthineſſe.

Matth.28.19.
Luke 22.19.
1 Pet 3.21.
1 Cor.10.16.
Rom 6 5.
1 Cor.11.26.

Argum. 2. As Circumciſion was under the Law to the Paſſeover, ſo is Baptiſme now unto the Euchariſt: but Circumciſion then was equall in dignitie, and commanded under as great a puniſhment, as the celebration of the Paſſeover, and eating of the Paſchall Lambe: for both are enjoyned under the ſame paine of being cut off from the congregation. Circumciſion, Geneſ. 17. 14. the Paſſeover, Exod. 12. 19. Ergo, Baptiſme and the Lords Supper are Sacraments of equall dignitie and excellencie.

Geneſ.17.14.
Exod.12.19.

I might urge them alſo with their owne fancies: for by like reaſon, as Bellarmine would preferre Baptiſme before faith, becauſe children are ſaved without faith, and yet not without Baptiſme (in their opinion) ſo becauſe without Baptiſme children cannot bee ſaved as they hold, and yet may without the other Sacrament: therefore Baptiſme is more neceſſarie, and ſo conſequently more worthie: wherefore they deocontrarie themſelves in their owne fancies.

Let them ſay now, which is the more worthy thing, Baptiſme, or the word preached? no doubt they will preferre Baptiſme: for they hold that the Sacraments do give grace by the worke wrought, and ſo doth not the word: yea, they are offended becauſe wee ſay, that the Sacraments are no other waies inſtruments of our juſtification, than the word preached is; but that the one worketh by the hearing, the other by the ſenſes of ſeeing, handling, taſting: but they all ſerve to one end, namely, to beget and increaſe faith in us. This our aſſertion they utterly miſlike, Bellarm. lib.2. de ſacram cap.2. Wherefore it appeareth, that they prefer Baptiſme before the word. We then thus reaſon out of Auguſtine: he thus writeth: Dicite mihi, quid plus videtur vobis, verbum Dei, an corpus Chriſti? reſpondere debetis, quod non ſit minus verbum Dei: Tell me, which is the chiefer in your opinion, the word of God, or the bodie of Chriſt? (that is, the Sacrament of his bodie:) ye muſt anſwer, that the word of God is not inferiour, Homil. 26. Hence we frame this argument: The word of God is equivalent to the Sacrament of the Lords bodie: Baptiſme is equivalent to the word of God, by our adverſaries owne confeſſion: Ergo, alſo it is of equall value and dignitie with the other Sacrament.

Now further for the more full demonſtration of this point, that Baptiſme is not inferiour to the Euchariſt, as they pretend: I will ſhew how divers ancient fathers have indifferently aſcribed the ſame privileges to them both.

1 Theodoret ſpeaking of the Euchariſt ſaith, Illius omnes ſunt aque participes, &c. All are equally made partakers of it, both rich and poore, Prince and ſubject: ſo Cyprian before him ſaid of Baptiſme: Eadem gratia ſpiritualis aqualiter in baptiſmo, &c. The ſame ſpirituall grace is equally received in Baptiſme of all which beleeve, &c. as every one had a like portion, a ghomer full of Manna.

In c.11 epiſt.1. ad Corinth.
Lib.4.epiſt.7.

2 Gelaſius ſaith, that the Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Chriſt is divina res, a divine thing: and Auguſtine ſaith of Baptiſme, In nobis non ſimplex aqua operatur, &c. It is not ſimple water that worketh in us: but when the water receiveth the grace of the ſpirit, it waſheth away all our ſinnes.

3 Ambroſe maketh a certaine change of the bread in the Euchariſt, that after conſecration, de pane fit caro Chriſti, the fleſh of Chriſt is made of bread: and the ſame Ambroſe ſaith of Baptiſme, naturam mutari per benedictionem, that the nature of the water is changed by benediction.

De ſacram. lib 4 cap.4.
Ibid.cap 9.

4 Auguſtine ſaith of the Euchariſt, that it is cibus incomparabilis, ineffabilis, incomparable, ineffable meat: So Gregorie Nyſſen of Baptiſme, that the ſpirit, which appeareth not, anima ineffabiliter accedit, doth after an ineffable manner approach unto the ſoule.

THE TWELFTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF THE SACRAMENT OF BAPTISME.

THis controverſie ſtandeth upon divers queſtions. Firſt, of the name and definition of Baptiſme. Secondly, of the parts of Baptiſme. Thirdly, of the neceſſity of Baptiſme. Fourthly, of the Miniſter of Baptiſme. Fiftly, of the parties which are to be baptized. Sixthly, of the effects of Baptiſme. Seventhly, of the difference of Chriſts Baptiſme and Iohns. Eighthly, of the ceremonies of Baptiſme.

The firſt queſtion, of the name and definition of Baptiſme.

COncerning the name, there is no queſtion between us, for the name of Baptiſme hath the originall and beginning from the Scripture: Saint Paul uſeth this word, Coloſſ.2.12. We are buried with him through Baptiſme. And againe, Hebr.6.2. All the queſtion is about the definition of Baptiſme.

Coloſ.2.12.
Heb,6.2.

The Papiſts.

THey define Baptiſme to be a Sacrament of regeneration by water in the word: that is, not which ſignifieth and ſealeth unto us our regeneration, and aſſureth us of remiſſion of ſinnes: but actually juſtifieth and regenerateth us, Bellarm.lib.1. de Baptiſm.cap.1. 1.Error.

Argum. Bellarmine groundeth his definition upon thoſe words of our Saviour, Iohn 3.5. Except a man be borne of water and the ſpirit: and Epheſ.5.26. That he might ſanctifie it by the waſhing of water through the word. Hence he would infer that we are ſanctified by the water in Baptiſme, Bellarm.ibid.

Iohn.3.5.

Anſ. It is manifeſt by thoſe places, where the ſpirit and the word are joyned to the outward waſhing by water, that the efficacie is not in the water, but in the ſpirit, and the word or promiſe of God which is apprehended by faith; theſe places prove that Baptiſme is a Sacrament, ſigne, and ſeale of regeneration, but no efficient or working cauſe thereof.

The Doway interpreters doe thus argue: as water in the beginning of the world received a certaine vitall vertue of the holy Ghoſt to produce living creatures, ſo alſo Baptiſme receiveth vertue of the ſame holy Ghoſt to procreate new men: and to this purpoſe Tertullian is alleaged, let it not ſeeme ſtrange that in Baptiſme waters give life.

Lib.de Baptiſ.

Contra. 1. It is untrue that the water had a vertue given unto it, to bring forth the living creatures: but they were produced out of the waters by the word of God, 2 *Pet.*3.5. The waters were onely as the matter, the ſpirit of God and his word were the efficient. 2. Neither doth it follow, the waters had a gift to bring forth corporall things, that it may as well have an activitie to procreate ſpirituall. 3. If they will be tried by Tertullian, he is againſt them: in that booke alleaged he ſaith, quam fides impetrat obſignata in patre, filio, & ſpiritu ſancto: which (waſhing away of ſinnes) faith obtaineth being ſealed in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, &c. Hee aſcribeth the waſhing away of ſinnes not to the water, but to faith: and yet more evidently in another place, lavacrum illud obſignatio eſt fidei, that Lavacre is a ſealing of Faith: non ideo abluimur ut delinquere deſinamus, ſed quia deſiimus, quia corde jam loti ſumus: we are not therfore waſhed that we may leave off to ſin, but becauſe we have left already, becauſe we are waſhed in heart, &c. Baptiſme then doth not actually juſtifie or regenerate, ſeeing ſuch as come to be baptized, beleeved, and were regenerate already.

Lib.de.pœnitent.

The Proteſtants.

WE rather according to the Scriptures define Baptiſme to bee a ſigne or ſeale of our regeneration and new birth, whereby we are aſſured, that as verily by faith in the blood of Chriſt we are cleanſed from our ſinnes, as our bodies are waſhed with water, In the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt: So that baptiſme doth not actually beſtow remiſſion of ſinnes by the worke wrought, but is a pledge and ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as Saint Paul ſaith of Circumciſion; Rom. 4. 11. For it is not the waſhing of the fleſh by water, but the eſtabliſhing of the heart with faith and grace, that ſaveth us, 1 Pet. 3. 21. See this point handled more at large, Controverſ. 11. next before, quaſt. 2. part. 1.

1 Pet. 3. 21.

Auguſtine ſaith, Per ipſum (nempe fidem) renaſcimur in baptiſmate: By faith we are borne againe in Baptiſme, De tempor. ſerm. 53. It is then the proper act of faith, to regenerate us, not of Baptiſme; the uſe and end whereof, is to ſtrengthen and increaſe our faith.

Iuſtinus Martyr ſaith, Per aquam & fidem fieri regenerationem humani generis: By water and faith the regeneration of mankind is made: Cyril of Jeruſalem, Simon Magus came unto this lavacre, he was baptized but not illuminate: he waſhed his bodie with water, but he did not lighten his heart with the ſpirit.

2. Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith, theſe bands of ignorance and darkneſſe are ſoon remitted, (humana fide, divina verò gratia, &c. verbali baptiſmate) by humane faith, but by the divine grace in the baptiſme of the word: ſee Tertullian before: Gregentius the Æthiopian Biſhop of Tephra, treadeth in the ſame ſteps: they are admitted to life, which is Chriſt, by faith and Baptiſme: faith then muſt concurre with Baptiſme.

3. Confeſſ. of Bohemia c. 11. Ananias and Sapphira had beene baptized by the Apoſtles, and yet continued in their wickedneſſe, Auſpurg. artic. 8. They condemne the Phariſaicall doctrine of the Papiſts, which teach that faith is not neceſſarie in the Sacraments, but imagine that none are juſt by the very uſe of the Sacraments, &c. To the ſame purpoſe other reformed Churches, as of Helvetia, Former confeſſ. artic. 21. pag. 398. French confeſ. artic. 38. pag. 401. Belgia, artic. 34. pag. 402. Sweveland, artic. 10. pag. 410.

We have againſt this actuall juſtification by water in Baptiſme, the evident teſtimonie out of their owne decrees, decret. p. 2. cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 54. Unde iſta tanta virtus aqua, &c. From whence is this ſo great vertue of the water, that it toucheth the bodie, and cleanſeth the heart, Niſi faciente verbo, but by the working of the word; Non quia dicitur, ſed quia creditur: not becauſe the word is ſpoken, but beleeved.

Cauſ. 27. qu. 2. c. 45. gloſ. Fides eſt cauſa, quare in Baptiſmo à peccatis mundamur: Faith is the cauſe, that our ſinnes are cleanſed in Baptiſme.

Decret. 3. diſt. 4. c. 1. Sine Sacramento viſibili, & fide inviſibili nemo ſalvatur: Without the viſible Sacrament, and inviſible Faith, no man is ſaved.

Ibid. c. 8. Per fidem & Baptiſmum, &c. By faith and Baptiſme we are freed from our ſin. And yet more evidently cap. 39. of the ſame diſtinction, upon thoſe words of our Saviour, Iam vos mundi eſtis, and now you are cleane through the word that I have ſpoken unto you; Quare non aiit, mundi eſtis propter Baptiſmum, &c. Why doth he not ſay, you are cleane becauſe of Baptiſme, wherewith yee are waſhed, (but becauſe of the word) but becauſe the word cleanſeth in the water. Wee ſee then that the vertue of the Sacrament dependeth upon faith, ſo that Bellarmines aſſertion, that faith addeth no force to the Sacrament, lib. 1. de Sacram. c. 22. is not onely repugnant to Scripture, but contrarie to their owne Canons.

The ſecond queſtion, of the parts, which are the matter and forme of Baptiſme.

AS touching the matter, that is, the externall element uſed in Baptiſme, there is no queſtion betweene us, but that it ought to be plaine and common water, Act. 10. 47. S. Peter ſaith, can any man forbid water, that theſe ſhould not bee baptized? Wherefore wee condemne the fooliſh and ungodly practices and inventions of hereticks, that either exclude water altogether, as the Manichees, with others; or doe uſe any other element, as the Jacobites, that in ſtead of water burned them that were to bee baptized, with an hot iron; or as the Æthiopians, which are called Abiſſines, that uſed fire in ſtead of water: miſconſtruing the words of the Goſpell, Matth. 3. 11. That Chriſt ſhould baptize with the holy Ghoſt and with fire: which is not literally to bee underſtood, but thereby is ſignified the internall and forcible working of the ſpirit, which kindleth zeale and love in our hearts as fire.

Bez. Matth. 3. verſ. 11.
Matth. 3. 11.

Concerning the forme of Baptiſme: wee all agree, that no other is to be uſed, than that preſcribed by our Saviour Chriſt, To baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt: that it is neither lawfull to change this forme in ſenſe, as many hereticks have done, nor yet in words, as to leave out any of the three perſons in Trinitie, and incluſively to underſtand them by naming of one: for whereas ſome alleage that place Act. 2. 38. Be ye baptized in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, for remiſſion of ſinnes; to prove that it is lawfull onely in the name of Chriſt to baptize, wee are to underſtand, that the forme of Baptiſme is not in that place expreſly ſet downe, but the ſcope onely and end of Baptiſme, which is to aſſure us of remiſſion of ſinnes in the name of Chriſt, as Beza very well noteth, upon that place: wherefore it is a manifeſt error, which is imputed to Pope Nicholas, who defineth Baptiſme in the name of Chriſt only to be ſufficient; decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 4. c. 24. Bellarmine woul

help this matter, and ſaith, that he bringeth in S. Ambroſe authoritie, but determineth nothing himſelfe, whereas the very words of the Pope are theſe, Conſtat eos denuo non eſſe baptizandos: It is evident, that ſuch are not to bee baptized againe, namely, they that were baptized onely in the name of Chriſt: what are theſe elſe but definitive words? Wherefore we allow rather the decree of Alexander 3.decret.Greg.lib.3.tit.42.c.1. Si quis non dixerit, ego baptizo: Unleſſe a man ſay, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, hee baptizeth not: this is agreeable to the Scripture, where Chriſt commandeth his diſciples to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, Matthew 28. but the very forme of ſpeech, as whether to ſay, I baptize, or according to the uſe of the Greeke Chuch, Bee thou baptized, is not of like neceſſitie, as to uſe the name of the Trinitie. The point then of difference betweene us, concerning the forme of Baptiſme is this.

The Papiſts.

THey are bold to affirme, that this forme of Baptiſme, to baptize in the name of the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt, is not fully concluded out of Scripture, but delivered by tradition: for (ſay they) the commandement of Chriſt, to baptize in the name of the Trinitie, Matth. 28. may be underſtood thus: to baptize them into the faith of the Trinitie, or by the authoritie of the Trinitie. And it were ſufficient by thoſe words, to doe and performe it in act, without ſaying the words; were it not that we have otherwiſe learned by tradition, that this very forme of words is to be kept, Bellarm. de baptiſm. lib. 1. cap. 3. 2.Error.

The Proteſtants.

WE need no tradition for this matter; the very forme which is to be uſed in Baptiſme, is plainly proved out of the Scriptures: for that commandement of Chriſt, Goe and baptize, &c. doth neceſſarily imply a forme of ſpeech to bee uſed. Wee grant, that in the Scriptures, this word (name) is taken for power, vertue, authoritie, as Act. 3. 6. In the name of Jeſus ariſe and walke. So Act.3.6. alſo, as there is a Baptiſme with water, there may be a baptizing with fire, Matth. 3. 11. Wherefore if part of the commandement bee to bee taken properly and literally, as this, Goe and baptize, why not the reſt alſo, In the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt? If then the whole commandement be properly and plainly underſtood: how can they baptize in the name of the Trinitie, unleſſe the Trinitie be ſpoken and named?

Secondly, it appeareth alſo out of other places of Scripture, that this forme was uſed in the Apoſtles time: As Act. 10.47. Can any man forbid water, why theſe ſhould not be baptized, which have received the holy Ghoſt, as well as we? Act.10.47. As if S. Peter ſhould have reaſoned thus: theſe have received the gifts of the holy Ghoſt: Ergo, they may be alſo baptized in the name of the holy Ghoſt. Likewiſe, Act. 19.2. Act.19.2. When the brethren at Epheſus had anſwered Paul, that they had not heard, whether there were a holy Ghoſt: he ſaith unto them, Unto what then were you baptized? By this interrogatory it appeareth, it was their manner to baptize in the name of the holy Ghoſt, and ſo conſequently of the whole Trinitie. Wee have no cauſe then to flie unto tradition, this matter being ſo plainly decided by the Scripture.

1 Auguſtin. tract. in Iohann. 80. upon thoſe words of our Saviour, Iohn 15.3. You are cleane through the word which I have ſpoken unto you; Detrahe verbum, & quid eſt aqua niſi aqua? Accedat verbum ad elementum, & fit ſacramentum: Take away the word, and what remaineth in Baptiſme but bare water? Let the word be joyned to the element, and it maketh a Sacrament, &c. The forme then of Baptiſme, is the word which Chriſt ſpake: and where elſe ſpeaketh Chriſt, but in the Scriptures? Ergo, the forme of Baptiſme is the word of Chriſt, preſcribed and commanded in the Scriptures. Away therfore with your uncertaine and deceitfull traditions. Our Baptiſme is builded upon a ſurer foundation, namely, the word of God.

2 Concil. Florentin. ſeſſ. 7. Andreas Coloſſenſ. Velim à vobis ampliſſimi patres doceri, &c. I would learne of you (reverend fathers) whether the moſt holy Goſpell doe containe the moſt perfect doctrine of our religion: I thinke (ſuch is your godlineſſe) that you will not anſwer otherwiſe, but that the moſt abſolute knowledge of our faith is therein contained: Ergo, the perfect doctrine of Baptiſme is expreſſed in the Goſpell: Cyril ſaith, that not the leaſt thing of the Sacraments muſt be delivered without the divine Scripture, *Catech.*4. much leſſe the forme of words whereby they are conſecrated.

3 The Maſter of ſentences thus determineth this matter: lib. 4. diſtinct. 3. g. Non tunc illam formam Chriſtus, &c. Chriſt did not firſt give that forme of Baptiſme to his Apoſtles, when he ſent them to preach to the Gentiles, but before when he ſent them to preach to the Jewes: ſo that the inſtitution of Baptiſme may be better ſaid to have been made when Chriſt was baptized of Iohn in Jordan, &c. Tunc ergo invocato nomine Trinitatis, &c. Then was the Baptiſme of Chriſt inſtituted, the name of the Trinitie being invocated, which there appeared in myſterie, &c. Your Maſter groundeth the forme of Baptiſme in the name of the Trinitie, upon the Baptiſme of Chriſt, where the whole Trinitie appeared in myſtery, the Father ſpake from heaven, the holy Ghoſt deſcended like a Dove, the Sonne himſelfe was in the waters: wherefore here is no need to run unto tradition.

The former confeſſ. of Helvetia, artic. 20. The Sacraments are the inſtitution and worke of the Lord Harm.ſect.12, himſelfe: Bohemia: Thoſe Sacraments no man either did or can inſtitute but the Lord himſelfe: But the pag.384. words of conſecration are part of the inſtitution, which cannot be proved but out of the Scriptures.

Hereunto the holy Martyrs give conſent: The word of God written by the Prophets and Apoſtles, left and contained in the Canonicall bookes of the whole Bible, I doe beleeve to containe plentifully all things neceſſarie to ſalvation, &c. John Bradford, pag. 1626. But the doctrine of Baptiſme is neceſſarie to ſalvation to be knowne, both concerning the forme and matter; Ergo. Pag.1476.2.80.

The third queſtion, of the neceſsitie of Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

3.Error: THey affirme, that Baptiſme is ſimply neceſſarie to ſalvation by Gods appointment: ſo that all which die unbaptized, unleſſe the want of Baptiſme be recompenced either by Martyrdome or Penance, muſt needs periſh, and be deprived of eternall life, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.7. can.7. Bellar. lib.1. de Baptiſ. cap. 4.

Argum. 1. Ioh. 3. 5. Our Saviour ſaith, Unleſſe a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, hee cannot enter into the kingdome of God: Ergo, it is neceſſarie to ſalvation to be baptized, Bellarm. ibid. Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Iohn 4.11. John 7.38. Tractat.in Epiſtol.Ioh.6.

Anſwer. Firſt, it is not neceſſarie by water here to underſtand materiall water, but the purifying grace of Chriſt, which is called the water of life, Iohn. 4.11. Water then is here added as an Epithete of the ſpirit, becauſe it cleanſeth and purgeth as water: as Iohn 7. 38. He that beleeveth, out of his bellie ſhall flow rivers of waters of life: Quid aqua ſit (ſaith Auguſtine) evangelium interroga: Inquire of the Goſpell, what this water is. Then it followeth, verſ. 39. This ſpake he of the ſpirit, which they that beleeved in him, ſhould receive. By water then it is no rare thing, to underſtand the ſpirit. Secondly, why may not water be here figuratively taken to expreſſe the working of the ſpirit, as fire is added to the ſpirit, Matth. 3. 11. He ſhall baptize with the holy Ghoſt and with fire? What greater neceſſitie is there in this place, to underſtand water literally, than fire in the other?

Object. Bellarmine replieth: that water muſt needs be here underſtood literally: firſt, becauſe the words in Scripture, if there follow not apparent abſurditie, muſt be properly underſtood. Secondly if water be not here ſignified, then it will be hard to prove, that Baptiſme ought to be miniſtred onely with water: for other places, where mention is made of water, doe prove that men may bee baptized with water; but they prove not, that they cannot be baptized with other things: Lib. 1. de Baptiſm. cap. 4.

Anſw. Firſt, it is true that where any abſurditie may follow, the words are not to be taken properly: as when Chriſt ſaid (this is my body) becauſe it is an abſurd thing and inconvenient to eat mans fleſh, wee ſay the ſpeech is figurative: but it followeth not of the contrarie, that where no abſurditie followeth, there the words are properly to be taken, as Matth. 3. where mention is made of Baptiſme with fire; it were no very abſurd thing, if Chriſt had ſo appointed for children to be ſomewhat ſinged with fire, as they were in the law circumciſed and cut with a knife: yet fire properly is not there undeſtood. Secondly, if the element of water were here ſignified, a great abſurditie would follow, that for want of a little ſprinkling of water children ſhould be utterly loſt. Thirdly, we have other places to prove the neceſſitie of water in Baptiſme beſide this place: As firſt, the example of Chriſt, Matth. chap. 3. who was baptized onely in water. Againe, the commandement of Chriſt, Matth. chap. 28. Goe and baptize: which word ſignifieth properly to waſh with water: As alſo the practice of the Apoſtles that only uſed water, Act. 10. S. Peter ſaith, Who can forbid water, &c.?

Iohn 6.53.

Thirdly, as you expound theſe words of Baptiſme, ſo ye do apply another place, Ioh. chap. 6. ver. 53. to the other Sacrament: Unleſſe you doe eat the fleſh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, you ſhall not have life in you. If this be ſpoken of the Sacramentall eating and drinking of Chriſt, as the Rhemiſts take it; then belike there is as great neceſſitie of the Euchariſt, as of Baptiſme: and ſo indeed Auguſtine ſometime thought, that the one was as neceſſarie to ſalvation as the other: Sine Chriſti carne & ſanguine nec parvuli vitam habere poſſunt in ſemetipſis: Without the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, neither can infants have life in themſelves. And therefore it was the cuſtome of thoſe times, to give of the Sacrament to children: Parvulis adhuc & infirmis ſtillantur quadam de Sacramentis: Some part of the Sacrament is inſtilled and powred into the mouthes of young and tender children.

Cont.2.epiſt. Pelag.lib.4. c.4.in Pſal.64.

But our adverſaries in no wiſe will admit that the Euchariſt is as neceſſarie as Baptiſme: wherfore they doe thus comment upon our Saviours words: That they alſo doe eat the fleſh of Chriſt, and drinke his blood, which joyne in heart, and deſire to be partakers of the Sacrament, and ſo myſtically, and ſpiritually doe receive it, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 6. ſect. 8. And why, I pray you, may there not be as well a myſticall and ſpirituall receiving of Baptiſme without the Sacrament, as of the Euchariſt or Lords Supper, ſeeing this place, Iohn 6. 53. doth as neceſſarily enforce the receiving of this Sacrament, as that place, Iohn 3. 5. doth lay a neceſſitie upon Baptiſme?

Fourthly, If this ſaying of Chriſt, Except a man be borne of water, &c. doe imply a neceſſitie of Baptiſme, then Baptiſme began to bee neceſſarie immediately upon this ſpeech of our Saviour: for hee ſaith not, except a man ſhall bee, but except hee bee, niſi renatus fuerit, in the preter Tenſe But Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, that Baptiſme began not to bee neceſſarie, till after Chriſts death, cap. 5. therefore it is not like that any ſuch neceſſitie ſhould be laid at all upon Baptiſme. For it had beene great reaſon, that Chriſts baptiſme which was given while hee lived in the fleſh, ſhould have beene as neceſſarie, as his Apoſtles baptiſme which was miniſtred afterward.

Laſtly, the Maſter of Sentences thus expoundeth this place: Intelligendum eſt de illis, qui poſſunt & contemnunt baptizari: It is to be underſtood of thoſe which may, and yet contemne to bee baptized: vel ita intelligendum eſt,&c. Or it muſt be thus underſtood: Unleſſe a man be borne againe of water and the ſpirit,&c. That is, by that regeneration which is done by water and the ſpirit: but that regeneration is not onely by Baptiſme, but by repentance, &c. lib. 4. diſt. 4. e. If either of theſe expoſitions be received, children dying without Baptiſme ſhall not be condemned: for firſt, they doe not contemne Baptiſme, if they die without it. Secondly, that regeneration which others have by the ſpirit and water, others by repentance, is ſupplied unto them by the covenant of grace.

Or we refuſe not the interpretation of this place, which Innocentius 3. one of your Popes hath in his decree, Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 42. cap. 3. where having recited this place of Scripture, Unleſſe a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, &c. with divers other places, he inferreth thus: Ex vi literæ ſatis patet prædictas authoritates, &c. By the very letter it is apparant, that the foreſaid authorities muſt onely be underſtood of thoſe that are of age, which have a multitude of ſinnes, and cannot be underſtood of little ones, which onely have originall ſinne, and ſo alſo is that authoritie to be reſolved, hee that beleeveth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved. If ye will be judged then by your holy father, this place cannot be enforced againſt infants, that die unbaptized.

Argum. 2. The Popiſh Divines of Doway doe urge the correſpondence that baptiſme hath with circumciſion: as they which died without circumciſion or other remedie of thoſe former times, their ſoules periſhed from their people, ſo now without Baptiſme they can never enter into the kingdome of heaven,&c.

Annot. in Geneſ.2.c.17.

Contra. 1. They are here more reaſonable, than in another annotation: where they ſay preciſely, that all infants (dying without circumciſion) were ſecluded onely for lacke of that remedie: but here they put in a disiunctive, or other remedie: and ſo wee grant, that children dying without Baptiſme and all other remedie, cannot be ſaved: but there is another remedie which ſupplieth the want of Baptiſme, which is the covenant of grace.

In Geneſ.17. verſ.14.

2 It is untrue, that children dying without circumciſion were then damned: Cajetans reaſon is, becauſe Salomons brother dying before the eighth day was ſaved. Eliſius another of their Doctors ſaith, that then the males ſhould have beene in worſe ſtate and condition than the female: and therefore Tilmannus reſolveth, that the uncircumciſed infants were ſaved by the faith of the parents: yea the text is evident, that the penaltie, to be cut off from their people, lieth not upon infants, but upon thoſe which were adulti of yeeres, becauſe he hath broken my covenant: but infants cannot bee ſaid to break the covenant: This alſo appeareth, Exod. 4. where the Lord would have killed Moſes, not the child for the deferring of circumciſion.

In 3 part. Thom.468. artic.1.
Excitation. Caſſandri fol.123.

Argum. 3. Bellarmine alleageth divers fathers, who were of opinion, that infants dying without baptiſme, could not bee ſaved, as Origen, Nazianzene, Hierome, with others: lib. 1. de baptiſm. c. 4.

Anſwer. 1. Some of the fathers did hold a neceſſitie of the Euchariſt to bee miniſtred to children, as well as of Baptiſme, as Auguſtine and ſome others: and it is the opinion of the Greeke Church at this time, Utrumq; ſacramentum omnib. eſſe neceſſarium. That both Sacraments, Baptiſme and the Communion are neceſſary for all: why doe they not then follow the opinion of the fathers for the neceſſitie of the one, as they doe in the other?

Ieremie Patriark Cenſur. orient. c.9. in fine.

2 Auguſtine, Fulgentius, Gregorie, as their Azorius confeſſeth, hold that infants unbaptized deſcended into the place of the damned, and that they are puniſhed with ſenſe of paine, but now the Romaniſts are gone from that, having found out a limbus of infants, wherein they are not puniſhed pœna ſenſus, with ſenſe of paine: but onely damni of loſſe: ſo that they can with no reaſon pretend the fathers, whoſe judgement herein they have renounced.

Azor. inſtitut. Moral. lib.2. c.17. part.1.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge no greater neceſſitie in Baptiſme, than in the other Sacrament: both which we grant to bee neceſſarie as hepls and props, and profitable meanes to increaſe our faith: but not ſo ſimply neceſſarie, as that without them (there being no neglect, or contempt had of them) it were impoſſible to be ſaved.

Argum. 1. The children of the faithfull are holy already, even before they bee baptized: for they are within the covenant, and to them alſo belongeth the promiſe. The Lord ſaith, I will bee thy God, and the God of thy ſeed, Geneſ. 17. 7. And Saint Paul ſaith, that the children of the faithfull are holy, 1 Corinth. 7. 14. If the Lord then bee the God alſo of children, and if they bee holy, being borne of the righteous ſeed, how can they poſſiblie periſh, although they die unbaptized?

Gen.17.7.
1 Cor.7.14.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Firſt, that the promiſes made to Abraham, were temporall, not ſpirituall.

Galath.3.16.

Contra. Saint Paul ſheweth they were ſpirituall : by ſeed (not ſeeds) underſtanding Chriſt, Galath. 3. ſo that the promiſes made to Abraham and his ſeed were ſuch as were to bee accompliſhed in Chriſt.

Bellarmine. 2. Such ſpirituall promiſes as were made to Abraham, belonged not to the carnall poſteritie of Abraham, but to the true ſonnes of Abraham, that is, his faithfull ſeed, cap. 4. reſponſ. ad object. 1.

Contra. We grant, that only ſuch as beleeved, after they came to yeeres capable of faith, were the true ſonnes of Abraham, though otherwiſe both carnally begotten of his ſtocke, as alſo outwardly ſigned with circumciſion : but no ſuch condition of faith was required in infants: but they were ſaved even dying before circumciſion by the covenant of grace, which was made to Abraham and his ſeed, Geneſ. 17.7. before circumciſion, which is the ſigne of the covenant was given.

Bellarm. Thirdly, the children are ſaid to be holy : either after a civill kinde of holineſſe, that is to ſay, they were legitimate : or elſe becauſe the beleeving parent doth conſecrate the children unto God, and ſo they are made holy by Baptiſme, and are brought up in godlineſſe : or elſe, the unbeleeving part is ſaid to be ſanctified by the beleeving, in that he is taught the right uſe of mariage, whereas Infidels do abuſe matrimonie, and uſe it immoderately, and at ſuch times as they ought to abſtaine, whereby their children are uncleane, and their mariage polluted, Bellarmine ibid.

Contra. Firſt, no ſuch civill ſanctification, that is, legitimation, can be here underſtood : for though both the parents were Infidels, yet are their children legitimate, they being lawfully linked together in mariage : but now the Apoſtle ſaying, The unbeleeving husband is ſanctified by the wife, meaneth a further degree of ſanctification than is betweene both being Infidels. Secondly, neither doth the Apoſtle meane that the children are holy by any act of holineſſe wrought upon them by the beleeving parent, as by conſecrating them unto God, or bringing them to bee baptized, or ſeeing them well brought up ; but ſuch an holineſſe, as whereby both the unbeleeving parent is ſanctified, and his ſeed alſo : But firſt, by godly education the children only are ſanctified, it is nothing to the ſanctification of the parents. Secondly, neither are all children made holy or vertuous by their good education, as Eſau wanted no good bringing up, as well as Iacob, yet he is called a prophane perſon, Heb. 12. 16. but the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of all the children of ſuch, that they are holy. Thirdly, and againe the Apoſtle meaneth not only ſuch children as are brought to Baptiſme, or of age to be nurtured, but all the children and ſeed of the faithfull parent : wherefore it cannot be ſo underſtood. Fourthly, yet further, it is poſſible that an adulterer may have a care for the good education of his adulterous ſeed, as Auguſtine had for his ſonne Adeodatus, and yet their unlawfull copulation is not thereby ſanctified.

Heb.12.16.

Thirdly, this ſanctification cannot be underſtood of the right uſe of mariage : firſt, becauſe that although the abuſe of mariage in the parents is a pollution to them, yet it extendeth not to their ſeed. Secondly, it is poſſible for Infidels to attaine to this civill gift, as moderately and ſoberly to uſe their wives, as ſome of them had the gift of perpetuall continencie, doth it therfore follow that their ſeed ſhall bee holy ? Thirdly, yea this infirmitie in the immoderate uſe of mariage is incident to the mariage of the faithfull : as Auguſtine ſaith, Naturalis uſus, licet immoderatus, venialis eſt in uxore, &c. The naturall uſe, though it bee immoderate, is pardonable in the wife : hujus delicti, non habent hortatrices nuptias, ſed deprecatrices : Mariage is not an exhorter thereunto, but an intreater : de nupt. & concup. c. 11. ſhall the children therefore of the faithfull be unholy ? So then none of theſe three expoſitions which Bellarmine hath brought, can ſtand.

Wherefore the meaning of the Apoſtle is this, that the children of parents, where one of them is a beleever, are holy, that is, within the covenant ; and being within the covenant, they are alſo partakers of the promiſe : Where wee ſee a difference betweene the law of Chriſt, and the lawes of men : for by the Civill law, partus ſequitur ventrem, the birth did follow the wombe, the child did follow the condition of the mother ; as Cod. lib. 5. tit. 5. leg. 3. Conſtantin. If the father were a free man, the mother a ſervant, ſo ſhould the child bee : So likewiſe decreeth Gregor. 9. decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 18. c. 8. But the rule of Chriſt is more favourable, that if either father or mother are free in Chriſt, that is, beleevers, the child is free alſo, that is, holy : ſo that the faith of the one of them is more available to include the ſeed within the covenant, than the infidelitie of the other to exclude it. So then the unbeleever is ſanctified by the beleever, that is, is made a fit inſtrument, notwithſtanding his infidelitie, to convey the holy ſeed. And the Civill law hath a rule not much unlike the ſaying of the Apoſtle here, Uxor concreſcat marito : The wife doth increaſe and grow with her husband, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 28. Iuſtinian. Like as the wife, though a ſervant, being maried to a man of honourable order, was partaker of his honour : ſo likewiſe faith in either partie, being the true honour of a Chriſtian, doth ſanctifie the other in this behalfe.

2 Samu.12.18.

Arg. 2. Circumciſion was as neceſſarie to the Iſraelites, as Baptiſme is to us : but their children which died before the eighth day, when they were to be circumciſed, periſhed not : for David doubteth not to ſay of his child that died the ſeventh day, I ſhall goe to him, he cannot returne to me, 2 Samuel 12. 18. 23. He pronounceth that the child was ſaved. And Bellarmine confeſſeth, that ſome of the children that Herod ſlew were not eight daies old, and ſo not circumciſed ; yet they were all ſaved and are counted innocents, lib. 1. de Baptiſ. c. 6. prop. 1. Ergo, neither children dying without Baptiſme now are condemned.

The Maſter of ſentences anſwereth, that either children dying before circumciſion did periſh and were damned, or elſe in caſe of neceſſitie they might circumciſe before the eighth day, lib. 4. diſtinct. 1. l.

Contra. His firſt aſſertion is very cruell and uncharitable, and contrarie to the Scripture: for Davids child was ſaved dying before the eighth day; and ſome of the children that Herod did ſlay, might be under eight dayes old, and ſo not circumciſed, and yet they are all held to be innocents and Saints.

His ſecond aſſertion hath no ground, ſeeing that in the inſtitution of circumciſion, Geneſ. 17. it is limited to the eighth day: ſo that they which circumciſed before that day, did contrarie to the inſtitution.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is uncertaine whether the Jewes had any other remedie againſt ſin for their children dying before circumciſion, becauſe the Scripture maketh no mention thereof: but now it is certaine, there is no remedie beſide Baptiſme for infants, Bellar. cap. 4.

Anſw. Firſt, neither Circumciſion then, nor Baptiſme now, is a remedie againſt originall ſinne, but a ſigne onely and ſeale of our ſpirituall waſhing by the blood of Chriſt. Secondly, if the Jewes had another remedie for their children, ſhall we thinke that the Goſpell hath laid an harder yoke upon infants, than the law did? Thirdly, infants then, and now dying before the Sacrament, have one common remedie to bee ſaved by, namely the covenant of grace, in that the Lord promiſed to bee their God, and the God of their ſeed: and the children by the Apoſtle are called holy, 1 Cor. 7. 14.

1 Cor. 7. 14.

Argum. 3. The holy Ghoſt may be given without Baptiſme, ſo it be not contemned and neglected, when it may be had: therefore life eternall may be had without Baptiſme: for the holie Ghoſt is able without the Sacrament to regenerate us, and bring us to eternall life.

The firſt is proved, Act. 10. 47. Who can forbid water, that theſe ſhould not bee baptized, which have received the holy Ghoſt as well as we? They had the holy Ghoſt before and without Baptiſme, as Auguſtine ſaith, Cornelius audiens & credens quod prædicaverat Petrus, ita mundatus eſt, ut ante viſibilem Baptiſmum cum ſuis qui aberant acciperet donum Spiritus ſancti. Cornelius hearing and beleeving that which Peter preached, was ſo cleanſed, that before viſible baptiſme, he with his that were preſent received the gift of the holy Ghoſt. 33. q. in numer. tom. 4.

Act. 10. 47.

Argum. 4. You your ſelves make two exceptions, of Martyrs, and them that doe penance, which may bee ſaved without Baptiſme: Ergo, Baptiſme is not ſimply neceſſarie. And if our Saviour ſpeak of Baptiſme, Iohn 3. verſ. 5. as yee ſay he doth, there is no privilege for any, no not for Martyrs, for all muſt be borne of water and the ſpirit: that is, ſay you, baptized. Neither are your two exceptions generall enough: for the theefe upon the croſſe was ſaved, and yet neither died a Martyr: for he himſelfe confeſſeth, that he was righteouſly puniſhed, Luk. 23. 41. neither did hee any ſuch penance, or made any ſuch ſatisfaction, as you require.

Luk. 23. 41.

Argum. 5. If all children dying without Baptiſme are damned; then it would follow, that an infinite number of children ſhould periſh without their fault, which were a moſt cruell and uncharitable thing to affirme.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Gods judgements are moſt juſt, though they be ſecret, neither are children damned without their fault, becauſe they have originall ſinne: but it is moſt certaine, that there is no remedie for children without Baptiſme, cap. 4.

Contra. Firſt, it is true that Gods judgements and decrees are moſt juſt, though wee perceive them not, and ſo are they full of mercie too: but it is not apparant out of Scripture, that God hath ſet downe any ſuch decree for the children of the faithfull unbaptized, but the contrarie; as Mark. 10. 14. they brought little children unto our Saviour, who ſaid, of ſuch is the kingdome of heaven: hee ſaith not of little ones baptized, but ſimply of little ones being the ſeed of the faithfull, as theſe were. Secondly, though children have originall ſinne, yet ſeeing Baptiſme is appointed as a remedie againſt it, which they dying before, are deprived of without their fault; how then conſequently are they not condemned without their fault, ſeeing that which ſhould preſerve them from condemnation (as they ſay) is denied unto them without their fault? Thirdly, that there is no remedie for children dying without Baptiſme, it is contrarie to the decree of Innocent. 3. decret. Gregor. tit. 42. c. 3. Abſit ut univerſi parvuli pereant, &c. God forbid, that all children ſhould periſh, whereof ſo great a multitude daily dieth; but that the mercifull God, who would have none to periſh, hath for them alſo provided ſome remedie to ſalvation. Some alſo of your owne Doctors, as Cajetanus, Gabriel, with others, doe hold that there is ſome remedie for children departing before Baptiſme.

Mark. 10. 14.

Laſtly, it was the hereſie of the Hierarchites, qui regnum cælorum parvulos habere negant, which denied that children did goe to heaven, decret. par. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. How farre now are the Papiſts from this hereſie, that exclude all children out of the kingdome of God, that are not baptized?

Bernard thus writeth of this matter: Nequaquam poſſum omnino deſperare ſalutem, ſi aquam non contemptus, ſed ſola prohibeat impoſſibilitas: Epiſtol. 77. I cannot altogether deſpaire of their ſalvation, that are not baptized, if it bee not done of contempt, but when as Baptiſme cannot poſſibly be had.

Againe, in the ſame place he ſaith: Vide etiam, ne forte ob hoc Salvator cum diceret, qui crediderit, & baptizatus fuerit, ſalvus erit, cautè & vigilanter non repetierit, qui baptizatus non fuerit, ſed tantum qui non crediderit condemnabitur : nimirum intuens ſolam interdum fidem ſufficere ad ſalutem, & ſine ipſo ſufficere nihil: See alſo if our Saviour Chriſt for this cauſe, when he had ſaid, he that beleeveth and is baptized ſhall bee ſaved, did not of purpoſe in repeating the ſentence, omit to ſay, he that is not baptized; but only, he that beleeveth not ſhall be damned: for he ſaw, that faith only may ſuffice to ſalvation, but without faith nothing can ſuffice.

Clement.epiſtol.4. Bonum eſt, & puritati conveniens etiam corpus aqua diluere; bonum dico, non quaſi principale illud, in quo mens purificatur, ſed quod ſit ſequela illius boni hoc, in quo caro diluitur: It is good and convenient to waſh the bodie in water, good I ſay, but not that principall good, whereby the mind is purified, but a ſecond or a conſequent good thing to that, &c. There is then a more principall thing in Baptiſme than the waſhing of water, which is the ſpirituall grace: without this a man cannot be ſaved, without the other he may.

Richard Woodman holy Martyr thus witneſſeth; The Scripture ſaith, he that beleeveth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; and he that beleeveth not ſhall be damned: but no Scripture in all the new Teſtament ſaith, that hee which is not baptized, ſhall bee damned: neither dare I ſay ſo for all the goods under heaven: Fox pag. 1994.

1 For further evidence, it appeareth that in the Greeke Church their uſuall times of Baptiſme were in the feaſts of the Paſch and Pentecoſt, as Nazianzene ſheweth: though hee reprove that cuſtome, and ſheweth that every time is fit for Baptiſme: yet it is not like that ſuch a cuſtome would have been taken up, if the want of Baptiſme had been in their opinion ſo dangerous to infants.

Lib. de præſcript. adverſ. Iudæos.

2 Tertullian ſpeaking of circumciſion, ſaith, Si ſalutem circumciſio omni modo adferret, Moſes in filio ſuo non intermiſiſſet: If circumciſion had brought ſalvation, Moſes would not have omitted it in his ſonne, &c. If ſalvation were not annexed to circumciſion, much leſſe is it to Baptiſme: ſeeing in the old Teſtament they were more in bondage to ceremonies, than they are now in the new. The Æthiopick Church at this day holdeth infants dying without Baptiſme, to be ſemi Chriſtiani, halfe Chriſtians, and not to bee counted among Pagans and Infidels, as the Church of Rome holdeth: and they give this reaſon, Quia filii ſunt ſacrati ſanguinis parentum, becauſe they are the ſonnes of the ſacred blood of their parents: that is, they are the children of the faithfull, and ſo within the n ant.

Harm. pag. 387.

3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia. c. 11. If a man doe wholly and truly beleeve the Goſpell, he may by that faith be ſaved, although he have not the uſe of the Sacraments: If the want of the Sacraments is no prejudice to them which are of yeeres, much leſſe is it to infants that cannot offer themſelves unto it, as the other may.

4 Some of the Romaniſts and Popiſh teachers are very pregnant witneſſes in this point, that infants dying without Baptiſme are not damned: ſome of whoſe reaſons it ſhall not bee amiſſe to ſet downe.

Ex Caſſandro fol. 123. vide D. Mort. his Appeale p. 246.

Gerſon made a Sermon of this matter in the Councell of Conſtance, urging this reaſon, among the reſt from the power of God, Deum miſericordiam non alligaſſe ſacramentis: That God hath not tied his mercie ſo to the Sacraments, but that he can ſanctifie children not yet borne out of the wombe: Gabriel reaſoneth from the mercie of God, Eſt à Dei miſericordia alienum: It is far from Gods mercy, that ſo many infants ſhould periſh.

Cajetane ſheweth as much by the circumciſion of the old Teſtament, that children which died uncircumciſed, periſhed not, which hee proveth by Davids child, that died before it was circumciſed.

Excitatione Caſſandri fol. 138.

Eliſius another Popiſh author, urgeth the inconvenience of this opinion: that it would follow, if there were no way but damnation for infants dying unbaptized, that when as the child being yet in the wombe, is in danger to be ſuffocated, the mother ſhould rather ſuffer her wombe to bee ripped, that the infant may be taken out and be Baptized, than everlaſtingly to periſh.

An Appendix, whether the want of Baptiſme may be by any other meanes ſupplied.

The Papiſts.

4. Error.

OUr adverſaries make three kindes of Baptiſme, Baptiſmum fluminis, Baptiſmum ſanguinis, Baptiſmum flaminis: The Baptiſme of water, the Baptiſme of blood which is Martyrdome, and the Baptiſme of the ſpirit, which is contrition and penance: By theſe two, the firſt ſay they, may be ſupplied.

They affirme, that Martyrdome, and penance or contrition, doe by the very act or worke wrought remit ſinnes, and juſtifie the workers, and not in reſpect of the faith onely, which is in Martyrs or penitent perſons, Bellarm. cap. 6. lib. 1. de Baptiſm.

Argum. 1. The Innocents which were ſlaine by Herod, were ſaved onely by their martyrdome, they had neither faith, nor workes. So the theefe upon the Croſſe was not onely juſtified by his faith, but by the act and worke of contrition.

Anſw. Firſt, it is not neceſſarie to hold all thoſe children to bee Martyrs, and ſo to bee ſaved: for Macrobius writeth, that one of Herods ſonnes, which was nurſed in thoſe parts, was ſlaine among the reſt: the infants which were ſaved, were within the promiſe, and belonged to the covenant, and ſo could not be loſt: their ſalvation depended of their free election before God; it was not purchaſed by the very act of their dying.

Secondly, the theefe alſo upon the croſſe was juſtified by his faith and beleefe in Chriſt. And therefore Auguſtine doth chiefly commend his faith: Tunc fides ejus de ligno floruit, quando diſcipulorum emarcuit: Then his faith did as it were bud and flouriſh out of the tree of the croſſe, when the faith of the diſciples withered.
